Sex in the Military: A Field Report • The Interview: Christopher Nolan • Stoya’s Guide to Expanding Your Sexual Frontiers
• Bill Nye: The Brains Behind the Bow Tie • 20Q: Alison Brie
• New Fiction by A.M. Homes • Hugh Hefner, Graphic Novelist
THE MOVIE. THE VODKA.

Stoli
THE VODKA
ESTD 1938
MIX ACCORDINGLY.

ATOMIC BLONDE

IN THEATERS JULY 28
PLAYBOY
FRAGRANCES FOR MEN & WOMEN

SO, ARE YOU READY TO PLAY?
PLAYBILL

Derek Kettela
This lucky photographer was tasked with snapping July Playmate Dana Taylor’s cover pictorial. Shot in anisland paradise, Kettela’s images are as sensual and dreamy as Dana herself. The bi-coastal fashion photographer has shot more than 25 covers; household names including Kristen Stewart and Emily Ratajkowski grace his portfolio.

Nicholas Gurewitch
The cartoonist and frequent PLAYBOY contributor is also the brains behind the widely successful (and laugh-out-loud funny) Perry Bible Fellowship, a comic web series that juxtaposes whimsical sketches with subject matter ranging from religion to sexuality to war. This issue features an exclusive full-page cartoon by Gurewitch—happy hunting!

Tom Toro
We couldn’t think of anyone better to map Trumplandia’s craggy topography than longtime New Yorker cartoonist Toro. In the illustrated Travels With Toro, the artist—whose book of Trump-themed cartoons, Tiny Hands, is out now—probes the disconnect between voters on the coasts and those in the breadbasket.

Stoya
As a porn actress, entrepreneur and writer for Vice and The New York Times, Stoya, who made her first PLAYBOY appearance as a star of our Renegades issue, is no stranger to exploration. She draws on that same spirit of adventure for Expanding Your Sexual Frontiers, an exclusive guide to pushing your limits both in and out of the bedroom.

A.M. Homes
In She Got Away, a Minneapolis coed returns to L.A. to confront a family crisis. This original story marks Homes’s PLAYBOY debut, but her relationship with us began in 1987 when she was a runner-up in our College Fiction Contest. Homes dedicated her first collection, The Safety of Objects, to renowned PLAYBOY fiction editor Alice K. Turner.

Frank Bill
In the short story The Disgruntled Americans, an ex-cop and his redneck relatives take a stand against corporate greed by staging an explosive heist. Bill, whose second novel, The Savage, is out later this year, taps into his southern Indiana roots to deliver a tense and timely portrait of the frustrations brewing in middle America.

Brydie Mack
The Sydney-based photographer takes her confident, minimalist style on a sexy romp south of the border in Greetings From Tulum. Mack, who counts Maxim and MTV Style as clients, has a gift for capturing the natural beauty of both places and people—in this case, the Caribbean coast of Mexico and our sun-kissed model Tara Lynn.

Jack Morris
Scroll through Morris’s social accounts and you’ll soon be reaching for your passport. The 26-year-old travel influencer, who boasts more than 2.5 million Instagram followers, quit his carpet-cleaning job five years ago to travel the world. In Going Solo he offers a master class in adventuring alone via personal stories and breathtaking photos.

moods of norway
7964 Melrose Ave. Los Angeles
CONTENTS

Departments

SEX Ready to go on a sexual adventure? Let alt-porn icon Stoya be your guide 24

POLITICS Our White House reporter offers a front-row seat to the Sean Spicer circus 26

DRAWN DATA The popular page formerly known as Raw Data returns with this dazzling reboot 28

TRAVEL Tips on where to go solo from Jack Morris, Instagram’s professional wanderer 30

PLAYBOY ADVISOR What to do when man’s best friend becomes a third wheel 34

MILITARY When the sexes collide: a look at attraction and assault in the armed forces 46

Features

INTERVIEW Era-defining filmmaker Christopher Nolan discusses the perilous leap from The Dark Knight to Dunkirk 37

BILL NYE His scientific fervor and supreme goofiness have made the Science Guy more relevant than ever 58

HIGH-SPEED AMERICAN DREAMS Chasing Elon Musk’s Hyperloop: a story of innovation and immigration 62

FICTION One person’s profit is another’s reason for revenge in Frank Bill’s The Disgruntled Americans 76

ARE YOU EXPERIENCED Getting weird in Detroit’s resurgent nightlife scene with the help of Airbnb 100

20Q Alison Brie prepares to clothesline Netflix viewers everywhere with her star turn in GLOW 106

FICTION Disaster strikes closest to home in She Got Away, a tale of domestic apocalypse by A.M. Homes 118

TRAVELS WITH TORO A West Coast cartoonist new to the Midwest takes the temperature of Trump’s America 150

HERITAGE How a colossal corpus of hand-drawn comic books helped Hef create the world of Playboy 163

Pictorials

1+1 Join Kate Harrison and Emily LaBowe as they hide away from the world in a Hollywood hotel 50

SHARP SHOOTER You’re no match for Olivia Brower in this desert showdown 68

PARADISE FOUND July Playmate Dana Taylor stripping down in the tropics is summer at its finest 84

OUT OF THE WILD Miki Hamano takes you on an exceptionally scenic nature walk 110

GREETINGS FROM TULUM Tara Lynn brings the summer essentials: a horse and a hammock (clothing optional) 126

A GLOBAL GIRL “Adventure” might as well be August Playmate Liza Kei’s middle name 134

HILLS ANGEL Sometimes all you need is a sun-dappled ride through the canyons with Lis Giolito 154

ON THE COVER (AND OPPOSITE PAGE) Dana Taylor, photographed by Derek Kettela.
moods of norway

7964 Melrose Ave. Los Angeles
Dear Playboy

POWER TO THE PEOPLE
As a regular chronicler of all things surf, and in particular the women athletes who make riding seem so effortless, I was very pleased to see one such rider, Brook Power, become your most recent Playmate of the Year (May/June). I guess it just goes to show that being a “surf bum” can lead to all sorts of exciting opportunities in life.

Scott O. Sheppard
Orlando, Florida

Congrats and thank you for bringing nudity back to your pages (March/April). Let’s face it, well-done nude photography is Playboy’s signature feature and has been since 1953. Let’s not get too far from our roots. Speaking of your roots, Brook Power is a good choice for Playmate of the Year. She’s incredible. Keep up the good work.

Michael Shore
Charleston, South Carolina

What a great issue May/June is, from PMOY Brook Power to Lourdes Estores (Heritage) and the beautiful women in between. As a PTSD sufferer, I appreciate Seven McDonald’s article MDMA’s Long, Strange Trip and will share it at my next therapy appointment. As a resident of the Pacific Northwest, I’ve put Dan Savage’s Hump! festival on my to-do list this year (Porn to the People). It was such an enjoyable read; I felt like I was tagging along with Leah Sottile around Portland.

Michael Jermaine
Shady Cove, Oregon

SEX WORK IS WORK
Jessica P. Ogilvie’s article A New Day for the World’s Oldest Profession (May/June) is right on. Obviously, prostitution is probably not the best career choice for most women. However, for those who do choose it as their business model, they should not be victimized or criminalized by a society that ethnically and morally has more important things to care about today.

J.R. Schwartz
Boise, Idaho

While I personally agree 100 percent with Ogilvie, I fear her article may not be as persuasive as it could be to those who are against prostitution. Looking at it from the opposing point of view—whether someone disapproves of prostitution for moral reasons or because they want to “protect” women—one response to Ogilvie’s points about victimization is that an individual can choose not to engage in that line of work, thereby removing those risks.

I think part of changing people’s minds is correcting misconceptions. One common assumption is that someone who decides to sell sex must have a troubled past. But studies have found similar levels of drug use, past abuse, etc. among non-sex workers and sex workers alike.

J.D. Checkett
Live Oak, Florida

Janitorial workers, coal miners and garbage collectors all hold jobs that most people wouldn’t do for any amount of pay, yet society never assumes these people have low self-esteem or must have been traumatized as children to take such a job. Given that every job involves doing particular things with your body for someone else in exchange for money, the obvious question is: Why do we make sex a special case? It really has to do with the intersection of the history of human culture and biology. Prostitution upsets the power structures set up by the institution of marriage, undermining both state and religious authority and devaluing a major bargaining chip of (nonprostitute) women.

Bakari Kafele
Richmond, California

I’m a longtime supporter of Amnesty International and was not aware of that organization’s initiatives for sex worker rights. We need to eradicate the idea that the amount of respect a woman deserves depends on the number of people she has had sex with. Legalizing sex work would help people understand that what matters is consent in each individual instance—and having consented in the past is irrelevant. The Coalition Against Trafficking in Women does a disservice to reasonable discourse by refusing to recognize a distinction between consensual and nonconsensual sex work.
DEAR PLAYBOY

Steven Rovnyak
Indianapolis, Indiana

AS SEEN ON TV

Last night my wife and I started watching American Playboy on Amazon. One episode told us enough about the magazine’s history that it inspired us to subscribe in the morning. Our subscription is in the hope that you stay true to your roots. We look forward to reading our first issue.

Aaron Johnson
Seattle, Washington

The 13-episode docudrama chronicling Hugh Hefner’s life is available for streaming on Amazon Prime. Head over to Playboy.com for “Behind the Bunny,” our recap of each episode.

PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE

I couldn’t help but notice how seamlessly May 1972 Playmate Deanna Baker (Heritage, May/June) blends in with her 2017 counterparts.

Paul Pruitt
Tarpon Springs, Florida

Much thanks for the flashback to one of my favorite Playmates: Filipina Hawaiian goddess Lourdes Estores, the June 1982 Playmate (Heritage, May/June). How long do we need to wait for the next Asian or Pacific Islander model?

Name withheld
Chicago, Illinois

The wait is over. Although she is not one of our Playmates, the gorgeous Miki Hamano graces this issue with a beautiful pictorial shot by Jean Pierrot.

PHILOSOPHICAL QUESTIONS

Cooper Hefner recently wrote an interesting essay describing the tenets on which Playboy was founded (The Playboy Philosophy, March/April). He mentions that an open-minded attitude toward religion is one of them. Has Hugh Hefner ever written an article about his own spiritual beliefs or explained his personal stance on religion?

Michael Herbst
Ogdensburg, New York

Indeed, in his original Playboy Philosophy Hef included his thoughts on religion in America, stating, “No nation can be said to have true religious freedom unless it possesses not only freedom of, but also freedom from, religion.”

DREAM TEAM

You can place extraordinary June Playmate Elsie Hewitt on the gilt-edged list of Playboy’s very best Centerfolds, right alongside April 1990 Playmate Lisa Matthews, 2012 Playmate of the Year Jaclyn Swedberg, 1964 Playmate of the Year Donna Michelle, practice nudism in your own home; furthermore, it is illegal to express in any way that you support nudism. In Laguna Hills, California, you can be cited for public indecency if you wear clothing with simple cartoonish images of genitalia on it in public. In nearby Dana Point, municipal codes about nudity and exposure cover only businesses; they don’t state anything about the general public. So it’s anybody’s guess—or dare—what you can get away with there.

Christopher Shadwick
Laguna Hills, California

LONGTIME READER

I can’t communicate with enough enthusiasm how thrilled I am with the current version of the magazine. As a millennial, I wasn’t around for the days when Playboy was part of the avant-garde, but I appreciate its long history of being on the cutting edge of popular culture. Reading through today’s Playboy feels as though I’m looking in on a beautiful party full of interesting people doing amazing things. It makes me want to be part of the fun, and I think that’s what a well-articulated vision can do in the world of magazines.

David Olsen
Carmel, California

SEXUAL RELATIONS

I found Dana Hamilton’s story about the sex lives of young humanitarians fascinating (How Do You Date When You’re Saving the World?, March/April). As someone who considered joining the Peace Corps, I knew that doing so would likely mean that I could not have a relationship for a year. So I dropped out. I loved reading about the people who stuck with the program and found ways to maintain a sex life all the same.

Phillip Marcel
Stony Brook, New York

COVER STORY

Our Rabbit stretches his ears under the sun but is suitably UV-protected with the help of July Playmate Dana Taylor. It’s going to be one hot summer.

E-mail letters@playboy.com, or write 9346 Civic Center Drive, Beverly Hills, California 90210.
RAPID TRANSIT

Introducing the ridiculously comfortable Hubbard Fast.
High performance cleverly cloaked in style.

SAMUELHUBBARD.COM

SHOE MAKERS SINCE 1930

Free shipping and returns. Order online or call 844.482.4800.
Feminism. Like love, the word holds a lot of different meanings to a lot of different people. At first glance, feminism has a simple definition—advocating women’s rights and equality between the sexes—and yet it still carries a lingering undertone, prompting as much debate today as it has over the past century. Along the way, PLAYBOY has been both a defender of the movement and, depending on whom you ask, its enemy.

The relationship between PLAYBOY and feminism began during the latter’s second wave. Having secured the right to vote with the ratification of the 19th Amendment in 1920, American women started taking aim at social as well as political targets after World War II. An American renaissance was afoot as the country drove into the 1950s, promoting a national conversation about sexual mores and gender roles. This shift in mind-set, which unfurled over the next two decades, ushered in a cultural and societal revolution. Above all, the second wave challenged the place of women in a society that expected them to serve as docile housewives and not own their sexuality.

PLAYBOY occupied an overlapping space, using its pages to explore the complexities of sex, championing the rights of the individual and redefining what it meant to be an unapologetic critical thinker, while celebrating pleasure. Our pictorials didn’t just scare religious radicals; they also disturbed and offended many feminists. It became common practice in many feminist circles to equate PLAYBOY with the regressive male gatekeepers of the United States who insisted that women weren’t entitled to subjectivity—or, for that matter, their own sexual objectivity.

In 1963, freelance journalist and future feminist icon Gloria Steinem authored a popular piece for Show magazine outlining her point of view on the negative work environment at one of the Playboy Clubs. Although the internet wasn’t around at the time, stating the article went viral would be an appropriate comparison today. Among her findings was that the Bunny Manual, a guide for all new hires, contained reminders that there are “many pleasing means [the waitresses] can employ to stimulate the Club’s liquor volume.” In the ensuing national debate, it became clear that the target was shifting from the ballot box to the bedroom.

Half a century later, as we navigate the current wave of feminism in real time, we find ourselves in a bit of a gray area. Many of today’s feminist influencers, including Beyoncé, Ellen DeGeneres and Lena Dunham, have celebrated PLAYBOY while honoring the work of pioneering feminists like Steinem. If cultural heavyweights like these can balance both philosophies in their minds, then the question arises again: What is feminism?

To us, the answer is simple. It’s the right for one to freely choose the life she wants to live.

The problem is less about the definition of feminism and more about how we interpret sex today. Throughout the 1960s and 1970s Steinem and other feminists made necessary arguments for the time, often targeting PLAYBOY in the process. They stood up and announced that women were, and always will be, more than sex objects. Setting aside the fact that we’ve made that same point continually for nearly 64 years, PLAYBOY pointed out a fallacy that often accompanies this line of thought: that sex itself is the enemy. To us, that perception is an exact contradiction of what feminism is and indicates a detachment from healthy human desires.

I’m reminded of a point my dad made in Esquire back in 2002:

“Women are the major beneficiary of the sexual revolution. It permitted them to be natural sexual beings, as men are. That’s where feminism should have been all along. Unfortunately, within feminism, there has been a puritan, prohibitionist element that is antisexual.”

While much of this rings true, I disagree with his main assertion here. We are all equal beneficiaries of the sexual revolution, because it allowed both men and women to state, in a collective voice, we all like sex.

Every intelligent man and woman should desire to be a sex object. Demonizing that desire denies an essential component of what makes us human, of what allows us to connect on a level that is oftentimes challenging to articulate in words—of what permits our very existence. Simply put, conscious and consensual objectification of self and other is what keeps the world going round.

There will be other waves, and we will participate in those too. But as we continue to ride this one, it is clear as day that PLAYBOY’s Philosophy today as well as tomorrow is as feminist as it gets.
EYE CANDY, MADE REAL.

Everything you want, for a whole lot less. Daily design discoveries, up to 70% off retail.

New members get $10 off their first order.

touchofmodern.com/play10

Also available on mobile

[Download on the App Store] [GET IT ON Google Play]
WORLD OF PLAYBOY

GET WET WITH PLAYBOY AT TAO

Everybunny in the pool! Playboy is making the quintessential Las Vegas pool party even hotter. Playboy Fridays at TAO Beach, the Venetian hotel’s 18,000-square-foot desert oasis, features poolside Bunnies in bikinis and the city’s hottest DJs every Friday from 11:30 a.m. to six p.m. through Labor Day weekend. PLAYBOY editors are also on hand as hosts of Discover & Be Discovered, our talent search for future Playboy muses. For tickets and VIP packages or to book a cabana (ages 21 and over), visit taolasvegas.com.

A Little Party Never Hurt Nobody

Following the success of our Midnight Roller Discos and Hidden Arcades, this summer Playboy continues to bring the good life to your doorstep with our latest experience: Speakeasy Night. The roaring 1920s throwback party rolls out with boozy pop-ups around the country. For dates and locations, visit hop.playboy.com.

---

How to Be a Modern-Day Playboy Patriot

“We’re going through a fascinating time in the United States. Being just a little less selfish and donating your time to something other than yourself is more important than ever before,” says Playboy Chief Creative Officer Cooper Hefner about his decision to join the California State Military Reserve. “You should purposefully toss yourself into situations that are unknown,” he adds. “They provide the best opportunity to grow.”

---

Celebrating Our Sexy Sense of Humor

Patty Farmer’s new book, Playboy Laughs, out August 3, charts how Hef changed the world of comedy, with stories from the likes of Lily Tomlin, Dick Gregory and David Frost (above, with May 1966 Playmate Dolly Martin).

---

In May we said good-bye to July 1955 Playmate Janet Pilgrim, our first girl next door, who passed away at 82. “She’ll forever be a part of Playboy’s legacy,” Hef said.
On May 4, we honored Brook Power (far right, with Cooper Hefner)—surfer chick extraordinaire and 2017 Playmate of the Year—with an epic issue-release party. The location: No Vacancy, Los Angeles’s Prohibition-themed bar hidden in a restored Victorian house. Having shot her pictorial for the May/June 2017 issue just three months after giving birth to her first child, Brook says that being both a Playmate and a mom has made her more aware of America’s often twisted take on sexiness. “God forbid moms be sexy,” she tells us. “Society wants us to appear as angels of modesty and chastity. Come on now!”
NEW BUNNIES GALLERIES DAILY

• February 2015 Playmate Kayslee Collins poses for photographer Chris Phelps.

BONUS MAGAZINE CONTENT

• Bill Nye (pictured far right) offers tips on how to fight climate change.
• Stoya, author of this issue’s sexy “rough guide,” stars in a revealing gallery.
• Jack Morris curates an expanded list of epic solo-travel destinations.

EXCLUSIVE ONLINE SERIES

• Slow Your Scroll: Spend quality time with the beauties of Instagram.
• How to Change the World This Week: Try our new guide to staying woke.
• Hard Science: Read the latest sex research on everything from first dates to fidelity.

THE BEST OF OUR ARCHIVES

• Eight Playmates create shot-by-shot remakes of their PLAYBOY covers.
• Revisit the 1999 Playboy Interview with Jesse Ventura, the original gonzo politician.

CULTURE, POLITICS & MORE

• Our favorite authors write short, steamy stories.
• Explore patriotic kink with the bizarre sex rituals of our founding fathers.
• Have a one-night stand to remember, discover the internet’s most unusual fetishes and throw a sex party—all before summer runs out.

For your health! Join us for a cocktail and a stimulating chat with our number-one science guy.
Introducing the new Playboy bedding collaboration available at NightShiftGoods.com and select retailers
Expanding Your SEXUAL FRONTIERS
...a Rough Guide

Take it from an activist, entrepreneur and alt-porn icon: Your ticket to Pleasure Town is simple curiosity

We don’t have remote controls for our brains (yet), but we do know that novelty raises our dopamine levels and that leaving our comfort zones for areas that feel taboo can trigger the whole thumping-heart, sweating-palms adventure we credit to adrenaline.

In her book Moody Bitches, Dr. Julie Holland explains how an increase in dopamine and adrenaline in the body can result in a surge of testosterone, which in turn contributes to sexual arousal. Put simply, investigating the unknown may make you want to have sex more often and can improve the sex you’re already having. There’s a solid case for developing your sense of sexual curiosity—and I’m here to help.

Novelty is subjective. The space between our boundaries and what we’re familiar with is different for each individual. Hence the handy grid on the opposite page: a tip-of-the-iceberg look at the sexual-adventure spectrum, running from private and relatively easy, in the lower-left corner, to more daring, in the upper right. Which quadrant feels most like home? Find your coordinates, and then ask yourself if any of the surrounding plot points pique your interest. The seasoned sexual voyager may even discover that the more “vanilla” options are where the real adventure lies. Sometimes a feather is just as powerful as a flogging.

Meanwhile, allow me to share three of my own observations that may help you boldly go where you’ve never gone before.

Sometimes exploration is simply a matter of being more present in your body. The patches of skin we tend to forget—behind the ears, under the breasts, next to the balls—can be stealth erogenous zones. Watching ASMR videos (see the lower-left quadrant) may give you a pleasurable tingle, and that tingle may become erotically charged. Subtraction works too: Covering your eyes intensifies your awareness of what you smell, hear and feel.

Exploration should be methodical, a process of trouser-parts titration. If you like the idea of having your wrists restrained by your partner’s hands, try using some easily escapable thick ribbon; if you enjoy that, dive into handcuffs or advanced rope bondage. Tactile sensations can range from fingertip caresses to the isolated pricks of a Wartenberg wheel to the sharp heat of a single-tail whip.

An interest in group sex can lead to a polynunch (i.e., a casual, semi-public gathering dedicated to discussing polyamory rather than practicing it) and then to a sex party, where easing into things by first observing is absolutely acceptable.

Perhaps most important, reversing roles can expand your understanding of another person’s body. Acting as the recipient if you tend to top—or being inside another person when you’re usually the one who is penetrated—can lead to powerful insights into what your partner feels. We all know that a pegging session is worth a thousand think pieces, and that’s because physical empathy is a profoundly intimate connection.

If you don’t know where to start, ask yourself, What do I want that I have not experienced? Whether it’s a tryst with a vibrator, an affair with your old babysitter or something else entirely, listen to your urges and make your fantasies a reality—or as close to it as possible. And if none of these suggestions whets your appetite, look in the gaps between and beyond.
1. The cheesier the better—erotic dice, sex bingo, kinky truth or dare. Laughter can be an aphrodisiac. 2. Modern sex stores often have classes on everything from vocalizing desires to learning intricate rope bondage. 3. The improv way: You propose something you find arousing, and the other builds on it. For example, “We’re in an alley at night.” “Yes, and I’m...” 4. Set a timer for five minutes. Enter a sex shop. Buy something. Go home and use it.
Fighting the real war on FAKE NEWS

A report from the White House Press Room

Back in April, on the night of the White House Correspondents’ Dinner, a reporter from the United Kingdom turned to his U.S. counterpart and said in a low voice, “The war against us is real.”

The American reporter, who had spent countless hours in presidential press briefings, replied, “Try spending time at the White House.”

The White House briefing room has seats for 49 and standing room for up to 60 more. Reporters from around the globe gather in that room almost every day; nearby, President Donald Trump calls those same reporters enemies of the state. The real fun begins when White House Press Secretary Sean Spicer (at press time, he still holds that title) defends the president while trying to make sense of the man’s statements. According to congressmen from both parties and reporters inside the room, Spicer’s performance has only highlighted the gap between the appearance the administration wants to project and the facts the president wishes us all to ignore.

“We have had a lot of challenges,” says Jeff Mason, president of the White House Correspondents’ Association. “We’ve worked hard for the right to do our jobs.”

From the beginning, it has been a difficult task. When the president and his chief strategist, Steve Bannon, bash the press, Spicer must back them up while assuring reporters that the president has a “healthy respect for the First Amendment.” Asked if he shares his boss’s contempt for the press, Spicer says, “I think there’s some legitimate reporters who do a good job and a lot who are more interested in perpetuating false narratives than getting the story right.”

Seen in a certain light, Spicer has taken steps toward democratizing his press room. He often calls on reporters from beyond the first row of national print and television outlets. He has also instituted a Skype video screen so reporters outside the Beltway can get involved. Some critics say that these are merely tools he uses to call on more sympathetic and less-established reporters; to those allegations he says, “There’s some people who it will never be enough.”

Mason, for one, says the level of openness has been “surprising and encouraging.”

But then there are the tweets. Historically, Spicer is in a unique position: His boss bypasses the media by firing off micro-pronouncements laced with vitriol and questionable claims. Spicer’s standard response is a loan of evasiveness: “The tweet speaks for itself.”

While Spicer’s briefings have been compared to the loss of one’s virginity (very short, and I didn’t enjoy it much), he’s not the only one sowing confusion in the press room. He has been hit with asinine and downright bewildering questions, including one about whether the president favored the Caps or the Rangers in the NHL—on the day the American military dropped the so-called mother of all bombs on Afghanistan. Sometimes it’s apparent reporters aren’t listening to one another or following up on one another’s questions. Some seem more interested in appearing on TV than “seeking factual answers to important questions,” as the legendary White House reporter Helen Thomas once said.

But on occasion, the press corps hits on all cylinders, pushing back against an administration that is more antagonistic toward the press than any other president since Richard Nixon. (Nixon’s famous line “One can only be angry with those he respects” could be a Trump tweet cleaned up by a high school English teacher.)

On April 19, after it became known that the fleet President Trump had said was steaming for North Korea was actually going in a different direction, Trey Yingst of One America News Network, Kaitlan Collins of the Daily Caller and Jessica Stone from CCTV (now CGTN) asked a series of questions that put Spicer on the ropes. Yingst started out by asking how the administration thought the fleet was “thousands of miles” from its actual location. Spicer sputtered. “The president said we had an armada going toward the peninsula; that’s a fact,” he said. Stone then asked how the mistake could not be “false”—encouraging to our allies. Spicer again sputtered, and Collins delivered the knockout blow by reminding Spicer that the fleet wasn’t going where the administration had claimed. “Don’t you think it’s a little misleading?” she asked. “What part is misleading?” Spicer said. Game over. The fact that all three reporters represented upstart news outlets, two of them deep in the political spectrum’s red zone, suggests that Spicer’s press room is sometimes able to carry out its mandate, despite and because of his best efforts.

Speculation continues as to the man’s longevity, particularly after his comparison of Syrian president Bashar al-Assad with Hitler. Either way, the president’s war against the media goes on, even as pundits call his battle against “fake news” a “fake war.”

Meanwhile, Americans are ever more confused as to what is real and what isn’t. Such confusion works to the benefit of an administration seeking to make radical changes to health care, the budget, international relations and more. The war in the press room is indeed real and its consequences dire, but there are far bigger battles to fight on the other side of the smokescreen.
Picks to Heat Up Your Summer

Ocean Addict
The hottest new brand for ocean lovers! We’re Ocean Addicts...aren’t you?
Save 50% on any order. Use code: PB50
www.oceanaddict.com
888.789.1037

Body Wash That Smells Like Adventure
With scents like leather, bourbon, and campfire, it’s the spirit of the Wild West, bottled just for your shower.
Available at www.amazon.com & www.outlawsoaps.com

Vivian Lou
Vivian Lou Insolia insoles
Love high heels? But hate the hurt? Our invisible insoles empower women to wear high heels 4x longer without pain.
www.vivianlou.com
20% OFF code: PLAYBOY

Chic and Affordable
Silk chiffon scarves and jackets designed by Brentano. Casual cool, or smoking hot over an evening dress. Made in USA.
www.luckysevenscarves.com
208.720.1467

MyGolfLocker.com
Personal shopping service for men for golf lifestyle apparel and shoes. Visit MyGolfLocker.com to create your profile today.
MyGolfLocker.com
mygolflocker@golflocker.com

TestoRx™ - Testosterone Booster
Get ready to heat things up! This #1 T-booster & estrogen blocker contains clinically proven ingredients to boost strength, energy, male performance and sex-drive.
www.TestoRx.com

Increase Strength & Libido
Clinically proven to increase IGF-1, strength, muscle tone, libido and performance by naturally replenishing what you lose with age.
www.earthsbounty.com | 800.736.5609

Longevity
An Anti-Aging Essential
Drawn Data

Survey Says...

75% of single men and 64% of single women want “more adventure in the bedroom,” according to a Match.com poll.

Millennials

are 48% more likely than people in other age groups to jump into bed with someone to see if they have a connection; 28% say sex is a good way to figure out if they’re in love.

Possibly Related

57% of millennials say they’re lonely.

Lady Fingers Not Included

Estimated number of calories in a human head and torso: 5,420

Liver: 2,570
Heart: 650

But First...

Percentage of Americans who say it’s okay to take a selfie...

1975: 43
1984: 18
2001: 52
2006: 54
2011: 73
2016: 83

Number of hot dogs Americans consume on Independence Day:

1975: 22.25
1984: 22.25
1996: 22.25
2001: 22.25
2006: 22.25
2011: 22.25
2016: 22.25

Honey... I’m (Not) Home

Percentage of 25- to 34-year-old American women who were homemakers in...

1975: 43
1984: 18
2001: 52
2006: 54
2011: 73
2016: 83

Packing Heat

9: the average number of firearms TSA officers intercept every day.
83% of the guns are loaded.

The TSA’s Top 10 Strangest Items Found in 2016:

10. trailer hitch made with inert grenade
9. Hello Kitty gun
8. barbed-wire wrapped baseball bat
7. loaded grenade (inert)
6. replica suicide bomber vest
5. single-blade “finger armor” claw
4. death ray guitar pick
3. five-bladed flogger
2. bullet-covered gas mask
1. life-size zombie (a movie prop)

Videoocracy

$97,000: average salary in the gaming industry.
$12 billion: amount gaming contributed to the U.S. GDP in 2016, according to the Entertainment Software Association.

Mixed Business

Number of celebrities, athletes, social-media influencers, and marketers who the FTC sent warning letters to for not clearly disclosing business relationships in their Instagram posts.

Game of Shows

3 surprising TV series George R.R. Martin has written for:
MAX HEADROOM, THE TWILIGHT ZONE BEAUTY AND THE BEAST

Pushing Boundaries

Top five countries for adventurous tourists, as ranked by the Adventure Travel Trade Association:

5. Switzerland
4. Norway
3. New Zealand
2. Germany
1. Iceland
I'll Take Mine Black...No Sugar

In the early 1930s watch manufacturers took a clue from Henry Ford's favorite quote concerning his automobiles, "You can have any color as long as it is black." Black dailed watches became the rage especially with pilots and race drivers. Of course, since the black dial went well with a black tuxedo, the adventurer's black dial watch easily moved from the airplane hangar to dancing at the nightclub. Now, Stauer brings back the "Noire", a design based on an elegant timepiece built in 1936. Black dailed, complex automatics from the 1930s have recently hit new heights at auction. One was sold for in excess of $600,000. We thought that you might like to have an affordable version that will be much more accurate than the original.

Basic black with a twist. Not only are the dial, hands and face vintage, but we used a 27-jeweled automatic movement. This is the kind of engineering desired by fine watch collectors worldwide. But since we design this classic movement on state of the art computer-controlled Swiss built machines, the accuracy is excellent. Three interior dials display day, month and date. We have priced the luxurious Stauer Noire at a price to keep you in the black...only 3 payments of $33. So slip into the back of your black limousine, savor some rich tasting black coffee and look at your wrist knowing that you have some great times on your hands.

27 jewel automatic movement • Month, day, date and 24-hour, sun/moon dials • Luminous markers • Date window at 3' o'clock
• Water resistant to 5 ATM • Crocodile embossed leather strap in black fits wrists to 6 ½” - 9”

Stauer Noire Watch $299
Your Cost With Offer Code $99 + S&P Save $300
OR 3 credit card payments of $33 + S&P

1-800-333-2045

Exclusive Offer—Not Available in Stores

Offer Code: NWT316-06
You must use this offer code to get our special price.† Special price only for customers using the offer code versus the price on Stauer.com without your offer code.

Stauer®
14101 Southcross Drive W.,
Dept. NWT316-06
Burnsville, Minnesota 55337
www.stauer.com

Rating of A+
Among adventure-craving millennials, solo travel is becoming the new way to break free. Unaccompanied excursions are up almost 30 percent since 2013, according to recent data from Millward Brown, and a Topdeck Travel survey reveals that nearly 30 percent of millennials traveled alone in 2016. Chalk it up to Instagram’s college-age travel bloggers stoking our impulse to seek out new horizons—and to platforms like Airbnb allowing us to act on that impulse without waiting for a friend to sign on.

We asked 26-year-old professional wanderer Jack Morris, who quit his day job at 21 so he could focus on exploring the farthest corners of the world, to recommend some destinations that offer both breathtaking sights and other attractions uniquely suited to the solo traveler—from meditative hikes to private beaches. (With 2.4 million Instagram followers and brands including Disney and Belkin sliding into his DMs, Morris can be our travel guide any day.) Read on to find your solo summer adventure, be it a beach hang in Bali, a romp in the Rockies or something in between. — Nicole Theodore
GREEK ISLANDS
Happy hopping

For the best island-hopping, I recommend Greece. Santorini has iconic white buildings and a town called Oia that’s a popular sunset spot. Everyone thinks Ios is a party island—and it is—but it’s also a big place to explore; you can go cliff-jumping into crystal clear waters or take a scenic drive around the whole island. Mykonos is famous for its white-and-blue houses; you’ll feel like you’re on a movie set. If you want to check out a Greek island off the beaten path, try Zakynthos (pictured on opposite page). It’s an easy flight from Athens and should definitely be at the top of your list. In the north of Zakynthos you’ll find Navagio, otherwise known as Shipwreck Beach. Drive to the top of the cliff and walk around—it has one of the best views I’ve ever seen. But Milos, about 60 miles northwest of Santorini, is hands-down my favorite Greek island. It’s quiet and peaceful, and you can tour aimlessly on a motorbike, discovering cool shit.

KENYA
Walk with the animals

I had a unique and special experience for me—it was my first time in a place filled with so many wild animals roaming through their natural habitat. And it’s perfect for solo travel. You’ll never get tired of driving around not knowing what you’ll see next. Make sure to book a room at Nairobi’s Giraffe Manor, a boutique hotel where your roommates are actual Rothschild giraffes.

SOUTHEAST ASIA
Alone together

Many people head to Southeast Asia on their own, so it’s a great place to meet like-minded travelers. Visitors often take in Thailand, Cambodia (below), Malaysia, Bali, Vietnam, Laos and Indonesia on a single adventure, but if you have to pick just one of those locations, make it Bali. I’m probably biased—I live there—but it really does have it all: amazing cafes, beaches, landscapes, culture and a carefree vibe to match.

MONTANA
Lakes for days

This destination will be closer to home for most of you but no less amazing. When I worked with the Montana Office of Tourism, most nights I would drive into the Rockies to find the perfect spot to watch the sun go down. During the day, Glacier National Park’s Lake McDonald (above), with its colored-stone lake bed and mountain views, is a must-see. The highlight of my time in Montana was a trek to Cracker Lake—a huge, extremely blue (and beautiful) lake in the northern part of the state.
MOROCCO
Casablanca style

I once drove through Morocco, which is mostly desert, in a battered old car that shook when I got it up to 50 miles per hour. I’d be driving through sandstorms or rain, and the windshield wipers would stop working. It was actually a lot of fun. I recommend starting in Marrakech and renting a car. Camping in the desert was the highlight of my Morocco trip—I bedded down outside my tent and fell asleep under a clear sky with seemingly infinite stars. About 350 miles north of Marrakech is Chefchaouen, also known as the Blue City, where you can check out blue-washed 15th-century buildings. Along the way don’t forget to stop in Casablanca for some Humphrey Bogart vibes. (Right: Ait Benhaddou, a Moroccan village and UNESCO World Heritage site.)

JORDAN
A wonder of the world

A lot of people have misconceptions about Jordan because it’s so close to Syria, but the country is safe and Jordanians are unbelievably friendly. You’ll meet a ton of people, but it’s best to make your own adventure. Visit Petra, Jordan’s famous archaeological site in the southwestern desert, at night. Its Siq (entrance) and Treasury are lit by hundreds of candles. Relax and listen to Bedouin music while enjoying the view of one of the seven wonders of the world. (Below: the desert valley of Wadi Rum.)

Sri Lanka Swings and stairs

I’m not a big hiker, but Adam’s Peak in Sri Lanka is incredible. It takes about four hours—up thousands of stone steps—to reach, but once there you’ll experience incredible mountain views. When I visited I watched 75-year-old women climbing all the way to the top to perform rituals. Sri Pada (“sacred footprint”), a six-foot rock formation at the summit, is believed by many to be the footprint of Buddha. If you’re looking for something closer to sea level, check out the rope swing over the ocean in Unawatuna (above), on the southern tip of the island.
Tsarabanjina

No shoes, no stress

This island off the northern coast of Madagascar is paradise. Getting there from the States is expensive, but if you have a bit of money and want to clear your mind, it’s the place for you. It’s also a barefoot island: The minute you get off the boat, you put your shoes in your bag. Constance Tsarabanjina, the small resort there, has a few luxuries but is kept very natural. The 25 villas are well spaced, so it’s private. You can walk around the entire island in about an hour. Definitely on the to-do list: snorkeling and diving. The water is the clearest blue and home to astounding wildlife and reefs.
Playboy Advisor

Columnist Bridget Phetasy on what to do when man’s best friend turns you into a third wheel. Plus, advice for a guy whose girlfriend desires a different kind of threesome

Q: I hate dating dog owners. I love animals, but getting close to a woman with a dog seems impossible. Hear me out: The animal always comes first. Where and for how long we go on a date depends on when her pet needs to be walked, played with or fed. She can’t sleep at my place because she has to “take care of the dog.” I’ve recently been hooking up with a woman I really like, and she’s hinted at getting serious. I would...but she has a dog. Do I tell her the truth and risk sounding like an asshole by demanding to be number one in her life?—C.D., Key West, Florida
Q: I can’t come when I have a condom on, which obviously makes safe sex awkward. Women I don’t know well. Any tips on how I should explain this? I assume asking her tag a bareback isn’t an option, right?—P.S., West Hollywood, California

A: The first sign of an amateur in bed is someone who resists safe sex. I’m a stickler about it; I make zero exceptions when it comes to using condoms. Honestly, it trips a warning signal when a man can’t come with a condom on, because either (a) he’s not an experienced lover, (b) he’s married or (c) he never practices safe sex. I know I’m with an accomplished lover when he rolls up with his own rubbers. There are no protests and no questions asked. Maybe you’ve been in a long-term relationship for most of your sexual history and are just now single again. If so, allow me: Condoms are an irritating but mandatory aspect of single life, and the sooner you get used to them, the better. Some tips: Use the thinnest ones you can find (we recommend Kimono MicroThin and Trojan Supra BareSkin in A His-and-Her Guide to Modern Condoms, March/April), and put a couple drops of water-safe lube on both the inside and the outside of the condom. A lot of this is psychological. Men tell themselves, “I can’t stay hard when I put a condom on.” Get over it. Practice putting one on and keeping it on while you masturbate at home. Sure, safe sex can be “awkward,” but once you get past that amateur view, you’ll realize not only is it for the best, it can also be part of foreplay. And no, asking her to “go bareback” is not an option. Also not an option: asking her to suck your dick instead. If she offers, well, that’s on her, but you’re not entitled to an orgasm, and she isn’t required to give you one.

Q: I live in a small city and have been single for years. Whenever I go on dating apps, I come across the same people—some of whom I’ve already dated—over and over again. Swiping through pictures and having inane text interactions with strangers always leaves me feeling empty. I know I’m ready for a relationship, but I worry that the willingness and excitement in my messages rub women the wrong way. What can I do to make sure I don’t come off as too eager?—C.A., Davenport, Iowa

A: Trust me, I live in a big city and even I feel this way. When you’re single long enough, every city becomes small. I get it. But remember, you spent a lot of years enjoying your bachelor life, and there was a time when those “inane text interactions” made you feel alive instead of dead inside. Just because you’re ready to settle down with an adorable wife and get your breed on doesn’t mean it’s going to happen immediately. Don’t get jaded. Don’t get anxious. Desperation is never a good look, and humans can smell needy pheromones a million miles away. People tend to make bad decisions in a state of panic to the point that they’re much more inclined to settle for someone less than they deserve. Thirsty is the last thing you want to present yourself as when you match with a woman you like. So be honest about what you want, and no matter how much rejection, flakiness or vanity you face, remain confident that the right woman is out there looking for something meaningful too. Theoretically, all it takes is once. My tip: Behave exactly the way you behaved when you didn’t want a relationship. It’s a law of nature that the minute you let go, that thing you’ve wanted so badly will come to you. I guarantee that once you embrace single life again, “the one” will show up where you least expect her to.

Q: My girlfriend and I have had many threesomes with other women, but now she wants to have a threesome with another man and me. Should I participate even though the idea of her with another man—and the idea of another penis so close to mine—turns me off?—S.S., Grand Island, Nebraska

A: There’s often a disconnect between what turns you on in a fantasy and what turns you on in real life, and your brain and your dick aren’t always in agreement. In fact, research has found that in response to watching MMF pornography (for the newbies, that’s one woman with two or more guys), men ejaculate more sperm, ejaculate with more force and get a second erection sooner. Chalk it up to what evolutionary biologists term “spem competition.” So don’t knock it till you’ve tried it. I also think it’s only fair. Unless you expressly said “I will never entertain the idea of another dick in this equation” at the start of your threesome journey, you owe it to her to open your mind and give it a shot at least once. If you hate every minute, you never have to do it again. But you may find your dick loves watching her get fucked, you naughty curd, you.

Q: I don’t like my girlfriend’s friends. I’d rather do my taxes than go to her friend’s barbecue, where I’ll be forced to engage in boring small talk. Is our relationship doomed, or is there a way I can do my own thing?—J.E., Reno, Nevada

A: It’s important to carve out personal time, but relationships are about compromise, which, from the sound of it, you suck at. If that’s the case, all your relationships are doomed—not just this one. Everyone must engage in small talk on some level. But that’s a separate issue. More important, your girlfriend’s friends are a strong indicator of the kind of person she is. You need to ask yourself if the company she keeps is a deal breaker for you. If so, get out, because it’s only gonna get worse.

Questions? E-mail advisor@playboy.com.
CHANGE YOUR UNDERWEAR.

MACK WELDON
FOR DAILY WEAR

MACKWELDON.COM
CHRISTOPHER NOLAN

PLAYBOY INTERVIEW:

A candid conversation with the filmmaker on the through-lines that bind his sprawling canon—from Memento to the Dark Knight trilogy to his new World War II epic

The gateway to the Los Angeles compound of Christopher Nolan, director-screenwriter of such cosmic brain-twisters as Inception, Interstellar and the Dark Knight trilogy, is a bit of an illusion, a false front. Visible from the tree-lined street is a gated, late-1930s Spanish-style home with a generic economy car squatting in the driveway. With the right lighting, the location could serve as one of those ostensibly benign and potentially lethal southern California backdrops in Memento, Nolan’s noirish 2000 thriller about a man with faulty short-term memory who struggles to find his wife’s murderer. Nolan once resided here, but now it serves as his postproduction facility; the garage contains his editing suite. Exit the building’s rear doors and the bottom drops out as dramatically as one of the trapdoors in The Prestige, Nolan’s 2006 tale of two rival magicians. A rambling expanse of green gives way to another head-spinning shift: Nolan’s primary residence, a much larger and more modern setup that recalls the bold serenity of a Frank Lloyd Wright design.

“You can tell a lot about people from their stuff,” observes a character in Following, Nolan’s self-financed 1998 feature film debut. Indeed: Inside the soaring structure, light-suffused but somehow hushed and Batman moody, the living room is done up in cool, muted tones and furnished with low-slung chairs. Connecting shelves neatly lined with books reach the ceiling. A large framed photo of Stanley Kubrick’s empty director’s chair, a gift from Interstellar star Matthew McConaughey, occupies a place of honor. The abode, like the 46-year-old writer-director-producer who inhabits it, along with his wife, producer Emma Thomas, exudes good taste, intelligence, confidence—and a certain mysterious formality.

Christopher Nolan, creator of some of the most ambitious and challenging blockbusters of the past 20 years—grossing more than $4.2 billion in global aggregate box office and counting—was born in London on July 30, 1970. His father, Brendan Nolan, ran his own marketing consultancy, and his American mother, Christina, was a flight attendant and later taught English. The middle brother of three, wedged between the eldest, Matthew, and the youngest, Jonathan, Nolan grew up in London and Chicago. Dazzled by his first viewing of Star Wars in 1977, he borrowed his father’s Super 8 camera and began to make short films starring his action figures.

Nolan attended Haileybury and Imperial Service College and, later, University College London, which he sought out for its filmmaking facilities. There he met his wife-to-be, and with the technical equipment the school afforded its students he began to spend his off-hours shooting the short films Tarantella (1989) and Larceny (1996). Upon graduating, Nolan traveled

“The Dark Knight Rises expresses what I’m afraid of—that our shared values and our cherished institutions are far more fragile than we realize.”

“When I was about seven, my dad lent me his Super 8 camera, which at the time was expensive and high-end. I literally taped it to the bottom of our car and smashed it to bits.”

“Dunkirk is all about physical process, all about tension in the moment, not backstory. It’s all about ‘Can this guy get across a plank over this hole?’ ”

PHOTOGRAPHY BY GAVIN BOND

37
the world, shooting corporate training videos and filming another short, Doodletbug (1997), in which a man driven to distraction by an insect finally hammers it with his shoe—only to discover he has flattened a tiny version of himself. In 2000, he and Thomas married; today they have four children.

In 1996, Nolan began shooting and Thomas began co-producing, on weekends, the self-financed, micro-budgeted Following, in which Jeremy Theobald plays a struggling writer who, desperate for raw material, shadows strangers through London and uncovers more about the city’s criminal underworld than he bargained for. Mounting success and acclaim followed, as well as a few unrealized projects (including an as-yet unfilmed Howard Hughes movie, which Nolan considers his best script), but everything changed when, girded by the good reviews and box office for 2002’s Insomnia, he met with Warner Bros. brass to propose a more relatable reboot of Batman. Three angsty and financially dizzying Dark Knight films later, Nolan found himself atop the movie-making universe, praised as a rare filmmaker who could breathe eccentricity, high art and bracing intelligence into the behemoth-scale international blockbuster. As one critic put it, Nolan and company helped wipe “the smirk off the face of the superhero movie.”

With an unbroken string of hits from Memento right up through 2014’s Interstellar, Nolan is now about to unveil Dunkirk, a brawny, laconic World War II passion project that stars Tom Hardy, Mark Rylance and Kenneth Branagh, among others—including pop star Harry Styles in his first substantial acting gig. Even to critics and fans who have been prodding Nolan to make a more obviously personal movie, the PG-13 rated Dunkirk is a high-stakes gamble—but then, the same could be said of every other project he’s taken on. We’ll soon know whether Nolan’s obsessive internet superfans, dubbed “Nolanites,” will follow their celluloid god into theaters to watch a real-life saga of self-sacrifice, heroism and esprit de corps.

Stephen Rebello, who last interviewed Matthew McConaughey for Playboy, spent an afternoon at Nolan’s live-work compound and filed this report: “Nolan’s unblinking gaze, rich vocabulary and agile mind make it clear that he is, indeed, the visionary who, in Inception, sent Leonardo DiCaprio through the City of Light as it folds in on itself. Volleying ideas with him can almost make one feel like a character in one of his films—absorbed, speechless and often a step or two behind. As he slipped cup after cup of Earl Grey tea, he let our conversation range from the nerdy (Brownian motion) to the playful (the irreputable appeal of Harry Styles). He is averse to pettiness and bullshit, and though candid, he pumps the brakes when the conversation drifts outside his comfort zone. Several of his associates warned me that this interview would be ‘uncharted waters’ for a man as private as Nolan. He navigated the sometimes choppy seas just fine.”

PLAYBOY: The Dark Knight trilogy, like most of your films, is drenched in paranoia, guilt, chaos and powerful depictions of societal collapse. What scares and unsettles you in real life?

NOLAN: In today’s world, anarchy scares me the most. Both the Joker in The Dark Knight and Bane in The Dark Knight Rises tap into things that are very powerful to me in terms of certain latitude with the audience. They’ll follow you to places they wouldn’t follow you without that familiar icon in the center. The Dark Knight Rises expresses what I’m afraid of—that our shared values and our cherished institutions are far more fragile than we realize. A lot more people than there were a year ago are as afraid of that as I am now.

PLAYBOY: Considering that fear, how pessimistic or optimistic are you that our shared values and cherished institutions will survive?

NOLAN: When the chips are down, I’ve got a lot of faith in humanity and faith that things will work out. Some of my friends will be amused to hear me say that I’m an optimist, because I often present myself in a very pessimistic light. I worry and complain about a lot of things in today’s world. I want the world to be better than it is right now, and I have faith that, eventually, it will be. Right now, though, it’s looking like we are condemned to live in interesting times. The thing that appalls me about the state we find ourselves in is that it feels increasingly self-inflicted. We were making great progress in the world. Things were going well. We had two generations of prosperity, two generations in the West that didn’t have direct experience of war. I’m very frightened that this leads people to not remember how wrong things can go in this world.

PLAYBOY: The power of dreams and nightmares is one of your many themes in Inception and elsewhere. Do you have persistent dreams or nightmares?

NOLAN: I’ve never fought in a war. It’s my worst nightmare to do so.

PLAYBOY: A majority of critics and fans seem to welcome the nonlinear storytelling, complexity, ambiguity and cutting-edge science you bring to your movies. Do your detractors ever confront you about making movies that are too chilly or just plain baffling?

NOLAN: I’ve had a lot of that response. I’ve skipped out of the back of movie theaters—like at the end of Inception—before people could catch up to me. Alan Parker once observed that all cinema is manipulative, and I suppose that’s true. I try not to be overly manipulative—or I try not to be obvious about it. That gives people a little more freedom to interpret the movies their way, bring what they want to it. I’ve had people write about my films as being emotionless, yet I have screened those same movies and people have been in floods of tears at the end. It’s an impossible contradiction for a filmmaker to resolve. In truth, it’s one of the things that is really exciting about filmmaking, though. I seem to be making films that serve as Rorschach tests.

PLAYBOY: So, unlike old-time Hollywood... director Howard Hawks, who admitted that even he couldn’t make heads or tails of the plot of his classic 1940s detective thriller _The Big Sleep_, you can explain every twist and turn of your movies?

NOLAN: I think Hawks knew exactly what was going on but was probably making a point about what matters. Premise matters as opposed to plot—plot being the stuff than can fall away. I have to be fully in control of the mechanism and underlying reality of the film, even if I want an ambiguous response from the audience. I had an interesting moment with my brother Jonathan during the Venice Film Festival in 2000, the first time we ever showed _Memento_ publicly. I had no idea whether we would get booed out of the cinema, but we got a standing ovation that went on and on. Afterward, I was asked at a press conference what the meaning of the ending was, and I gave my response. While I was having dinner with my brother later, he said, “You can’t ever do that.” I was like, “Well, I just answered the question.” He said, “The point of the film you made is that your opinion isn’t any more valid than anyone else’s.” I hadn’t thought of it in that way, but a lightbulb kind of went off. The film has a productive ambiguity to the end, as does _Inception_. I have to know the truth as I see it for that ambiguity to be genuine, as opposed to it being an evasion. But the point Jonathan made to me and that I’ve carried with me ever since is that I can’t ever tell people what I think, because they will always elevate that above the ambiguity, the mystery. And they shouldn’t, because the text, the grammar of the film is telling you: _You can’t know these things_. They’re unknowable, because they’re unknowable for the character.

PLAYBOY: Speaking of mystery, over the past few years your collaborator has publically described various unique personality traits of yours. It has been noted that you constantly drink Earl Grey tea, especially when you’re working on set or on location. Considering how you’ve been doing just that since this conversation began, let’s call that rumor true. Do you also carry your American and British passports at all times?

NOLAN: At all times? That would be...—

PLAYBOY: Okay, at most times?

NOLAN: In 1999, after the Rotterdam film festival, I left for the airport to catch a plane to London for a meeting. I didn’t bring my passport. Travel is very important to me. My mom was a flight attendant, and when I was 15 we got free airplane tickets, so I was able to travel the world. Always being efficient at travel, I never check a bag. This once, I went, Oh, it’s the EU—and therefore I wouldn’t necessarily need a passport. It was a complete brain fart. Finding yourself at the airport with a plane to catch without your passport? I still travel so much that, yeah, when I’m working, I keep my passport with me at all times, in a safe place.

PLAYBOY: Checking out another rumor, can you be reached by e-mail?

NOLAN: No. I don’t have an e-mail address.

PLAYBOY: If I were given a phone number, told it was yours and decided to call it—

NOLAN: Nothing would ring. I don’t have one. [laughs]

PLAYBOY: And you don’t allow cell phones on set?

NOLAN: I don’t tolerate distraction, so I don’t tolerate people using their phones on set because they are exiting the bubble of our creative process, exiting the reality we’re creating. Their brain is off somewhere else. They’re no longer collaborating. We’ve been through different phases. We used to have people not bring their phones at all, but that’s not practical now. Now it’s that they’re switched off, so no one uses them. If you need to use the phone, leave, go use it. That way there’s no pretense of sneaking a glance. I’ve had crew members who chafed at that but actually came to value it, because they can lose themselves in the work for the whole morning and then catch up with messages at lunchtime. I also don’t tolerate lateness. If somebody’s on time and engaged, anything else is fair game.

PLAYBOY: You’re very dapper and buttoned-up right now in a blazer, vest and pocket square. Barring extremes of weather or terrain, is this how you dress on set?

NOLAN: Other crew members get to dress in a practical manner for the job they have to do. I’ve always worn a jacket like this. Back in school, I had a uniform and got very used to the jacket pockets and having my things right with me. When I started making properly budgeted movies with real crews, I remember going to pick up a sandbag and realizing I’d offended the crew because that’s not my job. I’ve always felt I should dress just the way I dress when I’m writing or doing anything else. I dress the way I’m comfortable, because directing isn’t a physical job for me.

PLAYBOY: Everything looks uncomfortable—and physical and immersive—in your new movie, _Dunkirk_, about the evacuation of Allied soldiers who were cut off and surrounded by the German army during World War II’s Battle of France.

NOLAN: I’ve been drawn to the story over many, many years. It’s not a battle as such; it’s an evacuation, a race against time, a communal effort to save the day, so it’s more a survival story than a war film. But one of the appalling things about war or conflict is that we send our children to fight them. I didn’t want to do what movies always do, which is to cast 28- and 35-year-olds as 18- and 19-year-olds. We cast a very wide net, pulling people out of drama schools, people who were deciding if they wanted to go to drama school, people just finishing high school, people who didn’t have agents, particularly when we had to search for the lead role we call “Tommy,” who is played by Fionn Whitehead.

PLAYBOY: How did it work out filling a key role with a genuine international pop star—One Direction’s Harry Styles?

NOLAN: He’s fabulous in the film. Again, we auditioned many people. He earned it. He’s a superb talent and really delivered the goods with great passion. I’m excited for people to see what he’s done in the film.

We’re trying not to oversell that, because it’s an ensemble film. But he’s pretty terrific, in my opinion.

PLAYBOY: Tom Hardy plays a Spitfire plane pilot, and his scenes are solo, airborne and sometimes with an oxygen mask covering the bottom half of his face. Having gotten so much blowback from audiences complaining that they couldn’t understand much of Hardy’s dialogue as Bane in _The Dark Knight Rises_, let alone the complaints you got about sound effects and music drowning out the dialogue in _Interstellar_, are you risking an encore?

NOLAN: It’s always interesting when people take you on about technical issues. It’s completely fair, but people don’t know what goes into the process. Armchair technicians don’t understand that, whether it’s _The Dark Knight Rises_, _Interstellar_ or _Dunkirk_, I’ve spent eight months listening to every sound, balancing everything incredibly carefully and precisely, modulating it and listening to it in different theaters. On _Interstellar_, with our sound crew and the composer Hans Zimmer, we were trying to do something exciting, beautiful and different—something raw, real and crude at times, the way Hoyte van Hoytema’s camerawork was. We weren’t completely shocked by the response, because we knew we had gone pretty far with some of these things. But people seemed a little angrier than I expected. With Tom on The Dark Knight Rises—I mean, he’s such an extraordinary actor. We spent a lot of time talking about it. He put a lot of work into it, and what he did was fascinating. I had him try a more moderate version of what we were shooting. It didn’t work. The voice is inextricably linked with the character, which for someone whose face you don’t see and whose mouth you don’t see move is pretty amazing. To this day on the dub stage we do that voice all the time.

PLAYBOY: Hardy’s aerial scenes in the Spitfire should, especially for audiences who see Dunkirk in IMAX, pack a punch.

NOLAN: The Spitfire is the most magnificent machine ever built. I got to fly in a two-seater version, and the power in that—there’s just a grin on your face from takeoff to landing. There’s a very immersive quality to the way we’ve done the flying sequences. To be able to give audiences that experience, we needed to have special lenses built, we needed all kinds of technical things to happen. We’ve done things nobody has ever done before, taking actors up in a real plane and shooting real cockpit shots in a large-format IMAX. It was a huge ambition for the film, and my team really pulled it off.

PLAYBOY: Are you generally a daredevil, a sportsman?

NOLAN: I don’t do anything particularly interesting. I try to get a little exercise. I like the ocean. I like getting out on a stand-up paddleboard. But it’s only once a movie is done, shipped, everybody has seen it and it’s come out that I can relax. That’s when we like to travel and get a big long holiday.

PLAYBOY: Some of the Dunkirk actors seem to be part of some unofficial Christopher Nolan stock company, including Tom Hardy and Cillian Murphy. On previous movies you’ve worked several times with Christian Bale, Michael Caine, Marion Cotillard and Joseph Gordon-Levitt. What’s the dynamic between you and actors?

NOLAN: I’ve always loved what they do and have been a good audience for them. I don’t look at a monitor. I’m really paying attention to what they’re doing on the set, just as an audience member. My filmmaking style is very tactile. I do a lot of close-ups, and actors feel a concentration from the camera, as well as from me, on what they’re doing. On Dunkirk, we spent weeks with Mark Rylance and Cillian Murphy on this tiny boat with a huge IMAX camera right up in their faces. I had to warn them that IMAX cameras get very loud, but I had to be that close because I’m interested in the minutiae of the performances, trying to capture the layers of all that in a form that’s readable for the audience. Actors recognize that I don’t have the slightest bit of ego or expectation when it comes to performance. I’m not trying to control or puppeteer; I’m trying to give them the space to do something that excites me. If it’s not quite right, I’m trying to help them.

PLAYBOY: Do you worry that fans of your trippy sci-fi and superhero movies may not follow you into World War II?

NOLAN: There’s definitely risk with that, definitely discomfort. At the same time, Emma, Dunkirk, for different reasons, has a similar feeling for us. It’s a huge story, one of the great stories of human history, in my opinion, and it works its way into pop culture in all kinds of ways. The idea of the communal effort to save the day, victory from the jaws of defeat—there are all kinds of primal elements in this story, and it has never been told in modern cinema. Why is that? Well, one of the reasons is it requires a substantial set of resources. It requires the backing of a major studio. It requires a grand scale to do the story justice. And so my feeling was, I can get this done now and I should; otherwise it isn’t going to get done.

So yeah, I see that as something of a responsibility. That is to say, if you’ve earned a bit of trust and freedom from the studio, you really want to try to do something with it that couldn’t get done in another way.

PLAYBOY: How persuasive is it to Hollywood that you tend to bring your films in on schedule and within budget?

NOLAN: I started working that way for very pragmatic reasons. When studios give you millions of dollars for your film, the best way to secure yourself some creative freedom is to stay on time and on budget. If you’re the one they’re not worried about as you’re shooting, if you’re not the fire they have to put out, they’ll leave you alone. If they don’t feel taken advantage of, that’s a huge asset to you as a filmmaker, in terms of your creative freedom, and they reward you for it.

PLAYBOY: Did the fact that Warner Bros. didn’t feel “taken advantage of” help get your Dark Knight trilogy off the ground?

NOLAN: Yes—and people always miss this key piece. After Memento I did Inception for Warner Bros., with Al Pacino, Robin Williams and Hilary Swank. I worked with movie stars. It had action. It had locations. So I did my $3 million film Memento, and then I got to do a $47 million movie. That gave the studio a kind of comfort with letting me go to the next step with Batman Begins. That was fortunate, because filmmakers today aren’t being given that same chance. People are being taken straight from Sundance and then given $250 million films to direct. When I’m used as an example of how that can work, you want to put your hand up and go, “No, that isn’t what happened.” I value that I got to do a medium-budget studio thriller or drama. Those are getting harder and harder for people to make. At the time, Batman was kind of up for grabs, and the studio was open to someone coming in and telling them what they wanted to do. They wanted to invigorate it. I kept talking about the origin story and the 1978 Superman. Although it has some dated elements now, it was the closest thing to what I had in mind—an epic film with a realistic texture.

I wouldn’t be doing my job right if I weren’t uncomfortable with each film for some reason. That feels right.

PLAYBOY: Getting back to genre films: When you see superhero movies, which seem to be coming out every week now, and so many of them follow what feels like a dark, gritty template, what’s your reaction?

NOLAN: My reaction is complex. I remember some of the Dark Knight trilogy came out and I think Iron Man also came out. Marvel was gearing up what it was doing. I remember having a lot of conversations with marketing and distribution: If the comic-book movie is a genre, then we’re worried about being overcrowded. But if you don’t view it as a genre—if you just view these as temporal movies—then there’s plenty of room. As with everything, you reach a point where things get a little overcrowded in terms of how much of one particular product has been made, but for us and our relationship with the Batman films, we always wanted to view them as movies in their own right. That felt like the most respectful way to treat beloved subject matter. It’s like, Trust us, we’re just going to make as good a film as we know how to make. And I think the world has changed since we made this film. I think fans are more particular about the color of the movies they want to see and how closely they want those to adhere to what they’ve seen on the page. We were given a lot of freedom and trust by the fans, and hopefully we did right by them.

PLAYBOY: Part of that realistic texture of the Dark Knight movies came from the screenplays and, of course, definitive performances such as Heath Ledger’s Joker. What do you most remember about him in that role?

NOLAN: He unveiled the character to us very gradually through the hair and makeup tests, through the early conversations and when he had to read a scene with Christian Bale. He’d do a little bit of the voice, just a taste, and then, as he tried on the wardrobe and experimented with the makeup and shoot tests, he’d move a little bit this way, talk a little bit that way, just slowly unveiling it to the crew. It was electrifying. Then he did this scene of the Joker in the kitchen—a lot of lines, a big monologue. We shot his close-up. There were a lot of actors around the table, and when we got to the end and I said “Cut,” they broke into applause. I have never seen that before or since.

PLAYBOY: How did he react?

NOLAN: Very modestly. I feel privileged that Emma, my editor Lee Smith and I are the only people in the world who got to see that performance before he died. His achievement stands totally independent of his life and, at the silent film Sunrise, which I hadn’t seen before. It has the elemental quality of a fable and a simplicity of design. It’s tough for some people in this day and age to tap into watching a silent film. You have to embrace silence the way audiences of the time would. The fabulous thing about silent films for filmmakers is that there is so much to be inspired by—or, to put it in more crude terms, you can steal from silent movies. [laughs]

PLAYBOY: Did you look at war films or films set during wartime?

NOLAN: Early on in my process, we took a look at The Thin Red Line, a great favorite of mine. It feels like it could be any war, any time, and it’s very poetic, but that didn’t feel right for what we were doing. We watched All Quiet on the Western Front, which James Jones described in an essay as a film that says war turns men into animals, and the longer they’re at war, the more animalistic they become. After that, what else is there to say? Steven Spielberg lent me his print of Saving Private Ryan, which was as shocking and unpleasant as I had remembered. The second those bullets start flying, you didn’t want to be in the theater. That pushed us to go in a more Hitchcock direction—to create a different kind of tension, one that allows you to look at the screen a bit more and not hide your eyes.

I was daunted by the idea of approaching war head-on because I’ve never fought in one. As I said, it’s my worst nightmare. But I was able to tackle Dunkirk in a different way, knowing the mechanics of suspense and the thriller, and putting the audience in the perspective of the people on that beach, who would just see planes coming and bombs dropping. That’s extremely frightening. Taking a more suspense-based, thriller-based approach actually freed me up. Dunkirk is all about physical process, all about tension in the moment, not backstories. It’s all about “Can this guy get across a plank over this hole?” We care about him. We don’t want him to fall down. We care about these people because we’re human beings and we have that basic empathy. There’s a very intense quality to Dunkirk and we put the audience through a lot, but there’s tremendous positivity that results from that.
PLAYBOY: Did you have to go to the mat for analog film with Dunkirk?
NOLAN: People have no idea what's being lost with the digital intermediate process. It's very difficult to talk to the studio folks and postproduction guys because they'll say, "Well, you believe in magic," or "What you're saying is mystical." I just had to embrace that and go, "Yes, I suppose I am." Everything in movies is about mystery and magic and things beyond our understanding. Those hundreds of hours of decisions that in and of themselves are meaningless? Well, added up they're not meaningless, because in the end you feel something. Why does Vertigo work in a way that so many other films like that don't? It's the color, the different things that come together. It's mystical, it's emotional—an emotional connection we have with the experience of seeing a story on the screen on film. Just look at visual effects in films from 10 years ago. At the time you were fine watching them, but they don't hold up now. What's the difference? Our perception, to a certain extent, because we have an eye that develops over time. So whenever engineers turn around and say, "We've solved it. We've made video look like film," I say, "Well, you've done a good trick. For now." David Fincher loves to shoot digitally, and that's his right, but for me, the photochemical process is different. I'm not sure they're ever going to look the same, however many bits the technicians churn.
PLAYBOY: David Fincher's actors have talked about his penchant for many, many takes.
NOLAN: Several Gone Girl actors have spoken of doing 50 takes, and Rooney Mara reportedly had to do 99 takes on a scene in The Social Network. He has also released a director's cut of Zodiac and an "assembly cut" of Alien 3. Are you anything like that?
NOLAN: I always say that the audience tells me what the film is. That doesn't mean we always agree. But audiences seeing the film—that's the final piece of the creative process. It's like exposing copper to the elements. It changes what the thing is. But it doesn't make me then want to go back and have at it again. I've always viewed the filmmaking process as almost like a life performance or something. I would do reshoots if I had to, but I trust the production period. It's like, Okay, I've got six months to shoot the film and then I've got three months to do my first cut. I've always tried to trust those pressures and limitations and stand by the film by the end of it. Otherwise, where would you stop? You'd never finish. It's an imperfect medium. It always has been. Every film is imperfect. If there's something I've been unsatisfied about, you leave it and trust what it was. The impetus is to try to do better on the next film.
PLAYBOY: You wrote the Dunkirk script solo—that is, without your brother Jonathan, with whom you worked on The Prestige, The Dark Knight, The Dark Knight Rises and Interstellar. Was he too busy creating and writing for TV, on both Person of Interest and Westworld?
NOLAN: I never wanted to be a writer. I started writing because I needed to have the material to be a filmmaker. I discovered I couldn't write a novel, because I'm embarrassed and I find it difficult to find an authorial voice. But in screenplays, there's neutrality; you're describing some other reality in objective terms. I find that form especially liberating because of the way in which doing and we're always talking. I just don't pay him. [laughs]
PLAYBOY: What was it like at home for you, with a father who worked in marketing and a mother who was a flight attendant?
NOLAN: We grew up in England and America at different times, but mostly England. My dad ran his own business in product development for many years. He started out as a copywriter and was a very creative man. I wanted to make my own movies, and when I was about seven, he lent me his Super 8 camera, which at the time was as expensive as a high-end video camera of today. I literally taped it to the bottom of our car and smashed it to bits. He wasn't thrilled, but he was very encouraging creatively. My mom was a flight attendant right out of college for a few years. When she met my dad and got married, she was forced to retire, because back in the day, they wanted flight attendants to be young and single. When there was a class-action lawsuit that was eventually resolved in the 1980s, they had to offer her her old job back, 20 years later, with seniority. In the meantime, she'd been teaching English as a second language, adult literacy programs and so forth and made a real career out of it.
PLAYBOY: How was it that you lived in both London and the U.S.?
NOLAN: Because my mom is American, we'd go back there to see her family in the summer when I was young. The way film distribution was in those days, in the summer we would see all the movies that wouldn't come to England until Christmas. My dad and I first saw Star Wars at a suburban movie theater in Ohio or something, and I have a very vivid memory of being seven and on the first day of school in England in September 1977 trying to explain Star Wars to people: "Well, there's a bad guy who's got a mask and then there's these bad guys who have white suits and they look like robots but not really." I was the first guy in school to see it. It made a huge impression on me, and my dad took me to see it again in London when it opened in 70 millimeter at the Dominion Theatre on Tottenham Court Road. I remember going to see 2001: A Space Odyssey with him at the Leicester Square Theatre, which has since been knocked down. Interstellar was the last film to play there.
PLAYBOY: Were you and Jonathan as close as you are now?
NOLAN: I was off at boarding school, so I was sort of the outsider. I don't want to talk too much about our upbringing just because I don't want to speak for my brother. Jonathan is six years younger than I am. As we’ve gotten older, we’ve gotten closer, and closer as well with the creative collaboration that started very much with Memento.
PLAYBOY: As a kid, what inspired you? What posters did you have on your walls? What did you collect?
NOLAN: The seminal influence was Ridley Scott and his movies. At some point, after seeing Blade Runner, I had somehow connected it with Alien—everything’s completely different, but there’s the same feeling. That was my first sense of what a director does. I can’t tell you how many times I’ve seen Blade Runner. I know everything about it. I was absolutely obsessive about it, and at a time when there weren’t many people interested in it outside of a small group. I remember talking to my dad about Ridley Scott and him revealing that he’d actually worked with him and knew him a tiny bit because of where he produced some of his commercials. Ridley Scott was my hero.

There was a place in Soho called Vintage Magazine Shop where I would buy black-and-white stills from Casablanca, Diva, Blade Runner and put them on the wall in my room. It was the 1980s, when I was entering into what I call an open phase of really wanting to absorb new things, new culture, new music, new movies.
PLAYBOY: Did you persuade your father to try to find a way to meet Ridley Scott, or did you ever write him or anyone else a fan letter?
NOLAN: I used to think about doing that a lot. I’m just too shy, too self-conscious. I didn’t ever do that, and part of me now wishes I had. I was at a party once, and Sydney Pollack was across the room, not really talking to anybody. I had spoken to him on the phone once but had never met him in person. I thought, I should go talk to him. I didn’t. He passed away fairly soon after.

PLAYBOY: Were you also shy around women growing up?
NOLAN: I don’t really want to answer that other than to say Emma and I met on our very first day at University College London.
PLAYBOY: Did you two share a class or just meet randomly?
NOLAN: Same dorm—“dorm” in the American vernacular, “hall of residence” in the British. We met the first night. I don’t think I should say any more on that.
PLAYBOY: Both personally and professionally, yours is a long-lasting and productive relationship.
NOLAN: I had a very nice conversation with my 13-year-old son about colleges, and he said, “When you went to college, did you know anyone?” I said, “No, I sat in my room in my hall of residence the first night and heard a bit of a party going on in the corridor. I thought, I don’t know anyone; I’d better get out there and say hi.” I opened the door and, as I said to my son, “Who was the first person you think I saw?” Emma.
PLAYBOY: Lucky you left your dorm room.
NOLAN: I would not have on most nights, but it was the first night. I’m very glad that I did. Emma and I ran the great film society at University College London.
PLAYBOY: Did you have similar taste in films?
NOLAN: It wasn’t that. I sort of drew Emma into production right away. In the film society they’d give you a roll of reversal film, and you could shoot a 16-millimeter movie and edit it on their Steenbeck editing machines. I drew her into helping on the films I made there.
PLAYBOY: Including your 1989 Super 8 short Tarantella, which was shown on a PBS showcase for indie projects. Your 1996 film Larceny showed to acclaim at the Cambridge Film Festival. After college, you funded, directed and shot with friends your first feature, Following, which got noticed at film festivals and was reviewed by The New York Times.
NOLAN: As the films get bigger and more involved and longer, Emma has always been there helping out in whatever way makes the most sense. She’s developed an extraordinary ability to understand all sides of the filmmaking process from the ground up in a way that few people who meet her would necessarily see. She knows more than any producer about how films are actually put together. She’s very self-effacing and doesn’t talk a lot about what she knows. She allows people to sit and lecture her until it’s to the point where she has to point out, quietly, politely, that she knows what she’s talking about.
PLAYBOY: What kinds of movies do you like to see as a family?

NOLAN: We have a very good projector here at the house. I’ve shown our four kids movies since they were a very young age. They’ve watched the silent version of Ben-Hur, and they all wound up seeing 2001 for the first time when they were three or four years old. I’ve run Blade Runner just once because it’s a little more grown-up and the kids are spread out in age. I showed them Citizen Kane when they were pretty young, and they still complain about it. They know that it winds me up to complain about Citizen Kane. They know a lot about movies and have a good grounding in film history. I did have an awful moment when I said, “Maybe they’re all going to be film critics.”

PLAYBOY: Because you and your wife work so closely together in a high-pressure environment, how do you strike a balance?
NOLAN: The crossover in our professional and personal lives is very much two halves: the half of our lives before kids and the half afterward. Once kids come along, they ground you. You have to put things to one side at some point. You have to be living a family life and shutting off the work life. Emma has always been very good at asserting that discipline at the appropriate moment, even though we’re living and breathing what we do all the time. We’re also engaging the kids in that and take them on location wherever we go. But Emma has always been great at seeing the need to put work to one side and concentrate on family at the appropriate time.

PLAYBOY: What’s on the docket post-Dunkirk?
NOLAN: I’ve never been good at doing more than one thing at a time. For me, Dunkirk won’t be finished until it goes out in the world.

PLAYBOY: Are you still tempted by the prospect of doing your own James Bond or Star Wars movie?
NOLAN: A Bond movie, definitely. I’ve spoken to the producers Barbara Broccoli and Michael G. Wilson over the years. I deeply love the character, and I’m always excited to see what they do with it. Maybe one day that would work out. You’d have to be needed, if you know what I mean. It has to need reinvention; it has to need you. And they’re getting along very well.

PLAYBOY: So is it a good time to be Christopher Nolan?
NOLAN: It feels great, even though this is the scary period, when I’ve done the things I can to make Dunkirk the most it can be. You get obsessed and pour yourself into the technical finishing of it because it’s your last chance to make things as good as they can be. Now comes the period of putting the film out there in the world. That never gets any easier.
TOP-SHELF CIGAR COMBO

You’ve landed in cigar heaven! Take advantage of this amazing offer from America’s biggest cigar retailer, Cigars International. Ten premium handmade cigars from industry giants like Cohiba, Gurkha, Macanudo, and many more. That’s worth the price of admission alone, but I’m also including a gorgeous, 50-capacity desktop humidor. The whole package is worth $198, but it’s yours right now for just $29."That’s nearly 65% off MSRP! You’re not gonna find a deal like this anywhere else, that’s for sure.

www.CigarsIntl.com/SA7118
You must enter the complete web address for special offer

1-888-244-2790
Mention code SA7118
Item #: CA52-SP

"Plus $4" s/h. PA residents add 6% tax - taxes on orders shipped outside of PA are the responsibility of the purchaser. Offer available to first-time purchasers. One per customer. Cigars International does not sell products to anyone under the age of 21. For more information please see www.CigarsInternational.com/agreement. Offer expires 8-31-17.
With the most dangerous combat positions opening to women, an age-old question resurfaces: How do we deal with sexual attraction—and harassment—on the front lines?

Late into her deployment to Iraq, Lieutenant Laura Westley, along with some of her fellow soldiers, decided to go skinny-dipping in the pool at one of Saddam Hussein’s palaces. They were all young, naked, trained to peak physical condition—and away from the prying eyes of commanders. As she swam, Westley began to fool around with a male soldier in her unit.

Westley recounts this scene in her memoir, War Virgin. “Screw this good Christian girl image and marrying my high school sweetheart,” she writes. “I just lived through a war... It’s time for me to free myself. And man, was I horny.”

When Westley first went to war, she was a deeply naive virgin thrust into a unit filled with testosterone-fueled young men. The experience changed her, and when she returned to civilian life, she started working to foster open discussion about the intersection of sex and military life. “I don’t want what happened to me to happen to other people,” she says. “For them to get into a dangerous war situation and then to be like, ‘Wow, what are these feelings?’

Recent revelations about male marines sharing nude photos of female comrades—secretly and without the women’s consent—have embroiled the Pentagon in controversy and opened a window onto the sex lives of men and women in uniform. But the U.S. military’s uneasy relationship with sex goes back much further. And as ubiquitous as sex is in military life, the institution seems woefully under equipped to talk about it.

PLAYBOY spoke with several veterans of the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan (some of whom preferred to speak anonymously) about their experiences navigating the fraught sexual dynamics of service in today’s armed forces. Through a diverse assortment of voices and ranks, an outline emerges of a national conversation that could fundamentally change how both women and men participate in the military.

In 2013, the Obama administration ended the U.S. military’s long-standing “combat exclusion” policy that barred women from serving in units whose primary mission was ground combat: infantry, armor, artillery and special operations. The five service branches had until 2016 to open all occupations to women.

It was a controversial move. In January 2016 Republican congressman and Marine Corps veteran Duncan Hunter accused Navy Secretary Ray Mabus, a vocal proponent of full gender integration, of “social meddling,” calling him “a greater threat to the Marine Corps than ISIS.” During the 2016 campaign season, several candidates criticized the policy. Nevertheless, while politicians campaigned, troops trained. In December 2016, the Army reported that women were qualifying for combat jobs at roughly twice the rate commanders had predicted.

James “Chaos” Mattis, the retired Marine Corps general who became the Trump administration’s defense secretary, had originally voiced skepticism about opening ground combat jobs to women. But his confirmation hearing reflected a different attitude. “I have no plan to oppose women serving in any aspect in our military,” Mattis told senators. “In 2003 I had hundreds of marines who happened to be women serving in my 23,000-person Marine division. I put them right into the front lines alongside everyone else. If someone brings me a problem, I’ll look at it. But I’m not coming in looking for problems.”

Mattis’s statements point to an inescapable reality: Throughout all the years of war since 9/11, women have already seen combat. They have flown combat air missions, driven on bomb-infested roads and served as military police—jokingly nicknamed the “coed infantry” post-9/11 because of their frequent use in counterinsurgency roles.

Military jobs aren’t like other jobs. Troops live and work together 24/7. They often cuddle in the field when it’s cold, regardless of gender or sexual orientation. They have to trust and depend on one another with their lives, and that sort of loyalty can lead to other, more confusing feelings. “It’s a level of intimacy you will probably never experience again in your life,” Westley explains. “I’ve struggled with this as a civilian—like, are my friendships as meaningful as they were in the military because we’re not on some crazy focused mission together, risking our lives?”

Some veterans have argued that, once women are added to the equation, these dynamics can threaten unit effectiveness. “It can shift the focus of doing the job if everybody’s trying to get laid. I know it sounds incredibly juvenile, but it’s incredibly true,” Green Beret turned author Jack Murphy told NBC in 2013 about the prospect of women in combat units. “Throwing a woman in the middle of a team like that is just going to make the entire team useless, because in the end there will be so much infighting, so much drama.”

A similar argument was mounted against repealing the Clinton-era “don’t ask, don’t tell” policy that banned openly gay people from serving. But when DADT was finally repealed, it notably failed to cause a collapse in military readiness. In fact, prior to repeal, some commanders complained that the policy had forced the termination of several military linguists, depriving units of their skills and knowledge.

But female infantrymen make for an even more radical—and noticeable—change. “I don’t think the burden should be on women to not be there,” Westley says. “The answer is to have an open dialogue and learn how to deal with it.”

Kate Germano, a retired Marine Corps lieutenant colonel who has had her own brush with controversy in this area, takes it a step further. “If we say having women in those units would disrupt male camaraderie and there’s nothing to be done about that except not having women in those units, we take the onus off leaders and basically don’t hold them accountable for leading these men and women,” she says. “And I find that to be tragic.”

Germano was a fierce proponent of holding women to high standards while in the Marines. She made headlines in 2015 when commanders removed her from her post at Marine Corps Recruit Depot Parris Island as the officer in charge of training female recruits. Commanders alleged she was “abusive.” She acknowledged that she could be tough but insisted she was no tougher than her male counterparts.

“Integration is going to succeed or fail based on how receptive we are to redefining what a warrior is and what they look like,” Germano says. During her tenure, rifle qualification rates for women climbed from around 72 percent to just under 92 percent.

Retired Green Beret Scott Satterlee, who was among the first U.S. troops to enter Afghanistan after 9/11, believes sexual tension could become an issue but argues that a basic level of maturity, dialogue and trust should solve that. After all, we’re talking about what’s supposed to be the world’s most professional military force. “If someone is tough enough to go through Special Forces selection or Ranger School, she’s earned a shot,” he says.

The story of the sexual misadventures of military personnel is as old as war itself. During World War II a common refrain in the U.K. was that American G.I.s were “overpaid, oversexed and over here.” During the Vietnam War, Playmate Jo Collins visited troops in the field and even handed out copies of Playboy. The Centerfolds were displayed prominently in bunkers and in fighting positions—and were often treasured during soldiers’ “personal time.” In those years, the military was unapologetically a man’s world, with women mostly relegated to supporting roles as nurses and clerks. But as they began to take on larger roles, in jobs ranging from fighter pilots to intelligence gatherers, women gradually became peers.

With this change came a more conservative

“NO FEMALE GENERALS SPOKE OUT AGAINST MARINES UNITED. WHAT DOES THAT SAY ABOUT OUR CULTURE?”
position on sex. In 1993 the Air Force ordered that all aircraft art be "gender neutral," ending a decades-long tradition of sexy pinup designs. During the early days of the war on terror, commanders issued the infamous General Order Number One. It laid out rules all troops were expected to abide by during deployment, including bans on alcohol, sex and pornography. It proved difficult to enforce. Service members smuggled booze and sometimes hard drugs with more frequency than a lot of officials would care to admit. And of course some of them were having sex.

"When the leadership turns a blind eye to it, it gets out of hand," Germaino says. "In the military we have an obligation to stamp that stuff out, but not from a conservative Christian perspective. We have an obligation to stamp out inappropriate relationships because they disrupt trust in the unit. But we need to take the shame out of it." Both the mores and the blind spots shift when harassment rears its head.

The Pentagon has had to weather criticism surrounding a series of high-profile sex scandals and alarming rates of sexual assault. It's not a problem unique to the military—college rape statistics suggest a wider societal problem—but military cases have generated considerably more controversy. And servicewomen, whether they like it or not, are at the center of the conversation.

The Pentagon has attempted several remedies. One is the Army's Sexual Harassment/Assault Response and Prevention program, better known as SHARP. The program has been praised for giving survivors of assault and rape better resources, including specially trained advocates to fight for them. But some troops have a dimmer take on it. Several women told Playboy that SHARP is good at telling troops what's not acceptable but doesn't address how to deal with what may be natural or even healthy feelings. "It just makes you feel bad about sex. It makes it awkward, and it makes you not want to talk about it," says Sarah, an Army reservist.

All the veterans Playboy talked to agreed that rape and assault should be dealt with as severely as possible, but some women said they would like to see a more nuanced approach to sexual harassment—some of which they say is likely unintentional. It's an opinion that may surprise women's advocates. "Give a soldier an opportunity to apologize and correct the behavior and to learn from it and grow," Westley argues. "You're asking them to do crazy things and put their life on the line. Why not pay more attention to their development as human beings?"

But some forms of harassment are considerably more sinister than others.

In March, the Marine Corps announced it would be investigating members of a Facebook group, Marines United, that had exchanged nude pictures of servicewomen without their consent. "They're on completely different levels," Westley says, comparing Marines United with other forms of harassment. "To the degree in which the victim is violated, there's no comparison."

Many of the photos were taken and sent consensually—at first. Sending nude photos is increasingly common among young military couples, as frequent deployments and travel mean long stretches of time apart. Modern technology helps close that gap. But once they'd fallen into the wrong hands, the photos were shared online without the subjects' consent. From there, the images were kept in an online database that also contained individual women's names, ranks and duty stations. Several women reported they had been the victims of stalking after the photos surfaced. Marines United started to share the photos soon after the first female infantry marines officially reported for duty, in January 2017.

Perhaps the most damning part of the scandal is the fact that it's not the first instance of online harassment within the military community; commanders have known about the problem for years. In 2013, other military-centric Facebook groups, such as Just the Tip of the Spear and F'n Wook, gained infamy for publicly denigrating female troops. Despite complaints and press coverage, brass took little action.

"It's like everyone wants to ignore it until it blows up," says Germaino. "And even when it blows up, we don't do anything about it unless the media or some outside light shines on it and we're forced to. No female generals spoke out against Marines United. What does that say about how messed up our culture is?"

The debate over women in combat isn't close to being over. But regardless of whether or not they go as official combat troops, women will continue to serve together with men in dangerous places, doing dangerous things. It seems likely the pendulum will continue to swing between puritanical rules and blind oversight until what Westley calls the "really uncomfortable conversations about men and women, war and how we relate to one another" begin in earnest.
The soft light of early summer and the dreamy sensuality of Kate Harrison

Photography by

ALI MITTEN

An afternoon in a hotel suite high above the Hollywood Roy and Emily Lapeyre make for an intoxicating blend. Join them as they while away

1+1
His career in entertainment may have started with a Steve Martin look-alike contest, but this Science Guy has become one of the bravest soldiers in the fight for rationalism. Meet the brains behind the bow tie

BY AMANDA PETRUSICH  PHOTOGRAPHY BY JEREMY LIEBMAN

Bill Nye does not abide casual misuse of the word Incredible. If you refer to some sophisticated scientific process in this way—the creation of more-durable crops through genetic modification, say—he will correct you, firmly. “No, it’s credible. It’s science.”

Anyone who came of age in the United States in the early 1990s through the early 2000s can likely credit Nye with their understanding of one natural phenomenon or another: He has been dutifully demonstrating the scientific method to television viewers for more than 30 years, either as the host of one of several shows or as a bow-tied talking head debating a cable-news pundit. His television career started when he joined the staff of Almost Live!, a Seattle sketch comedy show, in 1986, and took off with Bill Nye the Science Guy, an educational children’s show that aired from 1993 to 1998 on KCTS-TV, Seattle’s public broadcasting station, and was syndicated nationally via PBS. On the show, Nye would scramble about the set in a baby-blue lab coat, meticulously breaking down topics including biodiversity, space travel, gravity, animal locomotion and pollution, usually through such antics as hurling a desktop computer off the roof of his studio or pretending to be buried by an avalanche of trash.

Bill Nye the Science Guy won 19 Emmy awards and was followed by another PBS series, The Eyes of Nye, and several books. The latest, Everything All at Once: How to Unleash Your Inner Nerd, Tap Into Radical Curiosity and Solve Any Problem, is out July 11. In April, Nye debuted a new Netflix series, Bill Nye Saves the World, which features a rotating cast of celebrity accomplices—including, in its very first segment, superhero Karlie Kloss and rapper Desiigner—and is aimed more toward edifying adults than toward educating kids, though this does not preclude moments of supreme goofiness. Nye cites both Steve Martin and Carl Sagan as early influences.

“Science came first, without question,” he says. “We’re drinking coffee in a hotel suite in midtown Manhattan while the city is in the midst of a colossal downpour. “But ever since I was a kid, I’ve wanted to be funny. It was valued.”

Nye was born in Bethesda, Maryland, in 1955. His mother was a code breaker for the Navy during World War II, and his father worked in advertising. After graduating from Sidwell Friends—a prestigious private school popular with presidential offspring from Archibald Roosevelt to Sasha and Malia Obama—he enrolled at Cornell, where he earned a bachelor’s degree in mechanical engineering. It wasn’t until later, after friends had cajoled him into entering a Steve Martin look-alike contest (he won), that he became interested in comedy.

He still gets defensive about his academic bona fides. In 2016 Sarah Palin disparaged Nye at a screening of Climate Hustle, a film that questions the accuracy of climate science. “He’s a kids’ show actor; he’s not a scientist,” she said. As chilling as it is to admit, Palin wasn’t wrong: Nye never went to graduate school, nor has he ever held a job in a lab. In other areas, this sort of institutional validation wouldn’t matter—nobody cares whether Jimi Hendrix had a master’s degree in composition—but in an academic discipline, it’s significant.

“Mechanical engineering is nothing but science,” Nye tells me. “That’s all it is. I took six semesters of calculus. Is that enough? I studied fluid mechanics, heat transfer, the design of mechanical components. So, deal.”

Nye will tersely defend his scientific qualifications, but in some ways his background as a comedian is his greatest asset. These days, intellectualism of any sort is often read as snobbery, a luxury of the so-called coastal elite. It makes sense that the country would turn to a beloved celebrity for help with a complex public issue like climate change. And our greatest scientific thinkers, though overloaded with degrees, are likely not as quick with a quip or as willing to use physical comedy to illustrate the laws of nature.

Given all that, Nye may seem an unlikely lightning rod for controversy. He advocates only for established scientific beliefs, not fringe theories. But he has detractors, some of them vocal, many of them online: “Everywhere I go, people will say, ‘Wow, thank you for your work. You’re doing a great job.’ But when I look on the electric internet, there are a few people who just hate me,” Nye says. “I mean, I get involved in debates on purpose.”

A popular video on YouTube called “Those 7 Times Bill Nye Went Beast Mode” contains, despite its title, mostly footage of Nye responding calmly and carefully to increasingly hysterical accusations. Trying to understand popular skepticism in the face of objectively provable
“THERE ARE PEOPLE RUNNING AROUND WHO THINK THE EARTH IS FLAT. NO, IT’S NOT FLAT. LOOK AT THE PICTURES, DUDE.”
facts could drive a less durable man insane. In this, though, Nye is indefatigable. American culture has arguably never been more resistant to empiricism or more confused about what objective truth looks like. “There are people running around who think the Earth is flat,” he says. “I thought it was a joke at first. No, it’s not flat. No, you can see—all look at the pictures, dude.” He appears worried.

“In my life, science has never before been set aside like this.”

The next time I see Nye is in Montclair, New Jersey, a moneyed suburb about 15 miles west of Manhattan. Bill Nye: Science Guy, a recent documentary about his life and work, is screening at the Montclair Film Festival, and Nye is there to participate in a post-screening Q&A with Stephen Colbert, Montclair’s most famous resident.

Before the screening, I chat with the security guard manning the backstage entrance. He has a wispy postadolescent mustache and is waving around one of those metal-detection wands. “I want to get a picture,” he says. “I’ve been watching Bill since pre-K.” Outside the theater, lined up on the sidewalk, I see a teenager wearing a quieter and more censorious “Dude.” If you provoke a “Dude! Dude!” you will immediately regret your entire approach.

Montclair’s Wellmont Theater has a seating capacity of about 1,500, and I’ve been told the event is “wildly sold out.” Colbert and Nye meet up before the screening, in the makeup room. The previous day, Nye taped a segment for The Late Show, to air the following Monday. “You’re just nailing it, man,” Nye tells Colbert as a makeup artist applies powder. “And of course, you have so much to work with.”

“Almost too much,” Colbert replies. Colbert is a devout Catholic, and Nye is agnostic, but the two seem to have an instinctive rapport.

Nye watches the film seated near Colbert. It’s a revealing portrait: Nye has never legally married or had children (he joked to me about his inability to commit to a woman), and he frets about staying off ataxia, a movement disorder characterized by a lack of muscle control. Both of his siblings have been diagnosed with the condition, which can be caused by a defective gene.

Midway through, when footage of Ark Encounter—the controversial creationist theme park in northern Kentucky run by the apologetics ministry Answers in Genesis and infamously subsidized by the state—appears on-screen, a little boy of around six sits directly behind me, yelling, “That looks fun!” The boy’s parents frantically shush him. No doubt they’ve seen Nye’s 2014 debate with Answers in Genesis president Ken Ham at the Creation Museum in Petersburg, Kentucky. At one point in the debate, the moderator, Tom Foreman, asked both men, “What, if anything, would ever change your mind?” The moment immediately felt demonstrative of something larger, more fundamental. Ham was flummoxed by the question: “I’m a Christian,” he said. “As far as the word of God is concerned, no, no one is ever going to convince me that the word of God is not true.” Nye allowed that his mind could easily be changed. “We would just need one piece of evidence,” he said.

Back in Montclair, during the talk-back, Colbert recites an Isaac Asimov passage from “A Cult of Ignorance,” an essay Asimov wrote for Newsweek in 1980. “There is a cult of ignorance in the United States, and there has always been. The strain of anti-intellectualism has been a constant thread winding its way through our political and cultural life, nurtured by the false notion that democracy means that ‘my ignorance is just as good as your knowledge.’” The crowd applauds. “If the majority is always right,” Colbert asks, “even if the majority believes something that isn’t true, how does science approach that?”

“We just try to show the facts as often as we can,” Nye says.

In Bill Nye: Science Guy, interviews with some of Nye’s early colleagues suggest that Nye has always wanted to be famous—that he courts attention. Because he was a fixture of so many American childhoods (in the 1990s, nearly every exhausted science teacher in the U.S. wheeled in a VCR and played an episode of Bill Nye the Science Guy on at least one occasion), he has an uncommon bipartisan appeal. He possibly endangers that appeal every time he appears on another conservative talk show and is forced to position himself as part of the resistance rather than as an apolitical public thinker. Still, Nye repeats the virtues of science so tirelessly, it’s hard to question his intentions.

After the event, I come upon him in the green room, lecturing a clutch of grinning acolytes about the efficacy of solar panels. I’m struck, again, by the consistency of Nye’s vision. He appears to care chiefly. If not exclusively, about just two things: leaving the world better than he found it (an aphorism he learned from his father) and responsibly educating as many people as he can. He seems to believe that if he talks frequently enough, and loudly enough, about what’s at stake for the world, his message will eventually change some minds. This is how he justifies all those cable-news appearances.

Colbert walks a young friend in a bow tie over for an introduction, and Nye launches into a quick lesson on how to properly stage a selfie. He has an educator’s instinct and a clawlike grip on an iPhone. (He makes a little “Blah!” sound right before snapping the shutter, “to get people laughing.”)

The young man regards Nye with a kind of pie-eyed wonder. When fans come upon him in the flesh, they often look as if they’re meeting Santa Claus. Nye, of course, would find this comparison absurd. He is, as he’ll be the first to tell you, very real. Very human. It’s science.
HIGH-SPEED AMERICAN DREAMS

A futuristic transport system envisioned by Elon Musk. A wave of international students striving to make it real. And a violent encounter in the Silicon Prairie

BY ADAM SKOLNICK
January 29, 2017 was a warm winter day in southern California. The sky was hazy, and white light bounced off the road running between SpaceX headquarters and the ass-end of a Costco. Los Angeles mayor Eric Garcetti, standing at a lectern next to SpaceX founder Elon Musk, called this paved slice of postindustrial heaven “the cradle of aerospace.” I had come for a glimpse of the future—not in the hangars housing the company’s beautiful minds and rocket ships, but in the pipeline-like tube directly behind the mayor and Musk. Six feet in diameter, it ran on a one-mile track adjacent to the SpaceX complex.

“Today,” Garcetti said, “we are looking at the very first Hyperloop pods. This is the future of transportation.”

I was among 2,000 sweaty technophiles packed onto two sets of metallic grandstands at the finals of the first-ever SpaceX Hyperloop Pod Competition. Also on site were 800 members of 27 competing teams, mainly from academic institutions. The finalists had been distilled from more than 1,200 applicants around the world. That day, only three of the teams would successfully run their pods on the SpaceX Hyperloop test track.

Like many Californians, I’d been thrilled when the high-speed rail project, Proposition 1A, passed in 2008. It meant we would finally have a bullet train connecting L.A. to San Francisco in under three hours—normally at least a seven-hour car trip. Musk hated the idea, so he outlined an alternative scheme, called Hyperloop, that he presented as an open-source white paper in 2013. In Musk’s vision, passengers would pay $20 to board levitating, capsule-like vehicles, called “pods,” that would zip through tubes on a bed of air at a cruising speed of 760 miles an hour, just shy of the speed of sound. Total travel time between the two cities would be 35 minutes, and the environmentally sustainable system would supposedly cost less than 10 percent of Prop 1A’s $64 billion budget.

In the four years that followed, several companies assembled around the idea. Yet none had managed to build pods, which raised the question: Will we ever get to enjoy this magical ride? Enter the international student body.

“What this [competition] is intended to do is to encourage innovation in transport technology,” Musk said that afternoon, “to get people to think about doing things in a way that’s not just a repeat of the past but to explore the boundaries of physics and see what’s really possible. I think we’ll find it’s more incredible than we ever realized.”

The crowd buzzed, high on the possibilities of yet another Elon Musk dream-wave. After the speeches, observers finally got a chance to see in action a few of the 27 prototypes. Cameras mounted inside the tube recorded the pods’ runs, with the feeds projected on nearby flat screens. It took each pod more than 30 minutes to load and depressurize; as I waited, I walked down the road where the teams had their booths. Here was Keio Alpha, a cash-strapped team that had smuggled its miniature pod from Tokyo in a carry-on bag. There was Delft University of Technology, a Dutch team awash in corporate sponsorship. I spotted Carnegie Mellon and MIT but was quickly drawn to the University of Cincinnati booth, where the 50 students on the Hyperloop UC team couldn’t stop smiling. Most of them were from India, though others hailed from Jordan and Vietnam.

“We were the first to achieve static levitation,” said a 26-year-old structural engineering student from Pune. No wonder they were giddy. They’d made a vehicle float on air! Still, my mind drifted toward another phenomenon: being an international student from, say, India or Jordan, and living in red state Ohio in 2017. Hyperloop UC was no anomaly; 20 of the 27 teams represented U.S. schools, several of them institutes that had tilted Trump. Many teams were stocked with international talent, mostly from India—which makes sense. During the 2015–2016 school year, more than 1 million international students attended U.S. universities, most coming from China or India to study science or engineering. I wasn’t surprised to see that reflected at the competition, but the timing made it poignant. Just two days earlier, after a campaign brimming with anti-immigrant rhetoric, President Donald Trump had signed a travel ban on citizens from six Muslim-majority countries.

Granted, the executive order didn’t directly affect the UC students. None came from the banned countries, and only one is Muslim, but Trump has repeatedly criticized the 26-year-old H-1B visa program, which has become a popular way for companies to hire skilled high-tech foreign employees and for international students to work in the U.S. after graduation. Plus, Indians are often viewed as Middle Eastern terrorists by America’s neo-industrial darling Elon Musk, South African immigrant and one-time international student turned unapologetic advisor to the new president.

As I chatted with the UC students, an approaching scrum behind me captured their attention. In a bubble created by SpaceX PR cadets and a towering bodyguard, Musk floated from booth to booth, talking shop with the starstruck contestants. I drifted away, more fascinated by the students and their stories than by the technology.

I thought of them again a few weeks later, after I learned that a gunman in suburban Kansas City had shot two 32-year-old Indian engineers in a bar. Srinivas Kuchibhotla and Alok Madasani had both attended grad school in the U.S. before landing jobs at Garmin, the world leader in commercial navigation technology, which snagged them coveted H-1B visas. Kuchibhotla and Madasani were, in a sense, the Hyperloop UC students seven years from now: brilliant engineers who left home... seeking the American dream, hungry to innovate and change the world.

As the gunman approached them that evening, he yelled, “Get out of my country!” Then he pulled the trigger.

Hyperloop sounds futuristic, but the concept isn’t new. It’s based on a simple law of physics: Momentum creates resistance, or drag. Most of the fuel consumed by any vehicle is burned to overcome this drag, which is why airplanes travel at high altitudes, where the air is thinner. However, air can be thinned in an enclosed space, which increases speed and energy efficiency on the ground.

Futurists have been evolving and patenting versions of the transportation system since 1915, but thanks to his company Tesla and its commitment to solar, Musk is America’s leading innovator in alternative energy and transportation. So when he described a zero-energy transportation system that zooms through solar-panel-lined tubes—dialing in the atmospheric-pressure equivalent of flying at an altitude above 150,000 feet, connecting two of the nation’s great cities in less time than it takes to fly—it had a profound ripple effect.

Musk’s 2013 white paper, “Hyperloop Alpha,” reached Dhaval Shiyani, Hyperloop UC’s eventual captain, two years after its release. A 26-year-old fluid-dynamics researcher in the University of Cincinnati Aerospace lab, he was working the graveyard shift in dorm security when he stumbled upon the document online. This is something that could and should happen, he thought, so why hadn’t it? Shortly after Musk announced the inaugural Hyperloop competition on Twitter in June 2015, Shiyani began to pitch it to friends in the engineering department. Eventually he gathered a group of five classmates, all of them from India, around a conference table. “All of us knew in the back of our minds that if there is any place in the world where we can get this done, it is America,” he says.

Born and raised in Mumbai, Shiyani always wanted to be an astronaut; growing up in one of the world’s most densely populated cities could make anyone want to rocket through thin air and float above the mayhem. He read up on Neil Armstrong and the early Apollo missions. As the years passed, Shiyani’s life swirled with Americana. First came classic pop culture: Friends and Seinfeld. Then Steve Jobs released the iPod, Shiyani’s first true love, and his GPS was locked on the U.S. “It was the fairy-tale story,” he says. “It’s where all the great inventions seem to come from. It’s the land where your dreams come true.”

Hyperloop UC’s initial 2015 meetings were all high-concept. Nobody had built a tube or a pod. Shiyani was confident his team could scratch out a workable system for their first filing in the competition, but if they were to be selected to present their concept to the 80-judge panel at Texas A&M in January 2016, they needed cash and more brainpower. Shiyani knew whom to call.

Sid Thatham, 26, landed at the University of Cincinnati from Chennai in 2012 to study engineering, only to discover he was a born connector. Thatham was everywhere on campus. He tapped into nearly every student group, became student body president and befriended university vice president Santa Ono. All this in addition to working toward a master’s degree in chemical engineering while pursuing an MBA. Still, Thatham found room in his schedule for Hyperloop. It was the kind of opportunity that had inspired him to study here. “The U.S. is still the land of opportunity,” says Thatham, who became the team’s business lead. “You can work on futuristic, life-changing things. That’s how lots of international students see it.”

Instead of mimicking Musk’s L.A.-to-S.F. blueprint, Shiyani, Thatham and friends detailed a Hyperloop Midwest that would connect Cincinnati to Chicago in 30 minutes. Competition was stiff, but Hyperloop UC survived two cuts and was invited to Texas as one of 124 teams selected. The teammates perfected their presentation on the 30-hour road trip to College Station, stopping in a Starbucks for a vital wi-fi infusion. Their proposal impressed the judging panel, which included faculty members and SpaceX engineers. They made the finals but didn’t finish in the top five, which would have provided seed money to start building a pod. So Hyperloop UC had to raise its six-figure budget from scratch.

Thatham knew from his experience in student government that money was often buried in department budgets, so he went mining for it. He tweeted Ono from Texas and met with him as soon as he returned. As a result, the team scored $50,000. The engineering school also kicked in five figures, as did the provost. Meanwhile, Shiyani filled out the technical team, and two local family-owned manufacturers signed on to provide materials and guidance: Tri-State Fabricators built the pod’s frame at no cost, and Cincinnati Incorporated sourced materials and provided guidance.

---

Foreign students contributed more than $30 billion and 400,000 jobs to the U.S. economy last year.
All of which set the stage for an epic all-nighter leading up to the pod’s unveiling at UC’s alumni center on October 17, 2016. The team knew that no pod had yet achieved levitation. This was an opportunity to snag an engineering first. For much of the pizza- and caffeine-fueled session, there were no errors, yet no joy.

Finally, just after nine A.M., the pod rose. It floated only a few millimeters, but levitation had been achieved. The team went wild.

At two P.M., Shivani and Thatham unveiled their pod in front of their teammates, university trustees, manufacturing partners and statewide media. Everyone was floored. What began as a Shivani thought bubble had encompassed dozens of students from all backgrounds, the school administration and private industry, and become a point of pride for the entire city. Somewhere outside that bubble, a bitter presidential campaign rumbled, but inside the alumni center, Democrats, Republicans, native-born Americans and immigrants had come together to achieve something unprecedented, and they left the unveiling believing their team had a chance at winning the whole damn thing.

Flash forward four months to the suburbs of northeast Kansas. Olathe, a city of 133,000 and the seat of Johnson County, is set roughly 20 miles southwest of Kansas City and is pure Rockwell 2.0. The air is fresh, the shady streets are dotted with affordable single-family homes sporting basketball hoops and American flags, and thanks to a two-decade infusion of tech capital, it’s now the center of the Silicon Prairie, an area that spreads like golden grain across Kansas, Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska. Families from Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Middle East have moved in, and Olathe’s school district teaches students who collectively speak 84 different languages. Indians make up the largest immigrant group in the county, which explains the spice shops and restaurants, the Sikh and Hindu temples, and the Bollywood hits at the local AMC theater. Most international residents work at major corporations such as Sprint, Garmin, Olathe’s hometown navigation-technology firm and the city’s second-largest employer in 2015. Its steel-and-glass headquarters are filled with industrial-design studios, engineering labs and flight simulators—and it’s just down the road from Austin’s Olathe’s most popular sports bar. That’s where Srinivas Kuchibhotla and Alok Madasani, friends who worked in Garmin’s aviation group, landed around six P.M. on February 22.

The two well-known regulars, nicknamed by staff “the Jameson guys” after their preferred sipping whiskey, sat at a table on a small, sheltered A-frame patio strung with white Christmas lights to enjoy a smoke. “That was our place to hang out after work,” Madasani tells me. They had originally met at Rockwell Collins, an Iowa flight simulation firm, in 2008, and when Kuchibhotla landed a coveted job at Garmin in 2014, he recruited Madasani to join him. “He was more than a friend,” he says. “He was my family.”

Moments after they arrived at Austin’s Adam Purinton, 51, a Navy vet turned air traffic controller turned out-of-work IT specialist, bellied up to the bar. He nursed a beer before wandering out to the patio, where he approached the engineers. He asked if they were in the country legally and reportedly shouted a racial slur loud enough to attract attention. The guys ignored Purinton, and Madasani went inside to alert management. Another patron, Ian Grillot, 24, intervened and helped escort Purinton out.

Kuchibhotla, a graduate of the University of Texas at El Paso with a master’s in electrical engineering, and Madasani, who studied engineering at the University of Missouri–Kansas City, were among the 100 or so Garmin employees in the U.S. on valid H-1B visas. In recent years that program has been tainted by loopholes that enabled Indian outsourcing agencies to bring over foreign-educated workers to replace American staffers at reduced salaries. That has led to midlife layoffs for many Americans, who have occasionally been asked to help train their replacements. Instead of closing that loophole or refining an otherwise productive program that has enabled U.S.-educated engineers such as Kuchibhotla and Madasani to establish residency and contribute to the American economy, Trump vowed time and again during the campaign to dismantle the H-1B program.

With the energy spoilt, the guys asked for their check, but according to one of the bar’s owners, Kirk Adams, another patron had already picked it up. Instead, all the waitresses on staff came out to give them hugs. “It was their way of saying ‘We have your back,’” Adams says. The men were touched, and since they weren’t carrying any cash, they ordered another round on a credit card so they could tip the staff. What was ugly had turned beautiful, and they wanted to show their gratitude.

They were still at their table 30 minutes later when Purinton returned. This time he walked straight toward the patio, wearing a white scarf over his mouth and holding a gun. Before he could turn around Madasani heard someone yell, “He’s back with a gun, man!” Then Purinton said what he said and started blasting. Kuchibhotla was hit three times. Madasani tried to escape and was shot once, through the thigh. Both men fell to the ground, and Purinton took off running. Grillot had been hiding under a table, counting gunshots. Assuming Purinton was out of bullets, Grillot chased him as he headed around the corner. After about 30 feet, Purinton turned and fired again. Grillot was shot through the hand, forearm and chest but would survive. Patrons and staff attended to the wounded men, who were rushed to KU Medical Center in Kansas City.

Purinton resurfaced at an Applebee’s in Clinton, Missouri, where he confessed to the bartender that he had just killed “two Middle Eastern men” and was on the run. The bartender kept him calm while she secretly dialed the authorities. Around the same time, police drove to Kuchibhotla’s home. They rang the doorbell and informed his wife, Sunayana Dumala, that her husband was dead.

Like gunshots in the suburban night, word of the shooting echoed through the social media feeds of the local Indian community and in the halls of tech firms and temples. A candlelight vigil was held at First Baptist Church. Garmin held its own memorial two days after the incident, and a temporary shrine was set up in front of Austins, where mourners placed flowers. The first bouquet came from Kuchibhotla’s family in India—an offering to the bar’s staff and owners, a gesture of shared grief.

Johnson County charged Purinton with first-degree murder on February 23. He’s looking at 50 years with no parole. The FBI immediately began to investigate the incident as a hate crime. Whether or not those charges are filed, hate does appear to be the primary motive, and you can add it to an expanding blotters. The Southern Poverty Law Center, the nation’s leading antidiscrimination group, has recorded 1,863 “bias-related incidents” between Election Day and March 31. According to Heidi Beirich, director of the SPLC Intelligence Project, 40 to 50 incidents per month is typical; she believes the recent increase has to do with the political discourse peddled by Trump and his supporters. “We’ve been tracking the relationship between political rhetoric and hate crime statistics for some time,” she says, “and we’ve noticed when a population has been demonized by popular political figures there tends to be an uptick in hate crimes.”

I arrived in Olathe five weeks after the shooting and spoke to dozens of people across the ethnic and political spectrums still shaken by the violence. I visited a mosque where immigrants from Algeria, Pakistan, Palestine, Syria, Yemen and Egypt gather to pray. It’s not lost on them that Purinton’s bullets were meant for Muslims. Still, a poster decorated with hearts, left at the mosque’s doorstep after the shooting, hangs on a wall inside. It reads, in part, YOU BELONG.

Back in Cincinnati, the Hyperloop UC team regroups after a series of setbacks cost them the competition in California. Sid Thatham’s schedule is so full he seldom goes home to the two-bedroom apartment he shares with three friends. He has eight classes and two part-time jobs, continues to lead Hyperloop UC’s business unit and remains involved in student government, which is why he sleeps on his office floor and showers in the gym four days a week. But he never complains, because he knows the rule.

Momentum creates drag.

His reward for all this hard work is a ticking clock. “It starts the minute I get my degree,” he says. Those on student visas have 60 days to either get a job, and the coveted H-1B visa that comes with it, or head home. He’s scheduled to graduate in August. “The school has career development centers. They can put you in touch with people with job openings, but will they be able to hire international students?” Some of that depends on the president.

On April 18, Trump signed an executive order that placed the H-1B visa in jeopardy. “You feel like you have a chip on your shoulder,” Thatham says. “You have to keep proving yourself at every stage. I just have to keep working as hard as I can and hope it pays off.”

The departure of people like Thatham, who in April won the University of Cincinnati’s Presidential Medal of Graduate Student Excellence, is unlikely to benefit the U.S. economy. According to a 2016 report from the Kauffman Foundation, “more than half of America’s ‘unicorn’ start-ups have at least one immigrant founder, and immigrants are nearly twice as likely as the native-born to start a new company.” The loss of H-1B opportunities may also discourage foreign students, who, according to NAFFSA: Association of International Educators, contributed more than $30 billion to the U.S. economy last year and created or supported more than 400,000 jobs.

Those are just the hard numbers. Although the majority of the Hyperloop UC team members are Indian, several Americans jumped on board early, and even more are involved now. Julian Gregory, a Cincinnati native and undergraduate industrial-design student who joined as a freshman in 2016, would like to see his teammates have the option to remain state-side and compete. “These guys are geniuses,” he says. “They’re coming to our country to contribute something innovative, and I don’t think that should be understated or undervalued.”

Like Thatham, Shiyani is set to graduate this summer. Whether or not he’s granted an H-1B visa, his efforts will live on. Although Hyperloop UC won’t be at Hyperloop Pod Competition II in August, the team hopes to build their own Hyperloop-like link in Cincinnati, between the university’s east and west campuses. The pods won’t travel at high speeds, but they will levitate, and with the school already behind the project, it’s a good bet it will be the world’s first functional transportation system of its kind. Meanwhile, Shiyani is working to set up what he calls an “Advanced Transportation Research Center” at the engineering school. It will focus on pods, drones and autonomous and electric cars. Soon the university will be better equipped to educate American and international engineers and to shape the future of transportation. All because an ambitious Indian kid working the graveyard shift read the futurist musings of another immigrant engineer who had his own American dream.
Olivia Brower may have grown up by the sea (Cardiff-by-the-Sea, to be exact), but she’s equally comfortable—and beautiful—in the desert. Here she explores the wilds of Joshua Tree

PHOTOGRAPHY BY
SASHA EISENMAN
THE DISGRUNTLED AMERICANS

Something’s rotten in the state of Indiana. A heartland tale of redneck revenge

BY FRANK BILL
Dear Motherfuckers,
This was never about the green-gray wrinkled denominations of dead presidents. It was about blistering eyes wide open. From the suit in the well-kept suite with a tanned-toned-pedicured wife in a 5,000-square-foot red-stone structure across from the Country Club Golf Course to the beagle-bellied drunk in a jodammed trucker’s cap married to a callus-handed wife in a beat-down trailer of rust planted down a hard-to-find country back road where the land is waiting to be sold and timbered for corporate America. What we wanted to do was wake up every one of you cocksuckers from your stoops of comfort and mundane day-to-day upper, middle or lower bullshit. No social class is safe. Welcome to our jodammed awakening!
—The Disgruntled Americans

GO BACK TO when a matte-black-primed Chevy Astro van with a 350 small-block thumping under the hood wheels down the faded lot of yellow lines, backs into the first spot in row 11, three men inside, brothers. It’s early. The engine kills and they wait. They wait and watch patrons disperse and scatter from vehicles like piss-ants drawn to fresh pulp, rushing into the Harrison County Walmart, smoking cigarettes, drinking pop or coffee, discarding cups and butts on the asphalt.

The men’s eyes light up as a gray box-shaped armored truck with bold blue letters spelling BRINKS pulls up to the south doors of Walmart, the HOME & PHARMACY end. Two uniformed guards step out, each with a nine millimeter strapped to his right side. The three brothers check the digital bands wrapped around their wrists. Four minutes total. That’s how long the guards have to shoulder through the crowd of moans, groans and all-day stench of shoppers. Go to the door beside the service desk. Collect the cash. Get back to the truck. Cut down the parking lot’s row 10 and head to their next stop.

Kenny, the oldest brother, a county cop who retired six months ago, and Ronnie, brother number two, a Walmart employee, wait exactly one minute. Just enough time for the Brinks guards to get into the money room next to the service desk. Kenny slides open the van’s side door. Steps into the cold November air that menthols his bones. Dressed in black overalls, full black beard glued to his face that is makeupped with military green, brown and black as if hunting, a knit cap over his head, mirrored shades.

Ronnie gets out behind Kenny, outfitted identically, following him, eyeing the packed lot of happy-go-lucky motherfuckers; he’s batting cleanup if needed. Everything moves in distorted slow motion. Beneath their overalls they wear Kevlar vests. Wilbur, brother number three, stays in the van. He’s the

ILLUSTRATIONS BY ANDREW ARCHER
FICTION

Kraut pulls from the liquor store’s black pavement, hangs a right onto 135 for a split second, then another right into the fire station’s drive up to the open bay door of the firehouse. Exits his vehicle, steps inside with three sticks of duct-taped dynamite, flames the fuse, tosses it beneath the first fire truck. By the time Kraut turns back onto Old 135 North, the explosives detonate, blowing the big engines and local tax dollars to shreds, along with morsels of baked clay and wiring of all dimensions. He cuts through neighborhoods. Hits 62 West, hangs a right onto Williar Avenue, then a left onto Hillview Drive, pulls up beside the fence that squares in a monstrous grain-silo.

Kraut pulls from the liquor store's black pavement, hangs a right onto 135 for a split second, then another right into the fire station's drive up to the open bay door of the firehouse. Exits his vehicle, steps inside with three sticks of duct-taped dynamite, flames the fuse, tosses it beneath the first fire truck. By the time Kraut turns back onto Old 135 North, the explosives detonate, blowing the big engines and local tax dollars to shreds, along with morsels of baked clay and wiring of all dimensions.

He cuts through neighborhoods. Hits 62 West, hangs a right onto Williar Avenue, then a left onto Hillview Drive, pulls up beside the fence that squares in a monstrous grain-silo.

STevE BACK TO the Walmart parking lot, just two minutes before the explosion at the police station. Hollis, brother number four, gets the text from Marty: "MOVE IT!" Steps out of a rusted 1976 Monte Carlo. Walks through one set of doors at Walmart’s north entrance, past the peach schnapps-smelling Santa Claus-attired greeter dinging a damn bell with a bucket for donations. People pay him no mind as he kneels next to the rough-rock interior wall, pretends to tie his boot. Pulls from his overalls a chunk of Play-Doh-looking putty, tiny electric probe in its center, presses it into the wall. Walks across to the other side of the two double doors, into a small, shotgunned area where kids search a Redbox movie kiosk for the latest releases. Hollis presses more putty-plus-detonator into the polymer-coated brick behind a stuffed-animal snatch-and-grab machine. Then he slips back out, bumping shoulders with the overflow of holiday patrons. Looks out, every row of parking filled. Cold air wipes his camoed face. He glances down the sidewalk to the Brinks truck, hears the first explosion off to the south, nearly a mile away, knows it's the police cruiser.

Counting Mississippi until he hears two more blasts in the distance, Hollis watches uniformed and plainclothes police officers rush out of Walmart. Their mode is panic.

Working down the sidewalk, Hollis's heartbeat pastes his throat. Almost to the armored truck, he smirks, takes out his cell phone. Waits for the screams from inside. Hears them. Fingerprints the button on his cell phone. The entryway behind him combusts with brick, glass, steel, blood and more screams. His feet press the concrete fast until meets the Brinks guard from the side, tattooing his temple with his Kimber, brother Kenny now taking up the rear.

GO BACK EIGHT WEEKS EARLIER, to Kenny and his brothers running down a checklist of all that is wrong with the world around them, their anger festering like hazardous fumes heated within a sealed container, turning to hate, ready to blow.

They are fed up. Fed up with their jobs and those who determine employment. Fed up... with the corporations that years before purchased farmland for pennies on the dollar, fed up with fighting wars that others would not, fed up with arresting mangle-minded men and women who’d be back on the street by the end of the week doing the same dumb shit that got them busted—DWI, domestic battery, B and E, the list was unending.

Kenny is the leader, the oldest brother of four, a 20-year veteran of the Harrison County police force. He’d watched as robberies in the community morphed from simple home break-ins into foot-stomp-the-door-down when you were home, the escalations coming with the flood of methamphetamine, oxycodone, heroin. Men, women, teenagers—any and all took your wares and valuables, hocked them for pennies at the local pawn shop to lace their fix. They’d get busted, but the charges would be knocked down to misdemeanor after misdemeanor for doing state- or county-funded self-help programs—second chance after second chance. In Kenny’s mind it was bullshit; they needed a bullet to the rear of their brains. To be buried instead of crutched by a failed system. Add to that his disenchantment with a sheriff who sided with the politicians instead of the officers—knowing damn good and well it was the wrong decision—a sheriff who always looked the other way to keep his job. Kenny’d wasted enough time, retired six months ago, and now he wants actions, not words.

While Kenny had cared for their ailing father, the three younger brothers had fought in purposeless wars that had become nothing more than 10-second time slots of death reported on the evening news. The brothers had watched the landscape that birthed and raised them be bled out by big businesses expanding into corporations with small-town politics. Their family farm, sold when their father had fallen ill. The investors holding out until he was on his deathbed, low-balling them while the medical bills were cannibalizing his existence.

The mom-and-pop groceries the brothers had once known were smudged memories replaced by Walmart. The local-owned hardware and lumber stores disappeared like desolate vapors in a busted mason jar, put out of business by do-it-yourself home improvement centers like Lowe’s and Home Depot. Gas stations bulldozed. Replaced by something bigger and better—BP or Shell or Marathon supermarts. Diners offering home-style meals abandoned for the artery-stoppers of McDonald’s, Burger King, Arby’s, Taco Bell and DQ. All brought the promise of greasy employment where the workers could cash their checks and pump their earnings back into the places that employed them, keeping them entrapped.

Ronnie, the number-two brother, had been short-fused by wartime’s hail of bullets, flipping an ignition switch on the directives that coursed though his brain. He worked for Walmart in the oil-change area. Couldn’t keep a job anywhere else because of his PTSD. Two tours in Afghanistan hunting Taliban, blowing mountain bunkers, parting the bearded evil smirks from the faces of men he’d smoked out.

both Iraqi Freedom veterans, work down over the hill at the union-represented factory that’d been bought up by the Canadians. They had left to fight a war, came back to jobs with their wages sliced by $4 on the hour regardless of contracts. They make frames for Ford and GM. Some co-workers punch the clock to fuel addictions to meth or booze or both, wearing their bodies down for a vice that ruptured their souls. Others have mouths to feed, car loans and mortgages to pay. All have time in and can’t afford to start over somewhere else, even if they wanted. They are trapped in the dead-end labor pool of existence, dealing with plant managers. The guys who wanted to go outside the bargaining unit, ignore the contract, throw a bone to the union reps to bend the other way—these are the same guys who thought it was fair to cut union wages by four bucks on the hour while health insurance went up, the cost of living went up and the managers still got their raises every year. Same guys who go to Lisa’s Bar, want to share a stool next to the workers, buy them a drink after a long shift, pretend everything is cool when it isn’t even close—a fuel-saturated situation waiting to be ignited.

These discussions parted the four brothers’ lips every Sunday down at Kenny’s 100-acre plot in English, from before noon until late evening, when the big questions came up as they stood in the dead field target-practicing on six sand-filled plastic drums stapled with paper targets. Questions like: Where does it all end? When does some educated fuck open his eyes? When does some blue-haired sack of shit put ego, greed and politics aside and make things good again for the common man?

Shouldering an AR-15, pinching one eye closed, the other ball-bearing wide at the target some 50 yards away, Ronnie says, “They forced Daddy to take that million-dollar real estate offer. It sounded nice but we all knew after the taxes and medical was paid, he’d be lucky if he could afford bologna and saltines to endure his last days here on this goddamned ground.”

Kenny pulls the slide on his .45 Glock, looks to Ronnie. “You’re right. At first I thought he was rich. Still, he died the way he wanted, with no damn debt.”

Ronnie indexes the trigger, the rat-a-tat-tat
RONNIE FLIPS A CAN OF DIP FROM HIS POCKET. “THIS IS A FUCKING WAKE-UP CALL. TO EVERYONE THAT’S FORGOTTEN ABOUT INDEPENDENCE.”

“Okay, Mr. I’s Fed Up, then how you proclaim we’d do it? Hell, why would we do it?”

Kenny says, “The question is, why wouldn’t we do it? We do it to open some eyes, to make a stand, start a movement—”

“A movement?” Hollis interrupts. “You mean like all them Occupy Wall Street shit birds who wasted four years taking gender studies and was surprised they couldn’t get jobs? Then wasted tax dollars by camping out in cities, trash them, getting drunk and stoned and raping women?”

Kenny says, “No, them fucktards wanted free shit because they thought they was entitled to it. I’m talking about like-minded people, those who’ve worked, dirtied their hands, watched the system fail. And we’d be getting the big-dick marker out to say we’ve had enough of your ways. We’d do it smart, methodical and as cold-blooded as need be to assure we pull it off. Everyone would be expendable. We scope out every obstacle. And create our own diversions. We hit their shit first, then we wait for the dominoes to fall and do the deed.”

Ronic says, “Smart and cold-blooded I get, but that don’t give much intel to your way of thinking.”

Kenny tells him, “You were in the military, all three of you were soldiers, I was a cop. We all been trained to go into the field of battle. Who do we depend upon when the guns begin blazing, when a suspect flies or shit doubles down into a backfire?”

Ronic says, “The men in my unit, we’re a team, we cater to one another, no man left behind.”

Kenny says, “Bull’s-fucking-eye! So we remove the ones that depend on one another from the equation, we scramble their shit. All that’s left is us to rain down with our will.”

Ronic smirks, “And how we go about the removal?”

Kenny says, “We’d need explosives, dynamite, C-4, some disposable vehicles, burner phones and guns.”

Ronic looks to Wilbur and Hollis. “What’ll you guys think of your big bad ex-Dirty-fucking-Harry brother over here talking shit?”

Hollis says, “Goddamnit, we’re in. Tired of the suit-and-tie guys, the union reps that act like they’s doing the best they can do for us, day after day, and treating us like we’re lower forms of life after we done give our time to Uncle Sam.”

And Wilbur chimes in, “I’m sure our cousins down at 135 Auto can get us some throwaway vehicles. Hell, I bet they’d wanna be in on it.”

Hollis says, “And as far as explosives, owner down at the gun range in Kentucky got major connects.”

Kenny says, “Rumor is he’s tied to the KKK and Aryans. Heard through the grapevine the ATF has been getting a lot of buzz on him, but he’s smart, knows how to deter the heat, ain’t been caught yet.”

Hollis asks, “What about the innocent folk?”

Kenny says, “Innocent folk? Shit, all people are concerned about anymore is what’s going on with reality TV, or who movie stars is poking or what sex video they’s filming, who’s got a bigger smartphone, or when the next god-damned Iron Man movie is coming out. No one cares about the soldiers, the law enforcement, firefighters, nurses, farmers, the working class, those that care for everyone else. People in this day and age could tell you who won last year’s Oscar before they could tell you who was the last vice president. This ain’t about being innocent anyway, innocence is expendable. Hell, it ain’t even about the fucking money as far as I’m concerned.”

Hollis asks, “What’s it about, then?”

Kenny tells him, “Money is secondary. There would be cash, but you gotta remember, in this day and age plastic rules. They’ll think it’s about money, but it ain’t.”

Ronnie flips a can of Kodiak dip from his pocket, nestles a chew into his lip, cuts in with “This is a fucking wake-up call. To everyone that’s forgotten about independence.” Pausing to spit, he says, “It’s about the corporations stealing the rural blind, buying farmland to build their superstores, creating jobs that just take the money right back in. It’s about that sad sack who tells you what to do at your job every day when he don’t even know how to do your job and don’t wanna know, don’t even care about you, it’s about what everyone has lost and don’t even know it. Their salvation.”

Kenny says, “It’s about things that can’t be said. It’s about folks being blind, being satisfied with the same old shit, over and over, never taking a stand. Instead they tell themselves it’ll get better, but it never does.”

Wilbur says, “I know I’s sick and tired of being told thanks for serving our country every time someone sees me wearing a cap with my rank and the war I fought in or some sad sap that knows me. I didn’t serve our country—I fought in a war that others were too damn weak and stupid to fight. Shitting in one hand and wiping with the other.”

Kenny says, “And they still are. Look at us, we pull out and go right back into another war to bomb ISIS.”

Hollis joins in, “And the president is talking about the U.S. training rebels to fight them. Didn’t we do the same shit with bin Laden, didn’t the CIA train he and his people to fight the Russians in Afghanistan? Look what happened all them years later, 9/11. And we got North Korea and Syria on deck.”

Ronnie shakes his head. “I served two tours for that war. Fucked-up situation, don’t no one ever learn by they past mistakes.”

Wilbur says, “I got the point, but we’re losing the thread. If we gonna do it, other than how, the next question would be, when?”

Kenny stands in thought for a moment, clicks a full clip into his Glock. “We do it on the biggest goddamn money day they got besides the Christmas sale. Black Friday.”

The brothers’ eyes meet with evil grins.

CUT TO THE PRACTICE DRIVES, always in a different car. Kenny and his brothers sit in the Walmart lot, taking notes. Scoping out the fire department. When they leave the firehouse, they hit it, blow one of the fire engines left behind, ‘cause they won’t bring all their rigs. At the same time, they blow the big water tower. Fire department will say fuck the police, go to save their own shit. But there won’t be no water pressure.”

Wilbur asks, “Who’s blowing the cruiser, the fire rig and the water tower?”

Kenny tells him, “Marty and Kraut. They’re scouting as we speak. Getting their routes down.”

Wilbur asks, “And we’re—”

Kenny tells him, “Doing the robbery.”

Ronnie cuts in, “Okay, then what about Brinks?”

Kenny says, “Brinks doesn’t monitor shit, they won’t have a clue. For them it’ll be business as usual. We hit the guards as they exit. This has to be a perfect domino effect to work. You need to be backed in the first spot in row 11.”

Wilbur questions, “How the hell we do that?”

“Get here early and get the spot. Wait. When Ronnie and me come out, you gotta come barreling to us. Hollis, by this time you’ve taken out the north entrance, creating mass hysteria. You’ll be down the walk, help with the guards. When we get in the van, we’ll have 60 seconds to get to the other end. Hang a left onto Pacer Drive, one minute to the next stop, where we hang a right onto Corydon Ramsey Road, then speed down and hang a left onto Quarry Road. Every available law enforcement unit it’s gonna be south; we go northwest, keep to the back roads.”

“Where do we switch?”

“Talked with Marty and Kraut. They drop a swap vehicle at the old church out off of 337 night before. When they’s done lighting up Harrison County, they’ll do the same as us, take the back roads to the old church. We meet and leave the cash and a big fucking surprise for later.”

“Surprise?”

“Like we discussed, this ain’t about the money. It’s about a movement.”

Ronnie tells him, “Fine, where we gonna go after all is said and done?”

Kenny tells him, “Underground. Way this works, we can’t have no fuck-ups, we’re in the watermark of technology, everything is traceable. Some trailer-trash motherfucker pulls out their smartphone, it’ll be on YouTube, go viral and every major news channel in the country will see us. We need disguises.”

Ronnie laughs. “That's easy—fake beards, camo makeup.”

Kenny says, “And there’s the phone call.”

Ronnie asks, “Phone call?”

Kenny tells him, “Yeah, this is gonna be bigger than any of us. Whoever makes the call won’t be able to use things like voice chat or a cell phone no more. They’ll bring in the feds, they’ll have voice recognition, use Patriot Act rules. Which means all bets are off and lawful tactics are suspended for homegrown terrorists. ‘Cause that’s how we’ll be labeled.”

CUT BACK TO BLACK FRIDAY,

10:02 A.M. The Brinks driver flips through paperwork for his next stop when three ground-quaking explosions detonate within moments of one another. Wide-eyed, he sees smoke mushrooming to the south, then to the east. “What in the fuck?” Through his front windshield and out his side mirrors he watches off-duty cops run from the exits and out into the lot, where patrons stand mannequin-stiff, staring at the black smoke billowing up into the sky. Officers slide into their cruisers, turn on sirens and bark tires out of the lot.

Kenny storms into Walmart's south entrance, bumping through the mad rush of customers. He pummels a square of C-4 on the wall inside. Ronnie pushes through the crowd and into the store. Snaps two 20-minute road flares, tosses them into the men's clothing area not 30 feet from the doors. People begin yelling.

Turning around, he sees the Brinks guards are already out the exit, carrying satchels of cash. Kenny shadows them; Ronnie not far behind. Gilbert, the GM with the 1970s porn mustache, cuts down the last cashier's aisle, beads of moisture plastering his piglet features. He tries to cut off Kenny while barking orders over his radio, but there's no response but static; his security is MIA.

Ronnie smiles. The north entrance detonates. The GM drops the radio, palms each of his ears, hambone-knees crack on the tiled floor. Tears streak from his orbs as he cries, “NO!” Ronnie's mind flashes back to Afghanistan, eyes gloss over with the madness of bearded men in pajama-like clothing firing AKs.

Kenny makes it out to the sidewalk, eyes Hollis to his left ramming his matte black .45-caliber Kimber into the left temple of guard number one's skull. Kenny takes the cash bag from the guard's grip while pressing his pistol into guard number two's back; tells him, “Do anything stupid, your buddy gets grazed on the sidewalk.”

Behind him in the store, Gilbert begs from the floor at Ronnie, “Why're you doing this?”

Flames and smoke blossom from the clothing area. Shoppers fall to the tile, coughing. Others run, trampling bodies and shouting “Fire, fire!”

A THUNDEROUS unexpec ted thud in the chest from some salve-faced man wearing a Duck Dynasty cap and yelling, “Fucking rag-headed buck!” He's firing a nine-millimeter handgun. Tears a patch out of Ronnie’s left forearm.

Ronnie returns fire. Parts the man's shoulder, then his face, and more people are diving to the floor in holiday horror.

Out on the sidewalk, Kenny holds one of the sacks of cash, the guard yowling, “You'll never get away with—”

Ronnie's lungs huff as he runs out of Walmart. He presses his Kimber to the man's skull, tugs the trigger. Turns to the other guard, does the same. Blood colors the side of the armored truck the shade of war.

Wilbur barks the van's tires up onto the sidewalk behind them. Ronnie steps to the armored truck's passenger side. Points his pistol at the driver. Fires two shots. Splinters the glass and the driver's complexion.

The brothers go around the back of the Brinks truck and open the rear door, intent on grabbing more money. A guard inside combusts the air with shotgun fire. Lights up Hollis's side profile; he drops. Ronnie unloads on the guard, blowing brains and scalp all over the inside. “Motherfucker!”

Ronnie kneels, lifts and shoulders the mangled mess that is Hollis up and around to the van. Kenny slides the side door open. Gunshots from patrons ring out from the parking lot, dotting and dinging the van's side. Ronnie throws Hollis inside. Wilbur yells, “Holy shit! Holy sh*t, Hollis, they fucking killed Hollis!”

Kenny reaches for one of the AR-15s on the van's floor, hands it to Ronnie, tells him, “Start mowing the lawn!” Romero shoulders the AR-15, creates a rainfall of splintered glass around cars and trucks. Piercing hoods and doors as he tells Kenny, “Blow the fucking south entrance!”

Kenny pulls his phone out with one hand, grabs Ronnie by the collar with his other and jerks him backward into the van. Ronnie keeps hosing the parking lot with gunfire, spraying chaos. Kenny shouts to Wilbur, “Fucking move!”

The van swerves from the sidewalk, past the smoking north entrance strewn with debris and bodies. Kenny thumbs the center button on his cell phone. The PHARMACY end comes apart like fresh stitches of rubble. Wilbur swerves past oncoming vehicles lost within the mass hysteria, hits buggies and patrons, who thud and bounce up over the hood. Adrenalized, Ronnie drops an empty clip from the smoking AR-15, clicks in a fresh one, looks at his brother’s gory face. Starts driving scarred knuckles into the ceiling.

Wilbur hangs a hard rubber-burning left onto Pacer Drive. A state trooper sirens red-and-blue up beside the van from nowhere. Caps a round into the open side door of the van. Clips the muscle of Kenny’s right arm. Ronnie delivers an ice storm of gunfire onto the cop, spattering the cruiser’s interior and front windshield crimson, causing the cruiser to swerve to the right and crash off the side of the road. Wilbur keeps the pedal mashed all the way to Corydon Ramsey Road, the side door still gaping, cold air glazing the men like fresh icing to a warm cake as they hit the Quarry Road. Other than a roaring engine, tires rounding on pavement, all that can be heard is the wail of sirens channeling distance.

GO TO METAPHORS FROM THE DEAD where Wilbur’s shovel pats the earthy grit over the unmarked grave of Hollis. Ronnie and Kenny stand wounded, watching. Knowing everyone is expendable, that he did not die in vain. That they’d made some noise. Opened some eyes. But they aren’t done.

GO TO THE FBI leading the investigation, with everyone else—the ATF, Harrison County PD, Indiana Department of Homeland Security and the fire marshal—butting heads over jurisdiction, over “this is my backyard” bullshit because the outsiders view the locals as too podunk to be involved. Everyone wants to be the first to get that big break into how the fuck this happened, take credit in front of the cameras.

FLASH BACK TO KENNY and his final play. Wilbur looking to Kenny, eyes blazed by red, “Now what?”

“We do as we planned. Finish this and go underground.”

Ronnie’s on the same page as Kenny, looks to Wilbur. “We all talked this out beforehand. This is what Hollis wanted. What we all wanted.”

GO TO THE DAYS BEFORE BLACK FRIDAY, when cash is exchanged for several prepaid burner phones. Bought by a man with a fake beard, shoe-polished features, in overalls and driving a black-primed van, plates removed before entering the lot, nothing for cameras to trace. After purchasing the phones, the man gets into the van and drives down the road out of eyeshot, pulls over, puts the plates back on and drives away.

With the SWAT team standing around the vans, the fed asks, “Who fucking alerted the Harrison County podunks?”

“No idea, sir.” Clearing his throat, “They beat us here.”

“Jesus fucking Christ. Everything secured?”

“Yes, sir.”

“Those podunks touch anything?”

“No, sir.”

“No idea who owns the property?”

“No, sir, but we’re searching courthouse records as we speak.”

“Any signs of the responsible party?”

“No, sir, just this envelope... addressed to—”

“Motherfuckers?”

“Yes, sir.”

Wearing black latex gloves, the fed takes the envelope from the SWAT officer’s grip, eyes it carefully. Opens it. Removes the letter. Takes in every word. Red arcs across his face; he grits his pearl teeth. Eyes dart quick when one of the Harrison County podunks yells, “Holy fucking shit, the goddamned money’s inside of here, fucking look, it’s right fucking—”

Before the fed can muster, “Don’t touch a fucking thing!” the officer’s right hand cups the van’s passenger-side handle. Opens the door maybe a quarter inch. All that’s heard is a squeaking hinge before the hidden C-4, rigged within the door panels of each vehicle, combusts the entire 30-by-30 space. Everything within pissing distance becomes a monstrous ball of flames and combustible parts. Some mechanical. Some human. All incinerated.
PARADISE FOUND

The crystal-blue waters and white sands of a Bahamas beach combined with the singular beauty of July Playmate Dana Taylor—sounds like heaven to us
Beauty at once formidable and approachable: Few women are in possession of such incongruous appeal, and Dana Taylor is most definitely one of them. An all-American beauty with a wide smile, she harks back to the heyday of supermodels—those leggy bombshells who exuded sensuality and strength all at once. Distracting physicality aside, the Chicago native is as warm and good-natured as her grin suggests. She’s also a woman who doesn’t mess with hesitation. “I moved to New York right away. I graduated from high school early, and the next day I jumped on an airplane,” she says. “I think it was the day I turned 18. I’d scouted it, and mentally I was like, ‘I’m going there. Nobody is stopping me.’”

Maybe her resolve stems from an athletic childhood. Dana, who loves wakeboarding and basketball, was a competitive ice skater for 11 years. “My mom got me a pair of skates at a garage sale, and I jumped on the ice and just did it. It’s been a part of my life for my whole life.”

The former runway model moves quickly, so it goes without saying she requires a high-octane man. “I’m a doer,” she says. “I’m a wild girl, a free spirit. I’m outgoing, so when I meet a guy, he has to be able to keep up with me. If we can connect and he can go along with me, that’s great.”

She’ll also go after you, if you’re what she wants. “I used to think Whole Foods was the best place to scout guys,” she admits, laughing. “My roommate and I would stand in the chip aisle and ask guys, ‘What’s the difference between blue corn chips and regular chips?’ to strike up a conversation.” From aisle to aisle, Dana gives the impression that she’s going to do what she wants, despite what anyone else thinks. “When I have a plan in place, I never back down.”

PHOTOGRAPHY BY DEREK KETTELA
“That’s not a branch you’re standing on, Eve...!”
TAKE A SWIPE
Dating apps all seem to be based on looks alone—you swipe right or left depending on whether you like someone’s appearance. But you’d better have good lines in your Tinder profile if I’m going to swipe right. You have to catch my attention with something.

FATHER FIGURE
When I found out I was shooting for PLAYBOY, I was home in Chicago, visiting my family. I ran downstairs and told my dad first. You’d think that would be weird, but he’s a photographer, so we were both like, “Hell, yeah!” He always joked that he would support me even if I posed for PLAYBOY on the top of the Empire State Building.

LIKE A SURGEON
I was actually interested in becoming a plastic surgeon. I wanted to make people feel good about themselves. I’m happy I didn’t pursue that, because it’s a hell of a lot of school. But blood doesn’t bother me; it fascinates me. The human body presents so many unanswerable questions!

BODY LANGUAGE
Your body is your body. I’m Lithuanian American, and in my family you would never be ashamed of your body. It has never really been an issue. Like, what is nudity? Is there much difference between a man’s body and a woman’s body? No. Embrace it as you want.

FACT-CHECKER
I love to look up random facts and then quote them out of the blue to my friends. They’ll be like, “How did you know that?” I love knowing weird little details, like the fact that a flamingo can swallow only if its head is upside down. Or that a cloud can weigh more than a million pounds.

WHERE TO NEXT?
Thailand is definitely on my radar. I also want to go to an exotic petting zoo and hold a monkey—that’s at the top of my list. I need to have a monkey in my life. I also want to swing through the forest on a zip line. But I’m down for anything. I just want to see where life takes me.

WHAT I LOOK FOR IN A GUY
Looks aren’t that important. I have a track record of dating nerdy guys; being a little nerdy is hot, even if you look like a nerd. I don’t mind glasses—I don’t mind any of that. Personality is number one. If you don’t know what you’re talking about and can’t hold a conversation, there’s no way I’ll be into you.

Dana Taylor
@danataylor2
ARE YOU EXPERIENCED

Testing out the fledgling Airbnb Experiences, our writer takes an inebriated tour of Detroit with a former guitarist for Kid Rock and a gaggle of new friends (including one lizard man)

by ERIC SPITZNAGEL
“No shit? You’re Kid Rock’s guitarist?”

Kenny Olson smiles at the two 20-something male tourists from Pittsburgh, both of whom seem genuinely starstruck.

“Used to be,” Olson says in a raspy baritone. “I’m doing other stuff now. Got a gig tonight.” He gestures toward a poster on the wall behind him, which features a picture of Olson himself wailing on a guitar.

The tourists lean in for a closer look. “Kenny Olson and Friends,” one of them reads aloud from the poster. They turn to look at me and my small assortment of new friends hovering near Olson. The majority of us are dressed in black leather, all of it way too tight for healthy circulation. Also, one of us is wearing a lizard mask.

“You guys in a band?” they ask.

We laugh, but nobody answers. Because technically, no, we’re not. We’re just Olson’s entourage, or at least we are today. What’s more, we paid for those bragging rights. We’ve signed up for Motor City Rocks, a new Airbnb “Experience” that offers a different kind of vacation. For $375 a head, we get to drive around Detroit in a limo, get day-drunk and listen to a guy who used to tour with Kid Rock tell stories about rock excess and that time Florence Henderson grabbed his ass backstage.

Olson has had an impressive music career for a relatively unknown axman. He was Kid Rock’s lead guitarist for 12 years, providing riffs and blistering solos for such hits as “Bawitdaba,” “Cowboy” and “Only God Knows Why.” He quit recording and touring with Rock in the mid-2000s—“The reasons are complicated,” Olson says—but he hasn’t been hurting for opportunities. He’s played with the likes of Metallica, Sheryl Crow and Snoop Dogg. Keith Richards once called him “one of the best rock guitarists on the scene right now.”

We’re outside Third Man Records, the vinyl shop and recording studio of Detroit native Jack White. Olson doesn’t know White personally, but “the store is pretty badass,” he assures us. It’s the latest stop on a citywide tour that has been meandering at best. So far, we’ve seen the Motown museum, Saint Andrew’s Hall (where Eminem got his first break) and the Majestic club. Olson has played at every venue except Motown, but his ex-father-in-law was one of the Temptations.

Skip Franklin, Olson’s manager, inserts himself between us and the Pittsburgh admirers, ushering us back toward the limo. “Come on, guys, let’s keep it moving!” he barks at us. “We’re on a schedule here.” This is not entirely true. Other than driving around looking for music landmarks, we don’t really have anywhere to be until sound check at seven p.m. But we happily play along with the ruse, because there’s something thrilling about having a big, burly rock manager, with a face that looks like it’s not unaccustomed to receiving punches, treat you like somebody too important to talk to civilians.

Back in the limo, Olson unfurls another rock tale—something about debating the many variations on the peanut-butter-and-jelly sandwich with Michael Jackson. Olson is easy to like. He’s scrappy and disheveled, with a paunch and a big grin that peeks out of a gray goatee. He zigzags between topics randomly, following no apparent logic. One minute he’s explaining why that Journey song “Don’t Stop Believin’” sucks because there’s no such thing as “south Detroit.” Then, apropos of nothing, he’s telling us about the time Joe C, Kid Rock’s three-foot-nine sidekick, tried to beat up Gary Coleman during the video shoot for “Cowboy.”

This is his first full-fledged Motor City Rocks outing for Airbnb. The first few were just “test runs,” he says. “They were mostly friends coming in from out of town. We’d just drive around and laugh.” Which isn’t all that different from what we’re doing now. But the customer base has definitely expanded. Our group includes Blind Bob, a New Yorker by way of South Carolina who lost his eyesight in an “explosion” (the details are sketchy) and rebuilds car engines for a living (the details of how he does that without the gift of sight are also sketchy) but whose real passion is drumming. Blind Bob—he hands everyone a business card that reads BLIND BOB THE LIZARD MAN—met Olson during a recent rock-and-roll fantasy camp in Hollywood and decided he needed to make the pilgrimage to Detroit.

There’s also Frank Faisst, a German corporate exec who deejays and shoots music videos on the side, barely speaks English and is dressed as though he’s heading to an S&M dungeon. He’s here with Dacia Bridges, a Michigan native who has spent the past two decades in Germany, working on her dance and electronica singing career. Rounding out our traveling party is Bella Bond, a small-framed brunette with enormous fake breasts—she shared this info with me moments after we met—that are barely contained by a skimpy leather halter top. She traveled here from West Palm Beach, Florida, where she works as a model (mostly for biker conventions) and has a doctorate in pharmacy. Oh, and she has minor brain damage.

“I got hit by two trucks, in the head,” she tells me. “I was driving, and they smushed my car. The front was fine, but the trunk was pushed up into the passenger’s seat. Whatever cut my head was in my trunk. I don’t remember. I had amnesia.”

“Wow,” I respond, not sure what else to say. “I’m glad you’re okay.”

“The doctor said I’m not at full mental capacity,” she tells me. “So, if I forget your name, I’m sorry. I’m not all there.”

It might be the drugs talking—when somebody pulled out a joint, I didn’t say no—but this is hands-down the most entertaining vacation I’ve taken in years. And I say that as somebody who never much cared for Kid Rock, or white-boy rap-rock in general. I’m not even all that impressed with the Detroit music scene. I love Iggy Pop and Motown but not enough to fill my phone with photos of the empty stages where they once performed. There’s nothing about this tour that’s nearly as exclusive as “underground” as promised. Get yourself a flask and a GPS and you could easily re-create it. But you’d be missing the point. Like that old saying goes, it’s not about the destination; it’s about taking the journey with a blind drummer, a German in tight leather and a guy who used to perform in front of thousands with a little person.

We pull up to the Fox Theatre, where Olson has arranged for an all-access backstage tour. We’re joined by a few others, most of them musicians performing tonight with Olson. Tino Gross, a local bluesman who looks like a character from a Tom Waits song—he’s a skinny white guy in a fedora and black sunglasses with a voice that sounds like he smoked a pack.

PHOTOGRAPHY BY RYAN LOWRY of cigarettes before breakfast—tells me he performed in this very theater with Bob Dylan.

“I was in the lobby before the show,” he explains, “and Bob’s manager, Mitch, runs up to me and says, ‘Bob wants you to play tonight.’ He took me backstage and pointed to a Marshall amp. He told me, ‘When Bob looks at you, take a solo. And then when he looks at you again, stop.’ That was the only thing I knew going in.”

We all nod in quiet reverence, sitting in the dark and staring at the stage that has seen so much history. Even Olson is at a loss for words. But then Blind Bob breaks the silence. “Are we done here?” he shouts, scooping his seeing-eye dog, Buddy, off the ground. “It’s drink-30. Let’s do some fucking shots!”

We all laugh. Classic Bob move!

... Last November, Airbnb co-founder and CEO Brian Chesky unveiled the company’s new Experiences program to an audience at L.A.’s Orpheum Theatre. In his speech, he recalled pleading with his parents as a child to take a family trip to “the most magical place on earth, the North Pole.” Their vacations rarely got more ambitious than an Anheuser-Busch factory tour, and his lingering disappointment helped inspire Experiences, which Chesky promised would make vacations “magical” again. How do you do that? By using the “hero’s journey” narrative structure coined by mythologist Joseph Campbell.

“A character starts in their ordinary world,” Chesky explained. “They cross the threshold—think Wizard of Oz—to this new magical world, where they meet people.... They have a moment of transformation, and they return to the ordinary world.”

You couldn’t ask for a better summation of Airbnb Experiences—created by a guy who’s still pissed off that his parents never took him to Santa’s Village and founded on the same creative philosophy that helped George Lucas come up with Star Wars.

Airbnb currently offers about 800 Experiences in 20 international cities, with plans to expand to more than 50 by the end of this year. An Airbnb spokesperson says that roughly 34,000 people have started the process of creating an Experience.

Many of the existing excursions cover well-trodden territory, like drinking and eating. But since the program’s launch, the Experiences have gotten uniquely weird. You can pay to ride around London in a penny farthing bicycle, or do yoga with a Barcelona model, or make plastic food in Tokyo, or visit Nelson Mandela’s prison with his former prison guard (included: “a meal in prison”). For $619 you can spend the night with an actual wolf pack, which includes a long hike into the mountains of Los Angeles, sleeping under the stars next to creatures that could ostensibly eat you, and s’mores. Some of the Experiences sound like they were created with Mad Libs. Come feed homeless people in Capetown... with a local DJ. Learn how to make your own lamp... while drinking margaritas. Take a walking tour of historic London sites... while learning how to play the ukulele.

"They’re creating an industry that doesn’t exist," says Brad Stone, author of The Upstarts: How Uber, Airbnb and the Killer Companies of the New Silicon Valley Are Changing the World, "which is harder than it looks. But they’re trying to cater to a millennial mindset, which is ‘Don’t sell me some cookie-cutter thing. Give me something I haven’t seen before.’ But that’s hugely challenging, because you’re trying to sell people things that maybe they don’t even know they want.”

The common denominator for all Experiences, the thing they all offer without explicitly stating it, is temporary friendship. A Paris Experience, billed as “Urban soccer challenge,” is a pickup soccer game, followed by a drink at a bar with your new friends—all for just $35. You can eat tapas in Barcelona with “foodies” (i.e., people who like food), or go vinyl-record shopping with a guy in Osaka, or “meet cool people” at a party in Paris, or have a picnic with a stranger in San Francisco. For $95, Amanda in Los Angeles will drive around the city with you and eat tacos. You pay for your own tacos, but she’ll show you where she likes to eat tacos, and then the two of you can eat tacos together.

Courtney Nichols, a self-described “purveyor of kitsch,” sells an Experience that’s essentially drinking with her and her friends for an evening. On her Airbnb ad she promises to take you to “bizarre landmarks” and hang out with her “martini-guzzling... outlandish entourage” at “invite-only dance marathons.” Nichols tells us that her $299 Experience is about “meeting my social circle. I surround myself with a group of bohemian eccentrics. A lot of drag queens are in my social circle. A lot of artists. A lot of people who are just quirky.”

Customer reviews tell a different story. Airbnb users who tried the Nichols Experience have been less than satisfied, with one complaining on the website that “she took us to her friends’ apartment, where we sat around for another hour waiting for them to get booze.” Another claims they “expected to go out to a few L.A. bars and dance, instead we spent most of the night at her home and a friend’s apartment,” and they “left the experience feeling confused.”

It’s possible some of the Experience hosts have loneliness issues of their own. For $25, a young couple will take you up to the Hollywood sign and explain their complicated reasons for moving to L.A. There’s an $84 tour of the Louvre in Paris that’s advertised as “Meet the funniest guy in the museum,” which is nothing if not a cry for help. If you’re in Florence and your idea of a good time is “walking at night in silence,” there’s an Airbnb host willing to charge you $79 for the opportunity. (Don’t worry; the host provides a “small flashlight,” so it won’t be weird or anything.)

Chris Wren, a software engineer for Airbnb, is both an Experience host and an enthusiastic Experience customer. For him, the platform has never been about feeling less alone. “You can meet new friends, but it’s not really about that,” he says. “I think the best kind of travel is when you become a new person, when you take it beyond the shallow touristy thing and embrace the fantasy of it.”

How far could that fantasy be taken? It’s not that big a leap from “Let’s play soccer” to “Let’s have a masked orgy.” I asked the Airbnb reps if they would accept Experience proposals that were sexual in nature—maybe not so far as soliciting prostitution but at least involving nudity and adult behavior—and they directed us to the “quality standards” webpage for prospective Experience hosts. It doesn’t mention sexual content. The company’s main concern is that hosts craft a compelling three-act fantasy. “Consider the beginning, middle and end,” the Airbnb site advises. “How will you greet guests when they arrive? What is the main activity they’ll do with you? How will you draw the experience to a close?”

Kerri Aultman, a fetish model in Miami, hopes to be one of the first to take the Experiences in a bold new direction. She’s currently overhauling her loft space for maximum kink possibilities. There will be a stripper pole and a mirror ball and a “costume room” full of wigs, slutty costumes and fetish gear for experienced and newbie clients alike. Her Experience, she says, is designed to be only for women who want to spend a day and a night exploring their kinky sides.

“I live in a fantasy world all the time,” she says of her day job. “I want to create an Experience where people can try that for themselves. They can put on some wigs and fishnets, find a new sexual identity, see what it feels like. We’ll go out on the town in costumes and then come back and have a slumber party.”

So basically what Chesky and Joseph Campbell had in mind, but this hero’s journey ends with pillow fights and a stripper pole.

Now we’re at a fancy restaurant—music venue in suburban Detroit. It’s just like the rock clubs on 8 Mile Road but with more white people and

---

Choose Your Own Adventure

Ready to sign up for your very own Experience? Allow us to make a few suggestions.

JUGGLE FIRE IN MIAMI ($250)

Christian Neira, host of the appropriately named Pyro Experience, gives hands-on training with fire props such as a buugeng and a dragon staff—right next to the Atlantic Ocean, in case you accidentally set yourself ablaze.

BREAK-DANCE IN PARIS ($81)

Be the guy who comes back from Paris and tells his friends, “Skipped the Eiffel Tower, but I got into an epic break-dancing battle.” Matthieu and Tony will teach you French break-dancing moves, which we’re hoping include le pop et lock.

GET DAY-DRUNK IN SEATTLE ($60)

Host Shelley Buchanan runs a blog called the Drunken Tomato and has published several books about regional bloody mary variations. She’ll take you on a walking tour to three different bloody-mary-centric bars, where you fill out score sheets, compare notes and get smashed.

BECOME A SAMURAI IN TOKYO ($445)

Tetsuro Shimaguchi, who performed in and choreographed samurai fight scenes for Quentin Tarantino’s Kill Bill Vol. 1, invites you into his dojo to “learn the way of a traditional warrior”—or just look awesome while swinging a blade (above).

GO FISH IN BARCELONA ($151)

Here’s a chance to live out your Deadliest Catch fantasies. Spend a day fishing on the Mediterranean with a crew of third-generation Catalan fishermen, who will also entertain you with “sea legends.”
a menu that includes duck cotechino. Olson and friends are performing here tonight, and the backstage lounge is packed with a dozen or so musicians, friends and pay-to-play “friends.” Actually, the backstage is just a small room off the restaurant’s kitchen, with a few couches that smell like sweaty leather, pizza slices balanced on every available surface and a big tub of canned beers on ice.

A stern-looking woman bursts into the room from the kitchen. “Guys, please,” she says. “There is absolutely no smoking weed in here!”

Nobody says a word. We just pretend we have no idea what she’s talking about. Because obviously, none of us were smoking weed. What gave her that idea? That thick cloud of blue smoke hanging in the air must’ve come from someone else.

I return to my conversation with Joe Sax, the lead singer and bassist of Olson’s new checking on me—You need anything? A plate of mussels, a bourbon cocktail, a foot rub, a new pair of pants?—I feel special.

I’ve learned a lot about Detroit today. Maybe not a version that most tourists get, but a more intimate one. I’ve learned there’s a catwalk above the Fox Theatre that nobody is allowed to use, but Olson and Dweezil Zappa knocked there once. I learned that the club where Jack White punched a guy in the face has a great deal on mid-afternoon shots. I learned that the mansion of Motown founder Berry Gordy is for sale, for a mere $1.6 million, and Olson is thinking about buying it. I learned that Hot Tamales is the only strip club in Detroit that doesn’t charge a cover. I learned quite a few things about strippers, in fact.

Franklin interrupts a scintillating conversation about the strippers of Flint to let us know it’s time for sound check. Olson and the band head to the stage, and I take this opportunity to talk to my other Experience cohorts. Why exactly are they here?

“Some places have dinner packages with the stars, where you can meet them before or after the show and have a drink, but this is different,” says Dacia Bridges. “It’s more authentic. You don’t feel like a fan getting a meet-and-greet. You’re just hanging out.”

Nobody in our group is under the illusion that this might be their ticket to a music career. They don’t expect to be discovered or given a record contract if they just impress Olson enough. “I don’t have any musical talent,” Bella Bond tells me, “I just like being around these guys, feeling like I belong here.” Most of them are happy with their non-rock star lives. Blind Bob has created his own weird universe. He tells me he’s heading down to Myrtle Beach, South Carolina tomorrow to be a judge at a beauty contest at a bike bar called Suck Bang Blow.

“Do I want to ask how you do that?” I say.

Blind Bob chortles sinisterly while petting Buddy, who hasn’t left his side all day. “You want my vote, your boobs better be covered in brass.”

The show starts late. At least 300 people squeeze into the small space, and they’re ready to bob their heads enthusiastically while drinking craft beers. The Scorpio Brothers get started around 11, and it’s an aural blitzkrieg. Olson delivers slushy guitar riffs at a volume that makes my genitals vibrate like a speaker’s woofer. Bridges jumps onstage to join them for a cover of Hendrix’s “Little Wing,” belting out the tune with the soul of a seasoned R&B performer. The crowd howls in approval, and so does the Olson Experience gang, but we do it more meaningfully because we’ve been partying with her for the past 30 hours. We have a connection that none of these civilians would understand.

When it’s over, we stick around as Olson and his bandmates pack up their instruments and pound more drinks and sneak away for joints in the alley and talk about what an awesome gig it was. There’s a lot of exchanging of e-mail addresses and phone numbers, and promises that this is the beginning of something, though nobody says what that “something” might be.

“You’re stuck with me, Bob,” Olson says, giving Blind Bob a lingering hug. “For the long haul. You and me.”

“I love you, brother,” Bob says, still wearing his lizard mask. “Don’t let anybody know, though.”

...

I wake up with ringing ears and a pounding head and clothes that smell like bad decisions. I have no idea how I made it back to my hotel room. My phone is yelling at me, and I see I’ve gotten a text from Olson. “Thank you for all your support my soul brother,” it reads, followed by several rock horn emojis.

I stare at my phone for a long time, not sure what to think. Are we pals now? Can I legitimately say, “Me and Kid Rock’s guitarist are soul brothers?” I guess that’s cool, but I was hoping for something a little more profound. Chesky had promised a hero’s journey. Where was my “moment of transformation”? Had I learned anything about myself through this experience?

Well, I guess I’ve learned I can smoke rock-star weed and still have coherent conversations. I learned that my rock-and-roll dreams from childhood haven’t gone away, as just standing behind the velvet rope at the side of the stage during a concert gave me goose bumps. I came to this Experience with a sneering adult cynicism, but by the end of the night I was flashing rock horns unironically. I was a kid again, pretending to be an adult, or at least my kid fantasy of what being an adult would be like.

It would fade eventually, like all fantasies. We sober up and the vacations end and we get back to the real world. But while it lasted, it was beautiful.

I crawl out of bed to look for my pants. They are nowhere to be found. For a split second, I think about texting Franklin. He’ll know what to do.
Y'KNOW

I'M BEGINNING TO SUSPECT THAT THIS THING IS JUST A GLORIFIED REGULAR HOLE
This summer, the pint-size powerhouse plays both a permed wrestler and a profane nun. Read on as she plys her razor-sharp wit on wrestling moves, nude scenes and cat cafés

BY DAVID HOCHMAN  PHOTOGRAPHY BY STEPHAN WÜRTH

Q1: You’ve been in the business for more than a decade. What surprises you most about the way Hollywood works?

BRIE: I guess it’s that everybody cheats on their husbands and wives. It always bums me out. I mean, it makes sense on some level because there’s such an immediate intimacy to what actors do. You shoot scenes with people where you’re falling in love with them or making out with them or pretending to have sex with them. So I understand. And you can be away from your loved one for months at a time, and hackers are making it more and more difficult to send sexy photos to one another, so what are you going to do? But it still really shocks me.

Q2: You recently married Dave Franco. What was it like meeting his brother James and the rest of the Francos for the first time?

BRIE: Well, I met their mom before I met anyone else in the family, and she is so wonderful and sweet that our joke for a long time—and it’s true—is that Dave’s mom and I said “I love you” to each other before he and I had said “I love you.” The Francos are just a very humble, laid-back, close-knit family, and my family has a similar vibe.

Q3: You’ve described your parents as reformed hippies. Was there a lot of herbal medicine around when you were growing up?

BRIE: Well, there’s still a lot of pot. On Thanksgiving we all smoke tons of weed. I mean, not tons of weed; we go through phases. Some Thanksgivings I’ll bring a pot brownie and we’ll be sneaking into the closet and having bites of it. At this last Thanksgiving, it was just my parents and my sister and then a bunch of our friends out back with vape pens. It’s been fun introducing my parents to the new weed technology. They both have their pot cards now, though. I used to be the keeper of the weed; now they’re on their own.

Q4: In your new Netflix comedy, GLOW, you play a 1980s pro wrestler. What’s your killer move?

BRIE: We did wrestling training for four and a half weeks for the show, working 10 to 14 hours a day on not killing ourselves. The hardest move is a basic back bump, which is any time you fall on your back onto the mat. You get back-bumped whenever you’re clotheslined, which is when you run into someone’s arm and fall backward. I would much prefer to be body slammed than clotheslined, even though someone’s lifting you off the ground and slamming you down. At least they’re sort of helping to place you in a good position.

My favorite move is the suplex. It’s when you have someone in a headlock and you put your head under their arm and then flip them all the way over, and you both back-bump on the mat. With all wrestling moves, you learn the foundation and then you have to just go for it. There’s no in-between. You have to trust that you know how to do it.

Q5: What did you make of all those high-waisted jeans and Amish-looking dresses?
BRIE: I feel like women’s fashion in the 1980s was about women entering the workplace and trying to hold their own with men. They wanted to wear outfits that made them sort of look like men, so they wore clothes that gave them these big shoulders, making their body shape totally different. And they cinched the waist, making them big on their bottom half too. The hair was huge. There was a lot of makeup. It’s like everything was an attempt to make yourself bigger.

Q6: You get naked in the first episode of GLOW. Did you train for that too?
BRIE: Oh absolutely. I definitely did some push-ups and sit-ups in my room to pump up the right muscles beforehand. I’ve passed on a lot of projects that had nudity, but I was obsessed with getting GLOW. Nudity is a part of the show, and I had no hesitation. I love the character. I understood why they wanted it. Getting naked on camera is like ripping off a Band-Aid. The hardest part is the transition from being in your robe to being naked on set. Once I was naked, it kind of reminded me of my nudist days from college and that feeling of, Oh yeah, I love my body and this is fun and silly and it’s fine.

Q7: Your nudist days from college?
BRIE: Cal Arts was sort of clothing optional. I don’t know what it’s like now; even in the four years I was there, they had started to crack down. My freshman year, the Erotic Ball was still happening. Everybody was in different states of undress. There were tents with TVs playing pornography. And I seem to remember a live sex performance.

Mostly it was a lot of lingerie and body paint. I wore this Victoria’s Secret thing with a little black thong under a black lace long-sleeved minidress. It was see-through lace—you could see the panties—but also long-sleeved because, you know, I’m very demure.

Q8: Now, in The Little Hours, you play a raunchy nun who smokes and says “fk” a lot. How was it donning the habit?
BRIE: The movie is a comedy, but wearing the habit was pure depression. It robs you of any sexual identity, and it is the least sexual thing you can do, though people do have nun fetishes. The part that goes on your head is heavy and pulls your neck back, so I was getting neck cramps every day. But the movie is pretty boundary-less when it comes to comedy, which I love. There’s a big scene with a lot of naked witches dancing in the woods around a fire, and that’s kind of madness. I think I felt the most guilt when we were shooting a scene where we’re yelling at the groundskeeper, and we were all sort of unleashed. A lot of the movie is improvised, and at the encouragement of our director, we kept calling him a dirty Jew and referred to him stealing like a little Jewish rat. Being Jewish, I just kept thinking, Oh my God, my mom’s going to see this.

Q9: Who makes you laugh the most these days?
BRIE: Kristen Wilig, always. And Nick Kroll. I pull up clips from the Kroll Show and I just die. The other day I was referencing “Peep Loop,” a sketch on the Kroll Show; it’s a parody of The X Factor, and it’s one of my favorites. I also like to listen to The Last Podcast on the Left with Ben Kissel, Henry Zebrowski and Marcus Parks. They talk a lot about serial killers and their histories. They make jokes about and do impressions of the killers. You kind of have to be into their sense of humor.
Oh, and anything with cats. We have two cats, Harry and Arturo. My brother-in-law named them because they originally belonged to him. We often film our cats—mostly doing nothing—and send the videos to each other throughout the day. That is certainly something that other people do not find entertaining.

Q10: You had a long stint playing Trudy Campbell on Mad Men. Were you surprised by how successful the show became?
BRIE: I remember watching the Mad Men pilot, which I wasn’t in, after I had shot maybe one episode. I remember thinking, Oh my God, there’s no way this is going to last on TV. I was kind of like, Well, at least it’s really good and I’m in the first season and that’ll be great. You never know.

Q11: You’re also known for your work on Community. Do you have a favorite Chevy Chase story?
BRIE: Oh jeez. A classic Chevy Chase moment is him walking into a room with the rest of the cast, making jokes. Donald Glover is doing a bit. Everyone’s cracking up, and Chevy points at Donald and says, “That’s not funny. This is funny.” And then throws himself over the back of a chair, leaving everyone sort of stunned. Chevy definitely has a set idea in his mind about what comedy is, and maybe it hasn’t changed in a long time, but he’s still game for anything.

Q12: You started your career as a children’s party clown. How often did the dads hit on you?
BRIE: Not much when I was a clown, but definitely when I was a Powerpuff Girl, because the costume was very revealing for a children’s party costume. It was this tiny dress—shockingly short—with a giant head that strapped on. I kind of couldn’t get a feel for what was going on around me, but I knew I was being ogled.

Q13: Your first real acting gig was a role on Hannah Montana, correct?
BRIE: Yeah. The show hadn’t even aired yet, so nobody knew who Miley Cyrus was. I didn’t know who she was. Even at the first table read, I remember seeing Billy Ray Cyrus and wondering, Why is he on the show? What is happening? Miley was super sweet—a sweet, goofy teenager. I don’t think she would remember me now, but I’m still a big fan.

I’VE NEVER FELT SO MUCH ADRENALINE IN MY BODY. WITH AN AUDIENCE THERE, YOU’RE INVINCIBLE.

Q14: Back to ogling: Do you know there’s a Tumblr account devoted to your breasts?

BRIE: There’s a fascination I can’t really explain. My mom was the first one to point that out early in my Community days. She was like, “I was reading a bunch of message boards, and people seem very fascinated by your boobs. I don’t know why. They’re not that big.” I was like, “Mom, I have great boobs. How dare you?” It’s humorous to me that people have had a fixation with my boobs. By the time I’m ready to film a full-nude scene, I am the most muscular I’ve ever been and my boobs are the smallest they’ve ever been. It’s sort of like a fuck-you to the boob-fetish people.

Q15: You also have a following of foot fetishists. How do you figure that happened?

BRIE: I understand why people like my feet, because I do find them to be very cute. But I can’t totally make the leap to sexualizing them. People constantly request photos of my feet, and they also send me photos of my feet when I’ve worn minimal heels or have gone barefoot. Somebody explained to me that it’s because feet are the only part of your body that you can’t change or alter, so it’s really you. I found that to be quite beautiful. But then your mind just cuts to someone jerking off on their feet, and that image is ingrained in your mind forever. Why would you put your dick between two feet when you could put it in a warm vagina or a butthole?

Q16: Well said. If you could work with anyone in showbiz, who would it be?

BRIE: Quentin Tarantino, definitely. His movies have been such a big influence on everything I like about filmmaking. I saw Pulp Fiction at way too young an age—my dad would stand in front of the screen during the gimp scene. Then in high school I was obsessed with Reservoir Dogs. And then in college it was Kill Bill Vol. 1 and Vol. 2. The music, the humor—it’s just so much fun.

Q17: This is the Adventure Issue. What’s on your adventure-to-do list?

BRIE: I want to jump out of an airplane. I want to go to Japan because it has amazing cat cafes and other things that I hear are great. What else? Win an Academy Award. That’s about it.

Q18: What is the most adrenaline-pumping, death-defying thing you’ve ever done?

BRIE: Probably wrestling. I mean, I’ve never felt so much adrenaline in my body, and like I said, you have to literally dive headfirst into some of these moves. With an audience there, you feel nothing. You’re invincible. It’s a real rush. If GLOW is able to stay on for a few more years I would be ecstatic, because shooting it is the best.

Q19: And finally, what’s the most regrettable part you’ve taken on?

BRIE: I mean, I hate to shit on movies and stuff that I’ve done, but I played the lead in a B horror movie called Born. The entertainment value is high, but people will watch it because I’m in it and say, “Why did you do that to me?” I play this character who gets sort of...it’s implied that she’s raped by a demon and impregnated with this demon fetus. So it’s like Rosemary’s Baby, but then she gets possessed by the demon fetus and murders people and eats their body parts.

I was right out of college, it was my first movie, and I was going to be the lead. I think I actually got a kick out of the heightened drama—the fact that I was coming out of theater school to play this part where there are actual scenes of me talking to myself and fighting myself because I’m possessed by a demon fetus—

Q20: And all the while you’re like, “What’s my motivation here?”

BRIE: No, I was like, “I got this.” I was super cocky.
Untamed and unashamed, Miki Hamano is entirely in her element as she traverses the verdant forests of Three Rivers, California.
She Got Away

Incidents, accidents, surprises and demises—Cheryl’s in over her head dealing with a family emergency
When her sister, Abigail, called her at college and said, “You need to come home,” Cheryl asked, “Is this for real?”

“Yes,” Abigail said.

“Can I talk to Mom?”

“No.”

“Is it Mom?”

“I don’t know,” Abigail said.

“What does that mean, you don’t know; it sounds like you’re not telling.”

“I really don’t know,” Abigail said. “You know how Mom always puts herself in the middle of things.” Abigail paused. “And bring good clothes.”

“You’re scaring me,” Cheryl said. “Should I be scared? No one in L.A. wears good clothes unless...”

“I don’t know,” Abigail said again, “just come home.”

Abigail had done this before. The summer Cheryl was 13, Abigail made her come home from sleep-away camp. Their parents had gone to Europe; Abigail stayed behind; she was 17 and supposed to be in summer school.

It was six months after their younger brother, Billy, died while they were visiting their grandparents in Arizona. Billy told them that a poisonous snake had bitten him; “Put a cold washcloth on it,” they said, and then he was dead.

“I need you to come home,” Abigail had said.

“Did the plane crash?” Cheryl asked.

“What plane?”

“The plane Mom and Dad were on?”

“No,” she said.

“I thought maybe it did, because you told camp it was an emergency. The camp director came and got me out of the lake.”

“Sorry,” she said, “I thought I told them you could call me back.”

“You told them you’d hold on,” Cheryl was standing on the porch of the camp office in a dripping-wet bathing suit. She was talking on a phone with a long yellow curly cord that had been passed through the open window. She used the drops from her wet suit to spell her initials on the wooden porch.

“Where are you?” Cheryl asked.

“I don’t know,” Abigail said. “I’m lost.”

“What do you see around you?”

“Eye shadow,” she said.

“Are you in your room?” Cheryl asked.

“Come home,” Abigail said.

“I’m in the camp play and the talent show,” Cheryl said. “This week there’s a bunk cookout, an overnight adventure and it’s my turn to be the baker’s assistant. Plus, I’m in the bugle corps, I play reveille.”

“Don’t make me beg,” Abigail said.

When they were young, Abigail was a fairy. She wore white wings everywhere she went. She didn’t like to answer questions, didn’t like to be pinned down.

Their mother joked that she drank too much coffee when she was pregnant with Abigail. “It wasn’t the coffee; it was the pills, diet pills,” their father said.

“The doctor gave them to me,” their mother said.

“What kind of doctor wants a pregnant woman to lose weight?” their father asked.

“A Beverly Hills doctor.”

Cheryl packed her footlocker and said good-bye to her bunk-mates.

When she got home there was a huge sign, drawn in red lipstick on a white sheet, hanging between the telephone poles. “WELCOME HOME BABY SISTER.” And Abigail was very thin.

“Have you stopped eating?” It probably shouldn’t have been the first thing Cheryl asked, but it was.

“I’ve been picking at things, there wasn’t much left.”

They went outside and looked at the “edible” garden where the swing set used to be— their parents planted it to encourage Abigail to take an active role in her own nutrition. Most of the plants were dead.

“You have to water it,” Cheryl said.

Abigail shrugged. “I have trouble with things that are so needy.”

They set up in Billy’s bedroom and talked about how weird it was that no one talked about anything. Abigail was the keeper of the feelings; she hung on to everything. Their mother used to say, “You wear your feelings like jewelry.”

When they were young, Abigail was afraid of floating away. She was so worried that she might simply vanish that she literally wanted to be tethered to another person.

First, they used some old laundry line, then climbing rope and carabiners, until they discovered the small weights that you use to keep helium balloons down. Abigail kept them in her pockets—a big help.

And for a while, she was better; she married—Burton Wills, her plastic surgeon—but she also kept her room at home, not like an office but like how it was when she was a kid. Burton didn’t seem to mind.

For Cheryl this time, coming home from school in Minneapolis, felt even more difficult. On the way from the airport to the house the car passed a field of oil pumps in the middle of nowhere, milking the earth, which already looked decimated, barely able to feed scrub brush and the occasional sage bush. All of it felt entirely different, alien.

“How did you pick Minneapolis?” Cheryl’s friends from high school had asked. “We never heard of it before.”

“I wanted to go to the most normal place I could find. It’s where Charles M. Schulz grew up.”

As soon as she arrives at the house, Cheryl walks right through. She passes through the living room and steps outside; the pool is an inky black wishing well—no toys, only a floating sensor. The view is limitless, all of Los Angeles is spread out below. She takes off her shoes and dips her toes in—hot. The heat is like a physical lozenge, a sedative. There is no edge—she has no body, there are no boundaries, she, the water and the air all are one.

She used to stay out there at night, lingering in the darkness. Her father would come and get her out of the pool. “It’s a wonder you don’t just shrivel up,” he’d say. The pool felt safe, she could hide there—invisible. She takes her feet out of the water and goes back into the house. Her wet footprints evaporate behind her, vanishing as she walks.

“Where are you?” she texts her sister.

“In traffic,” Abigail texts back.

The accountant who lives next door comes out onto his deck; his hair is longer and he now has breasts. He waves. She waves back.

“Where’s Esmeralda?”

“She’s driving the car.”

Twenty minutes later, she hears the engine turn off and suddenly she’s afraid, flushed with the feeling that this is the before—the end of the familiar. She hears the front door open and close. She stays put, or it’s more like she can’t move, she’s immobile on the lounge chair by the pool.

Abigail comes out onto the patio, so thin that she actually looks flat. Her arms and legs are white like copy paper. The only thing normal about her are her feet, jutting out in sandals with red nail polish that catches the light like safety reflectors.

“Should we go inside?” Abigail asks.

“Here is good,” Cheryl says, still paralyzed.

ILLUSTRATIONS BY THE RED DRESS
“We need to talk.” Esmeralda brings glasses of water with lemon and a plate of carrot and celery sticks.

“Is it that bad?” Cheryl asks, looking at Esmeralda for confirmation.

Esmeralda makes a face; she doesn’t want to be the one to say so, but yes.

Esmeralda has been with them since before Billy was born. She was the baby nurse, the nanny, and then the housekeeper, and now Esmeralda does everything for them because apparently they can’t do it for themselves, or maybe it’s just been so long that they’ve forgotten how.

Abigail drinks. Cheryl eats. Amid the hyperconsciousness about food, the threat of starvation, she overeats, having not one or two sticks but the entire plate.

“Is it Dad?” she asks.

“It’s Mom and Dad,” Abigail says.

“Are they getting a divorce?”

“No.”

“I don’t understand.”

“It was Dad and then it was Mom.”

“Can you just tell me what happened?”

“Dad was at work. He had an incident.”

“Like an occurrence?”

“A episode.”

“Like a crime show?”

“Like a problem,” she said.

“When did this happen?”

“Last Wednesday?”

“And why did no one call me?”

“We wanted to see what happened. We hoped there would be a turnaround. There was nothing you could have done.”

Esmeralda gives her a hug, “I’m sorry.” I could have prayed, Cheryl says softly to herself. She prays every day; something she’s never told anyone. “So, where’s Mom?”

“She’s at Cedars too.”

“Did you tell her I was coming home?”

“I told her,” Abigail says; her voice sounds odd.

“What?”

“Mom was at the salon, she had cucumbers on her eyes, was eating almonds, you know how she does...”

“Fifteen almonds a day.”

“And you know how she has so much filler and Botox and everything.”

Cheryl nods, “Yes. And she doesn’t even like the way it makes her look, she just does it because that’s what people here do.”

Abigail, who has also had all the filler and Botox, nods back. She doesn’t smile or frown because she can’t. “Well, somehow a peanut got in. She blew up and no one noticed because her lips are already so puffy—they didn’t get bigger on the outside, she puffed up inside.”

“And?”

“She’s not ‘at’ Cedars, she’s ‘in’ Cedars.”

“In the same room?”

She shakes her head. “They’re heavily sedated and on ventilators.”

“Will they wake up?”

“No one knows. She was seriously oxygen-deprived.”

“This is like a nightmare.”

“That’s why I called you.”

“It’s like the nightmare where I’m trying to tell everyone something is wrong and no one can hear me. It’s like a zombie apocalypse,” Cheryl says. Abigail puts her arms around her. They are so thin and ropy that it’s like being encircled by Twizzlers.

“I called Walter,” Abigail says.

“My Walter?”

Walter is her best friend from childhood, pre-childhood—infancy. “I thought he might be helpful. He said he’d come over later. Should we go to the hospital?” Abigail asks.

“Should we bring her a plant?” Cheryl asks.

“Mom always liked African violets.”

Cheryl marches into the house, takes the African violet off the windowsill in the kitchen, clutching it for comfort.

Their father is in the Neuro Intensive Care Unit. He has what looks like a turkey thermometer stuck deep into his head.

“Is that like a pop-up timer?” she asks.

“It tells us the pressure in his head,” the nurse says.

“Is it permanent?”

“You’ll have to speak with the doctor,” the nurse says, exiting the room.

“He looks terrible,” Cheryl says. “He would never wear a shirt that color.”

“You mean the hospital gown?”

“Can we put on his regular clothes?” Cheryl asks. “Do we need permission?”

“Like we could make him any worse?” Abigail says. She tugs on the front of her father’s gown, trying to pull it off him. “He’s heavy.”

“We could try and lift him,” Cheryl says.

“Or how about we just put a shirt on top?”

The clothes he was wearing when they brought him in are in a big plastic bag in the closet. Abigail lays the shirt on him and pulls up the sheets, tucking him in. Cheryl takes his shoes to the bottom of the bed and puts them on the ends of his feet, hanging off his toes.

“Better?” Abigail asks.

“He looks awful.”

“Maybe it’s the medication,” Abigail says.

“Maybe it’s what’s left of him, maybe it’s all there is. This is not good,” Cheryl says, shaking her head no, no, no as if the repeated motion will set things free. “Not good at all. Can we see Mom? I need to see Mom.”

They take the elevator to nine.

“It’s me,” Cheryl says, squeezing the mother’s hand. “Are you in there, Mom?”

“Hard to tell,” the nurse’s aide says.

“Burton thinks Mom looks good, very relaxed.”

“She’s unconscious.”

Esmeralda rubs the mother’s feet. “She always liked me to rub her feet.”

Cheryl kisses her mother on the forehead. Her skin is taut, smooth, no wrinkles. “I love you, Mom. Happy Administrative Assistants Day.”

“Is it really Administrative Assistants Day?” Abigail asks.

“It said so on my calendar.”

“Mom loves a special day.”

Cheryl puts the African violet on the ledge, in the sun.

“I know you find it offensive, but I have to Fiction

“Esmeralda is ready to go. “I have to make dinner for my family. I’m sorry. I’ll bring you leftovers tomorrow, empanadas.” Cheryl sends Abigail with her, giving her a hug, then wishing she hadn’t; Abigail is like a human Post-it, there’s nothing to her—no dimension.

When they leave, Cheryl locks herself in the bathroom—she feels the need for a safe room. She needs to be held, comforted, and in the absence of humans the space between the tub and the towel rack will do.

She sits on the floor, not crying, maybe not breathing either. She sits on the floor telling herself to let the tile hold her, let the grout be the cement that keeps her whole. She dredges her nails into the rubbery vein of caulk running along the side of the tub, takes a deep breath.

“In the backyard,” she types. He comes in through the pool gate.

“You remembered the code,” she says.

“1-2-3-4. Some things never change.”

“Until they do,” she says. There’s a pause.

“You look good—muscular.”

“Eating meat again.”

“It’s really good to see you.”

Walter and Cheryl have known each other since before they could sit up. Their mothers took them to Music Together class; he smiled at her and she threw up on him, or so the story goes. “Spit up,” she always corrects. “When you’re four months old, it’s called spit up. I didn’t throw up on you until much later.”

They grew up together, each other’s witness and confidant.

They go into the house. “Should I try and distract you?” Walter asks, digging around the game closet. He takes out the electrified tweezers to extract the wishbone—her favorite part.

“Is this helping?” Walter asks.

“It’s certainly matching how strange I feel,” she says.

When the game is over, she goes into her parents’ bedroom, moves from object to object, touching her mother’s things, moisturizers, custom-compounded sun creams made by the dermatologist, tanning sprays.

Walter comes out of the bathroom wearing her father’s robe, his arms filled with pill bottles. “Did you know your dad was on all this stuff?”

“I don’t think he took all of it all the time,” she says.

They play a game of dress-up, of tag, of jumping on the bed, of calling out an event and then diving into the parents’ closets to get ready for it.

“Lunch at the club,” Walter calls out.

“Awards ceremony,” Cheryl says.

“Sylvia,” Walter says while wearing the father’s tuxedo.

“Ben,” she replies in her mother’s ball gown. “Where did we go wrong?” she asks.

“We got what we wanted,” he says.

“It’s like a kinky psychodrama,” she says.

“What time period are we in—before or after?” he asks.

“Let’s start with before,” she says.

They play until they run out of costumes, until they can’t think of what else to say except things that are too painful to say, and then they lie down side by side on the parents’

“I’m trying to tell everyone something’s wrong. It’s like a zombie apocalypse.”

And instead of an exhalation out comes a bellowing, puking wail. She sob’s hysterically until her phone makes a loud ping. The ping acts like an off switch; the flood stops as suddenly as it started. She abruptly ceases crying and pulls the phone from her pocket; a text from Burton: “Abigail arrived home—do you happen to know, did she eat anything today?”

“She had a smoothie,” she types back, wiping mucus from her face.

“Where are you?” Walter texts a little while later.

“I’m hiding,” Cheryl writes.

“Where?”

And because she doesn’t want to say between the tub and the towels, she gets up, pulls on a swimsuit and a wrap, unlocks the sliding glass doors, goes out to the pool and sits.

eat,” Cheryl tells Abigail as they’re waiting for the valet to come with the car.

“How about a smoothie—they don’t really smell.”

They drive to a juice bar. Abigail orders just kale, parsley and cucumber. Esmeralda gets mixed berry acai. Cheryl orders the Kitchen Sink, and while she’s waiting she eats some raw vegan cookies. “Do you have soup?” she asks.

“Cheryl, it’s 101 degrees outside. There is no soup,” Abigail snaps.

As soon as they get back to the house, Cheryl is drenched in aloneness, the cologne of empty, the odor of nothing. Mid-afternoon, she has a pizza delivered—she meets the guy outside, eats the whole thing standing on the other side of the fence and throws the box away out by the curb in the neighbor’s blue recycling bin.

Later, she finds Abigail in her room, sitting on the floor, ruler in one hand, scissors in the other, cutting the pile on her green shag rug like it’s blades of grass, one thread at a time. “It should only be an inch and a half—these are two inches.” She shakes her head. Cheryl sits on the floor next to her sister. “I won’t be okay if they die. That’s always been the issue—how alone I feel. I married Burton because he doesn’t intrude on my loneliness but at the same time I’m never actually alone.”

“I know,” Cheryl says.

“I’m trying to be the big sister, the one in charge, but it doesn’t come naturally.”

“You’re doing a great job. What’s the plan for later?”

“Later when?” Abigail asks.

“Tonight, tomorrow and all the days after?” she says.

“Burton would be fine with me just staying here,” Abigail says, cutting the shag a little more quickly.

Cheryl realizes that if Abigail stays, even for one night, it will create a whole new problem: Abigail will move back home and Cheryl will be stuck living there with her—forever.

“That’s okay,” Cheryl says. “I’m fine to be on my own. Nothing is going to happen to me, all the bad stuff has already happened.”

“Yes.”

“And?”

“He asked, ‘How bad is it?’ ‘Bad,’ I said. ‘Big bad?’ he asked. ‘Supersize,’ I said.”
bed—dressed for golf. Walter takes Cheryl’s hand—they sleep.

Cheryl wakes up at three A.M. and goes out to look at the moon. Even when it’s 100 during the day, Los Angeles gets cold at night. It’s like a wine cooler—somewhere between 50 and 55 degrees. The darkness is chalky black, the city below looks smaller, more consolidated than during the day. Through the night, she sees a lava lamp glowing in the neighbor’s house. She goes back for a blanket and in her room she finds a book that she loved as a kid, takes it outside along with a flashlight and the blanket and sits by the pool reading, pretending she is in another time.

She remembers reading stories about children playing outside at night, catching fireflies in mayonnaise jars. She found them comforting—until she realized there was no such thing as a mayonnaise jar in their house and there were no fireflies in Los Angeles.

Across the top of the hill, a thin white plume begins to rise—first like steam creating a cloud of its own, then it starts to blossom, filling out the night sky like a balloon on a long narrow string, blooming like a mushroom cloud—are they smoke signals or special effects?

There are visitors at the hospital.

Carlton, the father’s ex-best friend, is the first. “You know that I gave your father his start,” he says.

“I know,” Cheryl says; this is what Carlton always says.

“I’m the one who encouraged him to go into the law. He wanted to be an actor and I told him, forget it. You’re good-looking but you’ve got no talent. It was me who made it happen, I brought him clients before he had any. As far as I’m concerned. I sent you kids to school, I paid for your mother’s face-lifts and, see that bag his pee is going into, I probably paid for that too. And what does he do for me, nothing.”

“Carlton,” Cheryl says, “is there something we could do that would make you feel better, that would show you how much my father valued your friendship?”

“You see that ring he’s wearing, the kind of showy one with the emerald? As much as I don’t like jewelry on a man, I always admired that ring.”

“‘It’s yours,’” Cheryl says.

“Do I take it now?”

“Sure,” Cheryl says. She has no idea why she’s giving this jerk her father’s ring, but she’s not going to back out now. Carlton picks up her father’s hand. “Be careful of the IV,” Cheryl says. “It’s swollen,” Carlton says, holding her father’s hand in his own.

“Yes, he’s retaining fluid.”

Carlton tries to take the ring off, to spin it from the finger. The ring’s not budging. He tries again, yanking the father sufficiently that an alarm bell goes off and the game of tug-of-war has to be suspended until the nurse comes in and resets the machines. The nurse gives Carlton a tube of Surgilube; he greases the finger with a grotesque pumping motion that prompts Cheryl to look away.

“Got it,” Carlton announces, exiting with his shiny prize.

“I wish I had better news for you,” Abigail says when the agitated movie-star client arrives with his assistant.

“I don’t believe it for a minute,” the movie star says. “Some people will go to any length not to have to tell me to my face that it’s over. If he wants to dump me he should just say so.”

His voice is loud, recognizable—people stare. “I may be a big baby but it’s not like I can’t take it.”

“Come in,” Cheryl says, ushering him into her father’s room—and out of view.

“Holy shit,” the movie star says when he sees him. He takes out his fountain pen, the one he likes to use for autographs, and stabs her father in the bottom of his foot. The nib of the pen stays in the flesh when he pulls out and beyond that nothing happens, except ink leaks onto the floor. There is no grimace, no jerking of the leg.

Cheryl pushes the button in the wall, “Nurse, can we have some wipes for a cleanup?”

“I guess I needed closure,” the movie star says, plucking the nib like a thorn out of the bottom of her father’s foot and departing.

At home, Dr. Felt, the mother’s shrink, calls repeatedly. He calls and hangs up and then calls again like a stalker. He leaves a series of messages of escalating intensity. “Are you on vacation?” “I can’t help but take it personally. Is there something you forgot to tell me?” “Have you no respect for our process?” And finally, “If you don’t call me, I’m going to have to release your time—do you know how many people want Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 10 A.M.? That’s prime time, baby.” There’s a long pause, then, “And you know what, you’re really selfish, only a selfish person would behave this way. You’re a bitch, a real bitch.”

“Do you want me to call him back?” Walter asks when Cheryl plays him the messages.

She thinks of the one time she went to see Dr. Felt, who she always suspected was having an affair with her mother. “Do you want a boyfriend?” Dr. Felt had asked her. “Yes,” she’d said. “Then you need to lose 10 pounds,” he said.

“I want to be the one who tells him,” she says to Walter as she’s dialing. “Hello, Dr. Felt, it’s Cheryl.” There’s a pause; he has no idea who she is.

“Sylvia’s daughter.”

“Oh,” Dr. Felt says, clearly surprised.

She proceeds to tell him what happened to both her mother and her father and when she’s finished all Dr. Felt says is, “I’ll need some kind of official confirmation.”

She’s stunned. “Like what?”

“A report from the hospital would suffice. It’s quite the story you’re telling me. In order to believe it, I’ll need to see some paperwork.”

She snorts—involutarily.

“I’ll say good-bye now—Cheryl,” Dr. Felt says, pausing before saying her name, like there’s something about it that’s bitter on his tongue.

The hospital schedules a family meeting. The doctor, whose name is embroidered on his long white coat, begins, “The problem with modern medicine is we’re able to keep people alive who in any other country would have died within hours of the event. Sometimes we’re lucky, but more often we end up here,” he pauses. “In the land of difficult decisions.”

“I’ve been doing a neurological simulation program,” Abigail says. “Twice a day for 15 minutes, I tell my father the jokes, read the letter from the White House, and for my mother, I wave her favorite coffee beans under her nose....

“Your parents are not asleep,” the doctor says.

“What’s the best-case scenario?” Cheryl asks, cutting to the chase.

“That depends on what you’re looking for,” the doctor says. “Some families hope the patient lives for a very long time, even if it’s like a potted plant. And others hope the end comes quickly, peacefully.”

“If it was my parent, what would you wish for?” Cheryl asks.

“I would wish I didn’t have to make a choice,” the doctor says.

Abigail is angry. “I think they’re lying,” she says. “That’s what they say to keep you here. They want you to beg them to keep your loved ones, it’s all about getting the business.”

“I didn’t get that feeling,” Cheryl says, and her voice cracks.

“You should get them out of there,” Walter says.

“Where would we take them—on vacation?” Cheryl asks. She is not so secretly angry that Walter is leaving tomorrow for a family trip to Croatia.

“Home,” Walter says.

The thought had never occurred to her.

“You need to get them out before something worse happens,” he says.

“Worse like what?”

“Flesh-eating bacteria. MRSA, gangrene. Before they start cutting off pieces of them.”

“Walter is right,” Abigail says. “They need to be home.”

That night before he leaves, Walter pulls out his wallet.

“I don’t need your money,” Cheryl says.

He hands her a photograph of her brother, Billy. “It’s his class picture from second grade,” Walter says. “He gave it to me and I carry it like a talisman, a reminder to trust myself and not let others negate my experience.”

“I love you, you asshole,” she says, pressing the photo to her heart and hugging him.

“I’ll see you soon,” Walter says.

It takes a lot of negotiation—lawyers, sign-offs—to get Sylvia and Ben out of the hospital.

“No backscreez,” one of the hospital administrators says. “If you take them home, you agree to take full responsibility. If something goes wrong, you can’t bring them back to us.”

“We understand,” Cheryl says.

The furniture is moved to the edges of the living room. The carpets are rolled up. Using blue painter’s tape, Cheryl and Abigail mark off two large rectangles on the floor indicating where the hospital beds will go. They unfurl a padded fluorescent orange safety mat. “It’s antimicrobial,” the man from the hospital supply company says.

The beds arrive and the night before their parents come home Cheryl and Abigail sleep there, pretending it’s a special kind of a spa. In the morning a crew brings the heavy equipment, ventilators, IV pumps, stacks of sheets, diapers, an enormous assembly of goods. “Mom would be pleased,” Abigail says. “She loves high production values.”

The mother and father come home in a convoy of special intensive-care ambulances. The nurse comes with them and does the unpacking, the fine-tuning. It’s like having a new baby or a pet; there’s a lot of anxiety, wanting to be sure they get it right. Cheryl pushes her father’s Barcalounger into the living room and parks it between the hospital beds, so the nurse can put her feet up.

The smell of the food one of the nurses brings for lunch upsets Abigail, who first looks pale and then begins to froth, bubbles of saliva beading on her lips. She retches. “Can you say something, please?” she begs Cheryl.

Cheryl goes into the kitchen. “Excuse me....” The nurse looks up from her lunch, as if to say, if your request is going to interrupt my meal—that’s gonna be a problem.

“Would it be okay if you ate outside?”

“Pardon?” she asks as if deeply offended.

“Is there a medical reason I should eat outside? Our contract says that we are allowed to bring in our own food and be provided with equipment to heat or refrigerate it. I just want to know if there’s a medical reason—like do you have an allergy?”

“My sister is sensitive to food odors.”

“That’s not a medical reason,” the nurse says, taking another bite of whatever is in her bowl.

“It’s very hard for her to be around food,” Cheryl says.

“So?”

“Mental illnesses are medical conditions,” Cheryl says.

“Fine, tell her to get a note from the doctor and I’ll show it to my supervisor.”

Later, Abigail, exhausted, resists going home.

“I promise you,” Cheryl says. “Nothing will happen while you’re gone.”

“You won’t leave them alone, will you?”

“I’ll be right here.”

Early the next morning Burton shows up; he finds Cheryl outside by the pool. “Where’s Abigail?”

“She’s home.” There’s a long pause. “She didn’t wake up this morning.”

“She’ll be over later?” Cheryl asks.

“Her body gave out, her heart stopped.”

“What does that mean?”

“It means she’s gone. Abigail died.”

Cheryl is overcome with the strangest sensation of rising up, levitating, a kind of liberation that feels entirely unfamiliar. She doesn’t understand it. Why is this her reaction? Has she been so terrified about what might happen to Abigail that the absence of fear, the absence of the weight is causing her to float away? And is this it? Is this the kind of floating that Abigail was afraid of? Or was that something else?

She looks around—nothing is out of place.
A MAN IN A HAZMAT SUIT WANDERS THE STREET. “HAS ANYONE SEEN MY QUEEN? THE SWARM IS LOOSE.”

The funeral is small; Abigail is buried next to their brother in a row of plots the parents bought when Billy died. “They bought more than they needed—in the hopes the family would expand,” the funeral director tells Cheryl and Burton.

They stand in their black clothes with their sunglasses on against the bleached sky, the backdrop of the city behind them. Burton, Cheryl and Esmeralda. It’s the first time they’ve left the parents home alone with only a nurse.

On the way home they stop at the one restaurant Abigail loved—Tu Es Moi—and celebrate her life in foams. They have a flight of foams—15 of them, each one under 10 calories, everything from Thanksgiving Dinner to Salted Caramel Pastrami.

When they get back to the house, Cheryl opens her father’s safe, counts out six months’ pay and gives it to Esmeralda. “You need a vacation,” she says. “Tell me where you want to go and I’ll transfer the miles from my father’s account.”

“It is too much to say good-bye to everybody all at once,” Esmeralda says, and begins to cry.

“I know,” Cheryl says, comforting her. “But this isn’t good-bye, it’s just a chance for us to gather ourselves and make sense of things. The fact is, I need to be alone for a little bit.”

Esmeralda nods tearfully. “You’re all grown up.”

The funeral is followed by a Facebook shivah—Cheryl posts a message about Abigail’s death, and then the rabbi who married them adds a post, and Cheryl and Burton follow it each evening for seven days by posting a remembrance at sundown. Old friends add memories of their own. And after seven days Cheryl and Burton write a thank-you note to everyone and post more photos.

Now that it is just Cheryl and her parents, Cheryl spends more time talking to the nurses; she learns things about her parents, details about their skin, their television screen is flat black. There are high pitched alarms, squawks like helium balloons coming from the living room. Her first impulse is to call Abigail and then she remembers, there is no more Abigail. She switches the alarms off, turns to her parents and says, “I’m not sure you noticed, but the power went out. We’ve been having a heat wave, it’s probably a rolling blackout. There are backup batteries. You’re currently at 95 percent. All is good. I’m just going to step outside for a minute and see if I can learn more.”

Cheryl goes out the front door, wanting to confirm that the blackout is not theirs alone. A man in a white hazmat suit is wandering down the middle of the street, swinging what looks like an incense box in front of him, back and forth like a priest at Christmas. “Has anyone seen my queen?” he cries. “My queen has flown away.” She realizes it’s the neighbor. “Stay inside,” he shouts. “The swarm is loose.” She hears the air buzzing and quickly closes the door.

She sends Burton a text, but it bounces back. She calls the nurse stuck in traffic from her cell phone but the call doesn’t go through. She goes from room to room looking for a landline. In Abigail’s closet she finds the powder-blue princess phone. It feels lighter than she remembers a phone feeling. She turns it over—the bottom is covered with duct tape. She peels it off, the insides of the phone have been removed. Four loose joints fall out. She can’t reach Walter.

The house gets warmer and starts to smell of urine and shit. Cheryl opens the glass doors. There are birds outside, the sounds of dogs barking, children playing in a pool, a woman talking in the distance.

Meanwhile, the red and green lights blink and the machines continue to breathe for her mom and dad. The IV bags keep dripping. And her parents, Sylvia and Ben, remain unchanged, their bladders emptying into the plastic containers at the end of the beds.

Cheryl keeps thinking she should do something, but there is nothing to be done.

An hour later, as the backup batteries begin to fade, Cheryl gets the favorite book from her childhood, sits in the Barcalounger between her parents and begins to read aloud. When she is done, she takes her father’s right hand and her mother’s left and draws them to her, holding them close, on her chest, over her heart, praying, waiting.
Coming to bed?

Sorry, dear—hafta work.
GREETINGS FROM

Tulum

PHOTOGRAPHY BY
BRYDIE MACK

Modern-day siren Tara Lynn sends a dazzling dispatch from Mexico’s ecotourism mecca
A Global Girl

With her innate wanderlust and wide-ranging passions, August Playmate Liza Kei is the stunning soul of adventure

If Liza Kei’s otherworldly blue-eyed gaze and delicately wrought bone structure look familiar, it’s probably because she graced our March 2013 cover. “When I was first asked, I said, ‘Are you calling the right number?’” she recalls, laughing. “So I called my mom and told her, ‘Listen, this is the deal.’ Typical Russian mom, her response was ‘What if you can’t marry a prince because you were in PLAYBOY?’ I was like, ‘I can live with that.’ After thinking about it, I decided I want my grandchildren to say Grandma was a PLAYBOY cover girl.”

The former ballet dancer and aspiring architect was discovered at a recital in her hometown of Rostov-on-Don when she was 17; she’s been modeling ever since. “The Russian ballerina is a classic cliché,” she says with a grin, “Second on the list after model!” At first Liza wasn’t sure she’d succeed. “Models always used to be super-tall divas. I’m more of a girl next door.”

Ask Liza to describe herself in three words and she’ll say, “Funny, sexy, sarcastic.” So what makes her feel sexy? “Clean hair, beautiful new lingerie and of course those eyes watching me dance and jump around wearing it.” Just as long as “those eyes” don’t belong to a man with petite feet. “It’s weird, but big feet are important,” she says. “Not necessarily huge, but I need guy feet.”

Other Liza essentials: Russian food, Adidas pants and a good book for plane rides (she has a thing for French philosophers).

The New York City–based model had a revelation in California a few years ago. “I went on a date to Venice Beach. I realized I’m this little girl from Russia and I’ve made it all the way to the other side of the world. It was like, Oh my God.” While she loves to travel, our August Playmate appreciates a relatively pared-down existence. “It’s the simple things in life,” she says. “I love to cuddle. Who doesn’t? There should be an app just for cuddles—cuddles and puppies.”

PHOTOGRAPHY BY CHRISTOPHER VON STEINBACH
“He said he loved me for my mind. I was actually kind of offended.”
AGE: 27  BIRTHPLACE: Rostov-on-Don, Russia  CURRENT CITY: New York, New York

RUSSIAN ROOTS
I have a great solution for when I'm missing Russia. It's called Brighton Beach, Brooklyn. Fancy bitches are like, “Ew!” But I love it. I have a little tradition: I go to this Russian café right on the beach and FaceTime with my mom. She kind of has lunch with me.

WANT TO BUY ME A DRINK?
I was until recently a big fan of gin. I like gins in Germany, the ones with the right herbs. But because I was just working in Mexico, I'm slowly going for tequilas.

MY PERFECT DAY
It would start with a big, big breakfast and turn into a sunny day spent chilling outside in the park. Then I'd jump into a bar for fabulous cocktails with my friends and end with a cozy dinner at home with blankets and movies.

MY PERFECT DATE
It definitely wouldn't be at a big fancy restaurant. In the end, you're not going to remember the food, you're going to remember that certain pause when you appreciate the moment. The moment is everything.

EVERYONE'S A FLOWER
I've had girls say to me, "You're so normal." I'm like, "Well, what did you think, that I puke flowers? Of course I'm normal. Of course I have pimples." The truth is we're all pretty. Think about people's favorite flower: You might assume it's a rose, but it rarely is. Some men love lilies, some love peonies. They're all beautiful, and it's the same with girls.

DESSERT ALWAYS
I cannot leave a restaurant without having dessert. It can be the most exquisite meal, but I need the chocolate cake at the end. Just leave me the dessert cart.

MY HAPPY PLACE
It's a long road to discovering a country. Each one has its rules, its pros and cons. When I'm in Europe, I have nightmares that I'm missing my plane. It's a classic dream: You're packing, and then the plane flies away. When I'm in the States, it never happens. Maybe it's my subconscious telling me New York is my comfort zone.

A SECRET ABOUT ME
I've carried a teddy bear named Rupert with me when I travel ever since I became a model in 2007. He's very old and dirty. My mom always sneaks him into the washing machine when I'm sleeping or out with friends. I actually prefer him dirty, though.

@liza_kei
PLAYBOY’S PARTY JOKES

A man’s number one question when he visits a nude beach for the first time: What should I do if I get an erection? The number two question: Why are there so many dudes here?

My trust issues began when I discovered there was no donkey in Donkey Kong.

When baseball players want to delay ejaculation, do they think about people having sex?

I accidentally texted a picture of my penis to my grandma. She asked me when I shaved my head and lost an eye.

Sometimes just to switch things up I ask my therapist how my lack of progress makes her feel.

Those of you who think the Earth is flat, show some decency. Some planets just take longer than others to develop.

Attendance at the Rodeo Hall of Fame has skyrocketed since it dedicated a statue to the reverse cowgirl.

Caller: Sir, we believe your identity has been stolen.
   Me: I go to sleep at nine P.M. and drive a minivan. I’m sure they’ll give it back.

If eating chocolate makes your brain simulate the feeling of being in love, how many pieces does it take to convince your girlfriend to try anal?

I took the batteries out of the carbon monoxide alarm because the loud beeping was making me feel sick and dizzy.

Kids today will never know the awkwardness of having to meet up with an ex to give them their CDs back.

Sometimes when I’m driving I’m overcome with an urge to plow into an overpass pillar. Anyway, my name is Dave and I’ll be your Uber driver.

A job interview is like a first date. You dress up, pretend to be someone else and spend the whole time wondering if you’re going to get screw.
I recently moved from San Francisco to Kansas City, and after the presidential election I realized, hey, what better way to get to know my new neighbors than by doing a voter registration drive?

“Most politicians are men. Men are liars. You got a petition to end lying?”

“Mama! It’s Pop on the phone!”

“Tell him I’m not here.”

Janet showed me that pragmatism is alive and well.

“Get the fuck off my property!”

I had an exhilarating discussion with Carl about gun policy.

“The real question is, what BBQ sauce goes best on a liberal canvasser?”

“Humans should all get chipped. That’d make registration so much easier.”

“I always knew you were a fascist, Fifi.”
“I voted for Obama, but that was in Tampa.... Can you hold onto this, please? I'm not sure I updated my info.... Hold onto this too, son. Anyway, I'll register online. Don't want to inconvenience you.”

Meanwhile, Yvonne enjoyed getting into the weeds with me on various issues.

“Huh?”

Troy was heavily involved in fixing a broken system.

“It's very brave of you to go door-to-door in such a red district....”

And Suzanne taught me a thing or two about alternative facts.
“Dude, it’s like I’ve been saying: The difference between conservatives and liberals is empathy. We care about people—watch your step—and they don’t.”

“Voter registration is just a start. Next you need to make people sign pledges for clean energy, women’s rights, nuclear disarmament, amnesty for illegal immigrants, refugee resettlement, an independent prosecutor, single-payer health care, affordable child care, universal pre-K education, access to healthy food choices, a ban on ivory imports, reforestation of the Amazon jungle, divestment from Trump businesses, LGBTQ rights...”

“This far is Kansas from Colorado? Weed is totally legal in Colorado.”

“Wait—you moved?”
“Hey! Clean up this mess before we ticket you for littering.”

“Whoops... I guess the squirrels in Kansas are tricky little fellas.”

“VOTER FRAUD!”

I set off once again, eager to register as many folks as possible.

Finally I returned to the district HQ, my feet sore, my back achy and yet my spirit refreshed by so many fascinating encounters.

“Um... there's nothing here except scribbles and paw prints.”

“But the people I met will be inscribed on my heart forever!”
An afternoon ride through Topanga Canyon with the captivating Lis Giolito—and a reminder that sometimes freedom comes on two wheels

PHOTOGRAPHY BY

ANDREW KUYKENDALL
FIND MORE FREE MAGAZINES

FREEMAGS.CC
HERITAGE

Hef’s Visual Diary

The man behind PLAYBOY has comics in his blood
Hugh Hefner is a visual guy—this magazine is proof—and has been his whole life. As a kid he taught himself to draw by mimicking Mickey Mouse cartoons and was soon getting in trouble at school for his exuberant doodling. His output was incredible: stacks of original illustrated stories and full-color comics by the time he reached his mid-teens. Sketching and storytelling were integral to Hef’s development, stoking his creativity and sharpening his knack for visual narration in ways that would later influence this very publication. In high school Hef began to chronicle his life in a multivolume hand-drawn, lightly fictionalized comic book—“sort of an illustrated diary and scrapbook,” as he describes it in the typewritten intro to volume 36. The series starts out with the title School Daze and stars Hef’s alter ego, Goo Hef-fer. (On the previous page, Hef poses in the early 1950s with his cartoon memoir surrounding him on the floor.) He continued to record his life in comic form until PLAYBOY became his full-time focus; after volume 53, the project evolved into more of a scrapbook featuring family photos and PLAYBOY particulars. Here we present some choice selections of young Hef’s handiwork.

The Early Years

“He constantly draws,” complained Hef’s fourth-grade teacher in a note sent home to his mother. By the time he entered high school in 1940, Hef had drawn more than 70 original comic books, including Horror Stories and The Skull Becomes Invisible (above). Thrilled with tales of monsters, mummies and other creepy creatures, Hef launched Shudder magazine (left) in 1941 at the age of 15, drawing and typing up an issue every month from May to September, and held meetings of the members-only Shudder Club with his friends. (Horror movie actors Bela Lugosi, Boris Karloff and Peter Lorre were honorary co-presidents; Lugosi played Dracula and Karloff played Frankenstein on the big screen.) Hef has called these early endeavors “the most obvious forerunner to the creation of PLAYBOY magazine and the Playboy Clubs.”
A Maturing Style

The diary marked milestones in Hef’s life. The three volumes below chronicle, from left, Hef’s high school friendships and an early romantic crush (the green winged figure at bottom is recurring character Mr. C—Hef’s conscience); earning another stripe in the Army and coming down with the measles; and celebrating the Fighting Illini’s Big Nine victory in 1946. Hef joined the Army soon after high school and served for two years. During this time, he inked cartoons for Army newspapers and continued his comic diary, even lugging his typewriter to basic training. “I would have made sergeant,” Hef said, “but my lieutenant didn’t like the fact that I spent so much time drawing cartoons.” It was in the Army that Hef had an epiphany: “[I] began considering cartooning as a possible career.” At left, Hef memorializes the moment he learned World War II had ended. Taking advantage of the GI Bill, he enrolled at the University of Illinois, where he majored in psychology, minored in creative arts and drew cartoons, including the one above, for student publications.
An Aspiring Cartoonist

After graduating from college, Hef moved to Chicago’s South Side, where his choice of apartment décor was appropriate: He plastered one room’s walls with the funny pages (above). While continuing his drawn diary, he also developed two original comics—the detective strip Gene Fantas: Psycho-Investigator (top right) and the university-centered Freddie Frat—that he hoped would be picked up for syndication; neither succeeded. Undeterred, in the early 1950s Hef self-published That Toddlin’ Town (right), a slim paperback of original cartoons satirizing life in Chicago, including the sultry scene below. Described as “a humorous poke at [Chicago’s] institutions, its culture, its sex life,” That Toddlin’ Town was well received. Hef commemorated the making of the book in volume 48 of his cartoon autobiography—but he had bigger ideas brewing.

“I couldn’t take those off, honey! It’d make the show indecent!”
The Magazine

Hef's plan for a new type of men's magazine, percolating in his mind for some time, began to come together in 1953 and is duly documented in his cartoon of record—including the moments he decided on the magazine title and on the Rabbit as a logo (panels above). The cover of volume 52 (top right) is based on a photo (top left) of Hef working on the very first issue of Playboy; in his comic diary, Hef laments, "I've had to rewrite every damn thing in the first issue!" Needless to say, all the hard work paid off. After it began publication in December 1953, Playboy became a sensation. (Far right: Hef and the first issue of the magazine.) The 53rd installment of Hef's diary shows him sitting up straight behind a grand modernist desk (right)—a quiet harbinger of the change and growth Hef would drive over the next six decades and beyond.
HEATHER VAN EVERY

July 1971 Playmate

Many Playmates proclaim a laid-back approach to life, but few have appeared as genuine about it as Heather Van Every. A Bunny at Denver’s Playboy Club—a job she described as “less like working than being a hostess at a party”—Heather was 19 when she posed for PLAYBOY. Yet the cycling enthusiast and avid skier preferred relishing Colorado’s outdoors to bagging more modeling gigs. “I really like to get away and just sit. Not to think about anything in particular, just to relax in the mountain air.” Call it a beautiful marriage of athleticism and idleness. “I’m not one of those people who are always in motion, always doing something or planning something,” she said. “I guess some people would say I’m lazy, but I wouldn’t want it any other way.”
In her pictorial interview, sun-kissed California native Teri Peterson was unafraid to be a woman of contradictions. The newly minted Playmate described herself as “exceedingly shy,” but that didn’t stop her from speaking candidly on the topic of—what else?—sex. “I like to ‘fool around,’ so to speak, in exotic, unusual places...anywhere it’s generally taboo. It’s a lot more exciting that way,” she said. Teri described sex as “an artistic expression created by two people. Of course, it helps if you’re in love.” The archetypal blonde beauty was known for her confidence and unique personal style: “I like looking somewhat bizarre because I really don’t care what people think.” Far more beautiful than bizarre, her Centerfold image was printed on limited-edition Burton snowboards in 2008.
CLASSIC CARTOONS
A trip into our archive turned up adventures and misadventures alike
ONLY THE BOOK IS COVERED
THE COMPLETE CENTERFOLDS AVAILABLE NOW AT PLAYBOYSHOP.COM

Take 10% off with this code: MAG10
"When the renting agent said I’d have to share a bath, I didn’t realize it would be so much fun."

"Whatever you do, don’t mention the captain’s new nose job."

"Didn’t I tell you that backpacking was a lot of fun?"

"Whatever it is, it’s not in Audubon."
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Product Description</th>
<th>Original Price</th>
<th>Discounted Price</th>
<th>Brand</th>
<th>Model</th>
<th>Code</th>
<th>SKU</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>RAPID PUMP® 1.5 TON ALUMINUM RACING JACK</td>
<td>$597.00</td>
<td>$499.00</td>
<td>Harbor Freight</td>
<td>63160/60696</td>
<td>62516/60569</td>
<td>129.99</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4000 PEAK/3200 RUNNING WATTS 6.5 HP (212 CC) GAS GENERATOR</td>
<td>$1099.00</td>
<td>$899.00</td>
<td>Harbor Freight</td>
<td>69026/62877/62869</td>
<td>69053/69726/63001/60689</td>
<td>199.99</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18 VOLT CORDLESS 3/8” DRILL/DRIVER AND FLASHLIGHT KIT</td>
<td>$399.00</td>
<td>$299.00</td>
<td>Harbor Freight</td>
<td>69287/60569</td>
<td>69386/62869</td>
<td>199.99</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21 GALLON, 2.5 HP 125 PSI VERTICAL OIL-LUBE AIR COMPRESSOR</td>
<td>$149.99</td>
<td>$59.99</td>
<td>Harbor Freight</td>
<td>66055/62418</td>
<td>66557/62418</td>
<td>199.99</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>72” x 80” MOVING BLANKET</td>
<td>$9.98</td>
<td>$3.98</td>
<td>Harbor Freight</td>
<td>69050/62418</td>
<td>66557/62418</td>
<td>199.99</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17 FT. TYPE IA MULTI-TASK LADDER</td>
<td>$199.99</td>
<td>$149.99</td>
<td>Harbor Freight</td>
<td>62655/62514</td>
<td>67646/62418</td>
<td>281.87</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4 CHANNEL WIRELESS SURVEILLANCE SYSTEM WITH 2 CAMERAS</td>
<td>$299.99</td>
<td>$199.99</td>
<td>Harbor Freight</td>
<td>62386/60689</td>
<td>61836/63010</td>
<td>499.97</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3 TON HEAVY DUTY STEEL JACK STANDS</td>
<td>$179.99</td>
<td>$129.99</td>
<td>Harbor Freight</td>
<td>61790/38845</td>
<td>63160/38845</td>
<td>199.99</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12 VOLT 10/20 AMP BATTERY CHARGER/ENGINE STARTER</td>
<td>$299.99</td>
<td>$149.99</td>
<td>Harbor Freight</td>
<td>61836/63010</td>
<td>63160/38845</td>
<td>499.97</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4 PIECE, 1” x 15 FT. RATCHETING TIE DOWNS</td>
<td>$69.99</td>
<td>$39.99</td>
<td>Harbor Freight</td>
<td>61836/63010</td>
<td>63160/38845</td>
<td>499.97</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Discounts are valid as of 10/31/17. Prices and availability subject to change. Restrictions may apply. See store or website for details.
KENYA, 1970
Hugh Hefner and Barbi Benton on safari.
1:6-Scale 1920 Indian Motorcycle®
Precision-crafted die-cast replica available from Hamilton... but only for a limited time!

BIG 1:6 Scale
This rugged die cast measures in at 14.5"L x 7"H x 2"W to make an outstanding display in any collection!

Over a foot long!

White Rubber Tires & Built-in Stand
Rubber is white when manufactured, and charcoal is added later to dye it black. This process didn’t start till later, so the Scout™ featured white rubber tires!

Bikes of the 1920s featured a rear stand to keep a cycle upright when not in use. With a simple flip up over the rear wheel, you were ready to go!

365-Day Money-Back Guarantee
At Hamilton, your satisfaction is unconditionally guaranteed! If not delighted with your acquisition, you may return it to us within one year for a full refund — including shipping and service!

LIMITED-TIME OFFER!
Orders will be accepted only on a first-come, first-served basis. Please respond as soon as possible to reserve this “1:6-Scale 1920 Indian Motorcycle™“ die cast in your name.

*Add a total of $21.00 for shipping and service. Deliveries to FL and IL will be billed appropriate sales tax. All orders are subject to product availability and credit approval. Allow 6 to 8 weeks after initial payment for shipment.

MAIL TO
The Hamilton Collection
9204 Center For The Arts Drive, Niles, Illinois 60714-1300

☑ YES! Please reserve the “1:6-scale 1920 Indian Motorcycle™“ die cast for me as described in this announcement.

SEND NO MONEY NOW!

Name___________________________
Address____________________________
City___________________State_______Zip________

Email (optional)________________________

Signature___________________________

09-06002-001-E30201
Own a piece of motorcycle history with the Scout™!

In 1920, Indian Motorcycle® company created the fastest motorcycle of its time — the original Scout™! Designed by motorcycle racer Charles B. Franklin at the company’s factory in Springfield, Massachusetts, it featured a V-twin engine, transmission bolted to the engine casing, and helical-cut gears instead of a primary chain, changing the design — and speed — of motorcycles forever!

Now Hamilton brings you an historically-accurate 1:6-scale die cast of this revolutionary motorcycle, manufactured by SpecCast. Measuring over a foot long, the “1920 Indian Motorcycle®” die-cast replica features functional steering with real white rubber tires ... built-in stand ... detailed engine ... authentic, hand-applied logos ... hand-painted showroom finish ... and more!

Your satisfaction is 100% guaranteed!

By reserving your “1920 Indian Motorcycle®” from Hamilton, you’re fully backed by our 365-Day Guarantee — if you’re not 100% satisfied with your acquisition, you can return it to us within one year for a full refund ... no questions asked. Plus, you can also take advantage of Hamilton’s convenient payment plan and pay for this highly-detailed $149.95 die-cast motorcycle in just five affordable installments of $29.99*. Send no money now; we’ll bill only your first installment prior to shipment. That way you can display your “1920 Indian Motorcycle®” right away without having to wait. So don’t delay. Hamilton only has a limited number of issues available. Reserve yours now before this special offer races away!

Fastest way to order:

HamiltonCollection.com/1920Indian

Authentic Logo

Proudly displayed on the frame, you’ll find an authentic logo to let you know this is true Indian Motorcycle® collectible die cast.

---

Mail Today!

BUSINESS REPLY MAIL

FIRST-CLASS MAIL PERMIT NO. 93008 CHICAGO IL

THE HAMILTON COLLECTION
9204 CENTER FOR THE ARTS DR
NILES IL 60714-9789

NO POSTAGE NECESSARY IF MAILED IN THE UNITED STATES

©2017 H.C. All Rights Reserved.
The Indian Motorcycle® corporate name, Indian Motorcycle® logos and other Indian Motorcycle® trademarks © 2017 Indian Motorcycle International, LLC. Manufactured by SpecCast under license with Indian Motorcycle International, LLC 09-06002-001-JIS
Official Licensed Marvel Merchandise

Not Sold in Stores!

Buy Yours Online at www.bradfordexchange.com/26706

© 2017 MARVEL ©2017 The Bradford Exchange Printed in U.S.A. 01-26706-001-SI

PRIORITY RESERVATION SEND NO MONEY NOW

THE BRADFORD EXCHANGE
APPLIAGE & ACCESSORIES

9345 Milwaukee Avenue - Niles, IL 60714-1393

YES. Please reserve the Marvel Avengers Men’s Hoodie for me as described in this announcement. Please Respond Promptly

☐ Medium (38-40) 01-26706-011
☐ Large (42-44) 01-26706-012
☐ XL (46-48) 01-26706-013
☐ XXL (50-52) 01-26706-014
☐ XXXL (54-56) 01-26706-015

Mrs. Mr. Ms.

Name (Please Print Clearly)

Address

City State Zip

E-mail (optional)

*Plus $11.99 shipping and service. Please allow 6-8 weeks after initial payment for shipment. Sales subject to product availability and order acceptance.
Avengers Assemble!

Team up with earth’s mightiest superheroes—the Marvel Avengers! Our hoodie features custom sketch-style artwork of Iron Man, Captain America, Thor, and The Hulk in different action poses on the back and along the front left side. Incorporated into the artwork is the Marvel Avengers logo. Crafted in a black cotton-blend knit, the hoodie is styled with rib knit cuffs and hem, a hood with gray thermal lining, kangaroo pockets, and metal toggles on the drawstring cords. Imported.

A REMARKABLE VALUE...
SATISFACTION GUARANTEED

Available in five men’s sizes from M-XXXL, this bold wardrobe essential is a remarkable value at $89.95*, payable in 4 easy installments of $22.49 each and backed by our 30-day, full money-back guarantee. To reserve yours, send no money now; just return the Priority Reservation. You won’t find this Avengers hoodie anywhere else—so don’t be disappointed, order today!

WWW.BRADFORDEXCHANGE.COM/26706

A DESIGN ORIGINAL FROM
THE BRADFORD EXCHANGE

THE BRADFORD EXCHANGE
9345 N MILWAUKEE AVE
NILES IL 60714-9891

OFFICIAL MARVEL LICENSED PRODUCT
© 2017 MARVEL
© 2017 The Bradford Exchange
Printed in U.S.A. 01-26706-001-SI
WWW.BRADYEXCHANGECOM/904540

Each Plays a Different KISS® Hit Song

KISS® Hit Song

"Love Gun" - Paul - "I Was Made for Lovin' You" - Peter - "Detroit Shoreline" - Ace - "I'm Alive" - Gene

For KISS®, a taste of rock & roll is the perfect way to celebrate the band's 40th anniversary. The collection features authentic, hand-painted and hand-dressed rock band members with illuminated musical instruments and figures that scroll along. The "Destroyer" collection celebrates 40 years of the double platinum rock band and includes Ace Frehley and Peter Criss. The collection also features the KISS® logo and the band members from the album's cover art. The figures feature illuminated musical instruments, including a guitar, bass, and drum set. The collection is housed in a display case and includes a certificate of authenticity. The figures are available in limited quantities and are expected to sell out quickly. The collection is priced at $99.99 per figure or $399.99 for the entire collection. Shipping is included in the price. }

Play Your Favorite KISS® Music

DESTROYER ILLUMINATED FIGURINES

A First-Pounding Masterpiece from Rock Legends
The Jedi Master appears in heroic bronze with lifelike green patina

- Yoda's famous words of wisdom are illuminated on the lamp shade
- Meticulously hand-crafted by expert artisans

Jedi Logo, Yoda's words, and shade interior all appear in shiny gold

RESERVATION APPLICATION SEND NO MONEY NOW

9345 Milwaukee Avenue · Niles, IL 60714-1393

YES. Please reserve the Jedi Master Yoda™ Masterpiece Lamp for me as described in this announcement.

Limit: one per order. Please Respond Promptly

Mrs. Mr. Ms. Name (Please Print Clearly)

Address

City

State Zip

Email (optional)

© A. TM Lucatelli Ltd. ©2017 BE 01-22348-001-SR

*Plus a total of $21.99 shipping and service. Limited-edition presentation restricted to 295 casting days. Please allow 4-6 weeks after initial payment for shipment. Sales subject to product availability and order acceptance.
THE TRUTH, IT IS.

It is wisdom only a real master of the Force fully understands, the knowledge that your will can move anything in the universe if it is only correctly applied. Now, the words of an adept inspire The Jedi Master Yoda™ Masterpiece Lamp, available exclusively from The Bradford Exchange.

Now Master Yoda, brings the words of wisdom imparted to Luke Skywalker on Dagobah to your desktop in an all-new sculpted desk lamp. The master appears as a bronze sculpture with a hand-applied finish that enhances subtle details in his appearance and robe. A standard light bulb controlled by a switch illuminates his words on the lamp’s textured cloth shade, which also bears the Jedi logo. A golden lining helps reflect the radiance downward.

STRONG DEMAND EXPECTED IS; ORDER NOW, YOU SHOULD.

The Jedi Master Yoda™ Masterpiece Lamp comes with a 365-day money-back guarantee and is issued in a strictly limited edition. Secure yours now. Supply will soon be depleted. Act now to obtain it in four installments of $44.99, for a total of $179.95*. Send no money now. Just return the Reservation Application today!

www.bradfordexchange.com/yoda

CUT ALONG DOTTED LINE

BUSINESS REPLY MAIL
FIRST-CLASS MAIL PERMIT NO. 73554 CHICAGO IL
POSTAGE WILL BE PAID BY ADDRESSEE

THE BRADFORD EXCHANGE
9345 N MILWAUKEE AVE
NILES IL 60714-9891

NO POSTAGE NECESSARY IF MAILED IN THE UNITED STATES
The Legends of STAR TREK™
Masterpiece Collection

Handcrafted & hand-painted sculptures celebrating over 50 years of exploring the Final Frontier!

Issue Two
“Live long and prosper™”
A tribute to Mr. Spock

Premiere Issue
“Captain James T. Kirk”

Measures an impressive 7¼" H x 7" W
Figurine measures approx. 6¼" H
Product subject to change.

Yes! Please order The “Legends of Star Trek™” Masterpiece Collection for me as described in this announcement starting with “Captain James T. Kirk.”

SEND NO MONEY NOW
Certificate of Authenticity and 365-Day, Unconditional Guarantee

*Plus $10.99 shipping and service. All sales subject to acceptance and product availability. Please allow 4-6 weeks after initial payment for shipment.

www.bradfordexchange.com/Legends

Not Available in Any Store!—Please Respond Promptly

9210 N. MARYLAND ST.,
NILES, IL 60714-1322

Hawthorne Village Division

Signature

Mrs. Mr. Ms.

Name (PLEASE PRINT CLEARLY)

Address

Apt. No.

City

State

Zip

E-mail

917892-E30201
Collectible treasures honoring the greatest Sci-Fi series ever!

With phaser in hand, Captain James T. Kirk stands ready to defend his crew and ship from any and all intergalactic peril in the Premier Issue of the stunning The “Legends of Star Trek™” Masterpiece Collection.

Superbly handcrafted and hand-painted for incredible detailing and exceptional realism.

You’ll appreciate all the meticulous handcrafting and hand-painting of each issue that will bring the legendary characters of Star Trek so vividly to life! You’ll also enjoy all the superb features of each masterpiece sculpture including …

- Sculpted backdrop inspired by the U.S.S. Enterprise’s bridge that displays classic scenes from the TV series
- The highly-detailed raised-relief sculpture of the Starship Enterprise
- Elegantly mounted on a handsome gloss black base featuring the official Starfleet insignia

An incredible collection and an absolute Must-Have for Fans of Star Trek!

Begin your collection with the heirloom-quality sculpture of “Captain James T. Kirk,” yours for $79.98*, payable in 3 payments of $26.66, the first billed before shipment.

Subsequent issues of other Star Trek legends—including Spock, Bones, Uhura, Scotty, notorious galactic foes and more!—will each be billed separately at the same attractive price as Issue One and sent about every other month. Our best-in-the-business 365-day money-back guarantee assures your satisfaction and you may cancel at any time.

Not Available in Any Store. Proceed now at Warp Speed!

Strong demand from the galaxy of Star Trek fans is expected. You need send no money now. Just complete and mail the post paid Reservation Application today. Live long and prosper™!

---

Time-intensive handcrafting and hand-painting produces amazing details and lifelike realism that capture the passion & intensity of the greatest Captain in Starfleet … James Tiberius Kirk!
WOULD YOU PAY TO SEE THE MOVIE OF YOUR LIFE?

START YOUR LEGEND
Scout

INDIAN MOTORCYCLE COMPANY
1901

It's not too late to change the plot. Inject more passion. Add more swagger. The Indian® Scout™ starting at $8,999—a small price to pay for a life that's larger than life. Build your own at indianmotorcycle.com.