The family are happy with / uneasy about Mick’s decision.

That night they were all out on the porch. The twilight was blurred and soft. Supper was almost ready and the smell of cabbage floated to them from the open hall. All of them were together except Hazel, who had not come from work, and Etta, who still lay sick in bed. Their Dad leaned back in his chair with his sock-feet on the banisters. Bill was on the steps with the kids. Their Mama sat on a swing fanning herself with the newspaper. Across the street a girl new in the neighborhood skated up and down the sidewalk on one roller skate. The lights on the block were just beginning to be turned on, and far away a man was calling someone.

Then Hazel came home. Her high heels clopped up the steps and she leaned back lazily on the banisters. In the half-dark her fat, soft hands were very white as she felt the back of her braided hair. ‘I sure do wish Etta was able to work,’ she said. ‘I found out about this job today.’

‘What kind of job?’ asked their Dad. ‘Anything I could do, or just for girls?’

‘Just for a girl. A clerk down at Woolworth’s is going to get married next week.’

‘The ten-cent store –’ Mick said.

‘You interested?’

The question took her by surprise. She had just been thinking about a sack of wintergreen candy she had bought there the day before. She felt hot and tense. She rubbed her bangs up from her forehead and counted the first few stars.

Their Dad flipped his cigarette down to the sidewalk. ‘No,’ he said. ‘We don’t want Mick to take on too much responsibility at her age. Let her get her growth out. Her growth through with, anyway.’

‘I agree with you,’ Hazel said. ‘I really do think it would be a mistake for Mick to have to work regular. I don’t think it would be right.’

Bill put Ralph down from his lap and shuffled his feet on the steps.

‘Nobody ought to work until they’re around sixteen. Mick should have two more years and finish at Vocational – if we can make it.’

‘Even if we have to give up the house and move down in mill town,’ their Mama said, ‘I rather keep Mick at home for a while.’

For a minute she had been scared they would try to corner her into taking a job. She would have said she would run away from home. But the way they took the attitude they did touched her. She felt excited. They were all talking about her – and in a kindly way. She was ashamed for the first scared feeling that had come to her. Of a sudden she loved all of the family and a tightness came in her throat.

The Success Myth

Where do great musicians, great mathematicians and great sportspeople get their talent? For decades now, we have assumed that most of them are simply born with a talent that ordinary people do not have. When baseball legend Ted Williams claimed that his achievements had nothing to do with natural ability but were ‘the result of practice, practice, practice’, people assumed that he was merely being modest. But scientists now believe that there was a good deal of truth in what he said.

1. In the last century, it was accepted that we inherit many of our traits from our parents via their DNA, that each of us inherits a fixed amount of intelligence – a fixed IQ – and that most of us are doomed to be mediocre. But now it is accepted that our genes interact with their surroundings, getting turned on and off all the time. There are no genetic factors that can be studied independently of the environment,’ explains Michael Meaney of McGill University. ‘And there are no environmental factors that function independently of our genes.’ They work 2. ___________ each other.

In other words, although each of us is born with a fixed set of genes, we have from birth the capacity to develop in a number of distinctly different ways. Our personalities, our intelligence, and our talents are ultimately determined by the interaction of our genes with the environment we grow up in, by the life we lead. Our genes clearly have a powerful influence over the formation and development of all physical and mental traits, from height to eye colour to intelligence. However, they hardly ever determine precisely what those characteristics will be. Intelligence and talent are not innate, pre-determined or unchangeable.

3. How does this view of the role of genes change our understanding of individual talent and abilities? 4. ___________ this new way of thinking, it was assumed that we simply inherited our talents and abilities. Does it now mean that genes don’t matter, that we all have the potential to be like, say, Lionel Messi or Gary Kasparov? Such a claim flies in the face of reason. The genes we inherit clearly matter, as do genetic differences between individuals. These differences often give people a real advantage in terms of particular abilities, such as hand-eye coordination or the ability to grasp complicated mathematical concepts. But it is also true that Lionel Messi would not have become the supreme footballer he is, nor Gary Kasparov a chess genius, without huge encouragement from their parents from an early age, and without putting in thousands of hours of practice. They could have turned out entirely different people. Talent researchers Kevin Rathunde and Samuel Whalen agree. ‘High academic achievers are not necessarily born ‘smarter’ than others,’ they write in their book Talented Teenagers, ‘but work harder and develop more self-discipline.’

There is strong evidence to suggest that few of us ever come close to achieving our true potential. This is a big idea to swallow, 5. ___________ how much effort has gone into persuading us that each of us inherits a fixed amount of intelligence, and that most of us are destined to be mediocre.

Do you have the potential to develop into a world-class athlete, a virtuoso musician or a brilliant Nobel Prize-winning scientist? It would be foolish to suggest that anyone can do or become anything. But the new science tells us that it is equally foolish to think that mediocrity is built into most of us, or that any of us know what we are really capable of until we have spent an enormous amount of time and effort exploring our limits. Our abilities are not set in genetic stone. They can be developed 6. ___________ childhood, far into adulthood. What counts is our attitude 7. ___________ them; what we do with them. With humility, with hope and with extraordinary determination, greatness is something to which anyone – of any age – can aspire.

Description of a person

I can write a description of a person.

Preparation

1 Read the exam writing task and jumbled model text. Match paragraphs A–D with headings 1–4 below.

Write a description (200–250 words) of a person who has had a big influence on you.

A Since studying history in Miss Simpson's class, it has become my favourite subject and I want to go on to study it at university. She is a person I look up to and consider to be a role model. I feel that I owe her a lot and I hope that my history teachers at university are as inspiring.

B She's an excellent teacher and is always very encouraging. She comes across as very perceptive and sensitive. I guess teaching can be quite stressful, but she seems to take things in her stride and hardly ever gets flustered or angry. However, she doesn't tolerate rudeness or lateness, speaks her mind, and she tells people off for talking when she's talking. I don't mind that, but some of my classmates regard her as a bit strict. She's very good at holding the class's attention (unlike some other teachers!) and she makes history, which can be a little boring at times, really come alive.

C A person who has undoubtedly had a huge influence on me is my history teacher, Miss Simpson. I've known her for the past two years, since I started at upper-secondary school.

D She's in her early thirties and is quite tall and slim. She's got short, red hair and a friendly smile. She's got blue eyes and she sometimes wears glasses. As far as clothes go, she tends to wear a skirt and a blouse or she sometimes wears trousers, but she always looks smart and elegant.

If you had $1 million, would you give any away? If so, who would you give it to and why? If not, what would you do with it and why?

14 Unit 2 • Rich and poor
Riches TO RAGS

A Karl Rabeder
Karl Rabeder was on holiday when it hit him. He despised the wealth and the wealthy people with whom he had surrounded himself. There was only one thing to do – get rid of it all. Rabeder, 48, had dedicated much of his adult life to making money. After university, he became an inventor. He started a company, and by the age of 32, he was a millionaire. Rabeder came from a poor background, and his mother had always told him money was a measure of success. But the more money he made, the emptier he felt. Then, on a gliding trip in Argentina, Rabeder met people who just needed a few hundred pounds to set up businesses. He began giving out ‘micro-loans’ of £200. What astonished him most was that when he returned a year later, they proudly gave him back his money. ‘I felt if £200 could make such a difference, what am I doing spending the same amount on one nice meal for two people?’ Rabeder sold all his possessions and now plans to live off €1,000 a month – money he will earn by lecturing and working as a life coach. ‘I wish to give some kind of braveness to other people, just tell them it’s so easy.’

B Sara Robin
Sara Robin’s inherited wealth was always associated with trauma. When she was two, her mother died, leaving her everything. She went to live with her grandparents – but her grandfather died eleven months later and her grandmother when she was four. Her father bought her a new car when she started university, and this made her feel even more of an outsider. She didn’t enjoy having more than others; she simply wanted to be like them. She didn’t speak about her background, and pretended she had a student grant like the others. After university, she travelled through Australia and the USA with her future husband, Hugh. It was now the 70s – she met feminists, Aboriginal land-rights activists, anti-nuclear protesters, and became politicised. She worked as a bike engineer, and was judged for who she was rather than for her background. By the time she and Hugh returned, she knew that her inheritance was good for one thing only – giving away. How much in total? Robin smiles and says she’s not good with money. ‘Oh about £10,000 to £20,000 a year. Not that much.’ She stops. ‘But back then you could buy a house for £8,000.’

C Brian Burnie
Doxford Hall in Northumberland is almost 200 years old, and Brian Burnie has spent £18 million rebuilding it into a modern spa hotel. He bought it in 1993, at which time it was derelict. The plan was to develop it into both a family home and a hotel, and to give the profits to a charity called Marie Curie Cancer Care. Then, six years ago, his wife Shirley was diagnosed with breast cancer. That’s when Burnie decided he would sell Doxford Hall and use the money to start a charity for transporting cancer patients to and from hospital. Burnie describes his background as humble. His father worked on a building site, his mother was a housewife. He did not do well in his school exams, but he worked hard at his job, and later returned to education and studied engineering. He and a friend set up a firm of engineers, which he ran for 30 years. Although he made a lot of money, he was never extravagant. Now he says he’s done his life’s work, and the only thing that matters to him is the charity. He says his three children are not interested in inheriting his wealth, either, which is lucky because he wouldn’t have left it for them anyway. ‘As a parent, the best thing you can give your children is time. It’s not about money.’

Too hungry to share

It was a hot day in July and Mason was in town. He had been looking for a new sports bag, but he hadn't found one he liked. He'd bought a white T-shirt instead. It was now one o'clock and he hadn't eaten since breakfast, so he headed for his favourite takeaway. Half an hour outside Benny's Burgers, about to take his first bite of an extra-large cheeseburger. Then, out of the corner, his best friend Kyle appeared around the corner. The Mason saw him, he put his lunch in his bag. He was starving and didn't want to share it with anyone, not even his best friend. When Kyle asked Mason what he was doing, Mason lied and said he was just waiting for a bus. They chatted for a while. As as Kyle had gone, Mason took his lunch out of the bag. At the time, a bus pulled up. Not wanting to wait an hour for the next one, Mason put his lunch away again and got on the bus, which was crowded and hot. , he arrived at his stop and afterwards, he was at home. At last, he could have his lunch! Opening the bag, he saw his new white T-shirt was covered with brown barbecue sauce. But that was not all: Having been in a bag for two hours in hot weather, the burger smelled too bad to eat!

3 Divide the story into four paragraphs according to the four stages below. (There is more than one possible answer.)

Stage 1: Setting the scene 'It was a hot day' ...
Stage 2: The first event ' ...'
Stage 3: Events that follow ' ...'
Stage 4: The resolution ' ...'

- used some of the expressions from exercise 2?
- written 200–250 words?
- checked your spelling and grammar?
EXAM TASK – Reading

Read the text. Choose the correct answer, A, B, C or D, for questions 1–4.

When I left them at midnight, a full moon was shining in a dark blue starless sky, and the air was soft and warm. I decided to take the long route home, and walk across Hampstead Heath before joining the road into the centre of the city. After a while I came to a crossroads and turned onto the London road. I was lost in my own thoughts, wondering about the two young ladies in Cumberland, when suddenly, my heart seemed to stop beating. A hand had touched my shoulder from behind. I turned at once, my hand tightening on my walking stick.

There, as if it had dropped from the sky, stood the figure of a woman, dressed from head to foot in white clothes. I was too surprised to speak.

‘Is that the road into London?’ she said.

I looked at her carelessly. It was then nearly one o’clock. All I could see in the moonlight was a young colourless face, large sad eyes, and light brown hair. Her manner was quiet and self-controlled. What sort of woman was she, and why was she so late alone, I could not guess. But there was nothing evil about her – indeed, a kind of sad innocence seemed to come from her.

‘Did you hear me?’ she said, quietly and rapidly.

‘Yes,’ I replied, ‘that’s the road. Please excuse me – I was rather surprised by your sudden appearance.’

‘You don’t suspect me of doing anything wrong, do you?’

‘No, no, seeing you so suddenly gave me a shock, that’s all.’

I heard you coming,’ she said, ‘and hid behind those trees to see what sort of man you were, before I risked speaking. May I trust you?’ Her eyes searched my face, anxiously.

Her loneliness and helplessness were so obvious that I felt great sympathy for her. ‘Tell me how I can help you,’ I said, ‘and if I can, I will.’

‘Oh, thank you, thank you. You are very kind.’ Her voice trembled a little as she spoke. ‘I don’t know London at all. Can I get a cab or a carriage at this time of night? Could you show me where to get one, and will you promise not to interfere with me? I have a friend in London who will be glad to receive me. I want nothing else – will you promise?’

She looked nervously up and down the road, then back at me. How could I refuse? Her fear and confusion were painful to see. ‘Will you promise?’ she repeated.

‘Yes.’

We set off together towards the centre of London. It was like a dream – walking along that familiar road, with so strange and so mysterious a companion at my side.

‘Do you know any men of the rank of Baronet in London?’ she asked suddenly.

There was a note of suspicion in the strange question, and when I said I knew no Baronets, she seemed relieved.

I questioned her further, and she murmured that she had been cruelly used by a Baronet she would not name. She told me she came from Hampshire and asked if I lived in London. I explained that I did, but that I was leaving for Cumberland the next day.

‘Cumberland!’ she repeated softly. ‘Ah! I wish I was going there too. I was once happy in Cumberland, in Limmeridge village. I’d like to see Limmeridge House again.’

Limmeridge House! I stopped, amazed.

‘What’s wrong?’ she asked anxiously. ‘Did you hear anybody calling after us?’

‘No, no. It’s just that I heard the name of Limmeridge House very recently. Do you know somebody there?’

‘I did once,’ she said. ‘But Mrs Fairlie is dead; and her husband is dead; and their little girl may be married and gone away...’

Perhaps she would have told me more, but just at that moment we saw a cab. I stopped it, and she quickly got in.

1 On his way home, the man
A was scared because he was all alone on the road.
B was in a hurry since it was already after midnight.
C took the wrong turn at the crossroads and got lost.
D wanted to enjoy the pleasant weather a little longer.

2 When he met the woman,
A he was puzzled at her being without company.
B she spoke too quietly for him to hear her.
C he had to apologise because he had insulted her.
D she suspected he had bad intentions.

3 The man felt obliged to help her because he
A feared she might be in pain.
B could see she was disorientated.
C wanted to solve the mystery surrounding her.
D was beginning to like her very much.

4 The woman was suspicious of the man because
A she didn’t like the fact that he was questioning her.
B he had pretended not to hear somebody calling after them.
C she thought he might know someone who had hurt her.
D it seemed strange that they both knew Limmeridge House.
EXAM TASK – Listening

EXAM TASK – Use of English

Choose the correct answer, A, B or C, to complete each gap.

Don’t always believe what you read

When is International Book Week not International Book Week? When it’s a Facebook meme (an idea that is copied and spread on the Internet). A short while after people started updating their Facebook statuses, a random line from a random book. Why?

Because someone posted that it was International Book Week and suggested the idea. In no time the idea had spread right Facebook. However, a quick Internet search reveals that there is no International Book Week. Why were so many people fooled?

The simple answer is that it was fun, interesting and a nice thing to share. Anyway, what does it matter if it was or wasn’t International Book Week? People were enjoying something. But a more serious issue arises from this: with ”information available on the Internet, how do we know what to believe or not? Quoting random lines from a book might be a of fun, but what if the meme were asking people to send money? Would it be so harmless then? So, remember next time you read something on the Internet to ask yourself whether it be a hoax.

EXAM TASK – Speaking

   b Most teenagers are valuable members of the community, but the government needs to focus on the small minority who become involved in crime.
   c There are enough recreational facilities for young people, but more money needs to be spent on dealing with the consequences of teenage crime.

Challenge!

How could the government improve the lives of young people where you live? Make three recommendations.

   1 _________
   2 _________
   3 _________
New statistics in the Youth Review show that, as schools in Britain prepare to break up for the holidays, over one million teenagers could be wandering the streets because there is nowhere else to go. A year-long enquiry consulted 16,000 British teenagers and recommends radical action to transform their lives.

The Youth Review was undertaken by children’s charity 4Children and supported by Nestlé. It comes at a time of unprecedented debate about the welfare of young people in the UK. Recent statistics demonstrate worrying trends in many aspects of teenagers’ lives.

Researchers spent twelve months touring each region of the country and consulting over 16,000 teenagers to find out what life is truly like for young people today in the UK and how they themselves believe that improvements can be made.

Publicising the Review today, pop star and youth icon Lily Allen said: ‘I want to see a new start for teenagers in communities where they have nothing to do, nowhere to go and nowhere to call their own. The Youth Review has consulted 16,000 teenagers across the country and their message was clear. The number of teenagers who go off the rails is a problem for us all and instead of helping them only after they’re in crisis, we need to stop them getting into trouble in the first place.’

The Review discovered:

- 60% of young people in deprived areas have been victims of crime in their own community.
- 70% of teenagers said that, in their opinion, young people got involved in anti-social behaviour because they were bored.
- More than 70% of eleven- to sixteen-year-olds said that they have witnessed anti-social behaviour over the last year, whilst 12% of young people belong to a gang.
- 80% of young people said they had nowhere to go and nothing to do outside school.
- 62% said that they did not know where to go to get help or information if they needed it.
- Youth crime costs up to £13 billion per year compared to £1.6 billion spent by government on positive prevention and youth programmes. It costs £35,000 to put a young person in a detention centre for a year.

The Review is calling for an urgent transformation of support for teenagers. It recommends a programme of government investment and action to provide positive opportunities for all young people, with early support and intervention for troubled teenagers to prevent difficulties escalating.

The key recommendations are:

- A youth centre in every community providing dedicated spaces for young people to meet, as well as access to music, creative arts, sports, and specialist intervention and support for teenagers in difficulty.
- Mobile ‘intervention teams’ to work in areas of high deprivation and unrest, offering teenagers specialist and positive support.
- Action on bullying and a new victim support scheme for young people who have been the victims of crime.
- Young mayors elected in every area to give teenagers representation and a say in their community.
- Free public transport and leisure for all young people under eighteen to ensure access for all.

Oona King, Chair of the Review said: ‘Growing up can be tough and we are simply not doing enough to help the next generation to flourish. Young people need to be a part of our communities, otherwise we spend billions dealing with the consequences of anti-social behaviour, crime and violence.’

Preparation

1. Read the exam writing task below and the model essay in exercise 2, ignoring the gaps. Choose the correct answers.

   Life for teenagers now is very different from life when their grandparents were growing up. Write an essay which presents the advantages and disadvantages of being a teenager in the 21st century, compared with 50 years ago.

   1. The advantages are given in paragraph B / C.
   2. The disadvantages are given in paragraph B / C.
   3. The writer gives his opinion in the introduction / conclusion.
   4. The writer believes that life for teenagers now is better / worse than it was 50 years ago.

2. Complete the model essay with the words in the box.

   finally firstly for example on balance on the other hand secondly (x2)

   A Many elderly people look back on their youth and claim that life was much better in days gone by. Is this merely nostalgia, or is life for young people really not as good now as it was in the past?

   B 1__________, technology has transformed all our lives in the last 50 years, and it has certainly improved the lives of teenagers. 2__________, television, CDs, DVDs and computers all provide fantastic entertainment and the Internet makes it easy for teenagers to find information for their schoolwork. 3__________, as a society we are richer than we were, and are able to buy more and better food, better clothes, and take holidays more frequently.

   4__________, teenagers have much more freedom nowadays to wear what they like, to go out and generally to make decisions for themselves.

   C 5__________, teenagers probably aren’t as active as they used to be. Many parents complain that they do less sport nowadays and spend more time indoors in front of screens. 6__________, the pace of life was much slower 50 years ago. There was less pressure on young people to perform well in exams and they had more time to relax.

   D While it is true that life was better for teenagers in some respects 50 years ago, 7__________, I believe that the advantages of being a teenager in the 21st century outweigh the disadvantages.

Writing guide

3. You are going to do the exam writing task below. First think of two or three advantages and disadvantages of being a teenager as opposed to an adult. Use the ideas in the box to help you.

   Write an essay (200–250 words) which presents the advantages and disadvantages of being a teenager as opposed to an adult.

   independence and freedom  money  work

The mention of politics is a sure way to make teenagers fall asleep. Ask them if they think the Prime Minister is doing a good job and they’ll probably just nod and smile, completely uninterested. But ask them if they agree with being taxed at sixteen, or if they think they should have more rights, and they could go on for hours. But surely that’s politics too?

It is true that teenagers don’t know a lot about politics, don’t know who’s left or right-wing and wouldn’t know what a coalition government was. But this is more due to the fact there is no way for us to become directly involved, because we can’t vote until we’re eighteen years old.

We are deemed responsible enough to have children, to join the army and to make a decision about our education that will affect us for the rest of our life – so why are we not considered mature enough to make decisions about the country that we live in? Matters of schools and education apply to young people more than anyone else – it is our education, after all, that is affected by changes in funding or policy. Is it fair that these decisions are made by politicians in their forties or older? Surely the people who are most knowledgeable in this area are us, the teenagers?

On the other hand, a lot of teenagers probably wouldn’t take part if they were given the vote at sixteen. I spoke to Sharon, seventeen, from London, who said: ‘A lot of sixteen-year-olds aren’t responsible enough and wouldn’t take it seriously. But we pay adult fares, so shouldn’t we be adults all the way?’ Jocelyn, sixteen, also from south-east London, disagrees. ‘We shouldn’t have the vote because it doesn’t affect us yet. Voting concerns over-eighteens on things like university loans.’

Giles, sixteen, asked the all-important question: ‘Sixteen-year-olds should have a vote, yes, but do they really want to vote?’

And he’s right – are we actually bothered? Not many of us are. To be honest, I didn’t have any thoughts about politics until asked for my opinion on the subject. I didn’t think giving us the vote was even up for question. Is this because I’m a political airhead, or because I’m conditioned to switch off when the topic is mentioned?

It would seem, then, that not all teenagers want the vote. But why would we want something we have always been told we are not ready for? If we were given the vote, maybe we would take on the responsibility to find out about what we are voting for and take it more seriously than many adults do.

Trust is a big deal for teenagers and the government has shown no faith in the teen community. You never know, maybe we would be even more reliable voters than adults. If the government does decide that it’s going to give us the vote, then it will need to make an effort — taking the campaign into schools and colleges, selling us the benefits, and helping us to understand what we are being given the opportunity to do. We could even vote through our schools.

Perhaps voting in elections is too big a deal to be trusted to sixteen-year-olds, but we should be able to voice our views and vote on the issues that affect us. If the government gives us the vote, we won’t try to take over the world, or vote for the UK’s water system to be replaced with lemonade. We would just like to have our say, like everyone else.

1. Read the letter of protest. Complete Elsie’s paragraph plan below in your own words.

   Dear Mrs Jones,
   I am writing to express my concern about the proposed closure of the skate park in Lower Road. I understand the council plans to close it in November.

   I am very worried about the teenagers who currently use this facility. They will be forced to pursue their hobby in areas which are less safe, such as streets and shopping centres. Not only will this make them more likely to be involved in accidents with traffic, but it will also create a hazard for pedestrians. Expecting teenage skateboarders to avoid busy pavements is simply not realistic.

   In addition, the planned closure gives a very negative signal to young people in the town, who have few opportunities for leisure activities. Although there is a sports centre, most teenagers cannot afford to join it. The skate park allows them to socialise outdoors in an enjoyable and healthy way without having to pay.

   The fact is that young skateboarders need somewhere in town to practise their hobby. Depriving them of this facility will put their safety at risk and also the safety of pedestrians in town. I urge you therefore to reconsider your decision to close the skate park.

   I look forward to your response.
   Yours sincerely,
   Elsie Waters
   Miss E. Waters

3. You are going to do the exam writing task below. Think of two reasons to oppose the plan. Use the words and photos to give you ideas.

   Your local council has decided to save money by cancelling this year’s summer carnival. Write a letter of protest (200–250 words) explaining why you think this decision should be reversed.

   - community  • costumes  • procession
   - charity  • fun  • fundraising

4. In your notebook, write a paragraph plan like the one in exercise 1. Include your ideas from exercise 3.

5. Write your letter in your notebook. Follow the paragraph plan you made in exercise 4.

CHECK YOUR WORK

Have you:
- clearly followed your paragraph plan?
- written 200–250 words?
- used some of the phrases in exercise 2?
- used an appropriate style for a formal letter?
- checked your spelling and grammar?
EXAM TASK – Reading

Read the text and for each question (1–7) choose the paragraph (A–D) it refers to. Each letter can be used more than once.

A Aromatherapy
The smell of certain essential oils is helpful in aiding relaxation, which will make it easier to fall asleep. There are four oils you can buy that are especially effective for sleep therapy. The most fragrant-smelling is lavender, which is a muscle relaxant and has an overall calming effect. Chamomile soothes your nervous system and is gentle enough to be used not only on adults but also on youngsters. Clary Sage and Neroli are anti-depressant and relax the brain. Use a mixture of these oils three times daily: morning, afternoon and evening. Apply them to the skin or add a few drops to your bathwater.

B Homeopathy
This kind of sleep therapy stimulates your immune system as well as relaxing your mind and body. A stronger immune system leaves your body better able to deal with the stresses and strains of everyday life and perks you up, putting you in a much more buoyant and positive mood. There are several kinds of homeopathic remedy available over the counter in selected pharmacies. Put a few drops in water to drink or – for a more tailored therapy – consult a homeopathic practitioner who will prescribe you a personal remedy that fits your type of sleeplessness. You will be given drops or small pills to take.

C Healing touch therapy
There are several methods of massage which all have a holistic effect on the body. Many health troubles are stress-related, because stress causes the body’s equilibrium to become unbalanced. Massage or ‘healing touch therapy’ is a proven technique for calming the body’s central nervous system. It is very efficient as a treatment for stress and insomnia, as well as promoting a return to full health. Massage, combined with the use of the correct essential oils, is a doubly powerful sleep therapy. It is a therapy, however, that you cannot do yourself and requires a qualified practitioner.

D Light therapy and chronotherapy
‘Circadian rhythm sleep disorder’ is a condition which requires intervention from a medical practitioner. It occurs when your personal ‘body clock’ is out of sync with daylight, so you have severe problems with sleeping and waking at the normal times. Scientists have found that by using light therapy or chronotherapy or both, they can help this condition. You are asked to sit in front of a full-spectrum light box which simulates daylight for a certain amount of time each day. Chronotherapy involves having your bedtime gradually moved forwards or backwards over a period of weeks until you acquire new sleeping habits.

EXAM TASK – Speaking

The town council want to close a park near your school. You are a member of the student committee, which is planning to organise a protest against this decision. Talk to a friend about the steps to be taken.

Discuss your arguments in favour of saving the park, and agree on:
- the type of action you want to take.
- participants.
- advertising.

EXAM TASK – Writing

The town council are planning to rebuild the local swimming pool. There are five different projects, from a very ambitious one with a modern spa and water slides to a simple renovation of the existing pool. Yesterday there was a meeting with the general public in the local community centre, where people could find out more and express their ideas and wishes.

Write a report of 210–230 words for the local newspaper about this event. In your report say
- how many people appeared.
- what the atmosphere was like.
- what questions people asked.
- what the result was.

Write your report in the appropriate style and format.

Paranoia or real concerns?

Almost ________ time we visit a website, ‘cookies’ are sent to our computer and stored there, hidden from view. Most people do not even know they are there. But what are cookies and what are they used for? Some people see them as ________ ‘spies’ that record all our activity on the Internet, while others consider them to be harmless devices designed to make life easier for us. They are basically text files that store information that may be useful to the owners of websites that you visit. They can record which pages you looked at and, next time you visit that site, ________ appears on screen takes account of that. They can also record payment details when you buy products online and make it easier for you to shop again at the same website. What is there to worry about, then? That probably depends on how you feel about large organisations storing information about you. There are concerns that some websites are gathering too much personal information about users. Social-networking sites know about our friends, our tastes, our view of the world, our politics, our marital status, etc., and that information helps them target you ________ personalised advertising. Moreover, some people fear that ________ you have handed over personal data, it’s very difficult to have it destroyed. What’s more, the data could end up anywhere – the police or the government might want to see it, or companies might use it in unexpected or unacceptable ways. You do, of course, have a choice. You can restrict the information you pass ________ to Google and other sites. The downside is that you might find that surfing the Net and online shopping suddenly become a lot more difficult.

2. Why did Nicola Brookes feel sympathy for the reality TV star?

3. What is the most devastating consequence of a troll attack mentioned in the text?

4. Why do trolls feel free to say unpleasant things online?

5. What has Facebook been made to do?

Challenge!

What advice would you give to a person who was a victim of Internet trolling?
An Internet troll is someone who posts insulting or provocative comments in an online chat room, social-networking site or blog. Their aim is not to contribute to the discussion, but to upset people or make them angry.

Sometimes the comments are fairly harmless. For example, a troll might visit a website that is dedicated to combatting global warming and post a comment like 'Global warming is a myth made up by second-rate scientists who just want to further their own careers.' This is exactly what the troll wants: to start a fight.

However, many trolls are far more dangerous and post comments that are deeply hurtful, and often of a sexist or racist nature. In 2011, 45-year-old Nicola Brookes left a message of support for a reality TV contestant on Facebook. The contestant had received hate mail on Facebook and, feeling sympathy for the young man, Ms Brookes left a message on his Facebook page, saying simply: 'Keep your chin up, Frankie, they’ll move on to someone else soon.' They did move on to someone else – Ms Brookes – within minutes.

Racist trolling probably has the highest profile cases. When Premier League footballer Fabrice Muamba collapsed on the pitch during a match in 2012, racist messages appeared on Twitter taking pleasure in his misfortune and laughing at him. Thankfully, Muamba made a complete recovery. The effects of such attacks can be devastating, especially for people who are being targeted precisely because they admitted to a vulnerability in the first place. There have even been one or two well-publicised incidences of people taking their own lives after being targeted by trolls on social-networking sites.

So why do trolls post messages that cause such distress? Some of them are sad, lonely people with their own problems who enjoy the attention their posts attract. They behave badly online because they feel liberated from normal standards of polite and considerate behaviour. They say things that they would never dare to say in person. Finally, trolls believe that they can remain anonymous and that no one will ever discover who they are.

That is about to change, however. When Nicola Brookes first approached the police and made a complaint, they told her there was nothing they could do. So she contacted lawyers and began legal action to force Facebook to disclose the identities of the trolls who had been tormenting her. She won the case and is free to pursue private prosecutions against those responsible for abusing her. With trolls facing exposure and possible prosecution in future, hopefully they will think twice before posting abusive messages.
1 Rewite the text. Use passive structures to make the underlined words the main focus of the sentences.

Mark Zuckerberg created Facebook in 2004 when he was a student at Harvard University. He originally intended it to be a game in which people could compare photos of students and rate them according to who was the most attractive. The college banned the project within days, but it later became the basis for the social-networking site we know today. At first, it granted membership only to students, but later allowed all people over the age of thirteen to join. Today, over one billion people actively use Facebook. In 2011, Forbes Magazine declared Zuckerberg to be the ninth most powerful person in the world.

4 A good way for parents to prevent obesity in children is to control __________.
5 Losing weight does not reduce the number of __________ in your body, but they get smaller.

2 USE OF ENGLISH Complete the text opposite with words formed from the words in brackets.

New pills __________ (offer) rapid weight loss are advertised every month in glossy magazines, but most have little or no __________ (science) research to back up their claims. However, scientists in Sweden have discovered that a drug which __________ (original) came from an oversized and __________ (venom) lizard can effectively reduce food cravings. The unlikely claims have recently been published in The Journal of Neuroscience.

The drug Exenatide is widely used to control the blood sugar levels of people with type 2 diabetes. It is an artificially produced equivalent of a __________ (nature) occurring chemical called exendin-4, which comes from a very unusual source: the saliva of a Gila monster. Gila monsters are a type of lizard found in the deserts of North America and are one of only two species of lizard __________ (know) to produce venom. Since collecting the saliva is no easy task, scientists developed a way of creating a synthetic version of exendin-4.

Now, researchers at the Sahlgrenska Academy, part of the University of Gothenburg, have discovered that the drug has an __________ (interest) side effect. A study with rats has demonstrated that exendin-4 is effective at reducing cravings for food. Leader of the study, Assistant Professor Karolina Skibicka, described the __________ (find) as ‘both unknown and quite __________ (expect)’. Scientists hope that the drug may have applications beyond weight control. Since it targets the reward centres in the brain, it could potentially be used to control all kinds of addiction, including drug dependency and __________ (alcohol).

Secret recipes

Lea & Perrins Worcestershire Sauce
Developed by John Wheelely Lea and William Perrins, Worcestershire Sauce, with its rich and spicy taste, was an instant success when it went on sale in 1838. Since that time, the recipe for making the sauce has been a closely-guarded secret. But after more than 170 years, the original recipe has been revealed. It was found in notes dating from the mid-1800s that were inadvertently dumped in a rubbish bin by the sauce factory. Brian Keogh, a former Lea & Perrins employee, discovered the notes, which were neatly written in ink in two leather-bound notebooks, and rescued them.
The label on bottles of the sauce lists vinegar, molasses, sugar, salt, anchovies, tamarind extract, onions and garlic. But it doesn’t reveal the identity of other key ingredients, merely adding ‘spice’ and ‘flavouring’. Mr Keogh’s documents reveal that these could include cloves, soy sauce, lemons, pickles and peppers. They also show the all-important ratios of the ingredients, which until now have also remained a mystery. However, even with all the ingredients, there is no guarantee you would be able to make the sauce, because what makes it distinctive is the way it is made, which is still a secret.

Dr Pepper
Poking through antiques stores while travelling in Texas, Bill Waters found a tattered old notebook filled with formulas. He bought it for $200, suspecting he could resell it for five times that. It turns out his instinct about the book’s value was more accurate than he knew. Mr Waters discovered that the book came from the drugstore where Dr Pepper was invented and includes a recipe for ‘D Peppers Bitters’. A couple of months after buying the book, Waters took a closer look as he prepared to sell it. He noticed a prescription from a Waco store called the ‘Old Corner Drug Store’. An Internet search revealed Dr Pepper, first served in 1885, was invented at the Old Corner Drug Store. As he gathered more information, Waters took a slower look through the 360 pages, which are filled with formulas for everything from piano polish to hair restorer. He eventually spotted the ‘D Peppers Bitters’ formula. The handwriting is not clear, but ingredients seem to include mandrake root and syrup. ‘I felt like I had a national treasure,’ said Waters. ‘It probably has specks of the original concoction on its pages!’ Dr Pepper’s manufacturer says the recipe is not the secret formula for the modern day soft drink, only known by three Dr Pepper employees. But despite that, the notebook is expected to sell for between $50,000 and $75,000 when it goes up for auction.

Kentucky Fried Chicken (KFC)
Colonel Sanders’ handwritten recipe for fried chicken arrived back in its Kentucky home on Tuesday after five months in hiding while KFC upgraded security arrangements.
KFC President Roger Eaton was visibly relieved when the door to a new electronic safe was shut with the single sheet of paper inside.
‘Mission accomplished,’ he said.
The recipe lays out a mix of eleven herbs and spices that coat the chain’s Original Recipe chicken, including exact amounts for each ingredient. Written in pencil and signed by Harland Sanders around 70 years ago, the iconic recipe is now protected by an array of high-tech security gadgets, including motion detectors and cameras.
The recipe is such a tightly held secret that not even Eaton knows its full contents. Only two company executives at any time have access to the recipe. KFC won’t release their names or titles, and it uses multiple suppliers who produce and blend the ingredients but know only a part of the contents.
Just how valuable is the recipe? According to Thomas P Hustad, a professor of marketing in Indiana, the value is just as high for this secret recipe as for the Coke formula. ‘I guess I’d put those two at the top of the pyramid,’ he said.
The company’s security expert Bo Dietl believes new security measures were essential. For years, the recipe was kept in a filing cabinet equipped with two combination locks. ‘You could have used a metal bar to open that thing up,’ Dietl said.

6G WRITING  Description of a place
I can write a description of a place.

Preparation
1. Read the exam writing task and the model text below. Match the paragraphs (1–5) with the headings (a–f). There is one heading that you do not need.

Describe a restaurant which, because of its food and service, you would recommend as a good place for a special family meal.

1. The Silver Spoon is situated on a side street in a residential part of town. There are hardly any other shops or restaurants in the street, so if you didn’t know it was there, you would never find it by chance. But it’s definitely worth a special visit, even though it’s off the beaten track.

2. Stepping inside, you notice that the interior is nothing special. It’s quite traditional and a little dark – nothing like all the trendy, minimalist restaurants you find in town. But it’s very comfortable.

3. What made a big impression on me the first time I went to the Silver Spoon was the friendliness of the people who work there. They’re extremely welcoming from the moment you walk through the door. And throughout the meal, they’re attentive without being annoying. They always manage to create a very relaxing and informal atmosphere.

4. But, of course, the most important aspect of any restaurant is the menu, and this is definitely the Silver Spoon’s main attraction. They offer a range of dishes to suit every taste, from basic pasta with tomato sauce to exotic hot and sour Thai salads. The choice is impressive and the ingredients are always fresh. To finish the meal, they offer a variety of mouth-watering desserts.

5. All in all, the Silver Spoon is the perfect place for a special family meal. There are options to suit every budget, and for what you pay it’s a great deal.

   a. Food  □
   b. Staff  □
   c. Value for money □
   d. Location □
   e. Decor □
   f. Atmosphere □

2. Rewrite the sentences replacing the underlined words with more interesting adjectives.

1. I had a big pizza in a nice restaurant by the sea.

2. The decor was nice but the food was bad.

3. The waiters were nice and the music was good.

4. We had a nice table by the window and enjoyed the great views.

5. The room was big, but there was a good atmosphere.

Writing guide
3. You are going to do the exam writing task in exercise 1. Plan your description by choosing four of the paragraph headings (a–f) and writing them in the chart below.

| Paragraph 1: |
| Paragraph 2: |
| Paragraph 3: |
| Paragraph 4: |
| Paragraph 5: Conclusion |

4. Add notes to your paragraph plan. You do not need to write complete sentences, but do include some interesting adjectives.

5. Write your description (200–250 words) in your notebook.

CHECK YOUR WORK
Have you:
□ followed your plan from exercises 3 and 4?
□ used interesting adjectives?
□ written 200–250 words?
□ checked your spelling and grammar?

EXAM TASK – Reading

Read the article about the influence of technology on students' learning. For each gap (1–7) choose the sentence (A–J) that fits best. There are three sentences that you do not need.

e-learning: Hazy past – better future?
How much of an effect does technology have on students' learning? ¹ ___________ For the last fifteen years, there have been countless studies made of the impact of technology on helping students to learn. Currently available technologies, the most important of which are computers and the Internet, apparently provide a learning environment in which problem-solving and intellectual enquiry can flourish. ² ___________ Or so the theory goes. My own viewpoint is rather different, I'm afraid.

Computers have been around for two decades as part of school equipment. ³ ___________ This is because schools have done what every organisation does when it sees an innovation – it crams the innovation into its existing model, which adds cost but doesn’t transform the standard classroom. ⁴ ___________ Content is king and the mode of delivery is irrelevant. If a teacher makes the subject matter interesting, it does not matter what, if any, equipment is used. Furthermore, it is perhaps an obvious point, but every person learns differently. We have different intelligences, aptitudes and learning styles depending on the subject. ⁵ ___________ This would be perfectly possible with computers. Except that, unfortunately, individual learning plans are still prohibitively costly as compared to a generalised class plan.

However, change is on the horizon. I think student-centred learning will become the norm and transform education. Computers will pave the way for far more independent learning. ⁶ ___________ They can study from home thanks to the fact that more learning programmes are being written for learners who are forced by their circumstances to be self-sufficient. There will be a wealth of materials, tests, exams, courses and degrees, produced to a high and globally-acceptable standard. ⁷ ___________ This would prove especially beneficial in those areas of the world where quality education is limited or extremely expensive. Therefore, in a few years' time we could reconvene and have a completely different conversation about technology and its impact on learning.

A And I truly believe that eventually they will influence all types of study, both in school and beyond the classroom.
B It's hard not to wonder why, being aware of that, educators don't customise the way they teach and test.
C A significant one, it seems, according to experts.
D Technology allows students to study at their own pace and encourages them to take the initiative and learn independently.
E The process of learning in the classroom may become significantly more effective as students can manipulate information on the computer.
F There are, of course, hurdles like costs to overcome, but it's just a matter of time and effort.
G We have, during that period, spent over $60 billion on them, but in my view they seem to have had little or no effect on learning in schools.
H Computers are only as good as the teachers who are teaching with them.
I Students who currently don't have access to schools or teachers are now able to get online.
J Students can communicate their ideas to their teacher using a variety of media.

EXAM TASK – Use of English

Read the text below. Choose the correct answer, A, B, C or D, to complete each gap.

Semco, a Brazilian manufacturing company, is possibly one of the most interesting companies in the world. ¹___________ its competitors, there are no job titles, offices, bosses or secretaries. People set their own salaries and organise their own work day, and everyone shares in the profits. This may sound like a(n) ²___________ for disaster. Nonetheless, Semco has grown consistently for the last twenty years, despite being located in one of the world’s most volatile markets.

Ricardo Semler took over the company from his father at the tender age of 21. If there hadn’t been a worldwide recession, such responsibility ³___________ so early on this young man’s shoulders. However, Semler saw an opportunity for change, since Semco ⁴___________ previously run on traditional authoritarian lines. Overnight he fired 60% of the company’s top management, many of whom were his father’s friends.

Semler set to work designing a diversification strategy. One of his managers came ⁵___________ the idea of small, self-managed teams of workers who would be entirely in charge of all aspects of production. Their salaries would be linked to the profit they made. ⁶___________ did costs go down, but productivity and profits also went up. The new Semco was being born.

Fleet Street

Nowadays, journalism can be a lonely job, with hours spent at a computer or on the phone. But if you say the words ‘Fleet Street’ to a British journalist, you conjure up an exciting (excite) past world, where the write word was gold and the newspaper was king.

Fleet Street, in the centre of London, is synonymous with the British press because of its history links with the news world. This world had its (begin) in the 1500s, when the first printing works appeared there. Soon, the area became well known for producing books and pamphlets and during the 1700s, the first (day) newspapers appeared.

Fleet Street was the perfect (locate) for gathering news. It was close to the City – the (finance) centre of London – the Old Bailey, which is the main (crime) court, and the (govern) in the Houses of Parliament. By the middle of the 20th century, almost every major tabloid and broadsheet had its head office in Fleet Street.

Journalists would rush and fight for the (late) news stories. They would spend long hours in the Fleet Street pubs and restaurants, interviewing their ‘contacts’ while drinking and eating at the expense of their (employ). It was the street that never slept.

However, from the 1980s, technology was starting to change the way newspapers were produced, so new and bigger premises were needed. Gradually, all the papers moved to the outskirts of the city. Printing became (computer), and journalists began spending more time on their mobile phones and less time on their (prolong) business lunches.

Many older journalists are still unhappy about the changes. One of them, Peter McKay, wrote in The Independent, ‘Fleet Street was a seething mass of printers, advertisers and journalists, drinking and punching each other every night, all night. People (literal) never went home … Nowadays we sit in the far corners of London, like battery hens at computer terminals, pecking out our stuff and never meeting one another.’

Human beings are social animals and communicating has always been of vital importance to us. We have developed our communication skills further and faster than any other species. However, no one really knows how humans began to communicate verbally. How did noises and grunts turn into words, and how did people agree on what those words meant exactly? Scientists have many theories, but there is no consensus, because there is obviously no hard evidence for any of these theories. In fact, the origin of verbal communication is considered the "hardest problem in science".

However, there is one form of early communication that scientists do have hard evidence for, and that is the written form. Archaeological discoveries have enabled scientists to track the evolution of these early non-verbal forms. The earliest form that we know of is painting on rock. The oldest known cave paintings, dating back 30,000 years, are to be found in the Chauvet Cave in France. They are skilfully executed and quite beautiful. Just as young children learn to draw before they master more complex forms of communication, so our first attempts to pass on information probably took the form of pictures. We don't know how much these early people talked, but these paintings describe the hunt for food. Scenes of hunting expeditions and pictures of animals, especially horses and bison, can be made out.

The next step in written communication for which we have solid evidence is carvings in a rock face. These date back 12,000 years and are known as petroglyphs. Early man could well have made markings in sand, or used stones in a particular way to communicate, though this was obviously temporary. However, prehistoric pictures of people and animals made on rock faces have survived in every continent of the world, except Antarctica. It is difficult to work out what the lines of people, animals and objects were used for exactly, but by studying some tribes who still use them, it would appear that they have deep cultural and religious significance. It is still a mystery to researchers how petroglyphs found thousands of miles apart in different continents have so many similarities.

Later, between 9000 and 5000 BC, pictures started to represent concepts and ideas. These are known as ideograms. Because some ideas are universal, a number of the corresponding ideograms look the same, though developed by different cultures. For example, an eye with a tear stands for sadness. These symbols evolved into early writing systems around 4000 BC. The remarkable thing is that all the alphabets around the world have developed from early ideograms. The Korean alphabet, thought up in 1443, is the only exception to this.

Once the human race had mastered the written word, there was no stopping us! We now live in a world of books, texts, newspaper articles, headlines, adverts, emails, magazines: we are surrounded by words and pictures. Forms of communication may become ever more sophisticated, but we developed the basics thousands of years ago and we still rely on them today.

A Written in 1944 by George Orwell, Animal Farm is one of the most famous books in English literature. It is a satirical allegory about communism and, despite being easy to read, it contains some very complex and challenging ideas. It has had a profound influence on me and has changed the way I think about politics.

B ________ on Manor Farm, which is owned by Mr Jones, a cruel and lazy farmer. _________ around the animals’ decision to start a revolution and take over the farm.
Although they start out with good intentions, in ________ of the story the pigs take complete control and start to mistreat the other animals.
By ________ of the story, the animals can’t tell the difference between pigs and humans, and life for them is worse than it was when Mr Jones ran the farm.

C I was very impressed with the characterisation. Although they are only animals, the characters are very complex and convincing. The most important of them is the pig Napoleon. One of the leaders of the revolution, he is nevertheless cunning and manipulative, and abuses his powers. Another fascinating character is Boxer, a horse, who is faithful, hard-working and selfless.

D To sum up, although it is not a pleasant story to read and is quite upsetting in places, it is both gripping and thought-provoking. It really made me think about politics and the way in which power can corrupt people.
1 Draw lines to match the two halves of the compound nouns.

Do you want flies with that?

When Thailand suffered a plague of locusts, the government asked its people to start eating them since conventional methods of pest control were not working. 1. Thais decided that locusts were good to eat and they became a favourite dish. Today, some farmers in Thailand deliberately avoid using pesticides on their crops to encourage locusts. They then harvest the insects and sell them to restaurants in Bangkok.

Insects have always been a popular food source in many countries across Asia and Africa, but in the West, people have generally regarded the idea with disgust. 2. Firstly, at a time when obesity is on the rise, insects offer a low-fat source of protein and other nutrients. Secondly, if we chose to get a significant amount of our protein from insects, we could reduce the amount of intensive meat farming. This would be beneficial from both an animal-welfare and environmental perspective. And thirdly, if we harvested insects as a source of food, we would need to use fewer pesticides – another environmental benefit.

Although most people in the West dislike the idea of eating insects, we actually eat quite a large number of them without realising it. There are the small flying insects we swallow every day, usually without noticing. 3. Many of the products we buy in the supermarket are allowed by law to contain a certain number of insect parts before being considered unsafe to eat. Peanut butter can contain up to 30 fragments per 100 grams, for example, while chocolate can have twice that number. 4. Like it or not, you probably eat insects every day!

   8. A(n) ________ is a large group of solar systems.
   9. ________ are small, rocky objects which orbit a star.

3. Read the text opposite, ignoring the gaps. Choose the best summary: a, b or c.
   a) Plans have been announced to start mining asteroids for water and natural resources, although most scientists are opposed to the idea.
   b) James Cameron is making a documentary film about the attempts of two billionaires to start a business mining asteroids.
   c) Three entrepreneurs are planning to set up a mining operation in space in order to extract water and minerals from asteroids.

4. Read the text again and match the sentences (A–G) with the gaps (1–6). There is one sentence that you do not need.
   A. They described the plan as daring, difficult – and very pricey.
   B. This can then be used for refuelling commercial satellites or spaceships from NASA and other countries.
   C. But, in fact, astronauts were able to extract 200 grams of gold from an asteroid during an earlier mission.
   D. These would be used to search for the right type of asteroids.
   E. "It would be awfully hard to make money from it," he said.
   F. They range in size from about seven metres to about sixteen kilometres in length.
   G. Anderson says the group will prove the sceptics wrong.

5. Are these sentences true (T) or false (F)?
   1. Peter Diamandis is one of the people behind the plan to mine asteroids. [T]
   2. The initial stages of the project will not begin for quite a few years. [F]
   3. Some scientists believe the cost of the project will be too high to make it worthwhile. [T]
   4. The founders of the project have been involved in other space-related ventures in the past. [F]
   5. The asteroids they plan to mine are between the planets Mars and Jupiter. [F]
   6. The founders of the project believe it will eventually be cheaper to get water from asteroids than to take it into space from earth. [T]
   7. Professor Richard Binzel believes the project has no chance of success. [F]

Challenge!

Do you think mining asteroids is a good idea? Give your opinion in two or three sentences.

Robots in space will be extracting gold and platinum from asteroids within ten years if a new venture backed by two Silicon Valley billionaires and filmmaker James Cameron goes as planned.

'Since my early teenage years, I've wanted to be an asteroid miner. I always viewed it as a glamorous vision of where we could go,' Peter Diamandis, one of the founders of Planetary Resources Inc., said at the news conference. The company's vision is 'to make the resources of space available to humanity'.

The inaugural step, to be achieved in the next 18 to 24 months, would be launching the first in a series of private telescopes. The plan is to use commercially built robotic ships to extract rocket fuel and valuable minerals from the rocks that regularly pass by Earth. One of the company founders predicts they could have their version of a space-based petrol station up and running by 2020.

Several scientists not involved in the project said they were simultaneously thrilled and wary. They do not see how it could be cost-effective, even with platinum and gold worth nearly $6,000 per 100 grams. A forthcoming NASA mission to return just 60 grams of an asteroid to Earth will cost about $1 billion.

But the entrepreneurs behind Planetary Resources Inc. have a track record of profiting from space ventures. Diamandis and co-founder Eric Anderson were the first people to sell rides into space to tourists. 'Before we started launching people into space as private citizens, people thought that was a ridiculous idea,' Anderson said. 'This is a long-term project. But it's not a charity. We'll make money.'

The mining, fuel processing and later refuelling would all be done without humans. 'It is the stuff of science fiction, but like in so many other areas of science fiction, it's possible to begin the process of making them reality,' said former astronaut Thomas Jones, an adviser to the company.

The idea that asteroids could be mined for resources has been around for years. Asteroids are fragments of rock which did not become part of a planet. Most asteroids form a belt between Mars and Jupiter, but some fragments move freely around the solar system. The new venture targets these free-flying asteroids, seeking to extract from them the rare metals that are used in batteries, electronics and medical devices.

There are probably 1,500 asteroids that pass near Earth that would be good initial targets. They are at least 50 metres wide, and Anderson figures ten per cent of them have water and other valuable minerals.

However, it's very expensive to transport water from Earth into space, so the plan is to take the water from an asteroid to a location in space. Here it can be broken down into liquid oxygen and liquid hydrogen for rocket fuel. Diamandis and Anderson would not disclose how much the project will cost overall. By building and launching quickly, the company hopes to operate much more cheaply than NASA.

Harvard's Tim Spahr, Director of the Minor Planet Centre, said getting mining equipment into space and operating safely sounds 'expensive and difficult'.

And Richard Binzel, Professor of Planetary Science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, said the idea 'may be many decades ahead of its time. But you have to start somewhere'.

Choose a different question from the one the student answered in exercise 3. Write your own opinion. Include at least one phrase from exercise 4 and one example of do/does or did for emphasis.
Preparation

1. Read the exam writing task and essay. Then use the essay to complete the student’s notes for paragraphs 2–4.

‘There is no hope for this planet. It’s time we humans started looking for another one.’ Do you agree?

It’s hard to deny that the world’s climate is changing because of greenhouse gases. As developing countries become more industrialised, global warming seems unstoppable. Having said that, is the situation really so hopeless? In my opinion, it is not. Firstly, there are several international agreements to reduce carbon emissions. The best known of these is the Kyoto Protocol. We should also remember that new agreements may set even more ambitious targets in the future.

Secondly, technology is always advancing. Scientists are inventing greener forms of transport and energy production, and may soon discover ways of removing greenhouse gases from the atmosphere. So, although technology is part of the problem when it comes to our carbon footprint, it may also be an important part of the solution.

It is sometimes argued that global warming will accelerate out of control when the lifestyle for the majority of people in China and India reaches the level currently enjoyed in America. It is worth pointing out, however, that if technology advances fast enough, it will still be possible to reduce carbon emissions, despite the millions of extra cars on the roads.

So, all in all, I am optimistic about the future. Although the world is becoming more industrialised, in many ways it is also becoming greener. Hopefully, it will be our home for centuries to come.

EXAM TASK – Reading

Read the text. For each gap (1–4) choose the sentence (A–E) that fits best. There is one sentence that you do not need.

Personal training is one of the newest leisure services. It is also one of the fastest-growing, even though it can be quite pricey. What do personal trainers do and why are they in such great demand? A personal trainer is a fitness professional involved in exercise prescription and instruction. 1 __________ From these they put together a specific exercise programme for each individual. They also offer tailored advice on other areas of health and wellness. These include aspects such as diet and nutrition, stress management and lifestyle change.

Many people do not like, or are nervous of, going to a gym. A trainer can make a gym visit much less daunting, and with supervised practice comes confidence. 2 __________ Many trainers visit clients in their home, bringing suitable equipment with them. There are also many opportunities to train outside.

People who employ the services of a trainer are often hardworking, time-poor individuals. Trainers can produce efficient and effective workouts with little time-wasting. 3 __________ This is achieved by setting goals and providing feedback. And the biggest incentive is obviously seeing results!

Martin, a 27-year-old financial analyst, explains why he enrolled with Pete, a personal trainer in a gym near his workplace. 'My hectic job was having a disastrous effect on my health – I was drinking too much coffee and sleeping badly. My diet was terrible, and the doctor said I was on the verge of diabetes.' He got in touch with Pete and he's never looked back. 4 __________ 'I have boundless energy and feel my age again. Most significantly, I am much better at my job!' says Martin.

A Which is not surprising as they usually take into account the underlying reasons for their clients’ weight problems.
B Firstly, trainers measure their clients’ strengths and weaknesses with fitness assessments.
C They are also responsible for motivating clients.
D And no wonder – who wouldn’t like to lose 10 kg and reach levels of fitness that they never thought were possible?
E Personal training can be very flexible and doesn’t necessarily involve gyms.

EXAM TASK – Listening

LISTENING 31 You are going to hear a person talking about animal rights. Choose the correct answer, A, B, C or D, to complete each sentence.

1 The narrator became a vegetarian
A because she felt that most supermarket meat had a plastic taste.

THINGS I WISH I'D KNOWN WHEN I WAS A TEENAGER

WILF, 25
By and large, my teenage years were a reasonably happy and relaxed time for me. In fact, if anything, I was a bit too relaxed, and I didn’t take life seriously enough. I was full of energy and loved doing sports: football and rugby in the winter, cricket and tennis in the summer. It was all fine up to the age of about fourteen, but then things started to get serious at school. Exams were on the horizon, but to me they seemed a long time off, though it was only two years. So, it was business as usual. I just carried on with my sport and having a good time. Looking back, I can see that my parents were worried. I remember them urging me to try harder at school, not to leave my homework to the last minute and to start revising early for exams. It wasn’t that I didn’t enjoy the lessons, but you need to be reasonably focused and organised to cope well with exams – and I certainly wasn’t! My parents didn’t put huge pressure on me because they wanted me to find my own way. I should have paid attention to what they were suggesting, though, because I didn’t do very well in my GCSEs (the exams you take when you’re sixteen). I scraped through, but the results should have been a wake-up call for me. However, I didn’t do much better in my A levels (the exams you take at eighteen) so I failed to get a place on the university course that I wanted to do. It wasn’t just at school that I had a happy-go-lucky approach to life. I had a very relaxed attitude to money too. My parents gave me a monthly allowance which I’d spend almost immediately. Money burned a hole in my pocket, as they say, and I never put any aside. I’m sure that in that respect I was a fairly typical teenager. What I do regret, though, is spending the money I inherited when my grandmother died. I was seventeen and $1,000 was a huge amount of money. It’s difficult to believe now, but I managed to fritter it all away on music, clothes and going out with friends. I really should have saved it and put it towards something I really needed, or used it to help with university fees. Again, my parents tried to impress on me the importance of being careful with money, but I didn’t heed their advice.

HARRIET, 24
I wish I’d been more confident in my own abilities, especially when I was at school. I was a shy child and struggled a bit in talking to other people. I was fine at home and perfectly confident with my brother, sister and parents, so I don’t know why I found it so difficult to deal with other people. On the whole my parents were very supportive, always encouraged me and tried to help me relax in social situations, but I was always terribly self-conscious. I wish I hadn’t been so worried about what everybody thought of me. If I hadn’t felt so uncomfortable, other people might have found me easier company. I know now that if you are excessively shy, then it’s hard work to have a conversation with you. Now I try to think about the other person I’m talking to and put them at ease in my company, which means I have less time to think about feeling shy myself. However, at school, I found it especially difficult in my peer group. I wasn’t competitive, but I was acutely aware of my appearance and I constantly compared myself to other people, usually coming to the conclusion that I wasn’t as clever or as popular or as cool as they were. I wanted to be popular and in with the cool crowd, though now I really wonder why. I know now that the kids who are considered the coolest at school aren’t necessarily the most popular or successful when they grow up. I had a couple of good friends – I still have them – and I should have considered myself lucky to have them and just enjoyed myself and got on with other things.

I realise now that everything changes during your teen years – physically, mentally, socially and emotionally – and I just had a harder time than most. I wish I hadn’t let it stop me from doing things, though. I wish I’d taken a gap year or at least travelled more when I left school. But to tell the truth, I didn’t have the courage to go off alone before going to college. I could have gone to Europe and America with a friend as I’d saved up sufficient money, but in the end I just didn’t want to do it enough. My parents really wanted me to try a gap year. They said it would be a great experience before college. I think they were right, and now I won’t have another opportunity to do that for a long time.

4 Answer the questions about the texts.

1 Where did the claws which Turk Wendell wore around his neck come from?

2 What was the connection between Pelle Lindbergh’s orange T-shirt and Sweden?

3 What habit related to clothing does Serena Williams have?

4 What humorous remark does Les Miles make about his team’s home pitch?

5 Which of Neil McKenzie’s habits started with a joke, and who was responsible for it?

6 Which of the habits in the texts do you find most unusual?
The baseball pitcher

Turk Wendell was a baseball player who played for two of the biggest teams in the USA – the Chicago Cubs and the New York Mets – during the 1990s. He wasn’t one of their most successful players, but he became one of the best known because of some unusual habits he developed. For example, he would always draw three crosses in the ground when he went onto the pitch. And because his jersey number was 99, he insisted that all of the numbers in his professional contract ended with those two digits. A keen hunter, Wendell often wore souvenirs from his hunting trips around his neck: claws from mountain lions, for instance. But his most unusual habit involved eating liquorice sweets. He would put four in his mouth before facing the other team’s hitters. At the end of an innings, he would spit out the sweets, run off the pitch and brush his teeth. Then he would put four more sweets in his mouth and start the ritual again.

The ice hockey goalie

When Pelle Lindbergh moved from his native country of Sweden to the USA to play professional ice hockey, he developed a few unusual habits to remind himself of home. Firstly, he always wore the same T-shirt underneath his official strip as a Philadelphia Flyers player. This T-shirt was orange and had been bought at a sports shop in Sweden. The T-shirt was never washed and every time it began to fall apart, he had it repaired. Also, when there were breaks in the game, he would have a glass of a drink called Pripps, which is from Sweden. He insisted that the drink had two ice cubes in it, and also that the person who carried the drink to him held the glass in his right hand. Tragically, Lindbergh was killed in a car crash when he was only 26 years old. His jersey number was 31, and since his death, nobody in the team has worn that number.

The tennis player

Serena Williams is the younger of the two American tennis-playing Williams sisters and has had an amazing career in the sport. Her success in grand slam singles matches is undoubtedly due to her talent and athleticism – but in Serena’s mind, it is also due to some very specific habits and rituals. She always ties her shoelaces in the same way before a match. And during a match, she always bounces the ball five times before each first serve and twice before each second serve. Serena is aware that her superstitions may not be a good thing: ‘I have too many superstitious rituals and it’s annoying. It’s like I have to do it and if I don’t, then I’ll lose. And I’m not losing because I didn’t play well, I lost because I didn’t tie my shoe the right way.’ Perhaps her most unusual superstition is her habit of wearing the same pair of socks for every match of a grand slam tournament – without washing them!

The American football coach

Les Miles is the head football coach – that’s American football, not soccer – at Louisiana State University (LSU). He is very successful in that role and his team, the LSU Tigers, are one of the best in their league. The fact that Les Miles is always at the side of the pitch when his team is playing is not surprising. What is unusual, however, is that before every game, he eats a few blades of grass from the pitch. He repeats the action throughout the game, but only at moments of particularly high stress. Even if Miles were embarrassed about his habit, he could not deny it, as there are numerous clips on YouTube which show him eating grass. So he prefers to treat it with humour, claiming that his personal tradition reminds him that he is ‘part of the field and part of the game’. He also points out that the grass in Tiger Stadium – where the LSU football team play their home matches – has the best flavour.

The cricketer

Neil McKenzie is a South African cricketer who played for his national team between 2000 and 2009. He was a popular and talented player who was also well known for being superstitious. In the dressing room, he always insisted that all the toilets were closed and flushed before he went in to bat. And while batting, McKenzie was very careful not to step on any of the white lines on the ground. Like many superstitious people, McKenzie developed his habits in an attempt to control his luck. For example, one day, before the match started, McKenzie’s teammates taped his bat to the ceiling as a joke. Having retrieved his bat, McKenzie played brilliantly that day and scored over 100 runs. So from then on, he started taping his own bat to the ceiling! Eventually, he developed so many habits that they were interfering with his everyday life, so he decided to stop doing them. It wasn’t an easy task, but he succeeded.

Description of an event

I can write a description of an event.

Preparation

1 Read the exam writing task and the description. Then match the paragraphs (1–4) with four of the headings (a–f) below. There are two headings that you do not need.

Write a description of a memorable get-together with friends and/or family which included a game.

1 One of the most memorable family get-togethers we’ve ever had took place one day last summer. There were twelve of us going, including my uncle and aunt. As the weather was good, we decided to go for a picnic by the river. We drove there in several cars, parked by the road, and carried our baskets of food across the field until we reached a good spot.

2 We had a really relaxing lunch, chatting and enjoying the scenery. When we’d finished eating, my uncle, who lived in the USA for five years, suggested a game of baseball. He’d come prepared with a bat and ball, and even a baseball glove too. The rest of us weren’t too sure, but he was desperate to play, so we reluctantly got into two teams.

3 No sooner had the game started when it became clear that my uncle’s teammates were hopeless at baseball. My uncle, who is very competitive, started going berserk. He was jumping up and down and yelling at people to run faster. But it didn’t do any good – his team were thrashed. Away stormed my uncle, leaving us to clear up the baseball things. He ended up having a big row with my aunt.

4 I’ve seen my uncle and aunt quite a few times since that picnic, but I’ve never been brave enough to mention that game of baseball. Perhaps they’ve forgotten all about the argument they had – but I doubt it!

Suddenly I realized the awful truth. I could not speak nor breathe.

'Yes, Pip, dear boy, I've made a gentleman of you! You see, I promised myself that all the money I made out there in Australia should go to you! I'm your second father, Pip! I'm not a gentleman myself, and I didn't go to school, but I've got you, Pip! And look what a gentleman you are! And what books you've got! You'll read them to me, Pip! And I'll be proud of you even if I can't understand them! Didn't you ever think it could be me who was sending the money?'

'Oh, no, no, no,' I replied. 'Never, never! Wasn't anyone else involved at all?'

'No, just me, and Jaggers, of course. Who else could there be? Dear boy, I kept myself going, you see, through all the hard work, just by thinking of you. And I promised myself I'd come back to England one day and see my boy.' He laid his hand on my shoulder: 'Now you must find a bed for me, and remember, not a word to anybody. I was sent away for life, and they'll hang me if they discover I've come back.'

My feelings were horribly confused. The man who had paid for my education and luxuries for years was risking his life to see me. I could not like him — in fact my whole body trembled with disgust when he touched me, but I had to protect him. He went to sleep in Herbert's room. After locking all the doors carefully, I sat weakly down by the fire and tried to make sense of my life. How foolish my dreams had been!

Updown Court is the expensive house in the world. It's currently on the market for a staggering $122 million. That's about $50 million more the priciest US home. It's in Britain, 28 miles from central London, and even has royalty as neighbours – the Queen lives nearby at Windsor Castle.

This brand-new property is utterly extravagant, as one expect. It has 103 rooms, five swimming pools, a squash court, gym, bowling alley, 50-seat cinema – and the list goes on. The driveway is of marble and heated – to melt ice in winter!

Oh, yes, and there's a six-bedroom house in the grounds for your guests.

it looks like an old-fashioned fairytale palace, it naturally has all the state-of-the-art equipment you could wish for. All its systems computer-controlled and can be accessed from anywhere the world. So, you can be on holiday in the Caribbean, for example, and still check that you have vintage champagne in the fridge for when you get home.

Thirty years ago, at 7.30 a.m. on a Tuesday, I stood ____ a roomful of restless pre-adolescents. Unexpectedly, I had been placed in front of 70 of them with the instructions: 'They can't go out into the playground because of the rain. Keep them busy until ____ teachers ____ here.'

I looked out at the sea of faces, ____ were ten per cent hopeful that I ____ something interesting, and 90 per cent sceptical that any adult ____ . Their bodies were slumped; their arms were folded. They were ____ me to interest them in some way.

Not knowing what else to do, I began to ____ a story. Within seconds, their postures had changed; their faces relaxed and they stopped rolling their eyes. More than that: I managed to hold their attention throughout the fifteen minutes of the story.

I could never ____ that those fifteen minutes ____ my life.

Over the next few years, I studied the way people respond to stories. Leaving behind my teaching job, I moved into freelance performing, and finally my current position as a storytelling coach.

Healthy diets lead to a healthier IQ

Children fed healthy diets at an early age may have a slightly higher IQ, while those on heavier junk food diets may have a slightly 1. ___ IQ, according to research from the University of Adelaide. The study, led by Dr Lisa Smithers, looked at the link between the eating 2. ___ of children at 6 months, 15 months and 2 years, and their IQ at the age 3. ___ eight. The study of more than 7,000 children compared a range of dietary patterns. 4. ___ traditional home-prepared food, ready-made baby foods, breastfeeding and junk foods.

‘Your diet 5. ___ the nutrients needed for the development of brain 6. ___ in the first two years of life, and the aim of this study was to look at what 7. ___ diet would have on children’s IQs.’ Dr Smithers said. She explained that they had found that children who were breastfed at 6 months and had a healthy diet which regularly included foods 8. ___ as cheese, fruit and vegetables at 15 and 24 months, had an IQ up to two points higher by the age of eight. By 9. ___ , children who had a diet regularly involving biscuits, chocolate, sweets, soft drinks and crisps in the first two years of life had IQs 10. ___ to two points lower by the time they reached the same age.

According to Dr Smithers, this study 11. ___ the need to provide children with healthy food at a crucial, formative time in their lives. 12. ___ the differences in IQ are not huge,’ she explains, ‘this study provides some of the 13. ___ evidence to date that dietary patterns from 6 to 24 months have a small but significant effect on IQ. It is important that we 14. ___ the longer-term impact of the food we feed our children.’

The first kites were probably created in China some 2,800 years ago. However, some historians believe the kite may be even older and have its 1. ___ in the part of the world that is now Indonesia. Their 2. ___ are based on cave drawings in the region. We know from written 3. ___ that there were paper kites in China by 549 AD. In that year a paper kite was used to send a message as part of a rescue operation.

Europeans first learned about kites towards the end of the 13th century from Marco Polo’s descriptions of them in his book about his 4. ___ in Asia. It was not until the 16th century, though, that sailors brought examples of kites back to Europe, from Japan and Malaysia.

Kites come in all shapes and sizes. Some are highly 5. ___ and represent flying and swimming creatures, such as birds, butterflies, dragonflies, fish and dragons. Early kites were made of silk and bamboo, but 6. ___ materials are used in many modern kites. The cultural significance of kites varies from country to country. In some parts of Asia, kite-fighting – where you try and catch or cut down your opponents’ kites – is a popular sport. Many modern sports are based on the 7. ___ of kite-flying, such as hang-gliding, kitesurfing and snow-kiting.

Historical records show that in ancient and medieval times Chinese kites were used for various 8. ___ , including gauging wind strength, measuring distances, sending messages and lifting people.

In the 18th and 19th centuries, kites played a part in some scientific experiments, including in the field of aeronautics. They have also been used in aerial photography, for making meteorological observations and in communications (e.g. carrying antennas). Though their use is now largely 9. ___ , in recent years a German company has developed a special kite as an extra power source for its cargo ships. It significantly reduces fuel 10. ___ and thus costs.

Looking at the grammar of Modern English many students \(^1\) to realise the \(^2\) of changes that this language has undergone since the last millennium. In fact, the English of today is nothing \(^3\) the English of medieval times. Old English – that is, English spoken before the eleventh century – marked grammatical functions with ‘endings’ attached to ‘base’ words. Nouns and adjectives could be of three genders (masculine, feminine or neuter) and there were four cases (nominative, accusative, dative and genitive), \(^4\) had its own endings \(^5\) to the roots. Modern English marks the infinitive of verbs with a preceding to, whereas Old English infinitives ended in -an. In all tenses verbs had separate suffixes for singular and plural in the first, second and third persons. After the eleventh century, the number of these endings \(^6\) significantly. They were replaced by \(^7\) is, broadly speaking, the same system that English has today, which, unlike Old English, makes very \(^8\) use of word endings. It relies \(^9\) on the word order in the sentence. This was due mostly to the Norman invasion, after which the invaders and the invaded had somehow to communicate with each other. The word endings only added to the confusion, \(^10\) they were gradually abandoned, and more prepositions were used in place of them.

Why tweet when you can whistle?

Long before the advent of the telephone, the people of Kusköy \(^1\) (have) no problem placing long-distance calls; they would just put their lips together and \(^2\) (blow). For generations the Turkish villagers \(^3\) (converse) across their steep, wooded mountainsides in a language \(^4\) (compose) entirely of whistling.

Now, as modern technology creeps into their remote home on the Black Sea coast, Kusköy \(^5\) (battle) to keep its ‘bird language’ alive. The village’s most expert whistlers, \(^6\) (gather) yesterday \(^7\) (compete) as part of an annual festival to promote the tradition.

‘Since mobile phones arrived, more people – especially kids – aren’t so keen on the whistling language,’ said Ibrahim Kodakal, 45, one of this year’s hopefuls.

Competitors whistled instructions to one another from each side of a valley, and \(^8\) (assess) by a panel of judges. For the villagers, this is really about upholding their traditions.

‘It \(^9\) (not, matter) who wins,’ said Mahmut Civelek, who successfully whistled instructions to a fellow competitor to remove his hat and perform a local dance. ‘This is a culture that’s in our blood.’ In the end the judges shared his view, \(^10\) (declare) all competitors joint winners.

According to Seref Köcek, head of the Bird Language Association, about 80 per cent of the village’s 1,000 inhabitants still understand the language. It can \(^11\) (use) to communicate over distances of up to 1,000 metres. But as phone companies \(^12\) (put up) masts around the valley, now villagers can \(^13\) (see) holding mobiles to their ears more often than fingers to their lips. Kusköy is also slowly shrinking, as young people leave to find better opportunities in Turkey’s booming cities.

One such person is Mr Köcek’s brother Rifat, 38, who works as a fireman in Istanbul but returned for the festival. ‘Even when people leave the village, they still remember the language and use it when they’re here,’ he said. ‘After all, you have to pay to use a mobile phone. \(^14\) (whistle) is free.’

Protesters fail to stop play

According to a police spokesman, an attempt to disrupt a tennis match at Wimbledon prevented yesterday afternoon, thanks the work of an undercover officer. A group of environmental protesters planned to run onto Centre Court during the second set of the men’s semi-match and hold up a large banner protesting against Wesley’s Supermarket, but the protesters were arrested they could get onto the court. It is not clear at this stage exactly complaint they have against the company, but it is thought to relate to plans to build a new store in Williams Street.

Police are refusing to give any details of the undercover officer, but he is believed to moved into a squat with some of the other protesters several months and convinced them that he was an anti-capitalist campaigner.

A spokesman the supermarket chain has publicly thanked the police their work, adding, ‘Wesley’s takes pride in its positive relationship with the community. This small group of protesters does not represent the views of the general.

However, the police have criticised in the past for using undercover officers to infiltrate groups of environmental protesters. A spokeswoman for the Green Party said: ‘This is a terrible waste of police resources. We are not talking about terrorists, even criminals: these are legitimate protests which should be allowed to place.’

Sleep is essential to all mammals for (survive). Scientists are still investigating what the precise purposes of sleep are, as well as what actually takes place during sleep. What is clear, though, is that sleep (deprive) is (detriment) to both physical, mental and emotional well-being. (drowsy) is the most obvious symptom of a lack of sleep, but other problems such as (depress) might not be so easily identified as related, particularly in the case of long-established bad sleeping patterns.

During sleep there is a higher rate of (grow) and repair of cells in the immune and (nerve) systems, and bones and muscles of our bodies. There are two basic types of sleep: REM (rapid eye movement) and non-REM (non-rapid eye movement). Different physiological and (neurology) processes are associated with each. Just as a lack of sleep heightens certain health risks (for example, of cardiovascular disease), too much sleep is linked to increased (mortal). The amount of sleep humans require depends to some extent on age, though there is significant individual (vary) within in group.

I know teenagers tend to find their parents embarrassing, but mine are something special! My father (know) to walk to the local shop in his pyjamas and slippers, not because he’s absent-minded: he simply can’t be bothered with the convention of getting (dress) to go out in public.

Most people accept that if you (study) music when you were young, it’s too late. But not my mother! At the age of 50 she took her first singing lessons and she seems to seriously think she (make) it onto the opera stage in the not too distant future. She (always, sing) — round the house as well as in public. Going shopping with her is terrible!

The upside of having such eccentric parents is that they (always, encourage) me to form my own opinions and pursue what really interests me. I sometimes wonder, though, whether I (follow) a pretty conventional path so far in some sort of subconscious opposition to my parents. I did sciences and maths for A levels and (start) a medical degree in a few weeks. My parents had assumed I (want) to take a gap year to travel and ‘spread my wings’. But I can’t wait (get on) with my studies and a career!

Account of an event

One of the most frightening experiences of my life took place while I was on holiday in Greece two years ago. What started as a relaxing and enjoyable boat trip almost became a disaster.

We had been staying at a holiday resort on mainland Greece for nearly a week when we decided to visit one of the nearby islands. First, we booked the trip at our hotel, then we walked down to the harbour and found our boat. The captain welcomed us on board and we sat down near the front.

At first, the weather was good and the sea was calm. However, after about fifteen minutes, the wind became much stronger. Then dark clouds filled the sky, and it was clear that a storm was about to start. Ten minutes later, it was pouring with rain and the sea was extremely rough. It was absolutely terrifying!

The captain of the boat explained that he couldn’t approach the island – he was worried that we might hit the rocks if we went too close! All we could do was wait for the storm to pass. Meanwhile, the boat was rocking violently from side to side and all of the passengers were feeling very ill as well as frightened. But finally, the storm passed, the sea became calm once more and we finished our journey.

I’ll never forget being at sea during a storm. In future, I’ll certainly check the weather forecasts before booking a boat trip!

Essay (for and against)

- Divide your essay into four paragraphs.
- Write an interesting introduction to your essay that will encourage your reader to continue reading.
- In the second paragraph include points in favour of the statement.
- In the third paragraph include points against the statement.
- The fourth paragraph should be a conclusion balancing the arguments for and against the statement and offering your own opinion.
- Use linking expressions such as as a result, on the other hand, furthermore and on balance to guide your reader through your essay.

- Although the government gives money to universities, students still have to pay for their university education. They pay tuition fees and also need money to live on while they are studying. However, some people argue that education should be free, including university education.
  - It is hard to deny that poorer people in our society sometimes miss the chance to study at university because they cannot afford it. As a result, they have fewer opportunities when they apply for jobs, and often remain at a disadvantage throughout their lives. This is unfair. Free university education would ensure that everybody has an equal chance to study at a higher level. In addition, it would mean that universities could attract the most able students and not the wealthiest.
  - On the other hand, free university education would cost the government a lot of money and they would have to raise this money through taxation. Some people maintain that it is unfair to tax ordinary working people so that a minority can study at university. Furthermore, they question how useful university education really is for the country as a whole, and argue that vocational training would be more beneficial.
  - On balance, I believe that the advantages of providing free university education outweigh the disadvantages. While free education costs everybody a little more in taxes, it creates a fairer system and more opportunities for poorer people to do well.
Essay (opinion)

Few people would deny that global warming is a serious problem, and that reducing carbon emissions is the main way to tackle it. Large, powerful cars produce far more carbon emissions than cars with small engines, and for this reason, I believe they should be banned.

First and foremost, large cars with very powerful engines are completely unnecessary in today’s world. Our city streets are full of these vehicles, crawling along at ten kilometres per hour and creating huge amounts of pollution. Electric cars are just as fast in a busy city and produce no carbon emissions at all.

Moreover, large cars are more dangerous for pedestrians and cyclists because they are heavier and more likely to cause serious injury or death if there is a collision. At a time when we are encouraging people to walk or cycle instead of driving, we should aim to make our streets as safe as possible, and that includes banning unnecessarily large cars.

Of course, not everybody would agree with this position. Some people maintain that they have a genuine need for a very large car. For example, families with a lot of children may claim that only large vehicles, or ‘people carriers’ as they are sometimes known, provide enough room.

All things considered, I really do think that large, powerful cars should be made illegal. While it’s true that they are useful for some families, they create an unacceptable amount of pollution and cause irreversible damage to the environment.

Divide your essay into five paragraphs.
- Write an interesting introduction to your essay that will encourage your reader to continue reading. Include your own opinion.
- In the second paragraph, include the main point in support of your opinion.
- In the third paragraph, include another point in support of your opinion.
- In the fourth paragraph, include points in support of the opposite opinion.
- The fifth paragraph should be a conclusion. Restate your opinion, but briefly mention the opposite side of the argument as well.
- Use linking expressions such as first and foremost, moreover, for example and all things considered, to guide your reader through your essay.

Description of a person

- In the first paragraph, include the name of the person, what he or she does, and the reason for your choice.
- The second paragraph should include a physical description.
- In the third paragraph, mention the person’s main characteristics and give examples.
- The fourth paragraph should explain what makes this person special, with examples of behaviour and achievements.
- The final paragraph should sum up your thoughts about the person

It is sometimes difficult to think of famous people who are good role models. However, I have always admired the actress Rachel Weisz because, as well as being beautiful, more importantly she is intelligent and principled.

Rachel Weisz is 170 centimetres tall and has long, dark hair and brown eyes. Although she was born in England, her father was born in Hungary and her mother in Austria.

Undeniably, Weisz has always been one of the most thoughtful and intelligent stars of the big screen. For example, aged fourteen, she turned down work as a model and actress because she was worried that it would interfere with her education. She completed an English degree at Cambridge University before launching her career in films.

Because of her beauty, Weisz is offered roles in all kinds of romantic blockbusters, but she is very careful about which parts she accepts.

One of her most successful roles was in the 2005 Oscar-winning film The Constant Gardener, which is about corruption in Kenya. It is a mark of her caring attitude that, during the film, she and her co-stars set up a charity called the Constant Gardener Trust to help people in Kenya who are living in poverty.

In my opinion, Rachel Weisz is a good role model because she has never allowed fame to go to her head. Although she is very successful, she still spends time helping people who have had fewer opportunities in life than herself.
Description of a place

Of all the cities I have visited, the one I like most is Barcelona. I spent five days there in 2012 when I was on holiday with my parents and it made a big impression on me.

Barcelona is a large city in the north-east of Spain, in a region called Catalonia. It is situated on the Mediterranean coast about 150 kilometres south of the Pyrenees. The city itself is quite hilly, and there are mountains to the north-west, including the famous Montserrat where there is a Benedictine abbey which can be reached by cable car.

There are many beautiful places to visit within the city. There are parks and beaches, as well as a busy port which was renovated in preparation for the Olympic Games in 1992. In the heart of the city, you can find Las Ramblas, which are wide streets full of market stalls, cafés and street performers.

My favourite building in Barcelona is the huge church called the Sagrada Familia, which was designed by the Catalan architect Antoni Gaudi. Although work began on the church in 1882, it has never been completed and continues to this day. However, it is open to visitors who can climb the incredibly tall towers and enjoy amazing views across the city.

Barcelona is a great place to visit because it has so many different things to offer: beaches, parks, architecture and culture. It also has a modern and lively atmosphere which I love.

Film review

- Include information about the title and genre of the film, its director and the main actor or actors in the first paragraph.
- Outline the plot in the second paragraph.
- Say what you liked and did not like about it in the third paragraph.
- In the final paragraph, say who you would recommend the film to and why.

One of the best films that I have seen recently is The Bourne Legacy, an action film directed by Tony Gilroy and starring Jeremy Renner. It is different to the previous three Bourne films, which were based on the novels by Robert Ludlum, because the central character of those novels, Jason Bourne, does not appear.

The film tells the story of Aaron Cross, a trained assassin who has enhanced physical and mental abilities. He is sent to Alaska for a training assignment when the remote hut where he is staying is suddenly attacked by missiles. He realises that he needs to find out why someone is trying to kill him and put a stop to their activities before they put a stop to him!

The pace of the film is frantic and the action is non-stop. In general, the acting is excellent and Jeremy Renner in particular gives a great performance. The only flaw in the film is that there are a few places where the plot is not very realistic. For example, at one point, Aaron Cross fights off a pack of hungry wolves in Alaska single-handed and walks away completely unharmed.

In my opinion The Bourne Legacy is a worthy film to follow on from the Bourne trilogy. The minor problems with the plot are outweighed by the fact that the film has you on the edge of your seat from start to finish. I would certainly recommend it to anybody looking for a thrilling and fast-paced action film.
Book review

One of the best books that I have read in the past year is called The Curious Incident of the Dog in the Night-Time. It’s by a British writer called Mark Haddon and is his best-known novel.

The Curious Incident of the Dog in the Night-Time is a story about a fifteen-year-old boy called Christopher who discovers his neighbour’s dog dead in the garden. Christopher decides to investigate the dog’s death and he records his experiences in a book. He questions the neighbours about the dog’s disappearance and in so doing discovers from one of the neighbours, Mrs Alexander, that his mother is still alive, even though his father had told him that she had died.

The main strength of this book is in its description of the main character, Christopher. Christopher suffers from autism and so he sometimes finds it difficult to understand and communicate with other people. In this book we see the world through his eyes and he comes across as very believable. At the end of the book Christopher is more optimistic about his future, having solved the mystery of the dog’s death and found his mother. It’s also a sad ending however, as he still does not trust his father.

This sympathetic and thought-provoking novel is aimed at both teenagers and adults and I would certainly recommend it. It is a book I will remember for a long time.

Formal letter

- Start Dear Sir or Madam if you don’t know the name of the person you are writing to. Use the person’s title (Mr, Mrs, Ms) and their surname if you do (Dear Mrs Samson).
- State your reason for writing in the first paragraph.
- Avoid contractions.
- Use formal expressions.
- Use a suitable phrase to bring your letter to a close.
- End your letter with Yours faithfully if you started with Dear Sir or Madam, and Yours sincerely if you started with the person’s title and surname.
- Sign your name and print it in full afterwards.
- Use the abbreviation enc. if you are including anything with the letter (for example, CV, application form, reference).

Dear Sir or Madam,

I am writing to apply for the temporary post of Summer Camp Activity Co-ordinator, as advertised in The Times last Saturday.

I am a second year student at Bristol University and am currently taking my end-of-year exams. The summer vacation begins on 21st June and ends on 23rd September, and I am hoping to find a job for as much of that period as possible.

Last summer, I worked for a company called Sunny Days which organises holidays for children with disabilities. My duties included arranging sports and other activities and taking the children for excursions. I was considered to be a hard-working and responsible employee, and my manager at Sunny Days has already offered to provide a reference, should you require one.

I am enclosing my Curriculum Vitae and I look forward to hearing from you in due course.

Yours faithfully,

Kevin Waterstone
