Xia Gui is known today as one of China’s greatest masters of landscape painting. He painted rapidly, using short, sharp strokes of the brush. Most of his landscapes were done in shades of black, but a few had light washes of color added to them.

Xia was probably official court painter to either the emperor Ningzong or the emperor Lizong (or maybe both). That means he would have lived about the end of the 12th century to the beginning of the 13th century.

Together with his friend and fellow artist Ma Yuan, Xia founded the Ma-Xia school of painting. This group followed a tradition of very simple landscape painting, with little happening in the landscape and few details. By showing only selected features, such as mountain peaks and twisted trees, they aimed to create a feeling of unlimited space and quiet drama. The Ma-Xia school had a great influence on later artists.

Most of Xia’s surviving works are album leaves. These were usually square-shaped, and they were occasionally glued onto fans. The paintings were done on silk, mainly in shades of black ink. Each landscape showed distant hills in the upper left corner and a closer view of land in the lower right corner. In the center, groups of trees reach into the empty space all around. The empty space was always an important feature of Xia’s work.

Xia was also a master at composing works on the hand scroll. These are rolls of paper that are viewed by unrolling the scroll from one end to the other, then rerolling the scroll as you view it. The effect is like a continuous imaginary journey through the scenery of nature.

The painting here, known as “Swinging Gibbon,” is said to be by Xia Gui. The next generation of painters did not value Xia’s work. But about 50 years after that, one critic wrote, “His works have an exciting [stimulating] quality,…a remarkable achievement.”

XIA GUI

Answer: Xia Gui made his paintings on album leaves and hand scrolls.
The Sadat Resthouse (built in Garf Huseyn, Egypt, in 1981) shows some of Hassan Fathy’s trademark features. Here you can see the thick walls and air scoops that help cool the building naturally.

DID YOU KNOW?

Hassan Fathy is quoted as having said, “Architecture is music frozen in place and music is architecture frozen in time.” What do you suppose he meant by this?
Hassan Fathy is famous as a humanitarian architect. He built homes and buildings that put people’s needs first. Fathy was born in 1900 in Alexandria, Egypt. He studied there and began his career in Egypt.

Fathy’s goal was to build affordable housing for local Egyptian people. He felt that many European building methods and designs that had come into his country weren’t right for it. He thought houses should be built from local materials, according to local designs, and with traditional methods. By building this way, he lowered the cost of his houses and respected the culture of the area as well. In addition, traditional methods and materials tended to suit the local climate best.

Because Egypt is a very hot country, it is important to make houses as cool as possible. Fathy’s buildings often had thick walls (to keep out heat) surrounding interior courtyards. Air scoops on the roofs caught winds from the desert and funneled them down through the buildings. By these natural methods, Fathy managed to keep the houses cool inside.

One of Fathy’s most famous creations was the New Gourna Village near Luxor, Egypt. The original village was near the archaeological digs of ancient Luxor and had to be relocated. Fathy trained the local people in the ancient tradition of mud-brick construction. The people then built themselves new homes that were almost entirely of mud bricks and that kept all the good features of their former homes.

Fathy died in 1989, but his work has inspired many young architects in the Middle East. He promoted ideas that adapted traditional styles and methods to the needs of the present day.

Michelangelo’s “David” is being cleaned and repaired. It is often considered the finest example of the Renaissance ideal. During the Renaissance (“Rebirth”), art and literature blossomed richly.

David was the name of Michelangelo’s
a) teacher.
b) student.
c) statue.
Genius of European Art

Once there was a small boy in Florence who loved to watch painters and sculptors at work. He wanted to be an artist, but his father did not like the idea. Little did the man know that his son Michelangelo would become one of the world’s most famous artists.

Michelangelo began training as an artist at age 13. He was so interested in his art that he often forgot to eat and slept on the floor beside his unfinished artwork. He refused help, even on big projects, so some works took years to complete. Many were never finished.

Michelangelo worked in Rome and Florence. In Rome he was commissioned to carve a Pietà. This is a marble statue showing the Virgin Mary supporting the dead Christ on her knees. The finished work, known as the “Madonna della Pietà,” made him famous. And in Florence, Michelangelo spent two years working on a huge block of marble. From it he carved “David,” one of the world’s finest and best-known sculptures.

Between 1508 and 1512 Michelangelo created his most famous work, the paintings on the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel in Rome’s Vatican. He painted much of the ceiling while lying on his back in a tight cramped position. The fresco paintings of figures and events from the Bible are huge and splendid. The wall behind the altar depicts the Last Judgment of humanity by God.

Michelangelo was so admired that he became the first European artist whose life story was written during his own lifetime.

Frida Kahlo's most famous paintings were:

a) murals.

b) self-portraits.

c) buses.
Mexican painter Frida Kahlo’s life was filled with struggles. But her dazzlingly colorful self-portraits reflect Kahlo’s power and confidence in the face of her hardships.

When Kahlo was a child, she had polio, and the disease kept her right leg from growing properly. Then, when she was 18, Kahlo was in a terrible bus accident. For the rest of her life, she had many operations to try to correct both of these problems.

Kahlo began to paint while she was recovering from the bus accident. Her paintings were often dramatic self-portraits that showed Kahlo’s powerful feelings about herself and the world she lived in. Their brilliant colors reflect Kahlo’s strong attitude toward life.

Before the bus accident, Kahlo had met the famous Mexican painter Diego Rivera while he was painting a mural at her school. Later she showed Rivera some of her paintings, and he encouraged her to keep working at her art.

Kahlo and Rivera were married in 1929. They traveled to the United States, where Diego had received commissions for murals. Kahlo kept painting and met many important people of the time. The artist Pablo Picasso admired her work. And many of her well-known friends helped her show her paintings in Europe and America.

Kahlo’s work was called “surrealistic” by some. Surrealism is a style of art that has a strange dreamlike quality. Kahlo, however, said that her paintings were the reality that she felt and that they spanned reality and dreams.

In the spring of 1953, Kahlo had the only exhibition of her work in Mexico. She died one year later. Today her house in Coyoacán is the Frida Kahlo Museum.

In 1990 van Gogh’s “Portrait of Dr. Gachet” sold for $82.5 million—at that time the most ever paid for a single painting.
Vincent van Gogh was a Dutch artist of the 19th century and is now considered one of the greatest painters in the world. Van Gogh painted what he saw around him—trees, flowers, people, and buildings. He visited museums and met with other painters. But van Gogh had his own way of painting. He said he “wanted to look at nature under a brighter sky.”

In van Gogh’s paintings, the southern French town of Arles is like no other place in the world. The skies are bluer and the sun is brighter. The orchards in bloom are pinker and greener. The cobblestone roads are more cobbled and stony. His pictures seem to be flooded with a golden light.

Van Gogh wanted wonderful color in his pictures. His paintings called “Sunflowers,” “Irises,” and “Starry Night” are among the most famous pictures he painted and are filled with brilliant colors. He tried to keep to the outward appearance of his subjects, yet his feelings about them exploded in strong color and bold lines.

Van Gogh’s style was direct, forceful, and natural. He worked with great speed and excitement, set on capturing an effect or a mood while it possessed him. He told his brother that if anyone said a painting was done too quickly, “you can reply that they have looked at it too fast.”

Van Gogh painted for just ten years. But during this time he did more than 800 paintings in oil colors and 700 drawings. Surprisingly, he sold only one painting while he lived. People did not understand the way he painted. His work was too unusual and alive with energy.

Now the whole world knows he was a great artist.

As a young man in Spain, Francisco de Goya worked as a bullfighter. But his great love was painting. After studying art in Rome, Goya returned to Spain and worked as a tapestry designer. Soon his talents drew attention, and he began painting portraits of wealthy Spaniards. By 1786 Goya had become a “painter to the king of Spain.”

But Goya became tired of painting pictures of dukes and duchesses and the royal family. Most of the people of Spain were poor and often hungry. Constant wars made their lives worse. Wanting to portray this “everyday” world, Goya began to draw and paint images of the poor and hardworking people of Spain.

Goya didn’t make the men and women in his art look prettier or more important than they were. His paintings show people as they looked after a life of hard work. Goya included the lines in their faces and the sadness in their lives. He showed their bent backs and their worn clothes. This style of painting people and scenes from daily life is called “realism.”

The subjects of Goya’s paintings did not always please the king and the people of the royal court. They thought he should paint only famous people and beautiful things. In fact, his “Disasters of War” series of etchings was so realistic and gory that it was not shown until over 35 years after Goya’s death. But today, hundreds of years later, the power and honesty of Goya’s “everyday” paintings still impress and move viewers.

DID YOU KNOW?
Even though he died in 1828, Goya is considered by some to be a “modern” painter. This is because of his focus on painting realistic scenes.

Answer: Goya’s painting style was called “realism” because he showed ordinary people as they really were.
There’s a story that says the artist Pablo Picasso started to draw before he learned to speak. While this is probably only a story, it does suggest how important art was to Picasso.

Picasso was born in Spain in 1881 but lived much of his life in France. He was an inventor and an explorer. But he didn’t invent machines or explore strange places. He explored and invented with art. He painted with his fingers, made drawings with a rusty nail, and even made a bull’s head from the handlebars and seat of a bicycle. He was able to work anywhere at any time of the day or night.

Picasso’s big studio was a sort of jungle—a jungle of paint cans, brushes, chalk, pottery, colored pencils, and crayons, among many other things. Rolls of heavy paper and canvas, picture frames and easels, and tools for cutting designs on heavy board lay scattered about like rubbish. But to Picasso it was all inspiration.

He painted Spanish bullfighting, horse races, and clowns. He painted happy pictures in warm colors (such as pink) and sad, lonely ones in cool colors (such as dark blue). He sometimes painted people and animals the way they looked. But more often he painted them from his imagination.

The art style that Picasso and fellow artist Georges Braque invented is called Cubism. They painted people and things so that all parts and sides could be seen at the same time. Cubists often created pictures from simple shapes such as squares or cubes.

Picasso was probably the single most influential figure in 20th-century Western art. And he worked for 80 of his 91 years. He experimented with a large variety of styles in a number of artistic mediums.
Borges is reported to have once said, “Not granting me the Nobel Prize has become a Scandinavian tradition; since I was born they have not been granting it to me.”

Can you imagine a garden where a beautiful poppy flower has the power to unravel time? Or a pool where if you gaze too long into it, you could merge with your reflection? Jorge Luis Borges imagined these things and more as he created fantastical worlds with his words.

Borges was born in 1899, in Buenos Aires, Argentina. His father was a lawyer, and his mother was a teacher. His English-born grandmother told him many stories. Borges was educated at home by an English governess and learned English before Spanish.

At age 20 Borges started writing poems, essays, and a biography. But when his father died in 1938, Borges had to take up a job as a librarian to support the family. The same year, Borges suffered a severe head wound that left him near death, unable to speak, and afraid he was insane. This experience seems to have freed in him a great creativity. When he finished his library work, he would spend the rest of the day reading and writing.

Borges’ dreamlike short stories would later make him famous when they were collected in the books Ficciones (Fictions) and The Aleph and Other Stories, 1933-69. He also wrote political articles that angered the Argentine government and cost him his library job.

In 1956 Borges received Argentina’s national prize for literature. But he had been losing his eyesight for decades because of a rare disease, and by this time he was completely blind. Still, he created stories by having his mother and friends write as he dictated. Some of his best work was produced this way, including El libro de los seres imaginarios (The Book of Imaginary Beings).

As a young woman, Kath Walker was angry about how Aboriginal people were treated. She then began working to have the laws made more fair—and she succeeded in many ways.

Find and correct the error in the following sentence: Walker was the first Aboriginal woman to be noticed.
She was born Kathleen Jean Mary Ruska, but she’s known in the Aboriginal language as Oodgeroo Noonuccal. Her Aboriginal last name, Noonuccal, is the name of her clan. Kath Walker, the name she wrote under for most of her career, became a famous Australian Aboriginal writer and political protester. In fact, when her book of poetry, We Are Going, came out in 1964, she became the first Aboriginal woman to be published.

Walker grew up in Queensland, Australia, where many of the ancient Aboriginal customs were still practiced. At the time Walker was growing up, Aboriginal people had few rights in Australia. She was allowed to go to school only through the primary grades.

When she was 13, Walker began work as a maid. At 16 she wanted to become a nurse but wasn’t allowed to because she was Aboriginal. What Walker did instead was work hard for Aboriginal rights. In 1967 she was successful in getting the anti-Aboriginal sections removed from the Australian constitution. In recognition of her efforts, she was awarded the MBE (Member of the Order of the British Empire) in 1970. Walker would later give back this award to protest further discrimination against Aboriginal people. After 1981 most of her work was published under her Aboriginal name.

Walker described her poetry as easy to understand, with simple rhymes and images. Her work focuses on the troubles of the Aboriginal people. Below is a sample of her poetry.

But I’ll tell instead of brave and fine when lives of black and white entwine. And men in brotherhood combine, this would I tell you, son of mine.

WOLE SOYINKA
DID YOU KNOW?
After Paula was published, Allende suffered from severe writer's block. “Writer's block” is the term used when a writer is unable to think what to write or how to write it. Allende eventually broke through by writing another nonfiction work.
Latin American writer Isabel Allende was born in 1942, in Lima, Peru. Her many books, in Spanish, have been translated into several languages. Her works feature a technique called “magic realism”—the use of fantasy and myth in realistic fiction. Her stories reflect her own experiences and also look at the role of women in Latin America.

Isabel Allende’s uncle was Salvador Allende, president of Chile. She was a journalist there, as well as a short-story writer. In 1973 Salvador Allende was murdered during a time of political problems. Under the new government, Isabel Allende was threatened, and she and her husband and children were forced to flee to Venezuela. They ended up spending 13 years there.

In 1981, while still in exile, she started writing a letter to her dying grandfather. She wrote about childhood memories and of the people who had touched their lives. This letter turned into her first novel, La casa de los espíritus (1982; The House of the Spirits). It was followed by the novels De amor y de sombra (1984; Of Love and Shadows), Eva Luna (1987), and El plan infinito (1991; The Infinite Plan).

Most of Allende’s stories have a political aspect and include a number of exiles. Allende calls these people “the marginals.” She says they are exiled from the big umbrella of society. They have the courage to stand on the edge of life and not be sheltered or protected.

In 1990 Allende was able to return to Chile. But she was heartbroken when her young daughter became sick and died of a terrible blood disease. Out of her sorrow came a book, Paula (1994). It was Allende’s first nonfiction book, and it went on to become a best-seller.

The famous English author Charles Dickens lived more than 100 years ago. Many of the stories he wrote were about how hard life could be for children. And many changes were made because of his books.

Some of Dickens’ stories tell about children being treated badly in schools, at home, or at work. At his own school his teacher beat him with a cane for laughing too loudly. Dickens was barely a teenager when he had to quit school and take a job away from home. His father had spent too much money and could not pay it back. He used many of his own experiences when he wrote his book David Copperfield.

When Dickens’ stories were first read, some people were angry. Others were ashamed. Such stories as Oliver Twist made them think seriously. They realized that children should be treated kindly and have fun as well as study hard. They should not be made to leave home and go to work when they are very young.

One of Dickens’ best-known stories is called A Christmas Carol. It tells about a rich man named Scrooge, who didn’t like Christmas. As a matter of fact, he didn’t like much of anything except making money. In the story Scrooge learns that his life is better when he helps others and spends time enjoying their company.

People still like to read Dickens’ books, not just to learn what life was like a long time ago but for the wonderful stories that they tell. Some are funny, like his Pickwick Papers. Some are family stories, such as David Copperfield and Great Expectations. Some of his books are historical, like A Tale of Two Cities.

DID YOU KNOW?

For many people, A Christmas Carol has become a Christmas tradition. Though Dickens wrote other Christmas stories, none is as popular as this one.
Imagine exploring a distant land in a giant balloon. You could drift over mountains and waterfalls, deep blue lakes, and flaming volcanoes.

A French writer named Jules Verne imagined such a journey many years ago. He wrote about it in a book called Five Weeks in a Balloon (1863). It was his first adventure story about strange journeys. People liked the story so much that Verne decided to write more. The next one was called A Journey to the Center of the Earth (1864). It was about all the wonderful and scary things people might find inside the Earth.

As a young boy Verne often went sailing with his brother on the Loire River in France. He would imagine that he was sailing a huge yacht on a voyage of discovery. Verne wrote about his imaginary sea adventures in Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea (1870). He named his imaginary submarine the Nautilus, after an actual submarine built in 1800. In From the Earth to the Moon (1865), he wrote about traveling to the Moon in a rocket ship long before powered flight was even possible.

People have said that Verne invented the future. It would be more accurate to say that he invented science fiction. Verne himself said that he was fortunate to live and write in a time when new discoveries and inventions were being made. He kept up with advances in geography and science to get ideas for his stories. Verne believed the discoveries he studied would someday make his imaginary journeys a reality.

His knowledge of geography and science made the settings of his stories and his invented machines seem very realistic.

DID YOU KNOW?

Not long after the success of Verne's book Around the World in 80 Days (1873), journalist Nellie Bly attempted the around-the-world journey. She finished in 72 days.
Rabindranath Tagore, seen here with his granddaughter in 1929, is generally considered the most outstanding artist of modern India.
Rabindranath Tagore, born in 1861 in Calcutta, India, started writing poems when he was only 8 years old. He grew up to be the first Indian writer to receive the Nobel Prize for Literature.

Tagore studied in India and London, England. In 1890 he published Manasi, his first collection of truly fine poems. In 1891 he went to East Bengal (now Bangladesh) to help manage his family’s lands. He found the village people kind but very poor. Tagore wrote many poems and stories about their condition. He also wrote about the beautiful Bengali countryside, especially the Padma River.

Tagore wrote in new forms of verse and in the common language of the Bengali people, rather than in classical styles. His writings became very popular among all Bengalis. His poems of 1901-07 reflect his great sadness at the death of his wife and two of his children. In 1910 he wrote a little book of devotional songs called Gitanjali. It was translated into many languages and became a huge success. In 1913 he won the Nobel Prize for Literature.

Tagore produced 22 collections of writings during his life. He wrote songs, plays, short stories, and books, and he composed music. He also founded a school in rural West Bengal that combined European and Indian traditions. It later became Vishva-Bharati University.

In 1915 the British government knighted Tagore. Four years later he gave up his knighthood after a terrible shooting of Indians by British soldiers. All his life he spoke out against British rule of India.

Tagore lectured and read his works to people in many countries from about 1912. And at about age 70 he took up painting and became one of India’s finest artists.

Basho • Gwendolyn Brooks • Emily Dickinson
The poet Basho was born Matsuo Munefusa in 1644. He is considered the greatest of the Japanese haiku poets. Basho took his name from the Japanese term basho-an, which means “cottage of the plantain tree” (a plantain is like a banana). This was a simple place that the poet liked to go to be by himself.

Haiku is a traditional form of Japanese poetry that puts great emotion in just a few words. Haiku poems have only three lines totaling 17 syllables. And they are often about nature.

Although he was interested in poetry from a young age, Matsuo wasn’t always a poet. He started out as a samurai warrior in the service of a local lord. But following his lord’s death in 1666, Matsuo gave up being a warrior and focused on creating poetry. He moved to Japan’s capital, Tokyo (at that time called Edo), and soon was well known as a poet and critic.

Basho brought a new style of haiku to Japanese poetry. Before, it had been basically a hobby and not very serious. Basho instead brought his Buddhist beliefs to his writing. He looked with interest at small things and showed the connection of all things. His new-style haiku compared two separate physical events. In the following haiku, for example, he links nightfall with the landing of a black crow.

On a withered branch
A crow has alighted:
Nightfall in autumn.
(Note: Unlike the original, this translation has only 16 syllables.)

Basho wrote poems as he traveled around the islands of Japan. He wrote about the sights and landscapes he saw, and these poems are considered some of his best.

When Wole Soyinka was a child, his grandfather told him how to deal with a bully. “Even if you are beaten, challenge him again. I promise you, either you will defeat him or he will run away.”

These words turned out to be true for Wole Soyinka, the first black African writer to win the Nobel Prize for Literature. The bully he fought—with his words, not his fists—was the Nigerian military government. Even when the government put him into prison, he continued to write his stories, novels, essays, poetry, and plays.

Soyinka was born in 1934 in Nigeria. His full name is Akinwande Oluwole Soyinka. His large family is of Yoruba heritage. And having a big family, he got to listen to lots of stories—about battles, religion, legends, and family.

Soyinka attended university in England but returned to Nigeria to study African drama. He also taught drama and literature at Nigerian universities. In 1960 he founded a theater group, where he put on his own plays and even acted in some. His first important play, A Dance of the Forests, was about Nigerian independence. In The Lion and the Jewel, Soyinka made fun of Westernized African schoolteachers.

During the Nigerian civil war, Soyinka worked for a cease-fire and was arrested because of his work and writings. The government placed him in a cell all by himself for over a year. Only his own ideas kept him entertained. These ideas became some of his later books.

Soyinka’s plays draw on Nigerian culture, dance, poetry, music, and myths. These elements combine with his wide knowledge and his strong political beliefs to create powerful dramatic images and ideas.

WOLE SOYINKA

Answer: Soyinka was imprisoned for disagreeing with the Nigerian government.

Soyinka's plays have been staged worldwide. Death and the King's Horseman (shown here at the Goodman Theatre in Chicago, Illinois, U.S.) dramatizes the conflict between Western morals and African culture and traditions.

DID YOU KNOW? Soyinka often refers to the Yoruba god Ogun as an important figure for him, his writing, and his people. He describes Ogun as “the god of creativity and destruction.” Ogun is traditionally the god of war, the hunt, and ironworking.
Emily Dickinson, one of America’s greatest poets, was born in 1830 in Massachusetts. She had many friends, though she did not often leave her home to meet them. After 1865 she seldom left her room, appearing only occasionally and briefly, in a white dress, when guests visited downstairs.

Dickinson spent a great deal of time writing to her friends. The greatest excitement in Dickinson’s life took place in her vivid imagination. She included many of her great poems in the letters she wrote. She also wrote or copied poems into little booklets that she made by sewing pages together.

For the time in which she lived, Dickinson’s poems were unusual. Most of them are about familiar things such as love and friendship, nature and death. But her rhymes are often not quite exact, and some of her poems are like a puzzle. But many people find great beauty and truth in her words.

Her poems are especially remarkable in how strong an effect they have, even though they’re usually very brief. She stripped away unnecessary words and made sure that those that remained were energetic and exact. She also liked to place a familiar word in an unusual position, to “surprise” us and to make us pay attention.

Many people think the poems of Emily Dickinson to be among the best ever written by an American poet. It seems strange, then, that only seven of her poems were published while she lived. It was Dickinson’s sister, Lavinia, who first published her poems in a book. She called it Poems by Emily Dickinson. It was published in 1890, four years after Emily died.

DID YOU KNOW?

Here's a sample of Dickinson's poetry:

The bee is not afraid of me,
I know the butterfly;
The pretty people in the woods
Receive me cordially.
The brooks laugh louder when I come,
The breezes madder play.
Wherefore, mine eyes, thy silver mists?
Wherefore, O summer's day?

Answer: Dickinson often sent her poems in letters to her friends.
Gwendolyn Brooks was born in 1917 and grew up in Chicago, Illinois, U.S. That city would play a major part in the life and work of this important American poet. She started writing poetry when she was barely 7 years old. By the time she was in her early teens, her writing had begun appearing in magazines.

Brooks, an African American, attended what was then the leading high school for white children in Chicago. This was very unusual for the time. She was later transferred to an all-black school and then to an integrated school. These experiences gave her insight into the relationships between black people and white people that strongly influenced her work.

Brooks’s first published book, A Street in Bronzeville (1945), won rave reviews. Its poems made the ordinary life of her neighbors seem special to the reader. In 1950 Brooks won the Pulitzer Prize for Poetry for Annie Allen. She was the first African American poet to win this award. The book’s poems focus on an African American girl growing up in Chicago.

In the late 1960s Brooks’s poetry became more political. She began to feel “that black poets should write as blacks, about blacks, and address themselves to blacks.” In 1968 she published In the Mecca. The book’s long title poem reflects the pain and struggle of African American people living in the Mecca, a vast apartment building that had become part of a slum.

Brooks wrote many more books. She was honored as poet laureate of Illinois (1968) and held a similar position for the whole United States (1985-86). Throughout her life Brooks remained strongly committed to teaching about the power of poetry and to encouraging young writers.

Mark Twain’s words are quoted frequently for both their wisdom and their humor. In one of his books, he wrote: “Man is the Animal that Blushes. He is the only one that does it—or has occasion to.” What do you suppose he meant?
The Writer and the Mississippi River

A onetime Mississippi River boat pilot, Mark Twain became one of America’s greatest authors. His Tom Sawyer, Huckleberry Finn, and Life on the Mississippi rank high on any list of great American books.

Mark Twain was born Samuel Langhorne Clemens in 1835. He grew up in Hannibal, Missouri, on the Mississippi River. From this river town he gathered the material for his most famous stories. Young Tom Sawyer, for instance, was a combination of several boys—including himself.

During his life, he held jobs that he would turn into material for his writing. His work as a steamboat pilot gave him experience he used to write Life on the Mississippi. When he began working as a newspaper reporter, he began using the pen name Mark Twain. It is an old river term meaning two fathoms, or 12 feet, of water—a depth that was not very safe for riverboats.

One of his stories, “The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County,” was printed in many newspapers. It was a popular story, and Twain traveled as a roving reporter and then on a lecture tour. After these travels he wrote The Innocents Abroad, which made him famous.

Twain was known as a humorist. But behind his mask of humor lay a serious view of life. He had known the sadness of poverty, the early death of his father and later his brother Henry, and the loss of a daughter. One of his most famous novels, Huckleberry Finn, is sometimes thought of as a child’s book. But its heartbreak and wisdom are appreciated best by adults. Another of his famous novels, Tom Sawyer, is mostly a young person’s book that adults can also read with pleasure.

Elssler and her sister danced at Marie Taglioni’s debut, in Taglioni’s father’s ballet troupe.
Fanny Elssler was a famous Austrian dancer who brought energy and drama to her performances. She was born in 1810, in Vienna, Austria, and studied ballet from a young age. As a child, Elssler appeared with her sister in several ballets at Vienna’s Kärntnertor Theatre.

When she was a young adult, Elssler became famous worldwide thanks to her energetic spirit onstage and her remarkable pointe work (dancing on the points of the toes). She made her Paris Opéra debut in 1834 in Jean Coralli’s ballet La Tempête, a dance version of William Shakespeare’s play The Tempest.

Before Elssler came along, most ballet was “classical ballet,” which featured light graceful dance, like that performed by Elssler’s greatest rival dancer, Marie Taglioni. But Elssler introduced theatrical, or “character,” ballet, which borrowed from folk dance traditions and even mime. She performed a Polish folk dance called the “cracovienne” in the ballet La Gypsy. And because some Gypsies were associated with Spain, she got the nickname “the Spaniard from the north.”

Elssler spent the later part of her career touring the United States, England, Germany, Italy, and Russia. Because of her long world tours, Elssler had to break her agreement with the Paris Opéra, and so she could not return to dance in France. Her worldwide tour ended up lasting more than ten years.

Elssler retired from the ballet in 1851. Her last years were spent in her native Vienna. During her career she was unequaled as a “character” dancer with amazing dramatic powers.

Bernhardt liked to keep her fans entertained and shocked, so she let it be known that she slept in a coffin every night. Though she slept mostly in a regular bed, she did pose for photographs “asleep” in her coffin.
Sarah Bernhardt, called “the Divine Sarah” by playwright Oscar Wilde, is one of the greatest French actresses of the 19th century—and one of the most famous actresses of all time.

In 1861, at age 17, Bernhardt was enrolled in the acting course at the Paris Conservatoire. She admired some of her teachers. But she considered the school’s methods too old-fashioned. Through a family friend, Bernhardt was accepted into the national theater company, the Comédie-Française. But she soon had to leave because she slapped a senior actress who had been rude to her younger sister. After a period when she questioned her talent for acting, Bernhardt joined the Odéon theater and, in six years, established her reputation as an actress.

Building on her success, Bernhardt returned to the Comédie-Française. When she played the title role in Jean Racine’s Phédre, she surprised the critics with the passion of her performance and won rave reviews. From that point on she was a star. She performed in France and internationally. And she was in demand for new plays by major writers of the day as well as for classics such as William Shakespeare’s works. She even played a number of male roles, including Hamlet.

Bernhardt possessed a wide emotional range and could show sensitive detail in her acting. Her grace, striking looks, and charm gave her a commanding stage presence. And her unique voice was sometimes described as sounding like a “golden bell.” Her popularity also increased because of her dramatic personality offstage.

In 1915 an earlier injury worsened, and her right leg had to be removed. She continued to act, however, playing parts she could perform while seated.

Can you imagine composing music without being able to hear it? Beethoven, one of the greatest music composers ever born, created much of his best music late in life, after he had become totally deaf.

Ludwig van Beethoven was born in 1770 in Bonn, Germany. Music was very important in his family. His grandfather and his father were professional singers in the choir of the archbishop at Bonn. Young Beethoven got the chance to play the organ at court as soon as he was old enough to work. The archbishop liked his music so much that he sent him to Vienna to learn from Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart. After hearing Beethoven play, Mozart told friends, “This young man will make a great name for himself in the world.”

At that time people thought of the piano mostly as an instrument for playing music for singers. But Beethoven composed such beautiful piano music that it stood easily on its own as a work of art. Beethoven’s music was a bridge between a stricter musical tradition and a freer, more deeply emotional music. He also brought new ideas and life to such classical music forms as the sonata, symphony, concerto, and quartet. Some of his best-known works include the Moonlight Sonata, the Pastoral and Eroica symphonies, and the Emperor Concerto.

After some years Beethoven realized that he could not hear things clearly anymore—not even what he himself was playing. Doctors told him he could never be cured. Beethoven stopped playing in public and kept away from people. But he still heard music in his mind, and he wrote down his musical ideas in his sketchbooks. These sketchbooks contained some of his finest music.

Beethoven’s musical works marked the beginnings of Romantic music. That sounds like music about love. But “romantic” more broadly describes art that tries to express emotions, the dramatic in life, and the individual person’s experience.
In 1930, at age 10, Ravi Shankar and other family members joined his eldest brother’s Indian dance troupe in Paris, France. The boy lived in France for over five years and studied dance and music.

Shankar gave up dance at age 18. He returned to India and studied the sitar for seven years under master musician Ustad Allauddin Khan. The sitar is a large long-necked stringed instrument, played from a seated position.

In 1944 Shankar began composing film music. A bit later he became music director of All India Radio. His audience grew within India. And when his musical score for Satyajit Ray’s 1955 film Pather Panchali won major awards, Shankar gained worldwide notice.

Shankar first toured the United States and England in 1956. Over the next ten years his audiences grew from small groups of Indian immigrants to sold-out concerts at New York City’s Philharmonic Hall. As Shankar’s fame increased, so did the popularity of Indian music. Sitar music is very different from music of the West. So it was exciting for Shankar and others to combine the two traditions to make altogether new sounds.

Shankar met and worked with many famous Western musicians who played a variety of styles. He played with jazz musicians, classical violinist Yehudi Menuhin, pianist and conductor André Previn, and experimental composer Philip Glass. His most famous musical association was with rock musician George Harrison of the Beatles. Harrison studied sitar under Shankar in India. Harrison’s fame and influence allowed him to introduce Shankar and Indian music to a vast audience in the West.

Shankar continues to compose and perform. And he remains one of the most highly regarded musicians in the world.

The film won the Grand Prix at the Venice Film Festival and the Academy Award for best foreign film.

Many consider Kurosawa’s best film to be Ikiru (To Live), from 1952. It follows a man who has only a few months to live and spends his last days helping the poor. Two

Many of Kurosawa’s films were set in historical Japan. Yet his work was popular not only in Japan but throughout the world. It combined artistic ideas, emotions, and images with plenty of action and drama to keep viewers entertained.

Kurosawa died in 1998. The Kurosawa Akira Memorial Satellite Studio has been opened on the Japanese island of Kyushu. It was there that he filmed several of his masterpieces, including Ran and Kagemusha.

Kiri Te Kanawa was born in 1944 in New Zealand. At the age of 5 weeks, she was adopted. Her adoptive and biological mothers were both of British descent. Her adoptive and biological fathers were Maori (native New Zealanders).

Te Kanawa’s mother discovered very early that her daughter was musical. So her parents sent her to a school where a well-known singer taught music. After leaving school Te Kanawa won various singing competitions in New Zealand and Australia.

By the 1970s Te Kanawa was world famous as a soprano diva (leading female vocalist) of opera. Her first big success was in Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart’s opera The Marriage of Figaro. She performed in many Mozart operas after that.

Te Kanawa made her first appearance at the Metropolitan Opera in New York City quite by accident. The lead star playing Desdemona in Giuseppe Verdi’s Otello suddenly fell ill. Te Kanawa was asked to perform instead, with only three hours to rehearse! She did such a splendid job that everyone raved about her performance.

In 1981 Te Kanawa sang at the wedding of Britain’s Prince Charles and Diana, princess of Wales. She sang George Frideric Handel’s “Let the Bright Seraphim.” This performance was seen on television by millions of viewers all over the world.

Te Kanawa is particularly known for the warmth of her soprano voice and her engaging personality on the stage. She has made a number of recordings. Most of these are of classical pieces, but she has also recorded traditional Maori songs from her New Zealand childhood.

In 1982 Te Kanawa was given a British noble title. She was made Dame Kiri Te Kanawa for the joy her singing had brought to so many.

Sufism is the Islamic belief and practice from which qawwali music arises. Sufi Muslims seek to find the truth of divine love and knowledge through direct personal experience of God.

Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan was considered one of the greatest singers of the music known as qawwali. Begun in Persia (present-day Iran) hundreds of years ago, qawwali music is based on Sufi Muslim poems about deep religious faith expressed through love. It has simple melodies and forceful rhythms.

Qawwals (singers of qawwali) traditionally perform their songs at shrines. A qawwal must learn all the Sufi poems. He often makes up more qawwals by using phrases and passages from different poems to create a new expression or idea. The singing includes much shouting and dancing.

Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan was born in 1948 in Pakistan. His father and two of his uncles were also famous qawwalis who sang in the classical style. Khan received music lessons from his father. When his father died in 1964, Khan sang in the qawwali style for the first time at his father’s funeral. Two years later Khan gave his first public performance, singing with his uncles.

Khan sang in a very high range (a family trademark) and had a powerfully expressive voice. Known for his melodic creativity, he would sometimes perform for 10 hours at a time. By the early 1970s Khan was recognized throughout Pakistan as the outstanding qawwal of his time. He sang at a world music concert in the United Kingdom in 1985. Soon he was also performing regularly throughout Europe.

In 1996 Khan recorded songs for some American movies. He also appeared on music television shows and performed songs that appealed specifically to Western audiences. Some felt he had betrayed the music’s Islamic heritage. But Khan said he had given up nothing to share his musical heritage with broader audiences.

Answer: Qawwali music is based on Sufi poetry.
Alvin Ailey, Jr., was born in 1931 in Texas. As a child, he helped his mother pick cotton to earn money. They moved to Los Angeles when Ailey was about 11 years old.

In Los Angeles, Ailey discovered dance during a junior high school field trip to a ballet. He began to study with the dance teacher Lester Horton and joined the Lester Horton Dance Theater in 1949. When Horton died four years later, Ailey became the director of the company. However, the next year the company broke up, and Ailey moved to New York City.

In New York Ailey danced in many performances and worked with some famous dance choreographers. They included Martha Graham and Hanya Holm. Ailey’s own modern dancing combined what he learned from Lester Horton with African and Afro-Caribbean styles.

In 1958 Ailey formed the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater. Most of its members were African Americans, like Ailey. One of the company’s early performances was a work by Ailey called Revelations. The dance is set to American Negro spirituals, and it has become the company’s most popular work.

Since the 1960s Ailey’s company has performed around the United States and all over the globe. Its popularity made Ailey one of the most famous American choreographers in the world and encouraged people everywhere to appreciate and enjoy modern dance.

Alvin Ailey died in 1989, but the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater continues to flourish. And just as Ailey hoped, the company he founded has expanded from a troupe of mostly black performers to a rich multi-ethnic mix.

Louis Armstrong was known for his musical quotations. That is, he honored other musicians by slipping pieces of their music into his performances.

What's unusual about scat? (Hint: Bee dee wa scabba doo.)
A young African American boy sang and danced on a street in New Orleans, Louisiana, in the early 20th century. He hoped to earn some money, as his family was very poor. That boy, Louis Daniel Armstrong, would become one of the world’s most famous jazz trumpet players.

Armstrong loved music and tried various instruments before finally choosing the cornet. The cornet looks like a trumpet but is shaped like a cone. Armstrong became the leader of his school band. Jazz was just beginning to be popular. As a teenager he learned music by listening to pieces played by famous jazz musicians. Later he learned to read music.

Armstrong played with jazz bands in Chicago and New York City. He recorded his first solo pieces, “Chimes Blues” and “Tears,” in Chicago. In New York he changed from the cornet to the trumpet. He felt the trumpet had a brighter sound and a flashier look. By the time Armstrong was 28 years old, he had become very famous. He toured worldwide as a trumpet soloist with big bands.

Louis Armstrong was nicknamed “Satchmo” by his fellow musicians. Short for “Satchel Mouth,” the name suggested that his mouth was as wide as a satchel (a large book bag). But the friendly teasing was a sign of the great respect jazz musicians felt for Armstrong’s talent. His creativity, ability to express emotion, and superior technical skill were universally admired.

Armstrong is also remembered as one of the inventors of what is called “scat.” Sometimes while singing a lyric he would sing without using words. He would sing a string of sounds instead. His scat singing and gravelly voice became as well known as his face and trumpet.

Kermit the Frog's original eyes were made from a Ping-Pong ball cut in half.
As a puppeteer and creator of the Muppets, Jim Henson delighted, entertained, and educated several generations of children and adults. Henson was born in Mississippi in 1936. He grew up in Washington, D.C., and began his career as a puppeteer while in high school there. Later he and his wife had a short puppet show on local television called “Sam and Friends.” While he was still in college, Henson put together a team of puppeteers who performed in commercials and on TV programs.

In 1969 the Children’s Television Workshop created a TV show with Henson called “Sesame Street.” The program featured his “Muppets” and included such now famous characters as Kermit the Frog, Grover, Big Bird, and Cookie Monster. Kids loved the Muppets. “Sesame Street” also proved Henson’s belief that learning could be fun.

The Muppets are a unique form of puppetry that was new to television. Often it takes two people to operate a Muppet, since the head and each arm may require a human hand to move them. The larger Muppets, like Snuffleupagus and Big Bird, are actually costumed actors. The puppeteer who controls each Muppet also provides the character’s voice. Henson operated and voiced Kermit himself for 35 years.

“Sesame Street” was so successful that in 1976 Henson created “The Muppet Show”—a TV program for both adults and children. The Muppets make movies as well, including The Muppet Movie, The Muppets Take Manhattan, and Muppets from Space.

Sadly, Henson died suddenly of pneumonia in 1990. But his Muppets continue to perform today, with Henson’s son Brian leading the company.
