"The legal term for killing a man, whether lawfully or unlawfully, is 'homicide.' There is no crime of 'homicide.' Unlawful homicide at common law comprises the two crimes of murder and manslaughter. Other forms of unlawful homicide have been created by statute: certain new forms of manslaughter (homicide with diminished responsibility, and suicide pact), infanticide, and causing death by dangerous driving." Glanville Williams, Textbook of Criminal Law 204 (1978).

criminal homicide. (1850) 1. Homicide prohibited and punishable by law, such as murder or manslaughter.
Criminal homicide is everywhere divided into categories that reflect the historical distinction in English law between murder and manslaughter. American statutory formations have varied the terminology and the precise classifications, many statutes create more than two forms of criminal homicide, for purposes of definition and/or punishment. These variations notwithstanding, it is usually possible to discern a category that corresponds to the common-law crime of murder, the paradigm of which is a deliberate killing without legal justification or excuse, and a category that corresponds to the common-law crime of manslaughter and comprises killings that either are committed in circumstances which substantially mitigate their intentional aspect or are not intentional. In common speech as well as in the law, murder refers to the most serious criminal homicides, and manslaughter to those that may be serious crimes for which a substantial penalty is imposed but lack the special gravity of murder. — Lloyd L. Weinreb, "Homicide: Legal Aspects," in 2 Encyclopedia of Crime and Justice 855, 857 (Sanford H. Kadish ed., 1983).

criminially negligent homicide. See negligent homicide. culpable homicide. Scots law. A wrongful act that results in a person’s death but does not amount to murder. Cf. MANSLAUGHTER.

excusable homicide. (18c) 1. Homicide resulting from a person’s lawful act, committed without intention to harm another. [Cases: Homicide C=750.] 2. See justifiable homicide (1).

felonious homicide. (18c) Homicide committed unlawfully, without legal justification or excuse. • This is the category into which murder and manslaughter fall.

homicide by abuse. (1989) Homicide in which the perpetrator, under circumstances showing an extreme indifference to human life, causes the death of the perpetrator’s dependent — usu. a child or mentally retarded person. [Cases: Homicide C=533.]

homicide by misadventure. See ACCIDENTAL KILLING. homicide per infortunium (par in-for-t[oo]-nee-am). [Latin "homicide by misfortune"] (1856) The unintentional killing of another while engaged in a lawful act: ACCIDENTAL KILLING. See PER INFORTUNIUM. [Cases: Homicide C=762.] innocent homicide. (1844) Homicide that does not involve criminal guilt.

justifiable homicide. (18c) 1. The killing of another in self-defense when faced with the danger of death or serious bodily injury. — Also termed excusable homicide. See SELF-DEFENSE (1). 2. A killing mandated or permitted by the law, such as execution for a capital crime or killing to prevent a crime or a criminal’s escape. [Cases: Homicide C=752–756.]

"It should be noted that a justifiable homicide is not criminal, since it is a killing which the law has either commanded or permitted: the actus in such a case is not legally punishable, and therefore we may perhaps say that it is an actus of killing which is not reus. As we shall see in most cases of justifiable homicide the killing is intentional, and therefore the mental element of criminal responsibility is clearly present; but there is no crime committed since there is no actus reus." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny’s Outlines of Criminal Law 109 (16th ed. 1952).

"English lawyers once distinguished between 'excusable' homicide (e.g. accidental non-negligent killing) and 'justifiable' homicide (e.g. killing in self-defence or in the arrest of a felon) and different legal consequences once attached to these two forms of homicide. To the modern lawyer this distinction has no longer any legal importance: he would simply consider both kinds of homicide to be cases where some element, negative or positive, required in the full definition of criminal homicide (murder or manslaughter) was lacking. But the distinction between these two different ways in which actions may fail to constitute a criminal offence is still of great moral importance. Killing in self-defence is an exception to a general rule making killing punishable; it is admitted because the policy or aims which in general justify the punishment of killing (e.g. protection of human life) do not include cases such as this. In the case of 'justification' what is done is regarded as something which the law does not condemn, or even welcomes." H.L.A. Hart, "Prolegomenon to the Principles of Punishment," in Punishment and Responsibility 1, 13 (1968).

negligent homicide. (1859) Homicide resulting from the careless performance of a legal or illegal act in which the danger of death is apparent; the killing of a human being by criminal negligence. — Also termed criminally negligent homicide. See criminal negligence under NEGLIGENCE. [Cases: Homicide C=708.]

"There is no common-law offense known as 'negligent homicide.' As a matter of the common law of crimes any killing below the grade of manslaughter is innocent homicide. Some of the new penal codes have a classification scheme which (omitting degrees or other variations) divides criminal homicide into murder, manslaughter and criminally negligent homicide — or simply negligent homicide. For the most part, however, this has been achieved by removing from manslaughter the offense of homicide by criminal negligence and using this to constitute the newly named offense. Thus, though there are a few exceptions, most states will have no homicide offense which would be below common-law manslaughter." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 116–17 (3d ed. 1982).

nonfelonious homicide. A killing that is legally either excusable or justifiable. See excusable homicide; justifiable homicide.

reckless homicide. (1866) The unlawful killing of another person with conscious indifference toward that person’s life. Cf. MANSLAUGHTER. [Cases: Homicide C=709.]

vehicular homicide. (1952) The killing of a person as a result of the unlawful or negligent operation of a motor vehicle. — Also termed automobile homicide. [Cases: Automobiles C=342.1.] victim-precipitated homicide. 1. See suicide-by-cop under SUICIDE. 2. A killing provoked by the victim who consciously intended to die at the hands of another person. • This term applies loosely to any assisted suicide. Unlike most types of homicide, the victim bears some of the responsibility for causing his or her own death.

willful homicide. (1860) The act of intentionally causing a person’s death, with or without legal justification.
homicidium (hom-ə-st-dee-am), n. [Latin "felling of a person"] Homicide.

homicidium ex casu (eks kə-y-ə-loom). Homicide by accident. See accidental killing.

hotchpot (hoch-pot), n. (16c) 1. The blending of items of property to secure equality of division, esp. as practiced either in cases of divorce or in cases in which advancements of an intestate's property must be made up to the estate by a contribution or by an accounting. Also termed hotchpotch; hotchpot rule. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C=108; Wills C=762.]

"[T]he distribution of the property among the children is subject to what is called the hotchpot rule, the purpose of which is to ensure that the shares of all the children shall be equal. The rule is that any money or property which the intestate has paid to, or settled on, or covenanted to settle on a child, either by way of advancement or in view of marriage, shall be brought into account and deducted from the share which is payable to that child under the intestacy." G.C. Cheshire, Modern Law of Real Property 783-84 (3d ed. 1933).

hot-news test. Intellectual property. A judicial test for determining whether a misappropriation claim is preempted by the Sears-Compo doctrine, consisting in analyzing whether, in addition to the elements of copyright infringement, the claim also requires proof of (1) time-sensitive information collected at a cost to the plaintiff, (2) unfair use of that information by a directly competing defendant who has made no similar investment, and (3) a consequent threat to the plaintiff's commercial existence.

hot-potato rule. The principle that a lawyer may not unreasonably withdraw from representing a client. The term comes from the rule's classic formulation: "a firm may not drop a client like a 'hot potato,' especially if it is in order to keep happy a far more lucrative client." Picker Int'l, Inc. v. Varian Assocs., Inc., 670 F. Supp. 1363, 1365 (N.D. Ohio 1987). An exception may be allowed for a conflict of interest arising from circumstances beyond the control of the lawyer or the law firm. See thrust-upon conflict under conflict of interest. [Cases: Attorney and Client C=20.]

housebreaking. (17c) The crime of breaking into a dwelling or other secured building, with the intent to commit a felony inside; burglary. • Burglary is now used more frequently than housebreaking. In England, for example, housebreaking was replaced in 1968 with statutory burglary, though the term is still used in Scots law. In some jurisdictions, housebreaking includes "breaking out" of a house that was entered without a breaking. [Cases: Burglary C=1]. — housebreaker, n.

"The oldest term for this purpose [i.e., of distinguishing between common-law burglary and its statutory enlargements], still encountered at times, is 'housebreaking'; a more recent suggestion is 'breaking and entering,' and peace officers sometimes speak of a 'breakin." — Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 270 (3d ed. 1982).

constructive housebreaking. A breaking made out by construction of law, as when a burglar gains entry by threat or fraud. — Also termed constructive breaking into a house. [Cases: Burglary C=9].

houseburning. The common-law misdemeanor of intentionally burning one's own house that is within city limits or that is close enough to other houses that they might be in danger of catching fire (even though no actual damage to them may result). — Also termed combustio domorum. Cf. arson. [Cases: Arson C=2].

hovering act. Int'l law. A statute applying to a coastal country's criminal jurisdiction over ships, and persons aboard those ships, when the ships are outside the country's territory.

"The notion of hovering acts evolved long before that of a belt of uniform width in the form of territorial waters. Great Britain's first anti-smuggling legislation to operate at a stated distance seaward was in 1719, applying to the master of any ship 'found at anchor or hovering within two leagues from the shore.' Later enactments extended this limit to three, then four, then eight leagues. A statute of 1794 gave power to seize and confiscate by authority of any ship 'found at anchor or hovering' 'within specific straight lines drawn between lines on the British coasts, thus resembling the 'King's Chambers' of the Stuart era. In 1805 the British Parliament extended the seizure limit to 100 leagues (300 miles) from the coasts of Great Britain and Ireland in respect of vessels 'belonging wholly or in part to His Majesty's subjects, or whereof one-half of the persons on board shall be subjects of His Majesty.' Foreign-flag vessels could have fallen within this category. In the case of Le Louis (1817) 165 E.R. 1464, the British Admiralty judge hundred. (bef. 12c) 1. Formerly, a county subdivision that had its own local court.

The hundred was a group of adjoining townships. It may have consisted of an area taxed at one hundred hides. Other explanations of the term 'hundred' are that the unit 'may have consisted of one hundred households, or the area had to supply one hundred fighting men for the national defence.' L.B. Curzon, English Legal History 7 (2d ed. 1979).

2. The populace of such a subdivision. 3. See hundred court under COURT. 4. In the United States, a politcival division derived from the English county division.

• Hundreds existed in colonial Delaware, Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. Today, they exist only in Delaware. — hundredal (hun-dr-i-dal), adj.

Hundredarius (han-dr-i-dair-ee-as), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. HUNDREDARY. 2. HUNDREDOR (1).

hypothecation (hi-poth-a-kay-shan), n. (17c) The pledging of something as security without delivery of title or possession. [Cases: Pledges C–9 1–26; Secured Transactions C–9 1.] — hypothecator (hi-poth-a-kay­tar), n.

general hypothecation. 1. A debtor's pledge to allow all the property named in the security instrument to serve as collateral and to be used to satisfy the outstanding debt. 2. See tacit hypothecation (1), (2).

tacit hypothecation. 1. Civil law. A type of lien or mortgage that is created by operation of law and without the parties' express agreement. — Also termed tacit mortgage. 2. See maritime lien under LIEN.

hypothéque (ee-poh-tek), n. French law. Hypothecation: the right vested in a creditor by the assignment to the creditor of real estate as security for a debt, whether or not accompanied by possession. • Hypothèque may be légale, as the charge that the state has over the lands of its accountants, or that a married woman has over the lands of her husband; judiciaire, when it is the result of a judgment of a court of justice; or conventionelle, when it is the result of the parties' agreement.

hypothesis (hi-poth-rl-sis). (16c) 1. A supposition based upon evidence but not proven; a proposed explanation, supported by evidence, that serves as a starting point for investigation. 2. A theory or supposition proposed for the sake of debate.

hypothetical, adj. (16c) 1. Involving tentative theory or supposition adopted provisionally; assumed or postulated merely for the sake of argument.

hypothetical, n. (17c) A proposition or statement that is presumed true for the sake of logical analysis or debate. • Hypotheticals are often used as teaching tools to illustrate the application of legal principles or to explore the potential consequences of words and actions. See HYPOTHETICAL QUESTION.

hypothetical contract. See conditional contract under CONTRACT.

hypothetical creditor. See CREDITOR.

hypothetical negotiation. A judicial construct used to calculate damages in a patent infringement suit by arriving at a figure that would have been reasonable royalty acceptable to both parties. [Cases: Patents C–9 318(4.1).]

hypothetical-person defense. (1979) An entrapment defense in which the defendant asserts that an undercover law-enforcement officer (or person acting at the law-enforcement officer's direction) encouraged the defendant to engage in the criminal conduct either by making false representations designed to convince the defendant that the conduct was not prohibited, or by hypothetical pleading

using persuasive methods that created a substantial risk that the charged offense would be committed by a person who was not otherwise inclined to commit it.

• This defense has been adopted by a minority of states and by the Model Penal Code. — Also termed objective method. See Model Penal Code § 2.13. Cf. SHERMA-SORRELLS DOCTRINE. [Cases: Criminal Law C=37.]

hypothetical question. (1826) A trial device that solicits an expert witness's opinion based on assumptions treated as facts established by evidence. — Also termed abstract question. [Cases: Criminal Law C=485; Evidence C=551; Witnesses C=237.]

hypothetical tenant. Hist. A fictional person used for assessing property taxes, which are based on what the person would pay to lease the property.
IABA. abbr. INTER-AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION.
IAF. abbr. INTER-AMERICAN FOUNDATION.
IAIP. abbr. INFORMATION ANALYSIS AND INFRASTRUCTURE PROTECTION DIRECTORATE.

ibi. [Latin] There and then.

ibid. (ib-id). abbr. [Latin ibidem] (17c) In the same place.
- This abbreviation, used in citations (mostly outside law), denotes that the reference is to a work cited immediately before, and that the cited matter appears on the same page of the same book (unless a different page is specified). — Also termed ib. Cf. ID.

ICANN. abbr. INTERNET CORPORATION FOR ASSIGNED NAMES AND NUMBERS.

ICC. abbr. 1. INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION. 2. INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURT.

ICJ. abbr. INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE.

ICPC. abbr. INTERSTATE COMPACT ON THE PLACEMENT OF CHILDREN.

ICSID (ik-sid). abbr. INTERNATIONAL CENTRE FOR SETTLEMENT OF INVESTMENT DISPUTES.

ICWA. abbr. INDIAN CHILD WELFARE ACT.

id. (id). abbr. [Latin idem] (17c) The same. • Id. is used in a legal citation to refer to the authority cited immediately before <id. at 55>. Cf. IBID.

IDA. abbr. INVESTMENT-DIRECTION AGREEMENT.

IDEA. abbr. INDIVIDUALS WITH DISABILITIES EDUCATION ACT.

idea-expression dichotomy. Copyright. The fundamental rule that copyright law protects only specific expressions of an idea, not the idea itself. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ≤4.5.]

idem per idem (1-dem por 1-dem). [Latin] The same for the same. • This phrase refers to an illustration that adds nothing to a matter under consideration.

idem sonans (1-dem soh-nanz), adj. [Latin] (1856) (Of words or names) sounding the same, regardless of spelling «the names Gene and Jean are idem sonans».
- In trademark law, the term designates a name that sounds close enough to a registered trademark to create confusion among consumers and infringe that mark, so the Steinway company was able to prevent a competitor from registering "Steinberg" for the name of its pianos. [Cases: Names ≤16; Trademarks ≤1098.]

"The names of parties should be correctly spelled, but misspelling which does not change the sound works no harm; it matters not how incorrectly names are spelled, if they are idem sonans (the same sound)." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 186 (2d ed. 1899).

idem sonans (1-dem soh-nanz), n. [Latin] (1848) A legal doctrine preventing a variant spelling of a name in a document from voiding the document if the misspelling is pronounced the same way as the true spelling. [Cases: Names ≤16.]

identification of goods. (1887) A process that enables a buyer to obtain an identifiable (and therefore insurable) interest in goods before taking possession from the seller. • The goods are identified in any manner agreed to by the parties. UCC § 2-501. [Cases: Sales ≤199, 208.]

identified adoption. See private adoption under ADOPTION.

identify, vb. (18c) 1. To prove the identity of (a person or thing) «the witness identified the weapon». 2. To look upon as being associated (with) «the plaintiff was identified with the environmental movement». 3. To specify (certain goods) as the object of a contract «identify the appliances to the contract». See IDENTIFICATION OF GOODS. [Cases: Sales ≤199, 208.]

identifying material. Copyright. A portion or representation of an entire work deposited with the U.S. Copyright Office. • A copyright registrant is required to deposit at least one complete copy of the work, and often two. If a trade secret would be disclosed by a deposit or the work’s nature (e.g., a holograph) makes deposit difficult, a substitution is acceptable. Common forms of identifying material are drawings, photocopies, and selected pages of software code and databases. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ≤50.10.]

identikit. A collection of pictures of facial features, used by police to create a composite image of a suspect from witnesses’ descriptions. • In Great Britain, the resulting image is called a photofit.

identity. (16c) 1. The identical nature of two or more things; esp., in patent law, the sameness in two devices of the function performed, the way it is performed, and the result achieved. • Under the doctrine of equivalents, infringement may be found even if the accused device is not identical to the claimed invention. See DOCTRINE OF EQUIVALENTS. [Cases: Patents ≤234–237. 2. Evidence. The authenticity of a person or thing. [Cases: Criminal Law ≤339, 339.5; Evidence ≤102.]

identity of interests. (18c) Civil procedure. A relationship between two parties who are so close that suing one serves as notice to the other, so that the other may identity of parties. (1803) Civil procedure. A relationship between two parties who are so close that a judgment against one prevents later action against the other because of res judicata. [Cases: Judgment \(\equiv 624-631, 665-678\).]

identity theft. The unlawful taking and use of another person's identifying information for fraudulent purposes. Cf. GHOSTING. [Cases: False Pretenses \(\equiv 19\).]

ideo (i-dee-oh), adv. [Latin] Therefore; for that reason.

ideo consideratum est (i-dee-oh kon-sid-uh-ray-tum est). [Latin] Hist. Therefore it is considered. • These words often prefaced a judgment at common law, and came to refer to the judgment itself. Cf. CONSIDERATUM EST PER CURIAM.

ideochira (i-dee-oh-kIr-rah). [Greek "one's own hand"] Hist. An instrument executed privately, rather than before a public officer; esp., a deed written in one's own hand.

idiocy. Archaic. The condition of a person who, from birth, has never had any glimmering of reasoning or intellectual faculties. — Also termed idiopathic insanity.

idiot. A person afflicted with profound mental retardation. • This term has largely fallen out of use in modern legal and medical contexts. Cf. IMbecile.

idiota inquirendo (i-dee-oh-ta in-kwIR-ren-doh or in-kwIR-ren-doh). See DE IDIOTA INQUIRENDO.

id non agebatur (i-doh-nee-oh-bay-tur). [Law Latin] Scots law. That was not done.

"The meaning of the words as they occur here is this: the deceased, when he valued the subjects, did not intend to depreciate their value for the purpose of benefitting the executor. — this was not in his consideration at all — this was not what he did \(id non agebatur\) by the valuation; therefore, the executor is bound for the true value of the subjects." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 245 (4th ed. 1894).

idoneitas (i-doh-ni-ee-tas). [fr. Latin idoneus "suitable"] Hist. A person's ability or fitness. — Also termed idoneity.
ignorantia juris (ig-na-ran-shé-a joor-ihs). [Latin] 1. Ignorance of law. • Under Roman law, this type of ignorance was less likely than ignorantia facti to excuse mistaken conduct, except in the case of minors and people, such as women, under some legal disability. 2. IGNORANTIA JURIS NON EXCUSAT.

ignorantia juris non excusat (ig-na-ran-shé-a joor-ihs non ek-skyoo-sat or -zat). [Latin] Lack of knowledge about a legal requirement or prohibition is never an excuse to a criminal charge. • In English, the idea is commonly rendered ignorance of the law is no excuse. — Often shortened to ignorantia juris. — Also termed ignorantia juris neminem excusat (ignorance of the law excuses no one); ignorantia legis non excusat; ignorantia juris haud excusat. [Cases: Criminal Law \(\Rightarrow\) 32.] “Almost the only knowledge of law possessed by many people is that ignorance of it is no excuse (ignorantia juris non excusat). This maxim was originally formulated at a time when the list of crimes, broadly speaking, represented current morality (mala in se), but we now have many other crimes that are the result of administrative or social regulation (mala prohibita), which are equally governed by the maxim. The rule is, then, that whereas ignorance of fact can excuse, to the extent that it negatives mens rea or fault, ignorance of the law generally does not.” Glanville Williams, Textbook of Criminal Law 405 (1978).

ignoratio elenchi (ig-na-ray-shé-oh e-leng-kí or ig-na-rah-tee-oh i-leng-kee). [Law Latin “ignorance of the conclusion to be proved”] (16c) An advocate’s misunderstanding of an opponent’s position, manifested by an argument that fails to address the opponent’s point; the overlooking of an opponent’s counterargument. • This fallacy of logic often involves an advocate’s trying to prove something that is irrelevant to the point to be decided.

ignore, vb. (1801) 1. To refuse to notice, recognize, or consider. 2. (Of a grand jury) to reject (an indictment) as groundless; to no-bill (a charge).

ignoring, n. Family law. A parent’s or caregiver’s pattern of depriving a child of essential intellectual or emotional stimulation or of otherwise stifling a child’s emotional growth and intellectual development, essentially by being unavailable. Cf. isolating; rejecting.

IIED. abbr. INTENTIONAL INFLICTION OF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS.

ill, adj. (Of a pleading) defective, bad, or null.

illation (i-lay-shun). (16c) 1. The act or process of inferring. 2. An inference; that which is inferred.

illegal contract. See contract.

illegal entry. (18c) 1. Criminal law. The unlawful act of going into a building with the intent to commit a crime. • In some jurisdictions, illegal entry is a lesser included offense of burglary. [Cases: Burglary \(\Rightarrow\) 9.]

2. Immigration. The unauthorized entrance of an alien into the United States by arriving at the wrong time or place, by evading inspection, or by fraud.

illegal interest. See usury.

illegality, n. (17c) 1. An act that is not authorized by law. 2. The state of not being legally authorized.

“... a contract made ultra vires is void; but not [strictly speaking] on the ground of illegality. Lord Cairns ... takes exception to the use of the term ‘illegality,’ pointing out that it is not the object of the contracting parties, but the incapacity of one of them, that avoids the contract.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 190 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

“It must not be thought that illegality in the law of contract is co-terminous with illegality in the criminal law, for a contract may be illegal without involving any breach of the criminal law at all.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 257 (3d ed. 1981).

3. The state or condition of being unlawful. • The affirmative defense of illegality must be expressly set forth in the response to the opponent’s pleading. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(c).

IMF. abbr. INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND.

imitation. Trademarks. An item that so resembles a trademarked item as to be likely to induce the belief that it is genuine. See similarity. [Cases: Trademarks C\> 1095.]

"The law of trade marks is of recent origin, and may be comprehended in the proposition that a dealer 'has a property in his trade mark.' The ownership is allowed to him, that he may have the exclusive benefit of the reputation which his skill has given to articles made by him, and that no other person may be able to sell to the public, as his, that which is not his. An imitation of his mark, with partial differences such as the public would not observe, does him the same harm as an entire counterfeit. If the wholesale buyer, who is most conversant with the marks, is not misled, but the small retailer or the consumer is, the injury is the same in law, and differs only in degree." Clark v. Clark, 25 Barb. 76 (N.Y. 1857).

"It is no excuse that one using the trade-marks of another informs his dealers of the imitation, for succeeding sellers may not make similar disclosures." James Kent, 2 Commentaries on American Law *372 n. 8 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

IMLS. abbr. INSTITUTE OF MUSEUM AND LIBRARY SERVICES.

immaterial, adj. (1893) (Of evidence) tending to prove some fact that is not properly at issue; lacking any logical connection with the consequent facts. Cf. IRRELEVANT. [Cases: Criminal Law C\> 338; Evidence C\> 143.] — immateriality, n.

"The rules of substantive law and of pleading are what determine immateriality; and if the probandum is immaterial, of course no evidence to prove it is wanted." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 37 (1935).

immediate family. See family.
immediate intent. See intent (1).

immediately-apparent requirement. (1978) Criminal Procedure. The principle that a police officer must have probable cause to believe that an item is contraband before seizing it. ● This plain-view exception to the warrant requirement was first announced in Coolidge v. New Hampshire, 403 U.S. 443, 91 S.Ct. 2022 (1971).

"An object may not be seized from a car merely because the police plain view of it was lawfully acquired; there must be probable cause that the object is a fruit, instrumentality or evidence of crime. And under the immediately apparent requirement of Coolidge v. New Hampshire, this probable cause must be determined without examination of the object other than is justified by the purpose underlying police entry of the vehicle." Wayne R. LaFave & Jerold H. Israel, Criminal Procedure § 3.7, at 201 (2d ed. 1992).

immediate notice. See notice.

immediate-notice clause. Insurance. A provision in many insurance policies obligating the insurer to notify the insured as soon as possible after a claim arises. ● A requirement in a policy for "prompt" or "immediate" notice — or that notice must be given "immediately," "at once," "forthwith," "as soon as practicable," or "as soon as possible" — generally means that the notice must be given within a reasonable time under the circumstances. [Cases: Insurance §3154.]

immediate past president. 1. See president. 2. See emeritus.

immemorial possession. See possession.

immemorial (im-a-mor-ee-al), adj. (17c) Beyond memory or record; very old. See time immemorial.

immemorial usage. See usage.

immigrant. (18c) A person who enters a country to settle there permanently; a person who immigrates. Cf. emigrant.

transimigrant. An immigrant who has not yet been naturalized.

immigration and Nationality Act. A comprehensive federal law regulating immigration, naturalization, and the exclusion of aliens. 8 USCA §§ 1101–1537. — Also termed Nationality Act. [Cases: Aliens, Immigration, and Citizenship §102.]

Immigration Appeals Board. See Board of Immigration Appeals.

imminent danger. See danger.

imminent hazard. See hazard (1).

immediately dangerous. See dangerous.

imminent peril doctrine. See emergency doctrine (1).

immiscere (i-mis-a-ree), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To mix or mingle with; to meddle with. ● This term took on the figurative sense of meddling in another's affairs (e.g., acting as if one were an heir), for which a person could be held accountable.

immobilia situm sequuntur (im-oh-b tee-a sit-tam sa-kwan-tar). [Latin] Immovable things follow their site. ● This principle means that immovables are governed by the law of the place where they are fixed. — Sometimes shortened to immobilia situm.

immobilize, vb. (1871) To make immobile; esp., to turn (movable property) into immovable property or to turn (circulating capital) into fixed capital.

immoral consideration. See consideration (1).

immoral contract. See contract.

immoral subject matter. 1. Patents. Inventions that do not have a socially beneficial use. ● In the past, patents were denied for some categories of inventions, such as gambling devices and fraudulent products, esp. medicines. The doctrine is rarely used today. [Cases: Patents §46.2. Trademarks. Scandalous Subject Matter.

immovable, n. (usu. pl.) (16c) Property that cannot be moved; an object so firmly attached to land that it is regarded as part of the land. — Also termed immovable thing. See fixture. Cf. movable. [Cases: Fixtures §1; Property §4.] — immovable, adj.

"Considered in its legal aspect, an immovable, that is to say, a piece of land, includes the following elements: — 1. A determinate portion of the earth's surface. 2. The ground beneath the surface down to the centre of the world. All the pieces of land in England meet together in one terminable point at the earth's centre. 3. Possibly the column of space above the surface ad infinitum." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 428 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

immovable fixture. See fixture.

immune, adj. Having immunity; exempt from a duty or liability.

immunity. (14c) 1. Any exemption from a duty, liability, or service of process; esp., such an exemption granted to a public official or governmental unit. Cf. impurity.

"An immunity is a defense to tort liability which is conferred upon an entire group or class of persons or entities under circumstances where considerations of public policy are thought to require special protection for the person, activity or entity in question at the expense of those injured by its tortuous act. Historically, tort litigation against units of government, public officers, and charities, and between spouses, parents and children, has been limited or prohibited on this basis. Edward J. Klonka, Torts in a Nutshell 341 (2d ed. 1992).

absolute immunity. (176) A complete exemption from civil liability, usu. afforded to officials while performing particularly important functions, such as a representative enacting legislation and a judge presiding over a lawsuit. Cf. qualified immunity. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ☞ 114.]

congressional immunity. (1969) Either of two special immunities given to members of Congress: (1) the exemption from arrest while attending a session of the body to which the member belongs, excluding an arrest for treason, breach of the peace, or a felony, or (2) the exemption from arrest or questioning for any speech or debate entered into during a legislative session. U.S. Const. art. I, § 6, cl. 1. See SPEECH AND DEBATE CLAUSE. [Cases: United States ☞ 12.]

diploomatic immunity. (1911) The general exemption of diplomatic ministers from the operation of local law, the exception being that a minister who is plotting against the security of the host nation may be arrested and sent out of the country. • A minister's family shares in diplomatic immunity to a great, though ill-defined, degree. [Cases: Ambassadors and Consuls ☞ 3.]

executive immunity. (1941) 1. The absolute immunity of the U.S. President or a state governor from civil damages for actions that are within the scope of official responsibilities. [Cases: United States ☞ 26.] 2. The qualified immunity from civil claims against lesser executive officials, who are liable only if their conduct violates clearly established constitutional or statutory rights. • Executive immunity generally protects an official while carrying out clearly established responsibilities about which a reasonable person would know. Cf. executive privilege under PRIVILEGE (3).

foreign immunity. The immunity of a foreign sovereign, its agents, and its instrumentalities from litigation in U.S. courts. [Cases: International Law ☞ 10.31–10.39.]

judicial immunity. (1850) The immunity of a judge from civil liability arising from the performance of judicial duties. [Cases: Judges ☞ 36.]

legislative immunity. (1890) The immunity of a legislator from civil liability arising from the performance of legislative duties. See congressional immunity. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ☞ 170.]

qualified immunity. (1877) Immunity from civil liability for a public official who is performing a discretionary function, as long as the conduct does not violate clearly established constitutional or statutory rights. — Also termed prima facie privilege. Cf. absolute immunity. [Cases: Civil Rights ☞ 1376; Officers and Public Employees ☞ 114.]

sovereign immunity. (1857) 1. A government's immunity from being sued in its own courts without its consent. • Congress has waived most of the federal government's sovereign immunity. See FEDERAL TORT CLAIMS ACT. [Cases: United States ☞ 125.] 2. A state's immunity from being sued in federal court by the state's own citizens. — Also termed government immunity; governmental immunity.

husband–wife immunity. (1951) The immunity of one spouse from a tort action by the other spouse for personal injury. • The immunity arose from the age-old notion that a husband and wife were one in the eyes of the law, so that one could not injure the other — there being no "other." Most states and the District of Columbia have abolished interspousal tort immunity either by judicial opinion or by statute. Some states have abolished the rule only in specific instances such as intentional or vehicular torts. — Also termed interspousal immunity; interspousal tort

prosecutorial immunity. The absolute immunity of a prosecutor from civil liability for decisions made and actions taken in a criminal prosecution. [Cases: District and Prosecuting Attorneys ☞ 10.]

interspousal immunity. See husband-wife immunity judgmental immunity. See error-of-judgment rule.

marital immunity. See husband-wife immunity.

parental immunity. (1930) 1. The principle that children cannot sue their parents, and that parents cannot sue their children, for tort claims.
   - This tort immunity did not exist at English common law; it was created by American courts, first appearing in Huevolette v. George, 9 So. 885 (Miss. 1891). Many courts have abolished the doctrine for some purposes, such as actions by unemancipated minors against parents to recover for injuries sustained in motor-vehicle accidents. See, e.g., Merrick v. Sutterlin, 610 P.2d 891 (Wash. 1980) (en banc). Nor does the immunity apply when an injury is inflicted by the parent or child through willful, wanton, or criminal conduct. See, e.g., Nuell v. Matsoukas, 131 N.E.2d 525 (Ill. 1956). — Also termed parent-child immunity; parental-immunity doctrine.
   [Cases: Parent and Child ⊑ 13.5(2).]

3. Criminal Law. Freedom from prosecution granted by the government in exchange for the person's testimony.
   - By granting immunity, the government can compel testimony — despite the Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination — because that testimony can no longer incriminate the witness.

pocket immunity. (1983) Immunity that results from the prosecutor's decision not to prosecute, instead of from a formal grant of immunity. — Also termed informal immunity.

testimonial immunity. (1938) Immunity from the use of the compelled testimony against the witness.
   - Any information derived from that testimony, however, is generally admissible against the witness.
   [Cases: Criminal Law ⊑ 42; Witnesses ⊑ 304.]

"Testimonial immunity is a logical corollary to a person's fifth amendment right not to 'be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself.' It provides that when a witness is compelled to testify for any reason, his testimony cannot be used against him in a subsequent criminal proceeding. It also follows that the immunity is not available where the witness testifies voluntarily, and that the protection applies only in a subsequent criminal prosecution in which the witness is subject to prosecution for an offense related to his earlier testimony." 2 Paul H. Robinson, Criminal Law Defenses § 205, at 482–83 (1984).

transactional immunity. (1966) Immunity from prosecution for any event or transaction described in the compelled testimony.
   - This is the broadest form of immunity.

use immunity. (1970) Immunity from the use of the compelled testimony (or any information derived from that testimony) in a future prosecution against the witness.
   - After granting use immunity, the government can still prosecute if it shows that its evidence comes from a legitimate independent source. — Also termed use/derivative-use immunity; derivative-use immunity.

4. Freedom of a person against having a given legal relation altered by someone else's act or omission.

immunize, vb. (1892) To grant immunity to <the new legislation immunized the police officers from liability>.

impacted area. A region that is affected by some event; esp., a region in which the school population increases due to an influx of federal employees who are working on a federal project or activity, but the tax revenue declines due to the U.S. government's immunity from local taxes.

impact rule. (1865) Torts. The common-law requirement that physical contact must have occurred to allow damages for negligent infliction of emotional distress.
   - This rule has been abandoned in most jurisdictions. — Also termed physical-impact rule.

impair, vb. (17c) To diminish the value of (property or a property right).
   - This term is commonly used in reference to diminishing the value of a contractual obligation to the point that the contract becomes invalid or a party loses the benefit of the contract. See CONTRACTS CLAUSE.

impaired capital. See CAPITAL.

impairing the morals of a minor. (1931) The offense of an adult's engaging in sex-related acts, short of intercourse, with a minor.
   - Examples of this conduct are fondling, taking obscene photographs, and showing pornographic materials. — Also termed unlawful sexual conduct with a minor; corrupting; corruption of a minor. Cf. contributing to the delinquency of a minor.
   [Cases: Infants ⊑ 13.]

impairment, n. (14c) The fact or state of being damaged, weakened, or diminished <impairment of collateral>.
   - impair, vb.

severe impairment. In social-security or disability law, a physical or mental impairment that greatly restricts a person's ability to perform ordinary, necessary tasks of daily life. See DISABILITY (2); MAJOR LIFE ACTIVITY.

impalement, n. (17c) Hist. An ancient mode of inflicting punishment by thrusting a sharp pole through the body. — Formerly also spelled empalement. — impale, vb.

impanel, vb. See empanel.

impaneled jury. See JURY.

imparcare (im-pahr-kair-ee), vb. [Law Latin "to enclose"] Hist. To impound; to confine in prison. See CARCER.

imparl (im-pahrli), vb. 1. Hist. To request or obtain an imparlance.
   2. To confer with the opposing party in an effort to settle a dispute amicably; to discuss settlement.

imparlance (im-pahr-lants). Hist. 1. A continuance granted for the purpose of giving the requesting party (usu. the defendant) further time to answer the adversary's last pleading (esp. the plaintiff's writ, bill, or count), often so that the parties will have time to settle the dispute. • Imparlances were abolished in England in 1853. 2. A petition for such a continuance. 3. The permission granting such a continuance. — Formerly also spelled emparlance. — Also termed licentia loquendi.

"After defence made, the defendant must put in his plea. But, before he pleads, he is entitled to demand one imparlance, or licentia loquendi, and may have more granted by consent of the plaintiff to see if he can end the matter amicably without further suit, by talking with the plaintiff ...." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 298 (1768).

"An imparlance is the time allowed by the court to either party, upon request, to answer the pleading of his opponent. Imparlance, from the French 'parler' — to speak — in its most common meaning, means time to plead. Formerly the parties, in the course of oral pleadings, were allowed time to speak or confer with one another, so that they might endeavor to settle the matters in dispute, and later, when the pleadings came to be in writing, the court permitted a certain time for each to plead or answer the pleading of his opponent. In modern practice the term is rarely used ...." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 234, at 405 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1973).

general imparlance. The allowance of time until the court's next term, without reserving to the defendant the benefit of any exception. • With this type of imparlance, the requesting defendant cannot later object to the jurisdiction of the court or plead any matter in abatement.

general special imparlance. The allowance of time with a saving of all exceptions, so that the defendant might later plead not only in abatement but also to the jurisdiction.

special imparlance. The allowance of time with a saving only of exceptions to the writ, bill, or count, but not to the court's jurisdiction.

impartial, adj. (16c) Unbiased; disinterested.

impartial chair. (1993) 1. ARBITRATOR. 2. MEDIATOR. — Also termed impartial chairman.

impartial expert. See expert.

impartial jury. See jury.

impartible (im-pahr-to-bal), adj. (14c) Indivisible <an impartible estate>.

impartible feud. See feud (1).

impasse (im-pas). A point in negotiations at which agreement cannot be reached. • A neutral third party (such as a mediator) is often called in to help resolve an impasse.

"Not only is the employer free after impasse to implement changes already offered to the union, but either party is free after impasse to decline to negotiate further. Since impasse signifies that the parties have exhausted (at least temporarily) the avenues of bargaining, termination of bargaining at that point cannot be thought to demonstrate a cast of mind against reaching agreement." Robert A. Gorman, Basic Text on Labor Law: Unionization and Collective Bargaining 447 (1976).

impeach, vb. (14c) 1. To charge with a crime or misconduct; esp., to formally charge (a public official) with a violation of the public trust <President Nixon resigned from office to avoid being impeached>. • Impeaching a federal official, such as the President, the Vice President, or a judge, requires that a majority of the U.S. House of Representatives vote to return at least one article of impeachment to the U.S. Senate, itemizing the charges and explaining their factual grounds. Even if an official is impeached, removal from office does not occur unless two-thirds of the senators who are present vote for conviction. 2. To discredit the veracity of (a witness) <the lawyer hoped that her star witness wouldn't be impeached on cross-examination>. [Cases: Witnesses C-311-409.] 3. To challenge the accuracy or authenticity of (a document) <the handwriting expert impeached the holographic will>.

impeachable offense. An offense for which a public official may legally be impeached, during the first step in a two-step process that may, depending on the vote in the U.S. Senate, lead to the official's removal from office. • The U.S. Constitution states that "[t]he President, Vice President and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors." The meaning of this language was much debated during the impeachment and trial of President Bill Clinton, against whom two articles of impeachment were returned by the House of Representatives. The question arose concerning what type of misdemeanor will suffice, and whether the high in high crimes modifies misdemeanors as well. No definitive answer resulted from the proceedings.

impeachment. (16c) 1. The act (by a legislature) of calling for the removal from office of a public official, accomplished by presenting a written charge of the official's alleged misconduct; esp., the initiation of a proceeding in the U.S. House of Representatives against a federal official, such as the President or a judge. — Also termed formal impeachment. • Congress's authority to remove a federal official stems from Article II, Section 4 of the Constitution, which authorizes the removal of an official for "Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors." The grounds upon which an official can be removed do not, however, have to be criminal in nature. They usu. involve some type of abuse of power or breach of the public trust. Articles of impeachment — which can be approved by a simple majority in the House — serve as the charging instrument for the later trial in the Senate. If the President is impeached, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court presides over the Senate trial. The defendant can be removed from office by the vote of a two-thirds majority of the senators who are present. In the United Kingdom, impeachment is by the House of Commons and trial by the House of Lords. But no case has arisen there since 1801, and many British scholars consider impeachment obsolete. [Cases: United States ☞ 35. ] 2. The act of discrediting a witness, as by catching the witness in a lie or by demonstrating that the witness has been convicted of a criminal offense. [Cases: Witnesses ☞ 311–409. ] 3. The act of challenging the accuracy or authenticity of evidence.

formal impeachment. 1. The discrediting of a witness’s testimony by confronting the witness with his or her specific untruthful acts, prior convictions, prior inconsistent statements, or the like. 2. See IMPEACHMENT (1).

impeachment evidence. See COURT FOR THE TRIALS OF IMPEACHMENT.

impeachment of verdict. (1821) A party’s attack on a verdict, alleging impropriety by a member of the jury. [Cases: New Trial ☞ 44, 143; Trial ☞ 344.]

impeachment of waste. Hist. An action for waste against the tenant of the harmed property.

"[For above five hundred years past, all tenants for life or for any less estate, have been punishable or liable to be impeached for waste, both voluntary and permissive; unless their leases be made, as sometimes they are, without impeachment of waste. . . .]" 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 283 (1766).

impechiare vb. [Fr. Law French empecher "to impeach"] Hist. To impeach; to accuse.

impedens [Fr. Latin impedito "to hinder"] vb. A person who hinders. • The defendant (or deforciant) in a fine of conveyance was sometimes so called. See FINE (1).

impediment (im-ped-a-mant). (14c) A hindrance or obstruction; esp., some fact (such as legal minority) that bars a marriage if known beforehand and, if discovered after the ceremony, renders the marriage void or voidable.

canonical impediment. A ground for annulment recognized by canon law and developed by the ecclesiastical courts of the Roman Catholic Church. • Canonical impediments include affinity, impotence, disparity of worship, and previous religious profession.

civil impediment. A ground for annulment recognized by civil law of contracts, such as minority, unsoundness of mind, fraud, and duress. • The defects of fraud and duress may be waived, and the parties may confirm the marriage.

diriment impediment (dir-a-mant im-ped-a-mant), n. [Fr. Latin dirimens impedimentum "nullifying impediment"] A fact that raises an absolute bar to marriage and renders a contracted marriage void. • Diriment impediments include consanguinity within a prohibited degree and a prior undissolved marriage. — Also termed impedimenta dirimentia.

imperium (im-peer-ee-ōm), n. [Latin] Roman law. Power or dominion; esp., the legal authority wielded by superior magistrates under the Republic, and later by the emperor under the Empire. • Imperium implied the right of military command, and the powers of corporal punishment, and of life and death over citizens. It was symbolized by the lictors who carried the fasces and an ax, which symbolized those powers. Imperium was also used less technically; it applied to lesser types of authority under Roman law, and thus had different meanings. For example, imperium domesticum described the power of the head of a household.

imperium merum (im-peer-ee-ōm meer-ōm), [Latin “bare power” or “absolute executive power”] Roman law. A higher magistrate’s power to use force to repress crime.

imperium mixtum (im-peer-ee-ōm miks-tam), [Latin “mixed power”] Roman law. A magistrate’s authority to make and enforce decisions in civil and criminal matters.

impertinent evidence. See evidence.

impertinent matter. (18c) Procedure. In pleading, matter that is not relevant to the action or defense. • A federal court may strike any impertinent matter from a pleading. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). Cf. SCANDALOUS MATTER. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=281-297; Parties C=49.]

impleader, n. (1918) A procedure by which a third party is brought into a lawsuit, esp. by a defendant who seeks to shift liability to someone not sued by the plaintiff. Fed. R. Civ. P. 14. — Also termed third-party practice; vouching-in. Cf. INTERPLEADER; INTERVENTION (1). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=281-297; Parties C=49.]

implication. (15c) 1. The act of showing involvement in something, esp. a crime or misfeasance <the implication of the judges in the bribery scheme>. 2. An inference drawn from something said or observed <the implication was that the scheme involved several persons>. necessary implication. (18c) An implication so strong in its probability that anything to the contrary would be unreasonable.

liply, vb. (14c) 1. To express or involve indirectly; to suggest <the opinion implies that the court has adopted a stricter standard for upholding punitive-damages awards>. Cf. infer. 2. (Of a court) to impute or impose on equitable or legal grounds <the court implied a contract between the parties>. 3. To read into (a document) <citing grounds of fairness, the court implied a condition that the parties had not expressed>. See implied term under term (2). — implication, n.

"Anglo-American judges, who continually evaluate facts, often use the phrase by implication (= by what is implied, though not formally expressed, by natural inference), along with its various cognates. Judges (by implication) draw 'natural inferences' and thereby decide that something or other was, in the circumstances, 'implied.' Through the process of hypallage — a semantic shift by which the attributes of the true subject are transferred to another subject — the word imply has come to be used in reference to what the judges do, as opposed to the circumstances. This specialized use of imply runs counter to popular lay use and is not adequately treated in English-language dictionaries.

... "The lawyer's imply has directly encroached on the word infer. Whereas nonlawyers frequently use infer for imply, lawyers and judges conflate the two in the opposite direction, by using imply for infer. In analyzing the facts of a case, judges will imply one fact from certain others. (From is a telling preposition.) Nonlawyers believe they must be inferring an additional fact from those already known; if contractual terms are implied, they must surely be implied by the words or circumstances of the contract and not by the judges." Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 423, 424 (2d ed. 1995).

import, n. (16c) 1. A product brought into a country from a foreign country where it originated <imports declined in the third quarter>. See parallel imports. 2. The process of bringing foreign goods into a country <the import of products affects the domestic economy in importation. (17c) The bringing of goods into a country from another country.

imported litigation. (1927) One or more lawsuits brought in a state that has no interest in the dispute.

importer. (15c) A person or entity that brings goods into a country from a foreign country and pays customs duties.

Import-Export Clause. (1945) U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 2, which prohibits states from taxing imports or exports. - The Supreme Court has liberally interpreted this clause, allowing states to tax imports as long as the tax does not discriminate in favor of domestic goods. - Also termed Export Clause. [Cases: Customs Duties ⊂1, 2.] import letter of credit. See letter of credit.

import quota. See quota.

import recording. See bootleg recording (1).

importune (im-por-t(y)oon), vb. (16c) To solicit forcefully; to request persistently, and sometimes irksomely.

impose, vb. (17c) To levy or exact (a tax or duty).

imposition. (14c) An impost or tax.

impossibility. (14c) 1. The fact or condition of not being able to occur, exist, or be done. 2. A fact or circumstance that cannot occur, exist, or be done. 3. Contracts. A fact or circumstance that excuses performance because (1) the subject or means of performance has deteriorated, has been destroyed, or is no longer available, (2) the method of delivery or payment has failed, (3) a law now prevents performance, or (4) death or illness prevents performance. - Increased or unexpected difficulty and expense do not usu. qualify as an impossibility and thus do not excuse performance. - Also termed impossibility of performance. [Cases: Contracts ⊂309, 31, 44.] 4. The doctrine by which such a fact or circumstance excuses contractual performance. Cf. frustration (2); impracticability. [Cases: Contracts ⊂309, 31, 44.]

impracticability. (1960) The principle that a party may be released from a contract on the ground that uncontrollable circumstances have rendered performance impossible. Cf. frustration (2); impracticability. [Cases: Contracts ⊂309, 31, 44.]

impost (im-pohst). (16c) A tax or duty, esp. a customs duty <the impost was assessed when the ship reached the mainland>. See duty (4).

impostor. (14c) One who pretends to be someone else to deceive others, esp. to receive the benefits of a negotiable instrument. - Also spelled impostor. [Cases: Banks and Banking ⊂147; Bills and Notes ⊂201, 279.]

impostor rule. Commercial law. The principle that an impostor’s indorsement of a negotiable instrument is not a forgery, and that the drawer or maker who issues the instrument to the impostor is negligent and therefore liable to the holder for payment. - If a drawer or maker issues an instrument to an impostor, any resulting forgery of the payee’s name will be effective in favor of a person paying on the instrument in good faith or taking it for value or collection. UCC § 3-404. [Cases: Banks and Banking C= 147; Bills and Notes C= 201, 279.]

impotence (im-pa-tons). (15c) 1. A man’s inability to achieve an erection and therefore to have sexual intercourse. • Because an impotent husband cannot consummate a marriage, impotence has often been cited as a ground for annulment. — Also termed impotency; physical incapacity; erectile dysfunction. 2. Hist. Sterility. 3. Rare. A woman’s physical inability to engage in sexual intercourse.

impound, n. The portion of a monthly mortgage payment that is earmarked to pay property taxes and the property-insurance premiums. See impound account under ACCOUNT.

impound, vb. (15c) 1. To place (something, such as a car or other personal property) in the custody of the police or the court, often with the understanding that it will be returned intact at the end of the proceeding. 2. To take and retain possession of (something, such as a forged document to be produced as evidence) in preparation for a criminal prosecution.

impoundment. (17c) 1. The action of impounding; the state of being impounded. See impound. 2. Constitutional law. The President’s refusal to spend funds appropriated by Congress. • Although not authorized by the Constitution and seldom used, impoundment effectively gives the executive branch a line-item veto over legislative spending. [Cases: United States C= 82(1).]

impracticability (im-prak-ti-ka-bil-ate). (17c) Contracts. 1. A fact or circumstance that excuses a party from performing an act, esp. a contractual duty, because (though possible) it would cause extreme and unreasonable difficulty. • For performance to be truly impracticable, the duty must become much more difficult or much more expensive to perform, and this difficulty or expense must have been unanticipated. [Cases: Contracts C= 309(1).] 2. The doctrine by which such a fact or circumstance excuses performance. Cf. frustration (2); impossibility (4).

commercial impracticability, (1913) The occurrence of a contingency whose nonoccurrence was an assumption in the contract, as a result of which one party cannot perform. — Also termed (in the UCC) excuse by failure of presupposed conditions. [Cases: Contracts C= 309(1).]

The doctrines of impossibility, Commercial Impracticability or as the Uniform Commercial Code knows it, Excuse by Failure of Presupposed Conditions, comprise unclimbed peaks of contract doctrine. Clearly, all of the famous early and mid-twentieth century mountaineers, Corbin, Williston, Farnsworth and many lesser men have made attempts on this topic but none has succeeded in conquering the very summit. In spite of attempts by all of the contract buffs and even in the face of eloquent and persuasive general statements, it remains impossible to predict with accuracy how the law will apply to a variety of relatively common cases. Both the cases and the Code commentary are full of weasel words such as ‘severe’ shortage, ‘marked’ increase, ‘basic’ assumptions, and ‘force majeure.’ James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 3-9, at 155 (3d ed. 1988).

impress (im-pres-mant), n. (18c) 1. The act of forcibly taking (something) for public service. 2. A court’s imposition of a constructive trust on equitable grounds. See constructive trust under TRUST. 3. Archaic. The method by which armed forces were formerly expanded, when so-called press-gangs seized men off the streets and forced them to join the army or navy. Cf. crimping. — impress, vb.

imprimatur (im-prim-ay-tur), adj. [Latin “let it be printed”] (17c) 1. A license required to publish a book. • Once required in England, the imprimatur is now encountered only rarely in countries that censor the press. 2. A general grant of approval; commendatory license or sanction.

imprimis (im-prim-iss), adv. [fr. Latin in primis “in the first”] (15c) In the first place. — Also termed in primis.

imprison, vb. (14c) To confine (a person) in prison.

imprisonment, n. (14c) 1. The act of confining a person, esp. in a prison (the imprisonment of Jackson was entirely justified). 2. The state of being confined; a period of confinement (Jackson’s imprisonment lasted 14 years). See false imprisonment.

“Imprisonment, by whatever name it is called, is a harsh thing, and the discipline that must be exercised over human beings in close confinement can never be wholly agreeable to those subject to it. When an attempt is made to hide the harsh realities of criminal justice behind euphemistic descriptions, a corrupting irony may be introduced into ordinary speech that is fully as frightening as Orwell’s NewSpeak.” Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 57 (1968).

imprisonment for debt. Hist. Detention of a debtor by court order to force the debtor to pay certain civil obligations. • The remedy was usu. available only when the debt arose from nonpayment of taxes or fines owed to the Crown, or from the debtor’s failure to pay court-ordered support or alimony, or from the debtor’s failure to obey a decree ad factum praestandum. — Also termed civil imprisonment. See decree ad factum praestandum under DECREES.

improbation. Scots law. An action to prove that a document is forged or otherwise false. — Also termed proper improbation.

imputation, n. (16c) The act or an instance of imputing something, esp. fault or crime, to a person; an accusation or charge <an imputation of negligence>.

imputation of payment. Civil law. The act of applying or directing a payment to principal or interest on a debt, or to a particular debt when there are two or more. La. Civ. Code arts. 1864, 1866.

impute (im-pyoot), vb. (14c) To ascribe or attribute; to regard (usu. something undesirable) as being done, caused, or possessed by <the court imputed malice to the defamatory statement>.

imputable, adj. (16c) The act or an instance of imputing something, esp. fault or crime, to a person; an accusation or charge <an imputation of negligence>.

imputable, adj. (16c) To ascribe or attribute; to regard (usu. something undesirable) as being done, caused, or possessed by <the court imputed malice to the defamatory statement>.
within the general import of the term but it is not its primary meaning. It may be used in many senses. Thus we may impute (ascribe) intent, knowledge, guilt, and so forth. Here it is used in the basic sense of imputing (ascribing) the fact itself. Harm has been done. Did the defendant do it? Usually such an inquiry is purely factual. What really happened? At times, however, when all the facts are known we have to ask: Will the law impute (attribute or ascribe) what happened to the defendant? That is what is meant here by ‘imputability.’” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 605 (3d ed. 1982).

incentive theory. Intellectual property. The proposition that society grants creators exclusive rights to their intellectual property in order to stimulate further creativity. • The Patent and Copyright Clause of the U.S. Constitution declares that the purpose of exclusive-right protection is "to Promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts." U.S. Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 8.

incentive-to-commercialize theory. Patents. The economic theory justifying the grant of patent rights based on how efficient the patent system is at bringing together diverse resources such as commercial backing, manufacturing capacity, marketing know-how, and other skills that the inventor alone would be unable to handle. — Also termed incentive-to-commercialize theory; incentive-to-innovate theory; prospect theory. Cf. incentive-to-design-around theory; incentive-to-disclose theory; incentive-to-invent theory.

incentive-to-design-around theory. Patents. The economic theory justifying the grant of patent rights based on their tendency to encourage others to design substitutes and improvements that are better or cheaper. Cf. incentive-to-commercialize theory; incentive-to-disclose theory; incentive-to-invent theory.

incentive-to-disclose theory. Patents. The economic theory justifying the grant of patent rights based on the social benefit of having the information enter the public domain. • Without the incentive, the argument goes, the technical advancements would remain trade secrets and the duplication of research efforts would be a waste to society. Cf. incentive-to-commercialize theory; incentive-to-design-around theory; incentive-to-invent theory.

incentive-to-innovate theory. See incentive-to-commercialize theory.

incentive-to-invent theory. Patents. The economic theory justifying the grant of patent rights based on their tendency to encourage new inventions that may benefit society and that may not otherwise be developed. incerta persona (in-sar-to par-soh-no). [Latin "uncertain person"] Roman law. A person (or corporate body) that could not inherit property, such as a person whose existence was uncertain or whom the testator could not identify by name (such as the first person to appear at the testator’s funeral). Pl. incertae personae.

"Another change under Justinian was of much greater importance. Gifts of all kinds could now be made to incertae personae ...." W.W. Buckland, A Text-Book of Roman Law from Augustus to Justinian 363 (Peter Stein ed., 3d ed. 1963).

incest, n. (13c) 1. Sexual relations between family members or close relatives, including children related by adoption. • Incest was not a crime under English common law but was punished as an ecclesiastical offense. Modern statutes make it a felony. [Cases: Incest ☞ 3.] "Although incest under both English and American law is a distinct crime, its commission may involve any of eight different offenses: illegal marriage, consensual intercourse by unmarried persons, fornication (consensual intercourse), forcible rape, statutory rape, child abuse, and juvenile delinquency (sexual relations between minor siblings or cousins) .... The choice of crime charged is generally one of prosecutorial discretion. Unless one of the participants is a minor and the other an adult, both parties may be prosecuted for incest." Lois G. Forer, “Incest,” in 3 Encyclopedia of Crime and Justice 880, 880 (Sanford H. Kadish ed., 1983).

2. Intermarriage between persons related in any degree of consanguinity or affinity within which marriage is prohibited — for example, through the uncle-niece or aunt-nephew relationship. [Cases: Incest ☞ 3; Marriage ☞ 10.] — incestuous, adj.

incestuous adultery. See ADULTERY.

in chambers. See in camera.

inchmaree (in-chahr-tair-ee), vb. [Law Latin “to put in charter”] Hist. To grant by written instrument.

in chief. (17c) 1. Principal, as opposed to collateral or incidental. 2. Denoting the part of a trial in which the main body of evidence is presented. See case-in-chief.

Inchmaree clause (inch-mo-ree). Maritime law. An insurance-policy provision that protects against risks not caused by nature, such as a sailor’s negligence or a latent defect in machinery. • This term is taken from a British ship, the Inchmaree, whose sinking in 1884 gave rise to litigation that led to the clause bearing its name. See Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, Fraser & Co., [1887] L.R. 12 App. Cas. 484. — Also termed additional-perils clause. [Cases: Insurance ☞ 2228, 2231.]

The most celebrated decision of recent times under the “general” clause was doubtless Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, Fraser & Co., 12 App. Cas. 484 (1887). A pump, insured as part of the machinery of a vessel, clogged through valve failure and was damaged. The House of Lords held this accident arose neither through a peril of the sea nor through a cause ejusdem generis with the enumerated perils .... This was a disquieting decision, for it was more than suggested that many costly accidents that might be suffered by the expensive machinery on steam vessels were not covered by the standard marine policy. The result was the inclusion of the celebrated “Inchmaree” clause in hull policies, extending special coverage not only to machinery breakage but to many other classes of loss not covered by the standard perils clause as restrictively construed." Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 4-8, at 74 n.90 (2d ed. 1975). inchoate (in-koh-it), adj. (16c) Partially completed or imperfectly formed; just begun. Cf. choate. — inchoateness, n.

"The word 'inchoate,' not much used in ordinary discourse, means 'just begun,' 'undeveloped.' The common law has given birth to three general offences which are usually termed 'inchoate' or 'preliminary' crimes — attempt, conspiracy, and incitement. A principal feature of these crimes is that they are committed even though the substantive offence is not successfully consummated. An attempt fails, a conspiracy comes to nothing, words of incitement are ignored — in all these instances, there may be liability for the inchoate crime." Andrew Ashworth, Principles of Criminal Law 395 (1991).

incident to employment. Workers’ compensation. A risk that is related to or connected with a worker’s job duties. [Cases: Workers’ Compensation C=>610–611.]

incidere (in-sid-er-ee), vb. [Latin “fall into or on”] Roman law. To come within the scope of a law or to fall into a legal category; esp. to become involved in a situation that entangles a person in a legal action. • This term had a similar meaning under English law. For example, a person might become liable to (or “fall into”) amercement (incidere in misericordiam). See AMERCEMENT.

incipitur (in-sip-i-tor). [Law Latin] Hist. It is begun. • This refers to the practice of entering the commencement of a pleading on the court roll.

incite, vb. (15c) To provoke or stir up (someone to commit a criminal act, or the criminal act itself). Cf. ABET.

incitee. A person who has been incited, esp. to commit a crime.

inciteful, adj. Tending to incite <inciteful speech>.

incitement, n. (15c) 1. The act or an instance of provoking, urging on, or stirring up. 2. Criminal law. The act of persuading another person to commit a crime; solicitation (2). [Cases: Criminal Law C=>45.] — inciteful, adj.

"An inciter is one who counsels, commands or advises the commission of a crime. It will be observed that this definition is much the same as that of an accessory before the fact. What, then, is the difference between the two? It is that in incitement the crime has not (or has not necessarily) been committed, whereas a party cannot be an accessory in crime unless the crime has been committed. An accessory before the fact is party to consummated mischief; an inciter is guilty only of an inchoate crime." Glanville Williams, Criminal Law 612 (2d ed. 1961).

"Emphasis upon the theory of one offense with guilt attaching to several is quite appropriate because it is still part of the groundwork of our legal philosophy, so far as perpetrators, abettors and inciters are concerned, despite the fact that some of the statutes require lip-service to the notion of a separate substantive offense, in the effort to avoid certain procedural difficulties. It explains how one may be guilty of a crime he could not perpetrate, by having caused or procured it as a result of his abetment or incitement." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 732–33 (3d ed. 1982).

inciter. (15c) A person who incites another to commit a crime; an aider or abettor.

inciting revolt. See MUTINY.

incivil (in-siv-ə-lee), adj. [Law Latin] Irregular; out of the due course of law.

incivism (in-siv-iz-am), (18c) Unfriendliness toward one's own country or its government; lack of good citizenship.

inclosure. See ENCLOSURE.

include, vb. (15c) To contain as a part of something. • The participle including typically indicates a partial list <the plaintiff asserted five tort claims, including slander and libel>. But some drafters use phrases such as including without limitation and including but not limited to — which mean the same thing. See NAMELY.

included offense. See lesser included offense under offense (1).

inclusionary-approach rule. (1981) The principle that evidence of a prior crime, wrong, or act is admissible for any purpose other than to show a defendant’s criminal propensity as long as it is relevant to some disputed issue and its probative value outweighs its prejudicial effect. [Cases: Criminal Law 369.2(1).]

inclusive deed. See inclusive grant under GRANT.

inclusive grant. See GRANT.

inclusive legal positivism. See INCORPORATIONISM.

inclusive survey. See survey.

incognito (in-kog-nee-toh or in kog-ni-toh), adj. or adv. [Latin "unknown"] (17c) Without making one’s name or identity known <Binkley flew incognito to France>.

incola (in-ko-lb), n. [Latin "an inhabitant"] Roman law. A foreign resident without full civil rights; the inhabitant of a foreign colony. • The term is used particularly for provincial residents who were not Roman citizens. — Also termed (in English) incolant. Cf. PEROGRINUS.

income. (16c) The money or other form of payment that one receives, usu. periodically, from employment, business, investments, royalties, gifts, and the like. See EARNINGS. Cf. PROFIT.

accumulated taxable income. The income of a corporation as adjusted for certain items (such as excess charitable contributions), less the dividends-paid deduction and the accumulated-earnings credit. • It serves as the base upon which the accumulated-earnings tax is imposed. See accumulated-earnings tax under TAX. [Cases: Internal Revenue 3833.]

active income. (1972) 1. Wages; salary. 2. Income from a trade or business.

adjusted gross income. (1940) Gross income minus allowable deductions specified in the tax code. — Abbr. AGI. [Cases: Taxation 3447.]

adjusted ordinary gross income. A corporation’s gross income less capital gains and certain expenses. • The IRS uses this calculation to determine whether a corporation is a personal holding company. If 60% or more of a corporation’s AOGI consists of certain passive investment income, the company has met the test for personal-holding-company classification. IRC (26 USCA) § 543(b). — Abbr. AOGI. See personal holding company under COMPANY. [Cases: Internal Revenue 3853–3858.]

blocked income. Money earned by a foreign taxpayer but not subject to U.S. taxation because the foreign country prohibits changing the income into dollars.

current income. Income that is due within the present accounting period. — Also termed current revenue.

defered income. (1918) Money received at a time later than when it was earned, such as a check received in January for commissions earned in November.

disposable income. (1960) Income that may be spent or invested after payment of taxes and other primary obligations. — Also termed disposable earnings.

distributable net income. (1918) The amount of distributions from estates and trusts that the beneficiaries will have to include in income. [Cases: Internal Revenue 3173, 4018.]

dividend income. (1930) The income resulting from a dividend distribution and subject to tax. [Cases: Internal Revenue 3743–3774; Taxation 3458.]

earned income. (1894) Money derived from one’s own labor or active participation; earnings from services. Cf. unearned income (2).

exempt income. (1947) Income that is not subject to income tax. [Cases: Internal Revenue 4045–4071; Taxation 3518.]

fixed income. Money received at a constant rate, such as a payment from a pension or annuity.

gross income. (1843) Total income from all sources before deductions, exemptions, or other tax reductions. See IRC (26 USCA) § 61. — Also termed gross earnings. [Cases: Taxation 3447.]

imputed income. (1948) The benefit one receives from the use of one’s own property, the performance of one’s services, or the consumption of self-produced goods and services.

income in respect of a decedent. (1945) Income earned by a person, but not collected before death. • This income is included in the decedent’s gross estate for estate-tax purposes. For income-tax purposes, it is taxed to the estate or, if the estate does not collect the income, it is taxed to the eventual recipient. — Abbr. IRD. [Cases: Internal Revenue 4035–4039; Taxation 3139.]

“if a decedent has earned income that he or she had not received before death and was not entitled to receive before death, such income is known — for Federal Income Tax purposes -- as 'income in respect of a decedent' (I.R.D.). For example, if the decedent earned fees or salary or wages for work done before death but not payable until later, and if decedent was a cash method taxpayer (versus an accrual method taxpayer), that earned but unpaid income would not properly be shown on the final income tax return filed for the decedent, for that taxable period ends with the date of death. Rather it is I.R.D. that becomes taxable to the estate of the decedent.^ John K. McNulty, Federal Estate and Gift Taxation in a Nutshell (5th ed. 1994).

investment income. See unearned income (1).

net income. (18c) Total income from all sources minus deductions, exemptions, and other tax reductions. • Income tax is computed on net income. — Also termed net earnings. [Cases: Taxation C  3448.]

net operating income. Income derived from operating a business, after subtracting operating costs.

operating income. See ordinary income (1).

ordinary income. (1860) 1. For business-tax purposes, earnings from the normal operations or activities of a business. — Also termed operating income. 2. For individual income-tax purposes, income that is derived from sources such as wages, commissions, and interest (as opposed to income from capital gains). [Cases: Internal Revenue C  3230.1-3257; Taxation C  3454, 3466.]

other income. Income not derived from an entity’s principal business, such as earnings from dividends and interest.

passive income. (1958) Income derived from a business, rental, or other income-producing activity that the earner does not directly participate in or has no immediate control over. See passive activity. Cf. portfolio income.

passive investment income. Investment income that does not involve or require active participation, such as gross receipts from royalties, rental income, dividends, interest, annuities, and gains from the sale or exchange of securities. IRC (26 USCA) § 1362(d). [Cases: Internal Revenue C  3892.]

personal income. (1851) The total income received by an individual from all sources.

portfolio income. (1978) Income not derived in the ordinary course of a trade or business, such as interest earned on savings, dividends, royalties, capital gains, or other investment sources. • For tax purposes, losses on passive activities cannot be used to offset net portfolio income. Cf. passive income.

prepaid income. (1935) Income received but not yet earned. — Also termed deferred revenue.

previously taxed income. An S corporation’s undistributed taxable income taxed to the shareholders as of the last day of the corporation’s tax year. • This income could usu. be withdrawn later by the shareholders without tax consequences. PTI has been replaced by the accumulated adjustments account. — Abbr. PTI.

real income. Income adjusted to allow for inflation or deflation so that it reflects true purchasing power.

regular income. Income that is received at fixed or specified intervals.

split income. (1949) An equal division between spouses of earnings reported on a joint tax return, allowing for equal tax treatment in community-property and common-law states.

taxable income. (1856) Gross income minus all allowable deductions and exemptions. • Taxable income is multiplied by the applicable tax rate to compute one’s tax liability. [Cases: Internal Revenue C  4529; Taxation C  3448.]

unearned income. (1921) 1. Earnings from investments rather than labor. — Also termed investment income. 2. Income received but not yet earned; money paid in advance. Cf. earned income.

unrelated-business income. (1952) Tax. Gross income earned by a nonprofit corporation from activities unrelated to its nonprofit functions. • A nonprofit corporation's income is tax-exempt only to the extent that it is produced by activities directly related to its nonprofit purpose. — Also termed unrelated business taxable income. IRC (26 USCA) § 512(a)(3)(A). [Cases: Internal Revenue C  4068.]

"The [Internal Revenue] Service has justified the unrelated business income tax as a means of preventing unfair competition between tax-exempt and for-profit providers. Thus, part of the analysis of whether income from a business venture is unrelated business taxable income focuses on the impact of the activity on competitors by inquiring whether the activity at issue is one generally offered by commercial enterprise. The categorization of a business activity of an exempt organization as related or unrelated to the exempt purpose of the organization follows very few bright-line rules. Approaches to the question of exempt purposes within the context of unrelated business income differ substantially from those used in the context of the qualification of an entity for exempt status itself." Barry R. Furrow et al., Health Law § 8-1, at 419 (2d ed. 2000).

income-and-expense declaration. Family law. In child-support litigation, a document that contains information on a parent’s income, assets, expenses, and liabilities. — Also termed financial statement. [Cases: Child Support C  183.]

income approach. (1951) A method of appraising real property based on capitalization of the income that the property is expected to generate. — Also termed income-capitalization approach. Cf. market approach; cost approach. [Cases: Taxation C  2517.]

income averaging. Tax. A method of computing tax by averaging a person's current income with that of preceding years. [Cases: Internal Revenue C  3092.]

"A distinct departure from the strict annual system of taxing income is the concept of averaging income, allowed until repeal by the 1986 T.R.A. ... [T]he rate at which the item was taxed was made to depend not only on the rates and level of income for that year, but upon the taxpayer’s..."
experience over the past four years. The item was (sometimes) taxed as if it had been received over a four-year period. Especially for authors, actors, athletes, and other taxpayers who have fluctuating or bunched income and face graduated tax rates that apply on an annual basis, income averaging was most important." John K. McNulty, Federal Income Taxation of Individuals in a Nutshell 353 (5th ed. 1995).

-income-based plan. See CHAPTER 13.
-income-basis method. A method of computing the rate of return on a security using the interest and price paid rather than the face value.
-income beneficiary. See BENEFICIARY.
-income bond. See BOND (3).
-income-capitalization approach. See INCOME APPROACH.
-income exclusion. See EXCLUSION (1).
-income fund. See MUTUAL FUND.
-income in respect of a decedent. See INCOME.
-income property. See PROPERTY.
-income-shifting. (1957) The practice of transferring income to a taxpayer in a lower tax bracket, such as a child, to reduce tax liability. Often this is accomplished by forming a Clifford trust. See Clifford trust under TRUST; kiddie tax under TAX.
-income statement. (1863) A statement of all the revenues, expenses, gains, and losses that a business incurred during a given period. Also termed statement of income; profit-and-loss statement; earnings report. Cf. BALANCE SHEET.
-income stock. See STOCK.
-income tax. See TAX.
-income-tax deficiency. See DEFICIENCY (2).
-income-tax return. See TAX RETURN.
-income-tax withholding. See WITHHOLDING.
-income-withholding order. (1986) A court order providing for the withholding of a person's income by an employer, usu. to enforce a child-support order. Also termed wage-withholding order; wage-assignment order; wage assignment. Cf. ATTACHMENT OF WAGES.
-income yield. See CAPITALIZATION RATE.

in commendam (in ka-men-dam). [Law Latin] Civil law. In trust. The phrase typically refers to property held in a limited partnership. See LIMITED PARTNERSHIP under PARTNERSHIP. [Cases: Partnership C=349.]

in common. (16c) Shared equally with others, undivided into separately owned parts. Also termed in communi. See TENANCY IN COMMON under TENANCY.

incommunicado (in-ko-myo-nee-kah-doh), adj. [Spanish] (1844) 1. Without any means of communication. 2. (Of a prisoner) having the right to communicate with only a few designated people.

in consimili casu (in kan-sim-oh-li kay-syu). See CASU CONSIMIL.

inconsistent, adj. (17c) Lacking agreement among parts; not compatible with another fact or claim <inconsistent statements>.

inconsistent defense. See DEFENSE (1).

inconsistent presumption. See conflicting presumption under PRESUMPTION.

inconsistent statement. See prior inconsistent statement under STATEMENT.

in conspecteujs (in kan-spek-tyu). [Law Latin] In his sight or view.

in contemplation of death. See CONTEMPLATION OF DEATH.

incontestability clause. Insurance. An insurance-policy provision (esp. found in a life-insurance policy) that prevents the insurer, after a specified period (usu. one or two years), from disputing the policy's validity on the basis of fraud or mistake; a clause that bars all defenses except those reserved (usu. conditions and the payment of premiums). 2. Most states require that a life-insurance policy contain a clause making the policy incontestable after it has been in effect for a specified period, unless the insured does not pay premiums or violates policy conditions relating to military service. Some states also require similar provisions in accident and sickness policies. — Also termed noncontestability clause; incontestable clause; uncontestable clause. Cf. CONTESTABILITY CLAUSE. [Cases: Insurance C=:> 3121.]

incontestability status. Trademarks. A classification of a trademark that meets certain criteria — including commercial use for five years after being placed on the Principal Register — as immune from legal challenge. — Although incontestability does not confer absolute immunity, it makes a challenge much more difficult. U.S. Code § 1065. [Cases: Trademarks C=:> 1352.] incontestable policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

incontinenti (in-kon-ti-nen-ti), adv. [Law Latin] Immediately; without any interval or intermission. — Also spelled in continenti.

incontrovertible-physical-facts doctrine. See PHYSICAL-FACTS RULE.

inconvenience. See RULE OF INCONVENIENCE.

inconvenient forum. See FORUM NON CONVENIENS.

incorporamus (in-kor-pa-ray-mas). [Law Latin] Hist. We incorporate. • This word indicated an intent to incorporate.

"All the other methods therefore whereby corporations exist, by common law, by prescription, and by act of parliament, are for the most part reducible to this of the king's letters patent, or charter of incorporation. The king's creation may be performed by the words 'creamus, erigimus, fundamus, incorporamus,' or the like." William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 461 (1765).

incorporate, vb. (14c) 1. To form a legal corporation <she incorporated the family business>. [Cases: Corporations C=:> 1.] 2. To combine with something else <incorporate the exhibits into the agreement>. 3. To make the terms of another (esp. earlier) document part of a document by specific reference <the codicil incorporated the terms of the will>; esp., to apply the provisions of the Bill of Rights to the states by interpreting the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause as encompassing those provisions.

incorporation, n. (15c) 1. The formation of a legal corporation. See ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION. [Cases: Corporations C=:> 1.] 2. Constitutional law. The process of applying the provisions of the Bill of Rights to the states by interpreting the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause as encompassing those provisions. • In a variety of opinions since 1897, the Supreme Court has incorporated the First, Fourth, Sixth, and Ninth Amendments into the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause. [Cases: Constitutional Law C=:> 3850.]

selective incorporation. Incorporation of certain provisions of the Bill of Rights. • Justice Benjamin Cardozo, who served from 1932 to 1938, first advocated this approach. [Cases: Constitutional Law C=:> 3850.]

total incorporation. Incorporation of all of the Bill of Rights. • Justice Hugo Black, who served on the U.S. Supreme Court from 1937 to 1971, first advocated this approach. [Cases: Constitutional Law C=:> 3850.]

incorporation by reference. (1886) 1. A method of making a secondary document part of a primary document by including in the primary document a statement that the secondary document should be treated as if it were contained within the primary one. • With a contract, the document to be incorporated must be referred to and described in the contract in such a way that the document's identity is clear beyond doubt. With a will, the rule applies only to clearly identified writings that existed when the testator signed the will. Unif. Probate Code § 2-510. Not all jurisdictions follow this rule for either contracts or wills. — Often shortened to incorporation. — Also termed adoption by reference. [Cases: Contracts C=:> 166; Wills C=:> 98.] 2. Patents. The explicit inclusion in one patent application of information already contained in another document, such as another patent or patent application. Generally, the reference must be to a U.S. patent or application if the information is essential (i.e., the description, enabling disclosure, or best mode), but otherwise it may be to a foreign patent or a nonpatent publication. Incorporation by reference is often used in a continuing application to cite the disclosure contained in a parent application. Cf. CROSS-REFERENCE. [Cases: Patents ☺ 99.] 3. Patents. The inclusion in a patent claim of information from an external drawing or table. Incorporation by reference is a necessity doctrine, available when there is no other practical way to convey the information in words, and when it is more concise and clear to refer the examiner to the graphic element. [Cases: Patents ☺ 100.]

incorporationism. The philosophical view that (1) law is made possible by an interdependent convergence of behavior and attitude, esp. in agreements that take the form of social conventions or rules; (2) authoritative legal pronouncements must distinguish some situations from others; and (3) the legality of norms can depend on their substantive moral merit, not just on their pedigree or social source. See Jules Coleman, The Practice of Principle (2001); W. J. Waluchow, Inclusive Legal Positivism (1994). — Also termed soft positivism; inclusive legal positivism.

corporator. (1883) A person who takes part in the formation of a corporation, usu. by executing the articles of incorporation. — Also termed corporator.

"An 'incorporator' must be sharply distinguished from a 'subscriber.' The latter agrees to buy shares in the corporation; in other words, a subscriber is an investor and participant in the venture. An 'incorporator' on the other hand serves the largely ceremonial or ministerial functions described in this section. At one time many states required that an incorporator also be a subscriber of shares; however, such requirement appears to have disappeared in all states." Robert W. Hamilton, The Law of Corporations in a Nutshell 34 (3d ed. 1991).

in corpore (in kor-pə-ree). [Latin] In body or substance; in a material thing or object.

incorporeal (in-kor-por-ee). adj. (14c) Having a conceptual existence but no physical existence; intangible <copyrights and patents are incorporeal property>. Cf. CORPOREAL. — incorporeality, n.

incorporeal chattel. See incorporeal property under property.

indebatement. Archaic. See ENCROACHMENT.

in cujus rei testimonium (in kyoo-joz ree-i tes-toh-moh-nee-am). [Law Latin] Hist. In witness whereof. • These words were used to conclude deeds. The modern phrasing of the testimonium clause in deeds and other instruments — beginning with in witness whereof — is a loan translation of the Latin.

inculpate (in-kuh-lpayt), vb. (18c) 1. To accuse. 2. To implicate (oneself or another) in a crime or other wrongdoing; INCriminate. — inculpation, n. — inculpatory evidence. See EVIDENCE.

incumbent (in-kum-bent), n. (15c) One who holds an official post, esp. a political one. — incumbency, n. — incumbent, adj.

incur, vb. (15c) To suffer or bring on oneself (a liability or expense). — incurance, n. — incurable, adj.

incurred risk. See ASSUMPTION OF THE RISK (2).

"In curso rebellionis . . . . All persons were formerly regarded as in rebellion against the Crown who had been put to the horn for non-fulfilment of a civil obligation; their whole moveable estate fell to the Crown as escheat; they might be put to death with impunity; and lost all their legal privileges. If the denunciation remained unrelaxed for year and day (which was the time known as the curse or rebellion), they rebel was esteemed civilitur morus, and his heritage reverted to the superior . . . . Denunciation for civil obligation and its consequences were in effect abolished by the Act 20 Geo. III. c. 50." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 257 (4th ed. 1894).

in custodia legis (in koh-stoh-dee-ee-ah lee-ee-iss). [Latin] In the custody of the law <the debtor's automobile was in custodia legis after being seized by the sheriff>. • The phrase is traditionally used in reference to property taken into the court's charge during pending litigation over it. — Also termed in legal custody. [Cases: Attachment § 64; Execution § 55; Garnishment § 58.] inde (in-dee), adv. [Latin] Hist. Thence; thereof. • This word appeared in several Latin phrases, such as quod eat inde sine die ("that he go thence without day").

indebitatus (in-deb-i-tye-tas), p.pl. [Law Latin] Indebted. See NUNQUAM INDEBITATUS.

indebitatus assumpsit (in-deb-i-tay-tas a-sam[p]-sit). See ASSUMPSIT.

indebiti solutio (in-deb-i-tay-soe-loo-see-oh). [Latin] Roman & Scots law. Payment of what is not owed. • Money paid under the mistaken belief that it was owed could be recovered by contract INDEBITI. See contract INDEBITI under CONTRACT.

"Indebiti Solutio — When a person has paid in error what he was not bound to pay the law lays upon the person who has received payment a duty of restitution . . . Payment (solutio) includes any performance whereby one person has been enriched at the expense of another. Usually it will be the handing over of money or of some other thing, but it may also consist in undertaking a new liability or in discharging an existing liability." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 373-74 (4th ed. 1956).

indebitum (in-deb-i-tom), n. & adj. Roman law. A debt that in fact is not owed. • Money paid for a nonexistent debt could be recovered by the action contractio INDEBITI. Cf. DEBITUM.

"A conditional debt if paid could be recovered as an indebitum, so long as the condition was outstanding." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 255 (2d ed. 1939).

indebtedness (in-det-id-niss). (17c) 1. The condition or state of owing money. 2. Something owed; a debt.

indecency, n. (16c) The state or condition of being outrageously offensive, esp. in a vulgar or sexual way. • Unlike obscene material, indecent speech is protected under the First Amendment. Cf. OBSCENITY. [Cases: Obscenity § 1.] — indecent, adj.

"Obscenity is that which is offensive to chastity. Indecency is often used with the same meaning, but may also include anything which is outrageously disgusting. These were not the names of common-law crimes, but were words used in describing or identifying certain deeds which were." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 471 (3d ed. 1982).

indecent advertising. 1. Signs, broadcasts, or other forms of communication that use grossly objectionable words, symbols, pictures, or the like to sell or promote goods, services, events, etc. 2. Archaic. In some jurisdictions, the statutory offense of advertising the sale of abortifacients and (formerly) contraceptives.

indecent assault. See sexual assault (2) under ASSAULT.

indecent assault by contact. See sexual assault (2) under ASSAULT.

indecent assault by exposure. See INDECENT EXPOSURE.

indecent exhibition. The act of publicly displaying or offering for sale something (such as a photograph or book) that is outrageously offensive, esp. in a vulgar or sexual way. [Cases: Obscenity § 6, 7].

indecent exposure. (1828) An offensive display of one's body in public, esp. of the genitals. — Also termed indecent assault by exposure; exposure of person. Cf. LEWDNESS; OBSCENITY. [Cases: Obscenity § 3.]

"Indecent exposure of the person to public view is also a common-law misdemeanor. Blackstone did not deal with it separately. 'The last offense which I shall mention,' he said, 'more immediately against religion and morality, and cognizable by the temporal courts, is that of open and notorious indefeasible remainder. See remainder.

indefeasibly vested remainder. See indefeasible remainder under remainder.

indemnity (in-dem-nis), n. [Latin “undecided”] 1. A duty to make good any loss, damage, or liability incurred by another. — Also termed indemnitee. [Cases: Indemnity C=31(3), 33, 63.]
indemnity contract

indemnity insurance. See first-party insurance under insurance.

indemnity land. 1. Public land granted to a railroad company to help defray the cost of constructing a right-of-way. • This land indemnifies a railroad company for land given in a previous grant but later rendered unavailable for railroad use by a disposition or reservation made after the original grant. [Cases: Public Lands ⊔ 70.) 2. Federally owned land granted to a state to replace previously granted land that has since been rendered unavailable for the state's use. — Also termed place land.

indemnity mortgage. See deed of trust under DEED.

indemnity principle. Insurance. The doctrine that an insurance policy should not confer a benefit greater in value than the loss suffered by the insured. [Cases: Insurance ⊔ 2104.]

indenization (in-den-i-zya-shun), n. See denization.

indent, n. 1. Hist. An indented certificate of indebtedness issued by the U.S. government or a state government in the late 18th or early 19th century. 2. A contract or deed in writing.

indent (in-dent), vb. Hist. 1. To cut in a serrated or wavy line; esp., to sever (an instrument) along a serrated line to create multiple copies, each fitting into the angles of the other. See chirograph; indenture (1).

"If a deed be made by more parties than one, there ought to be regularly as many copies of it as there are parties, and each should be cut or indented (formerly in acute angles instar dentium, but at present in a waving line) on the top or side, to tally or correspond with the other; which deed, so made, is called an indenture. . . ." Deeds thus made were denominated syngrapha by the canonists; and with us chirographa, or hand-writings; the word chirographum or cyrographum being usually that which is divided in making the indenture . . . . 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 295-96 (1766).

2. To agree by contract; to bind oneself. 3. To bind (a person) by contract.

indenture (in-den-char), n. (14c) 1. A formal written instrument made by two or more parties with different interests, traditionally having the edges serrated, or indented, in a zigzag fashion to reduce the possibility of forgery and to distinguish it from a deed poll. — Also termed indentent deed. Cf. deed poll under DEED. [Cases: Deeds ⊔ 3.] 2. A deed or elaborate contract signed by two or more parties.

"The distinction between a deed poll and an indenture is no longer important since 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, § 5. Formerly a deed made by one party had a polled or smooth-cut edge, a deed made between two or more parties was copied for each on the same parchment, and the copies cut apart with indented edges, so as to enable them to be identified by fitting the parts together. Such deeds were called indentures. An indented edge is not now necessary to give the effect of an indenture to a deed purporting to be such." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 80 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"An indenture was a deed with the top of the parchment indented, i.e., having an irregular edge. The deed was written out twice on a single sheet of parchment, which was then severed by cutting it with an irregular edge; the two halves of the parchment thus formed two separate deeds which could be fitted together to show their genuineness. This contrasted with a 'deed poll,' a deed to which there was only one party, which at the top had been polled, or shaved even." Robert E. Megarry & M.P. Thompson, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 129 (6th ed. 1993).

corporate indenture. A document containing the terms and conditions governing the issuance of debt securities, such as bonds or debentures. [Cases: Corporations ⊔ 471.]

debenture indenture. (1938) An indenture containing obligations not secured by a mortgage or other collateral. • It is a long-term financing vehicle that places the debenture holder in substantially the same position as a bondholder secured by a first mortgage. [Cases: Corporations ⊔ 470.]

trust indenture. 1. A document containing the terms and conditions governing a trustee's conduct and the trust beneficiaries' rights. — Also termed indenture of trust. [Cases: Trusts ⊔ 19-29.] 2. See deed of trust under DEED.

3. Hist. A contract by which an apprentice or other person, such as a servant, is bound to a master, usu. for a term of years or other limited period. — indentured, adj.

indentured servant. See servant.

indenture of a fine. Hist. A document engrossed by the chirographer of fines to reflect penalties assessed by the court. • The chirographer prepared indentures in duplicate on the same piece of parchment, then split the parchment along an indented line through a word, sentence, or drawing placed on the parchment to help ensure its authenticity. See chirographer of fines.

indenture of trust. See trust indenture under indenture.

indenture trustee. See trustee (1).

independence, n. (17c) The state or quality of being independent; esp., a country's freedom to manage all its affairs, whether external or internal, without control by other countries.

independent, adj. (17c) 1. Not subject to the control or influence of another <independent investigation>. 2. Not associated with another (often larger) entity <an independent subsidiary>. 3. Not dependent or contingent on something else <an independent person>.

independent adjuster. See adjuster.

independent adoption. See private adoption under adoption.

independent advice. (1871) Counsel that is impartial and not given to further the interests of the person.
independent agency. See agency (3). independent agent. See agent (2). independent audit. See audit.
independent claim. See patent claim. independent conception. See independent development.
independent contract. See contract.
independent contractor. (1841) One who is entrusted to undertake a specific project but who is left free to do the assigned work and to choose the method for accomplishing it. • It does not matter whether the work is done for pay or gratuitously. Unlike an employee, an independent contractor who commits a wrong while carrying out the work usu. does not create liability for the one who did the hiring. — Also termed contract labor. Cf. employee. [Cases: Labor and Employment C=29, 3125.] independent counsel. See counsel.
independent covenant. See covenant (1). independent creation. Copyright. A defense asserting that a later work is not a derivative of an allegedly infringed work, but is a product of coincidentally parallel labor. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property C=75.]
independent development. Intellectual property. A defense against an industrial-espionage charge wherein the user shows that the property was independently discovered or conceived. • Trademarks, symbols, inventions, and other types of intellectual property are all subject to independent development. — Also termed independent conception. independent executor. See executor. independent force. See force.
independent intervening cause. See intervening cause under cause (1). independent invention. See invention.
independent investigation committee. See special litigation committee.
independent-living program. Family law. A training course designed to enable foster children who are near the age of majority to leave the foster-care system and manage their own affairs as adults. • Independent living programs provide education, training, and financial and employment counseling. They also help many foster youth in locating suitable post-foster-care housing. Permanency planning orders or case plans can — but are not required to — provide for independent living as a goal for a child in long-term foster care and describe how it is to be accomplished. See aging-out; permanency plan. independent medical examination. An assessment of a person's physical condition and health that is made by an impartial healthcare professional, usu. a physician. — Abbr. IME. [Cases: Damages C=206.]
independent mental evaluation. An assessment of a person's mental and emotional condition that is made by an impartial mental-health professional, such as a psychologist or psychiatrist. Cf. psychiatric examination. — Abbr. IME. [Cases: Damages C=206.] independent personal representative. See personal representative under representative.
independent-practice association. A network of independent healthcare providers who contract with a health-maintenance organization (HMO) to provide services to the HMO's subscribers at negotiated rates. • Independent-practice associations generally remain free to accept patients who subscribe to other HMOs or who are not members of an HMO. — Abbr. IPA.
independent probate. See informal probate under probate. independent promise. See unconditional promise under promise. independent regulatory agency. See independent agency under agency (3). independent regulatory commission. See independent agency under agency (3). independent retirement account. See individual retirement account. independent-significance doctrine. (1968) Wills & estates. The principle that effect will be given to a testator's disposition that is not done solely to avoid the requirements of a will. • An example is a will provision that gives the contents of the testator's safe-deposit box to his niece. Because the safe-deposit box has utility (''significance'') independent of the will, the gift of its contents at the testator's death is valid. independent-source hearing. See hearing.
independent-source rule. (1968) Criminal procedure. The rule providing — as an exception to the fruit-of-the-poisonous-tree doctrine — that evidence obtained by illegal means may nonetheless be admissible if that evidence is also obtained by legal means unrelated to the original illegal conduct. See fruit-of-the-poisonous-tree doctrine. Cf. inevitable-discovery rule. [Cases: Criminal Law C=394.1(3).] Indipendent state. See sovereign state. independent union. See union. indestructible trust. See trust. indeterminate, adj. (14c) Not definite; not distinct or precise.
indeterminate bond. See bond (3). indeterminate conditional release. A release from prison granted once the prisoner fulfills certain conditions. • The release can be revoked if the prisoner breaches other conditions. [Cases: Prisons C=248.] indeterminate damages. See discretionary damages under DAMAGES.

indeterminate obligation. See obligation.

indeterminate sentence. See SENTENCE.

indeterminate sentencing. See sending.

indeterminate sentencing. (1941) The practice of not imposing a definite term of confinement, but instead prescribing a range for the minimum and maximum term, leaving the precise term to be fixed in some other way, usu. based on the prisoner's conduct and apparent rehabilitation while incarcerated. — Also termed indeterminate sentencing. See indeterminate sentence under sentence. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment □ □ 1124.]

in detrimentum animi (in de-tram-men-tam an-a-mi). [Latin] Hist. To the injury of the soul. • The phrase appeared in reference to the ground upon which a person was prohibited from questioning a legal document that the person had sworn to never question.

index, n. (14c) 1. An alphabetized listing of the topics or other items included in a single book or document, or in a series of volumes, usu. found at the end of the book, document, or series. <index of authorities>.

grantee-grantor index. (1961) An index, usu. kept in the county clerk's or recorder's office, alphabetically listing by grantee the volume and page number of the grantee's recorded property transactions. • In some jurisdictions, the grantee-grantor index is combined with the grantor-grantee index. [Cases: Records □ □ 8.]

grantor-grantee index. (1944) An index, usu. kept in the county clerk's or recorder's office, alphabetically listing by grantor the volume and page number of the grantor's recorded property transactions. [Cases: Records □ □ 8; Vendor and Purchaser □ □ 231.]

tract index. (1858) An index, usu. kept in the county clerk's or recorder's office, listing, by location of each parcel of land, the volume and page number of the recorded property transactions affecting the parcel. [Cases: Records □ □ 8; Vendor and Purchaser □ □ 231.]

2. A number, usu. expressed in the form of a percentage or ratio, that indicates or measures a series of observations, esp. those involving a market or the economy <cost-of-living index> <stock index>.

advance-decline index. A stock-market indicator showing the cumulative net difference between stock-price advances and declines.

index animi sermo (in-deks an-a-mi sar-mo). [Latin] Speech is the index of the mind. • This maxim supports the concept that the language of a statute or instrument is the best guide to the drafter's intent.

index crime. See index offense under OFFENSE (1).

indexing. 1. The practice or method of adjusting wages, pension benefits, insurance, or other types of payments to compensate for inflation. 2. The practice of investing funds to track or mirror an index of securities. — Also termed indexation.

index lease. See LEASE.

index of authorities. (1881) An alphabetical list of authorities cited in a book or brief, usu. with subcategories for cases, statutes, and treatises. — Also termed "table of authorities; table of cases." [Cases: Appeal and Error □ □ 756.]

index offense. See OFFENSE (1).

Index of Patents. An annual publication of a two-part publication of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, containing the year's List of Patentees (Part I) and Index to Subjects of Inventions (Part II), arranged by class and subclass.

Index of Trademarks. An annual publication of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, listing all trademarks registered in a given year.

Index to the U.S. Patent Classification System. An entry-level aid to using the Patent Office's classification system, comprising an estimated 65,000 common terms and phrases and referring each entry to a class and subclass within the system.

Indian child. Under the Indian Child Welfare Act, any unmarried person under the age of 18 who either is a member of an Indian tribe or is both eligible for membership in an Indian tribe and the biological child of a member of an Indian tribe. See INDIAN CHILD WELFARE ACT. [Cases: Indians □ □ 132.]

Indian Child Welfare Act. A federal act that governs child-custody proceedings including foster-care placement, preadoptive placement, adoptive placement, and termination of parental rights — in cases involving a child of American Indian descent. 25 USCA §§ 1911 et seq. • Congress enacted the Act to help protect the best interests of Indian children, to promote the stability and security of Indian tribes and families, and to counteract the disproportionate foster-care placement and adoption of Indian children by non-Indians. The Act provides minimum federal standards for removing Indian children from their families and for placing them in foster or adoptive homes that will provide an environment reflecting the values of the Indian culture. The Act has an important jurisdictional feature: in a custody dispute involving an Indian child who resides in or is domiciled within an Indian reservation, the tribe and its tribal courts have exclusive jurisdiction. And in a custody dispute involving an Indian child who lives off a reservation, upon petition, any state court should usu. defer and transfer the case to the tribal court unless a party demonstrates good cause to the contrary. — Abbr. ICWA. [Cases: Indians □ □ 213.]

Indian Claims Commission. A federal agency — dissolved in 1978 — that adjudicated claims brought by American Indians, a tribe, or another identifiable group of Indians against the United States. • The U.S. Court of Federal Claims currently hears these claims.
Indian country. 1. The land within the borders of all Indian reservations, the land occupied by an Indian community (whether or not located within a recognized reservation), and any land held in trust by the United States but beneficially owned by an Indian or tribe. 2. Hist. Any region (esp. during the U.S. westward migration) where a person was likely to encounter Indians.

Indian gambling. See gambling.

Indian land. Land owned by the United States but held in trust for and used by American Indians. — Also termed Indian tribal property. Cf. TRIBAL LAND. [Cases: Indians C= 150, 151.]

Indian law. See native american law.

Indian reservation. An area that the federal government has designated for use by an American Indian tribe, where the tribe generally settles and establishes a tribal government. [Cases: Indians C= 156.]

Indian Territory. A former U.S. territory — now a part of the state of Oklahoma — to which the Cherokee, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole tribes were forcibly removed between 1830 and 1843. • In the late 19th century, most of this territory was ceded to the United States, and in 1907 the greater part of it became the State of Oklahoma.

Indian title. A right of occupancy that the federal government grants to an American Indian tribe based on the tribe’s inmemorial possession of the area. • Congress does not recognize tribal ownership of the land, only possession. A tribe or nation must actually, exclusively, and continuously use the property to establish that it is the ancestral home. An individual may claim Indian title by showing that the individual or his or her lineal ancestors continuously occupied a parcel of land, as individuals, before the land was closed to settlers. — Also termed aboriginal title; right of occupancy. Cf. aboriginal title (1) under title (2). [Cases: Indians C= 151.]

Indian tribal property. See Indian land.

Indian tribe. A group, band, nation, or other organized group of indigenous American people, including any Alaskan native village, that is recognized as eligible for the special programs and services provided by the U.S. government because of Indian status (42 USCA § 9601(36)); esp., any such group having a federally recognized governing body that carries out substantial governmental duties and powers over an area (42 USCA § 300f(14); 40 CFR § 146.3). • A tribe may be identified in various ways, esp. by past dealings with other tribes or with the federal, state, or local government, or by recognition in historical records. [Cases: Indians C= 102.]

"The Indian tribe is the fundamental unit of Indian Law; in its absence there is no occasion for the law to operate. Yet there is no all-purpose definition of an Indian tribe. A group of Indians may qualify as a tribe for the purpose of one statute or federal program, but fail to qualify for others. Definitions must accordingly be used with extreme caution." William C. Canby Jr., American Indian Law in a Nutshell 3-4 (2d ed. 1988).

indicare (in-di-kair-ee), vb. [Latin] 1. Roman law. To accuse (someone) of a crime; to provide evidence against someone. 2. Civil law. To show or discover. 3. Civil law. To fix or tell the price of a thing. See indicium.

indicator. (17c) Securities. An average or index that shows enough of a correlation to market trends or economic conditions that it can help analyze market performance.

coincident indicator. An economic or market-activity index or indicator that shows changing trends near the same time that overall conditions begin to change.

economic indicator. See economic indicator.

lagging indicator. 1. An index that indicates a major stock-market change sometime after the change occurs. 2. See lagging economic indicator under economic indicator.

leading indicator. 1. A quantifiable index that predicts a major stock market change. 2. See leading economic indicator under economic indicator.

indicavit (in-di-kay-veit). [Law Latin "he has indicated"] Hist. A writ of prohibition by which a church patron removes to a common-law court an ecclesiastical-court action between two clerics who dispute each other’s right to a benefice. • The writ was long available — nominally up to the 20th century — under the 1306 statute De Conjunctim Feoffatis (34 Edw. 1). Actions concerning clerics’ rights to a benefice were usu. tried in ecclesiastical courts, but they could be removed to a common-law court if the action involved a church patron in some way, as when one cleric was appointed by a certain patron and the other cleric was appointed by another patron. Cf. advowson.

indicia (in-di-sh-ee-a), n. [Latin] Signs; indications <the purchase receipts are indicia of ownership>.

indicia of title. A document that evidences ownership of personal or real property. [Cases: Property C= 9.]

indicium (in-di-sh-ee-am), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. The act of providing evidence against an accused. 2. The act of promising recompense for a certain service. 3. A sign or mark; esp., something used as a type of proof. See indicare.

indict (in-drt), vb. (17c) To charge (a person) with a crime by formal legal process, esp. by grand-jury presentation. — Also formerly spelled endite; indictment.

indictable misdemeanor. See serious misdemeanor under misdemeanor.

indictable offense. See offense (1).

indictee (in-di-tee), (16c) A person who has been indicted; one officially charged with a crime.

indictment (in-dikt-mant), n. (14c) 1. The formal written accusation of a crime, made by a grand jury and presented to a court for prosecution against the accused person. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 7. [Cases: Indictment and Information (15c)] 2. The act or process of preparing or bringing forward such a formal written accusation. Cf. INFORMATION; PRESENTMENT (2).

barebones indictment. (1963) An indictment that cites only the language of the statute allegedly violated; an indictment that does not provide a factual statement. "What has been called 'a bare bones indictment using only statutory language' is quite common, and entirely permissible so long as the statute speaks for itself, directly, and expressly all essential elements of the crime intended to be punished." 1 Charles Alan Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure § 125, at 558-59 (3d ed. 1999).

duplicitous indictment (dylj0pp-lis-0-tas). (1914) 1. An indictment containing two or more offenses in the same count. [Cases: Indictment and Information (15c)] 2. An indictment charging the same offense in more than one count.

joint indictment. (17c) An indictment that charges two or more people with an offense.

indictor (in-dikt-ar or in-di-tor). (17c) A person who causes another to be indicted.

in diem (in-diem or dec-em). [Latin] For each day; per day. Cf. PER DIEM.

in diem additio. See ADDITIO IN DIEM.

indifference. (15c) A lack of interest in or concern about something; apathy.

deliberate indifference. 1. Criminal law. (1951) The careful preservation of one's ignorance despite awareness of circumstances that would put a reasonable person on notice of a fact essential to a crime. See JEWELL INSTRUCTION. 2. Criminal law. Awareness of and disregard for the risk of harm to another person's life, body, or property. 3. Torts. Conscious disregard of the harm that one's actions could do to the interests or rights of another. — Also termed reckless indifference; conscious avoidance; conscious indifference.

reckless indifference. See deliberate indifference.

indigent, adj. & n. 'Supreme Court opinions speak generally of the rights of an 'indigent defendant' without offering any specific definition of 'indigency.' . . . The appellate courts agree that indigency is not a synonym for 'destitute.' . . . Among the factors to be considered in evaluating the individual's financial capacity are: (1) income from employment and such governmental programs as social security and unemployment compensation; (2) real and personal property; (3) number of dependents; (4) outstanding debts; (5) seriousness of the charge (which suggests the likely fee of a retained attorney); and (6) other legal expenses (such as bail bond).” Wayne R. LaFave & Jerold H. Israel, Criminal Procedure § 11.3(g), at 544 (2d ed. 1992).

indigent defendant. (1882) A person who is too poor to hire a lawyer and who, upon indictment, becomes eligible to receive aid from a court-appointed attorney and a waiver of court costs. See IN FORMA PAUPERIS. Cf. PAUPER. [Cases: Costs Criminal Procedure (1766).]

indignity (in-dig-nitee), n. (16c) Family law. A ground for divorce consisting in one spouse's pattern of behavior calculated to humiliate the other. — Also termed personal indignity. Cf. CRUELTY. [Cases: Divorce (1952).]

indirect-purchaser doctrine. (1976) Antitrust. The principle that in litigation for price discrimination, the court will ignore sham middle parties in determining whether different prices were paid by different customers for the same goods. * This doctrine gives standing to bring an antitrust action to a party who is not an immediate purchaser of a product. Thus, if a manufacturer sells a product to a retailer, but dictates the terms by which the retailer must sell the product

indiscriminate attack. Int'l law. An aggressive act that (1) is not carried out for a specific military objective, (2) employs a means of combat not directed at a specific military objective, or (3) employs a means of combat the effects of which cannot be limited in accordance with an international protocol such as the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their protocols or the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907.

indispensable-element test. Criminal law. A common-law test for the crime of attempt, based on whether the defendant acquires control over any thing that is essential to the crime. • Under this test, for example, a person commits a crime by buying the explosives with which to detonate a bomb. See attempt (2). [Cases: Criminal Law C=44.]

indispensable instrument. See instrument (3).

indistinguishable party. See party (2).

indistinctly (in-di-stan-t;)r), adv. [Law Latin “immediately”] Forthwith; without delay.

individual, adj. (15c) 1. Existing as an indivisible entity. 2. Of or relating to a single person or thing, as opposed to a group.

individual account plan. See defined-contribution plan under employee benefit plan.

individual asset. See asset.

individual contract. See contract.

individual debt. See debt.

individual good will. See personal goodwill under goodwill.

individualized educational placement. See individuated education program.

individualized education program. Family law. A specially designed plan of educational instruction for a child with disabilities. • The individualized education program is a written plan that details the particular child’s abilities, the child’s educational goals, and the services to be provided. — Abbr. IEP. — Also termed individualized educational placement. See child with disabilities under child; individuals with disabilities education act.

individual liberty. See personal liberty under liberty.

individual property. See separate property (1).

individual retirement account. (1974) A savings or brokerage account to which a person may contribute up to a specified amount of earned income each year. • The contributions, along with any interest earned in the account, are not taxed until the money is withdrawn after a participant reaches 59½ (or before then, if a 10% penalty is paid). — Abbr. IRA. — Also termed independent retirement account. Cf. keogh plan. [Cases: Internal Revenue C=3594.]

education individual retirement account. An individual retirement account from which withdrawals may be made tax-free if the withdrawn funds are used for education costs. • Before 2002, annual contributions were limited to $500. In 2002, the contribution limit increased to $2,000 per year for families with incomes under $190,000.

Roth IRA. (1991) An IRA in which contributions are nondeductible when they are made. • No further taxes are assessed on the contributions (or accrued interest) when the money is withdrawn (if all applicable rules are followed). This term takes its name from Senator William Roth, who sponsored the legislation creating this type of IRA.

Individuals with Disabilities Education Act. A federal statute that governs the public education of children with physical or mental handicaps and attempts to ensure that these children receive a free public education that meets their unique needs. • The Education of All Handicapped Children Act (enacted in 1975) was renamed the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act in 1990, and this Act was substantially amended in 1997. All states currently participate in this joint federal-state initiative. 20 USC A § 1400–1485. — Abbr. IDEA.

individual voluntary arrangement. English law. A formal out-of-court arrangement between a debtor and two or more lenders to freeze the interest rate of a debt and pay off a percentage of the debt over an agreed period, at the end of which time the remaining debt is canceled. • The arrangement is an alternative to filing for bankruptcy. It must be set up by an authorized insolvency practitioner but does not require court approval. — Abbr. IVA.

indivisible, adj. (14c) Not separable into parts; held by two or more people in undivided shares <an indivisible debt>.

division. Civil law. Undivided ownership of property; the condition of being owned by coowners each having an undivided interest in the property. [Cases: Joint Tenancy C=1.]

indivisum (in-di-vi-sam or -zam), adj. [Latin] Roman law. (Of property) held in common; not divided.

indorse, vb. (16c) To sign (a negotiable instrument), usu. on the back, either to accept responsibility for paying an obligation memorialized by the instrument or to make the instrument payable to someone other than the payee. — Also spelled endorse.

indorsor (in-dor-se). (18c) A person to whom a negotiable instrument is transferred by indorsement. — Also spelled endorsee.

indorsor in due course. An indorsor who, in the ordinary course of business, acquires a negotiable indorsement, n. (16c) 1. The placing of a signature, sometimes with an additional notation, on the back of a negotiable instrument to transfer or guarantee the instrument or to acknowledge payment. [Cases: Bills and Notes C= 176.] 2. The signature or notation itself. — Also spelled endorsement. — indorse, vb.

"The clever indorser can subscribe his or her name under a variety of magic phrases. The Code specifies the legal effect of some of these phrases. Qualified indorsements ('without recourse') limit the liability of the indorser if the instrument is dishonored. Restrictive indorsements such as 'for deposit only,' 'pay any bank,' and the like set the terms for further negotiation of the instrument. Their main purpose is to prevent thieves and embezzlers from cashing checks." 2 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 16-7, at 92-93 (4th ed. 1995).

accommodation indorsement. (1888) An indorsement to an instrument by a third party who acts as surety for another party who remains primarily liable. See ACCOMMODATION PAPER. [Cases: Bills and Notes C= 236.]

blank indorsement. An indorsement that names no specific payee, thus making the instrument payable to the bearer and negotiable by delivery only. UCC § 3-205(b). — Also termed indorsement in blank; general indorsement. [Cases: Bills and Notes C= 188, 288.]

collection indorsement. See restrictive indorsement.

conditional indorsement. (1894) An indorsement that restricts the instrument in some way, as by limiting how the instrument can be paid or transferred; an indorsement giving possession of the instrument to the indorsee, but retaining title until the occurrence of some condition named in the indorsement. • Wordings that indicate this type of indorsement are "Pay to Brad Jones when he becomes 18 years of age" and "Pay to Brigitte Turner, or order, unless before payment I give you notice to the contrary." — Also termed restricted indorsement; restrictive indorsement. Cf. special indorsement. [Cases: Bills and Notes C= 190, 199, 290.]

general indorsement. See blank indorsement.

indorsement in blank. See blank indorsement.

indorsement in full. See special indorsement.

indorsement without recourse. See qualified indorsement.

irregular indorsement. (1842) An indorsement by a person who signs outside the chain of title and who therefore is neither a holder nor a transferor of the instrument. • An irregular indorser is generally treated as an accommodation party. — Also termed anomalous indorsement; full indorsement. See ACCOMMODATION PARTY. [Cases: Bills and Notes C= 191, 294.]

qualified indorsement. (1806) An indorsement that passes title to the instrument but limits the indorser's liability to later holders if the instrument is later dishonored. • Typically, a qualified indorsement is made by writing "without recourse" or "sans recourse" over the signature. UCC § 3-415(b). — Also termed indorsement without recourse. See WITHOUT RECOURSE. [Cases: Bills and Notes C= 293.]

restrictive indorsement. (18c) An indorsement that includes a condition (e.g., "pay Josephina Cardoza only if she has worked 8 full hours on April 13") or any other language restricting further negotiation (e.g., "for deposit only"). — Also termed collection indorsement. See conditional indorsement. [Cases: Bills and Notes C= 190, 199, 290.]

special indorsement. (18c) An indorsement that specifies the person to receive payment or to whom the goods named by the document must be delivered. UCC § 3-205(a). — Also termed indorsement in full; full indorsement. Cf. conditional indorsement. [Cases: Bills and Notes C= 189, 289.]

trust indorsement. (1945) An indorsement stating that the payee becomes a trustee for a third person (e.g., "pay Erin Ray in trust for Kaitlin Ray"); a restrictive indorsement that limits the instrument to the use of the indorser or another person.

unauthorized indorsement. (1840) An indorsement made without authority, such as a forged indorsement. [Cases: Bills and Notes C= 239, 279.]

unqualified indorsement. (1839) An indorsement that does not limit the indorser's liability on the paper. • It does not, for example, include the phrase "without recourse." [Cases: Bills and Notes C= 281, 287, 293.]

unrestrictive indorsement. (1844) An indorsement that includes no condition or language restricting negotiation. — Also termed unrestricted indorsement. [Cases: Bills and Notes C= 190, 199, 290.]

3. The beginning stages of anything.

infangthief (in-fang-theef). [Fr. Old English in “in” + fangen “taken” + thef “thief”] Hist. A privilege held by a lord of a manor to try, and deal summarily with, a thief captured on the lord's land, esp. a thief captured with plunder. — Also spelled infangthief. Cf. OUT-FANGTHIEF.

infans (in-fanz), n. [Latin] Roman law. A child under seven years old. 1. On turning seven years old, an infans became known as an impubes. An infans had no capacity in the law. Cf. IMPURES.

infant, n. (14c) 1. A newborn baby. 2. MINOR (1).

"An infant in the eyes of the law is a person under the age of twenty-one years, and at that period (which is the same in the French and generally in the American law) he or she is said to attain majority; and for his torts and crimes an infant may be liable; but for his contracts, as a general rule, he is not liable, unless the contract is for necessaries." John Indermaur, Principles of the Common Law 195 (Edmund H. Bennett ed., 1st Am. ed. 1878).

"[Infant] — the one technical word that we have as a contrast for the person of full age — stands equally well for the new-born babe and the youth who is in his twenty-first year." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 439 (2d ed. 1899).

"The common-law rule provided that a person was an infant until he reached the age of twenty-one. The rule continues at the present time, though by statute in some jurisdictions the age may be lower." John Edward Murray Jr., Murray on Contracts § 12, at 18 (2d ed. 1974).

infraction, n. (17c) A violation, usu. of a rule or local ordinance and usu. not punishable by incarceration. See violation (1). — infract, vb.

civil infraction. An act or omission that, though not a crime, is prohibited by law and is punishable. • In some states, many traffic violations are classified as civil infractions.

infra dignitatem curiae (in-fra dig-ni-tay-tom kyoor-ee-ee), adj. [Law Latin "beneath the dignity of the court"] (Of a case) too trifling in amount or character to be entertained by a court.

infra furor (in-fra fyav-awor-am), adv. [Law Latin] During madness; while in a state of insanity.

infra hospitium (in-fra hah-spish-ee-am), adv. [Law Latin "within the inn"] The doctrine that an innkeeper is liable for goods deposited by a guest. [Cases: Innkeepers infra praesidia (in-fra prae-sid-ee-a), [Latin “within the defenses”] Hist. The international-law doctrine that someone who captures goods will be considered the owner of the goods if they are brought completely within the captor’s power. • This term is a corruption of the Roman-law term infra praesidia, which referred to goods or persons taken by an enemy during war. Under the principle of postliminium, the captured person’s rights or goods were restored to prewar status when the captured person returned. See postliminium.

infrastructure. The underlying framework of a system; esp., public services and facilities (such as highways, schools, bridges, sewers, and water systems) needed to support commerce as well as economic and residential development.

in fraudem creditorum (in fra-dam kre-di-tor-am), adv. [Latin] In fraud of creditors.

in fraudem legis (in fra-dam lee-iis), adv. [Latin] In fraud of the law. • With an intent to evade the law.

infringement, n. (1861) Intellectual property. An act that interferes with one of the exclusive rights of a patent, copyright, or trademark owner. See intellectual property. Cf. plagiarism. — infringe, vb.

contributory infringement. 1. The act of participating in, or contributing to, the infringing acts of another person. • The law imposes vicarious liability for contributory infringement. 2. Patents. The act of aiding or abetting another person’s patent infringement by knowingly selling a nonstaple item that has no substantial noninfringing use and is esp. adapted for use in a patented combination or process. • In the patent context, contributory infringement is statutorily defined in the Patent Act. 35 USCA § 271(c). [Cases: Patents ⊳ 259.] 3. Copyright. The act of either (1) actively inducing, causing, or materially contributing to the infringing conduct of another person, or (2) providing the goods or means necessary to help another person infringe (as by making facilities available for an infringing performance). • In the copyright context, contributory infringement is a common-law doctrine. 4. Trademarks. A manufacturer’s or distributor’s conduct in knowingly supplying, for resale, goods bearing an infringing mark. [Cases: Trademarks ⊳ 1566.]

copyright infringement. The act of violating any of a copyright owner’s exclusive rights granted by the federal Copyright Act, 17 USCA §§ 106, 602. • A copyright owner has several exclusive rights in copyrighted works, including the rights (1) to reproduce the work, (2) to prepare derivative works based on the work, (3) to distribute copies of the work, (4) for certain kinds of works, to perform the work publicly, (5) for certain kinds of works, to display the work publicly, (6) for sound recordings, to perform the work publicly, and (7) to import into the United States copies acquired elsewhere. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⊳ 53.] criminal infringement. The statutory criminal offense of either (1) willfully infringing a copyright to obtain a commercial advantage or financial gain (17 USCA § 506; 18 USCA § 2319), or (2) trafficking in goods or services that bear a counterfeit mark (18 USCA § 2320). • Under the second category, the law imposes criminal penalties if the counterfeit mark is (1) identical with, or substantially indistinguishable from, a mark registered on the Principal Register of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, and (2) likely to confuse or deceive the public. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⊳ 70; Trademarks ⊳ 1786, 1787.]

direct infringement. 1. Patents. The act of making, using, selling, offering for sale, or importing into the United States, without the patentee’s permission, a product that is covered by the claims of a valid patent. 35 USCA § 271(a). [Cases: Patents ⊳ 226.] 2. Trademarks. The use of a mark in trade when that use causes a likelihood of confusion about the source of goods or services already identified by a similar mark. 3. Copyright. The unauthorized copying, distributing, or displaying of — or the adapting of a derivative work from — a copyrighted work. Cf. contributory infringement; infringement in the inducement.

domain-name infringement. Infringement of another’s trademark or servicemark by the use of a confusingly similar Internet domain name. [Cases: Trademarks ⊳ 1116, 1435.] infringement by sale. Patents. The unauthorized sale, resale, or offer of a possessory interest in a patented invention. — Also termed infringement through sale. [Cases: Patents ⊳ 226.]

infringement in the inducement. Patents. The act of actively and knowingly aiding and abetting direct infringement by another person. • Although sometimes used in copyright and trademark law to mean contributory infringement, the term is usu. reserved for the patent context. — Also termed inducing infringement. Cf. direct infringement. [Cases: Patents ⊳ 259.]

innocent infringement. The act of violating an intellectual-property right without knowledge or awareness that the act constitutes infringement. • An innocent infringer may, in limited circumstances, escape liability for some or all of the damages. In the copyright context, damages may be limited if (1) the infringer was misled by the lack of a copyright notice on an authorized copy of the copyrighted work, distributed under the owner’s authority before March 1989 (the effective date of the Berne Convention... infringement by sale. See INFRINGEMENT.

infringement through sale. See infringement by sale under INFRINGEMENT.

infringer. (16c) A person who interferes with one of the exclusive rights of a patent, copyright, or trademark owner. See INFRINGEMENT. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property C-287(1); Trademarks C-1564.]

- A bona fide possessor owned the fruits of the subject possessed but not the subject itself because the subject was not in fructu. For example, a person who possessed but did not own a goat was entitled to the goat's milk, wool, and offspring, but not the goat's meat.

in full. Constituting the whole or complete amount <payment in full>.

in full life. (Of a person) alive in fact and in law; neither naturally nor civilly dead.

in futuro (in fyoo-tyoor-oh), adv. [Latin] In the future. Cf. in praesenti.

in generali passagio (in jen-ay-ray-It pa-say-jee-oh), adv. [Law Latin] Hist. In the general passage (to the holy land with a company of Crusaders). • This type of pilgrimage excused an absence from court during the Crusades. Cf. simplex passagium.

in genere (in jen-ar-e), Latin “in kind”) Belonging to the same class, but not identical.

ingenuitas regni (in-jen-yoo-ooh-ah-tas reg-ni), [Law Latin] Hist. The freemen, yeomanry, or commonalty of the kingdom. • This term was occasionally applied to the nobility.

ingenious (in-jen-yoo-ohs), n. [Latin] Roman law. A free-born person. • This term, denoting freeborn persons, was commonly opposed to libertinii (people born into slavery and later emancipated). Cf. Latin: jucundus; servus.

in globo (in gloh-boh), adv. [Latin “in a mass”] As an undivided whole rather than separately <settlement paid in globo to the three defendants>.

ingratitude, n. Civil law. Lack of appreciation for a generous or kind act, esp. for a gift received. • Under Louisiana law, a gift may be reclaimed on grounds of ingratitude if the recipient mistreats the giver by, for example, attempting to murder the giver or refusing to provide the giver with needed food. La. Civ. Code art. 1560. [Cases: Gifts C-41.]

ingratus (in-gray-tas), adj. [Latin] Roman law. (Of a person) ungrateful; (of conduct) marked by ingratitude.

• Ungrateful acts or words (such as spiteful comments from a freedman toward a former master) could form the basis for a return to a prior inferior status.

in gremio juris (in gree-mee-oh joor-iss), adv. & adj. [Law Latin] Civil & Scots law. In the bosom of the right. • This phrase describes a clause formerly inserted in an instrument to bind holders to its terms.

in gremio legis (in gree-mee-oh lee-jis), adv. & adj. [Law Latin] in the bosom of the law. • This is a figurative expression for something that is under the protection of the law, such as a land title that is in abeyance.

ingress (in-gres). (15c) 1. The act of entering. 2. The right or ability to enter; access. Cf. egress.

ingress, egress, and regress. (17c) The right of a lessee to enter, leave, and reenter the land in question.

ingressus (in-gres-as). [Latin “ingress, entry”] Hist. The fee paid by an heir to a feudal lord to enter the estate of a decedent.

in gross. 1. Undivided; still in one large mass. — Also termed en gross, en grosse. 2. (Of a servitude) personal as distinguished from appurtenant to land. See easement in gross under easement.

ingross, vb. See engross.

ingrossator (in-groh-say-tor). [Law Latin] Hist. An engrosser; a clerk who writes records or instruments on parchment. • The Engrosser of the Great Roll, for example, was known as the Ingrossator Magni Rotuli. See clerk of the pipe.

inhabit, vb. (14c) To dwell in; to occupy permanently or habitually as a residence.

in haec verba (in heek var-ba). [Latin] In these same words; verbatim.

inhaerere jurisdictioni (in-hi-reer-ee juur-is-dik-shee-oh-ni). [Latin] Civil law. To be necessarily connected with jurisdiction. • The phrase typically referred to a judge’s inherent powers, such as the power to inflict punishment or to enforce a judgment.

inhere (in-heer), vb. (15c) To exist as a permanent, inseparable, or essential attribute or quality of a thing; to be intrinsic to something.

inherency doctrine. Patents. The rule that anticipation can be inferred despite a missing element in a prior-art reference if the missing element is either necessarily present in or a natural result of the product or process and a person of ordinary skill in the art would know it. • On one hand, the doctrine precludes patenting an existing invention by merely claiming an inherent element. On the other hand, it allows the later patentability of a substance, usu. a chemical compound, that was inadvertently created but not recognized or appreciated. See inherent anticipation. [Cases: Patents C-65.]

inherent anticipation. Patents. An invention’s lack of novelty arising from the existence of prior-art products or processes that necessarily possess the same characteristics. • Inherency differs from obviousness in that a lack of novelty must be based on fact, not mere possibility or probability. See doctrine of inherency. [Cases: Patents C-65.]

inherently dangerous. See dangerous.

inherently dangerous activity. An activity that can be carried out only by the exercise of special skill and care and that involves a grave risk of serious harm if done unskilfully or carelessly.

inherent-powers doctrine. The principle that allows courts to deal with diverse matters over which they are thought to have intrinsic authority, such as (1) procedural rulemaking, (2) internal budgeting of the courts, (3) regulating the practice of law; and (4) general judicial housekeeping. • The power is based on interpretations of art. I, § 8, cl. 18 of the Constitution. [Cases: Courts C-1.]

inherit, vb. (14c) 1. To receive (property) from an ancestor under the laws of intestate succession upon the ancestor’s death. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C-1.] 2. To receive (property) as a bequest or devise.

inheritable blood. See heritable blood under blood.

inheritable obligation. See heritable obligation under obligation.

inheritable security. See heritable security under security.

inheritance. (14c) 1. Property received from an ancestor under the laws of intestacy. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C-1, 8.] 2. Property that a person receives by bequest or devise.

dual inheritance. An adopted child’s intestate inheritance through both his adopted family and his natural parent. • The problem of dual inheritance occurs only if a relative of the birth parent adopts the child. For instance, if a child’s mother dies and the maternal grandparents adopt the grandchild, and if a grandparent then dies intestate, the child qualifies for two separate shares — one as a child and the other as a grandchild. In some jurisdictions, by statute, such a child is allowed to inherit only the adopted child’s share. Under the Uniform Probate Code, the child takes the larger of the two shares. [Cases: Adoption C-21.]

shifting inheritance. Under intestacy laws, an inheritance that is transferred from an heir who was living when the intestate died to an afterborn heir who is more closely related to the intestate. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ≤42.]

universal inheritance. A system by which an intestate's estate escheats to the state only if the decedent leaves no surviving relatives, no matter how distant. • Universal inheritance has been almost universally abandoned in Anglo-American jurisdictions. See universal-inheritance rule.

inheritor (in-hair-i-tar), n. [15c] A person who inherits; heir.

inheritrix (in-hair-i-triks), n. Archaic. A female heir; heiress.

inhibition (in-hi-bish-an), n. 1. Eccles. law. A writ issued by a superior ecclesiastical court, forbidding a judge from proceeding in a pending case. 2. Eccles. law. An order issued from an ecclesiastical court, prohibiting a member of the clergy from taking office or performing an unlawful action. 3. Hist. A writ of prohibition. 4. Scots law. An order issued by the Court of Session to prohibit a debtor from encumbering or alienating the debtor's heritable property to the prejudice of a creditor. See ex capite inhibitionis; (in senses 3 & 4) prohibition (2).

in hoc (in hok), adv. [Latin] In this; in respect to this.

in hoc statu (in hok stay-tu), adv. [Latin] Hist. In this position.

inhonestus (in-ha-nes-tas), adj. [Latin] Roman law. 1. (Of a person) of ill repute. 2. (Of conduct) morally shameful.

in-house counsel. See counsel.

inhuman treatment. Family law. Physical or mental cruelty so severe that it endangers life or health. • Inhuman treatment is usu. grounds for divorce. See cruelty. [Cases: Divorce ≤27(1, 3).]

in hypothesi (in hi-pahth-ə-si), adv. [Latin] Hist. In a supposed case; in a hypothetical case. Cf. in theses.

inimicita capitalis (i-nim-ə-sish ee-ə kap-i-tay-lish), adv. [Latin] Hist. Deadly enmity.

in individuo (in in-di-vid-yoo-oh), adv. [Law Latin] In the distinct, identical, or individual form. See in specie.

in infinitum (in fa-ni-tom), adv. [Latin “in infinity”] To infinity. • This phrase was in reference to a line of succession that is indefinite.

in initialibus (in i-nish-ee-al-ə-bas), adv. [Law Latin] Hist. In the preliminary stage. • The phrase appeared in reference to the point in the examination when the initialia testimoni took place to determine the witness's competence to testify. See initialia testimoni.

in initio (in i-nish-ee-oh), adv. [Latin “in the beginning”] At the beginning or outset. Cf. ab initio.

in initio litis (in i-nish-ee-oh li-tis), adv. [Latin] Hist. In the beginning of the suit. • Many defenses had to be raised at this stage of a case.

in invitus (in vi-tam), adv. [Latin] Against an unwilling person <the nonparty appealed after being compelled to participate in the proceedings in invitum>. Cf. ab invitio.

in ipso termino (in ip-soh tor-mi-no), adv. [Latin] Hist. At the very end; on the last day, as of a prescriptive period.

initial appearance. See appearance.

initial cause. See proximate cause under cause (1).

initial disclosure. See disclosure (2).

initialia testimoni (i-nish-ee-ə lee-ə tes-ta-mo-ni), adv. [Law Latin “initial parts of testimony”] Scots law. The preliminary examination of a witness in order to determine the witness's competence to testify. Cf. in initialibus.

initial margin requirement. See margin requirement.

initial protest. See protest (2).

initial public offering. See offering.

initial surplus. See surplus.

initiation of charges. Military law. The first report to the proper military authority of an alleged commission of an offense by a person subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice. Cf. preferring of charges. [Cases: Military Justice ≤950.]

initiative (i-nish-ə-tiv or i-nish-ee-ə-tiv), (1889) An electoral process by which a percentage of voters can propose legislation and compel a vote on it by the legislature or by the full electorate. • Recognized in some state constitutions, the initiative is one of the few methods of direct democracy in an otherwise representative system. Cf. plebiscite; referendum. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ≤108; Statutes ≤301–327.]

in itinere (in i-tin-ər-e), adv. [Latin] Hist. On a journey; on the way. • This term referred to the justices in eyre (justices in itinere) and to goods en route to a buyer. See eyre; in transitu.

initium possessionis (i-nish-ee-ə po-zen-hi-ee-oh-ni), adv. [Latin “the beginning of the possession”] Hist. The right by which possession was first held.

injoin, vb. Archaic. See enjoin.

in judicio (in joo-dish-ee-oh), adv. & adj. [Latin] Before the judge. • The phrase is still sometimes used.
Originally, in Roman law, in judicio referred to the second stage of a Roman formulary trial, held before a private judge known as a judex. — Also termed apud judicem. See FORMULA (1). Cf. in jure (2).

injunction (in-jangk-shan), n. (16c) A court order commanding or preventing an action. • To get an injunction, the complainant must show that there is no plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law and that an irreparable injury will result unless the relief is granted. • Also termed writ of injunction. See irreparable-injury rule. [Cases: Injunction C:=>1.]

antisuit injunction. An injunction prohibiting a litigant from instituting other, related litigation, usu. between the same parties on the same issues. [Cases: Injunction C:=>33.]

ex parte injunction. (1854) A preliminary injunction issued after the court has heard from only the moving party. • Also termed temporary restraining order.

final injunction. See permanent injunction.

head-start injunction. Trade secrets. An injunction prohibiting the defendant from using a trade secret for a period of time equal to the time between the date of the secret’s theft and the date when the secret became public. • So named since that period is the “head start” the defendant unfairly gained over the rest of the industry. [Cases: Injunction C:=>56, 138.33.]

mandatory injunction. (1843) An injunction that orders an affirmative act or mandates a specified course of conduct. • Also termed affirmative injunction. Cf. prohibitory injunction. [Cases: Injunction C:=>5, 133.]

permanent injunction. (1846) An injunction granted after a final hearing on the merits. • Despite its name, a permanent injunction does not necessarily last forever. • Also termed perpetual injunction; final injunction. [Cases: Injunction C:=>1.]

preliminary injunction. (1828) A temporary injunction issued before or during trial to prevent an irreparable injury from occurring before the court has a chance to decide the case. • A preliminary injunction will be issued only after the defendant receives notice and an opportunity to be heard. • Also termed interlocutory injunction; temporary injunction; provisional injunction; injunction pendente lite. Cf. ex parte injunction; temporary restraining order. [Cases: Injunction C:=>132.]

preventive injunction. (1882) An injunction designed to prevent a loss or injury in the future. Cf. reparative injunction.

prohibitory injunction. (1843) An injunction that forbids or restrains an act. • This is the most common type of injunction. Cf. mandatory injunction.

quia timet injunction (kwit-o tr-mat or kwee-a tim-et). [Latin “because he fears”] (1913) An injunction granted to prevent an action that has been threatened but has not yet violated the plaintiff’s rights. See QUA TIMET.

reparative injunction (ri-par-a-tiv). (1955) An injunction requiring the defendant to restore the plaintiff to the position that the plaintiff occupied before the defendant committed a wrong. Cf. preventive injunction.

special injunction. Hist. An injunction in which the prohibition of an act is the only relief ultimately sought, as in prevention of waste or nuisance.

injunctive, adj. (15c) That has the quality of directing or ordering; of or relating to an injunction. • Also termed injunctional.

in jure (in joor-ee). [Latin “in law”] 1. According to the law. 2. Roman law. Before the praetor or other magistrate. • In jure referred to the first stage of a Roman formulary trial, held before the praetor or other judicial magistrate for the purpose of establishing the legal issues and their competence. Evidence was taken in the second stage, which was held before a judex. See FORMULA (1). Cf. IN JUDICIO.

in jure cessio (in joo-er-ee shesh-ee-oh). [Latin “a surrender in law”] Roman law. A fictitious trial held to transfer ownership of property; a collusive claim to formally convey property, esp. incorporeal property, by a court’s assignment of ownership. • At trial, the transferee appeared before a praetor and asserted ownership of the property. The actual owner also appeared, but did not contest the assertion, and so allowed the transfer of the property to the plaintiff. In jure cessio was most often used to convey incorporeal property. • Also spelled in jure cesso.

injuria (in-joor-ee-ee), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. See wrong. Cf. DAMNUM INJURIA DATUM; actio injuriarum under actio. 2. An assault on a person’s reputation or body. Pl. INJURiae (in-joor-ee-ee).

“By injuria (or outrage), as the fourth ground of delict obligation, is meant some affronting wrong, calculated to wound the self-respect and touch the honor of the person injured, to humble or degrade him in the view of others.” James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 243 (N.Y.: D. Appleton & Co. 1881).

injuria absque damno (in-joor-ee-ee abs-kwee dam-noh). [Latin “injury without damage”] A legal wrong that will not sustain a lawsuit because no harm resulted from it. — Also termed injuria sine damno. Cf. DAMNUM SINE INJURIA.

injurious, adj. (15c) Harmful; tending to injure.

injurious exposure. Workers’ compensation. Contact with a substance that would cause injury if the person were repeatedly exposed to it over time. — An employer may be found liable for harm resulting from injurious exposure. [Cases: Workers’ Compensation ☞ 201, 517, 1074.]

injurious falsehood. 1. See disparagement (3). 2. See trade disparagement.

injurious words. Louisiana law. Slanderous or libelous language. See slander; libel (1), (2).

injury, n. (14c) 1. The violation of another’s legal right, for which the law provides a remedy: a wrong or injustice. See wrong. 2. Scots law. Anything said or done in breach of a duty not to do it, if harm results to another in person, character, or property. — Injuries are divided into real injuries (such as wounding) and verbal injuries (such as slander). They may be criminal wrongs (as with assault) or civil wrongs (as with defamation). 3. Any harm or damage. — Some authorities distinguish harm from injury, holding that while harm denotes any personal loss or detriment, injury involves an actionable invasion of a legally protected interest. See Restatement (Second) of Torts § 7, cmt. a (1965). [Cases: Torts ☞ 117] — injure, vb. — injurious, adj.

accidental injury. (1800) An injury resulting from external, violent, and unanticipated causes; esp., a bodily injury caused by some external force or agency operating contrary to a person’s intentions, unexpectedly, and not according to the usual order of events. [Cases: Insurance ☞ 2590.]

advertising injury. Harm resulting from (1) oral or written speech that slanders or libels a person, or disparages a person’s goods, products, or services; (2) oral or written speech that violates a person’s right of privacy; (3) misappropriation of advertising ideas or style of doing business; or (4) infringement of copyright, esp. in a name or slogan. [Cases: Insurance ☞ 2297.]

bodily injury. (16c) Physical damage to a person’s body. — Also termed physical injury. See serious bodily injury. [Cases: Damages ☞ 30, 32; Insurance ☞ 2276.]

civil injury. (17c) Physical harm or property damage caused by breach of a contract or by a criminal offense redressable through a civil action.

compensable injury (kam-pen-sa-bal). Workers’ compensation. An injury caused by an accident arising from the employment and in the course of the employee’s work, and for which the employee is statutorily entitled to receive compensation. [Cases: Workers’ Compensation ☞ 511-770.] consequential injury. See consequent loss under Loss.

continual injury. An injury that recurs at repeated intervals. — Also termed (but improperly) continuous injury.

continuing injury. (1824) An injury that is still in the process of being committed. — An example is the constant smoke or noise of a factory. — Also termed continuing harm. [Cases: Damages ☞ 110.]

direct injury. (17c) 1. An injury resulting directly from violation of a legal right. 2. An injury resulting directly from a particular cause, without any intervening causes. [Cases: Damages ☞ 16.]

great bodily injury. See serious bodily injury.

injury in fact. (1809) An actual or imminent invasion of a legally protected interest, in contrast to an invasion that is conjectural or hypothetical. — An injury in fact gives the victim standing to bring an action for damages. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ☞ 103.2.]

irreparable injury (ir-rep-ar-a-bal). (17c) An injury that cannot be adequately measured or compensated by money and is therefore often considered remediable by injunction. — Also termed irreparable harm; nonpecuniary injury. See irreparable-injury rule. [Cases: Injunction ☞ 14, 138.6.]

The term ‘irreparable injury,’ however, is not to be taken in its strict literal sense. The rule does not require that the threatened injury should be one not physically capable of being repaired. If the threatened injury would be substantial and serious — one not easily to be estimated, or repaired by money — and if the loss or inconvenience to the plaintiff if the injunction should be refused (this title proving good) would be much greater than any which can be suffered by the defendant through the granting of the injunction, although his title ultimately prevails, the case is one of such probable great or ‘irreparable’ damage as will justify a preliminary injunction.” Elias Merwin, Principles of Equity and Equity Pleading 426-27 (H.C. Merwin ed., 1896).

legal injury. (18c) Violation of a legal right.

malicious injury. (16c) 1. An injury resulting from a willful act committed with knowledge that it is likely to injure another or with reckless disregard of the consequences. 2. MALICIOUS MISCHIEF.

nonpecuniary injury. See irreparable injury.

pecuniary injury. An injury that can be adequately measured or compensated by money.

permanent injury. (17c) 1. A completed wrong whose consequences cannot be remedied for an indefinite period. 2. Property. A lasting injury to land that causes it to revert to the grantor or vests immediate right of possession in a remainderman. Cf. temporary injury.

personal injury. (16c) Torts. 1. In a negligence action, any harm caused to a person, such as a broken bone, a cut, or a bruise, bodily injury. 2. Any invasion of a personal right, including mental suffering and false imprisonment. — Also termed private injury. [Cases: Insurance $ 2306] 3. For purposes of workers’ compensation, any harm (including a worsened pre-existing condition) that arises in the scope of employment. — Abbr. PI. [Cases: Workers’ Compensation $ 552–566, 604–770.]

private injury. See personal injury (2).

public injury. A loss or an injury stemming from a breach of a duty or violation of a right that affects the community as a whole.

reparable injury (rep-ar-a-bal), (1832) An injury that can be adequately compensated by money.

scheduled injury. A partially disabling injury for which a predetermined amount of compensation is allowed under a workers’ compensation statute. [Cases: Workers’ Compensation $ 869–902.]

serious bodily injury. (1843) Serious physical impairment of the human body; esp., bodily injury that creates a substantial risk of death or that causes serious, permanent disfigurement or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any body part or organ. Model Penal Code § 210.0(3). Typically, the fact-finder must decide in any given case whether the injury meets this general standard. Generally, an injury meets this standard if it creates a substantial risk of fatal consequences or, when inflicted, constitutes mayhem. Cf. mayhem (1). — Also termed serious bodily harm; grievous bodily harm; great bodily injury. [Cases: Homicide $ $ 330; Assault and Battery $ 55.]

temporary injury. An injury that may be abated or discontinued at any time by either the injured party or the wrongdoer. Cf. permanent injury. [Cases: Damages $ 109.] willful and malicious injury. Bankruptcy. Under the statutory exception to discharge, damage to another entity (such as a creditor) caused by a debtor intentionally performing a wrongful act — without just cause or excuse — that the debtor knew was certain or substantially certain to cause injury. 11 USCA § 523(a)(6). [Cases: Bankruptcy $ 3374.]

in jus vocare (in jus voh-kair-e), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To summon a defendant to court.

in kind, adv. (17c) 1. In goods or services rather than money. 2. In a similar way; with an equivalent of what has been offered or received. — in-kind, adj. [Cases: Workers’ Compensation $ 552–566, 604–770.]

inland. (15c) 1. The interior part of a country or region, away from the coast or border. 2. Hist. The portion of a feudal estate lying closest to the lord’s manor and dedicated to the support of the lord’s family. — Also termed (in sense 2) inlantal. Cf. utländ.

inland bill of exchange. See domestic bill (2) under BILL (6).

inland draft. See draft.

inland marine insurance. See insurance.

inland revenue. See internal revenue.

inland trade. See trade.

inland waters. See internal water.

inlantal (in-lan-tal). Hist. See inland (a). — Also spelled inlantine.

in law. (15c) Existing in law or by force of law; in the contemplation of the law. Cf. in fact.

in-law, n. (1894) A relative by marriage.

inlaw, vb. Archaic. To place (an offender) under the protection of the law. Cf. outlaw (1).

“The outlaw’s life is insecure... if the king inlaws him, he comes back into the world like a new-born babe, quasi modo genius, capable indeed of acquiring new rights, but unable to assert any of those that he had before his outlawry. An annihilation of the outlawry would have a different operation, but the inlawed outlaw is not the old person restored to legal life; he is a new person.” 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 477 (2d ed. 1898).
inlawry. The restoration of an outlawed person’s rights and protections under the law. See inflation.

in lecto aegritudinis (in lek-toh ee-gri-ti[n]’yo-o-di-nis). [Law Latin] Scots law. On a bed of sickness. • The phrase appeared in reference either to the deathbed or to periods of illness that excused a person from fulfilling an obligation. See liege poust.

in legal custody. See in custodia legis.

In former times, many persons holding certain feudal rights from the Crown were called barons, but in the strict legal sense, the title was only due to him whose lands had been erected or confirmed by the king in liberam baroniam. The advantages conferred by the right of barony were considerable. Such a right conferred on the baron both civil and criminal jurisdiction within his barony; and under the clause of union contained in his charter, he was enabled to take infestment in the whole lands and rights of the barony in, what was at that time, an easy and inexpensive mode.” John Trayner, Trayner’s Latin Maxims 264 (4th ed. 1894).

in liberam elemosinam (in lib-ar-‘am el-‘a-ma-st-nam). [Latin “in free alms”] Hist. Land given away for a charitable purpose; land given away to be held in frankalmoine. — Also spelled in liberam elemosinam. — Also termed in libera elemosina. See frankalmoine.

in liberam regalitatem (in lib-ar-‘am ri-gal-‘a-tay-tam). [Law Latin] Hist. Into a free regality. • The phrase appeared in reference to feudal land grants that were made by the Crown and that gave the grantees jurisdiction over criminal and civil matters in their territory equivalent to that of the Crown.

in libero sochagio (in lib-ar-‘oh so-kay-jee-oh), adv. [Law Latin] In free socage. See socage.

in lieu of. (13c) Instead of or in place of; in exchange or return for <the creditor took a note in lieu of cash> <the debtor was held in mercy for a false claim> <the defendant was released in lieu of $5,000 bond>.

in lieu tax. See tax.

in limine (in lim-‘a-nee), adv. [Latin “at the outset”] (18c) Preliminarily, presented to only the judge, before or during trial . See motion in limine. [Cases: Criminal Law ᵃⁿ≥ 623(4); Federal Civil Procedure ʰⁿ≥ 927.5; Pretrial Procedure ʰⁿ≥ 3.]

in-limine, adj. (Of a motion or order) raised preliminarily, esp. because of an issue about the admissibility of evidence believed by the movant to be prejudicial <in-limine motion>.

in litem (in l-t-em or -tam), adv. [Latin] For a suit; to the suit. See ad literam.

in loco (in loh-koh). [Latin] In the place of.

in loco parentis (in loh-koh po-ren-tis), adv. & adj. [Latin “in the place of a parent”] (1818) Of, relating to, or acting as a temporary guardian or caretaker of a child, taking on all or some of the responsibilities of a parent.

• The Supreme Court has recognized that during the school day, a teacher or administrator may act in loco parentis. See Vernonia Sch. Dist. v. Acton, 515 U.S. 646, 115 S.Ct. 2386 (1995). See person in loco parentis. [Cases: Child Custody ʰⁿ≥ 274; Child Support ʰⁿ≥ 31; Parent and Child ʰⁿ≥ 15.]

in loco parentis, n. Supervision of a young adult by an administrative body such as a university. [Cases: Schools ʰⁿ≥ 169.]

“A possessor in mala fide is one who holds possession of a subject, in the knowledge that it is not his own, on a title which he knows, or has reasonable ground for believing to be a bad one.” John Trayner, Trayner’s Latin Maxims 256 (4th ed. 1894).

in mancicio (in man-sip-ee-oh), adj. [Latin] Roman law. In a state of civil bondage. • This status applied to a son whose father was sued in a noxal action and settled the claim by handing over his son. See noxal action (1).

in manu mortua. See in mortua manu.

in-marriage. See marriage (1).

inmate. (16c) 1. A person confined in a prison, hospital, or similar institution. [Cases: Prisons ʰⁿ≥ 110.] 2. Archaic. A person living inside a place; one who lives with others in a dwelling.

in medias res (in mee-dee-‘as reez or in mee-‘de-ahs rays), adv. [Latin] Into the middle of things; without preface or introduction.

in meditazione fugae (in med-i-tay-shen-‘ay-oh-nee f[‘yoo-jee]). [Law Latin] Scots law. Meditating flight; contemplating leaving the country. • Formerly, a debtor could be detained under a fugae warrant if the debtor had sufficient debt to warrant imprisonment, and if the debtor was attempting to leave the country. This type of warrant became obsolete when imprisonment for debt was abolished.

in mercy, adv. (17c) At a judge’s discretion concerning punishment. • A judgment formerly noted (using the Law Latin phrase in misericordia) which litigant lost by stating that the unsuccessful party was in the court’s mercy. A plaintiff held in mercy for a false claim, for example, was said to be in misericordia pro falso clamore suo.

in mitiori sensu (in mish-ce-or-1 sens-yoo), adv. [Law Latin] In a milder or more favorable sense. • This phrase appeared as part of the former rule applied in slander actions. A word capable of two meanings would be given the one more favorable to the defendant. Cf. INNOCENT-CONSTRUCTION RULE. [Cases: Libel and Slander 19.]

“Within half a century of its first appearance, the action for words had become part of the everyday business of the common-law courts, in particular the King's Bench. In the early days there were often more slander cases in the rolls than assumpsit ... The judges apparently came to regret this aspect of their increased jurisdiction, especially since juries frequently awarded sums of money quite disproportionate to the harm and to the ability of the wrongdoer to pay ... The principal effect of the judicial reaction was that a spirit of repression began to manifest itself. ... The ... most effective attack was launched in the 1570s, when the courts began the policy of construing ambiguous or doubtful words in the milder sense (in mitiori sensu) so that they would not be actionable.” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 500-01 (3d ed. 1990).

in modum assisae (in moh-dam a-stsi-zee), adv. [Law Latin] In the manner or form of an assize. See ASSIZE.

in modum juratae (in moh-dam juu-ray-tee), adv. [Law Latin] In the manner or form of a jury.

in modum probationis (in moh-dam prob-hay-she-oh-nis). [Latin] Hist. In the form of proof. • The phrase appeared in reference to documents that a party provided to support a claim.

in mora (in mor-a), adv. & adj. [Latin] Roman law. In delay; in default. • This was said of a debtor who delayed performance or failed to perform.

in mortua manu (in mor-choo-a man-yoo), adj. & adv. [Law Latin “in a dead hand”] Hist. (Of property) perpetually controlled according to a decedent’s directions. • Land held by a religious society was described this way because the church could hold property perpetually without rendering feudal service. — Also termed IN MORTUA MANU. See DEADHAND CONTROL; MORTMAIN.

innovable (in-nov-ay-bal), adj. 1. (Of a body of water) not capable of, or unsuitable for, navigation. [Cases: Navigable Waters 1.] 2. Marine insurance. (Of a vessel) unfit for service. — Also termed UNNAVIGABLE.

inner bar. English law. The group of senior barristers, called the Queen’s Counsel or King’s Counsel, who are admitted to plead within the bar of the court. Cf. OUTER BAR.

inner barrister. See BARRISTER.

inner cabinet. See CABINET.

inner-city post-traumatic-stress defense. See URBAN-SURVIVAL SYNDROME.

Inner House. Scots law. The appellate jurisdiction of the Court of Session. See COURT OF SESSION (1).

inning. (pl.) Land reclaimed from the sea.

inkeeper. (15c) A person who, for compensation, keeps open a public house for the lodging and entertainment of travelers. • A keeper of a boarding house is usu. not considered an innkeeper. — Also termed hotelkeeper. [Cases: Inkeepers 3.]

“The innkeeper is the person who on his own account carries on the business of an inn. In other words, he is the proprietor of the establishment. The person actually employed as manager, though he has the whole direction of the enterprise, is not an innkeeper if he is acting on behalf of someone else. Thus the salaried manager of a hotel owned or operated by a corporation is not held responsible as an innkeeper; the corporation is the innkeeper.” John H. Sherry, The Laws of Innkeepers § 2.6, at 15 (rev. ed. 1981).

innocence, n. (14c) The absence of guilt; esp., freedom from guilt for a particular offense. Cf. GUILT.

actual innocence. (1839) Criminal law. The absence of facts that are prerequisites for the sentence given to a defendant. • In death-penalty cases, actual innocence is an exception to the cause-and-prejudice rule, and can result in a successful challenge to the death sentence on the basis of a defense that was not presented to the trial court. The prisoner must show by clear and convincing evidence that, but for constitutional error in the trial court, no reasonable judge or juror would find the defendant eligible for the death penalty. See Sawyer v. Whitley, 505 U.S. 333, 112 S.Ct. 2514 (1992). Cf. CAUSE-AND-PREJUDICE RULE. [Cases: Habeas Corpus 401, 462.]

legal innocence. (1813) Criminal law. The absence of one or more procedural or legal bases to support the sentence given to a defendant. • In the context of a petition for writ of habeas corpus or other attack on the sentence, legal innocence is often contrasted with actual innocence. Actual innocence, which focuses on the facts underlying the sentence, can sometimes be used to obtain relief from the death penalty based on trial-court errors that were not objected to at trial, even if the petitioner cannot meet the elements of the cause-and-prejudice rule. But legal innocence, which focuses on the applicable law and procedure, is not as readily available. Inadvertence or a poor trial strategy resulting in the defendant’s failure to assert an established legal principle will not ordinarily be sufficient to satisfy the cause-and-prejudice rule or to establish the right to an exception from that rule. See CAUSE-
innocent agent. See agent (2). innocent-construction rule. The doctrine that an allegedly libelous statement will be given an innocuous interpretation if the statement is either ambiguous or harmless. Cf. in mitiori sensu. [Cases: Libel and Slander C—19.] innocent conversion. See technical conversion under conversion (2). innocent converter. See converter. innocent conveyance. See conveyance. innocent homicide. See homicide.
innocent infringement. See infringement.
innocent junior user. See junior user.
innocent misrepresentation. See misrepresentation.
innocent passage. Int'l law. The right of a foreign ship to pass through a country's territorial waters; the right of a foreign vessel to travel through a country's maritime belt without paying a toll. • The right of innocent passage is guaranteed in Article 17 of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea. Passage is considered innocent as long as it is not prejudicial to the peace, good order, and security of the coastal country. — Also termed right of innocent passage. Cf. transit passage. [Cases: International law C—5.]

"The term 'innocent passage' accurately denotes the nature of the right as well as its limitations. In the first place it is a right of 'passage,' that is to say, a right to use the waters as a thoroughfare between two points outside them; a ship proceeding through the maritime belt to a port of the coastal state would not be exercising a right of passage. In the second place the passage must be 'innocent,' a ship exercising the right must respect the local regulations as to navigation, pilotage, and the like, and, of course, it must not do any act which might disturb the tranquility of the coastal state." J.L. Brierly, The Law of Nations 188-89 (5th ed. 1955).

innocent purchaser for value. See bona fide purchaser under purchaser (1). innocent spouse. See spouse.
innocent trespass. See trespass.
innocent trespasser. See trespasser. innocrue utilitas (i-nok-yoo-o-til-ah-tay-tis). [Latin "useful without harming"]: Hist. An act that is beneficial to one person and harmful to no one.

Inn of Chancery, Hist. Any of nine collegiate houses where students studied either to gain entry into an Inn of Court or to learn how to frame writs in order to serve in the chancery courts. • Over time, the Inns — Clifford's, Lyon's, Furnival's, Thavies', Symond's, Barnard's, Staples', and the New Inn — became little more than dining clubs, and never exercised control over their members as the Inns of Court did. The Inns of Chancery were all dissolved in the 19th century. Cf. Inn of Court.

Inn of Court. 1. Any of four autonomous institutions, one or more of which English barristers must join to receive their training and of which they remain members for life: The Honourable Societies of Lincoln's Inn, the Middle Temple, the Inner Temple, and Gray's Inn. • These powerful bodies examine candidates for the Bar, "call" them to the Bar, and award the degree of barrister.

"It is impossible to fix with certainty the period when the professors and students of the common law first began to associate themselves together as a society, and form themselves into collegiate order; or to assign an exact date to the foundation of the inns of Court, the original institution of which nowhere precisely appears. ... After the fixing of the Court of Common Pleas by Magna Charta, the practitioners of the municipal law took up their residence in houses between the king's courts at Westminster and the city of London — forming then one community; and before the end of the reign of Edward II, they appear to have divided themselves into separate inns or colleges, at Temple Bar, Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn." Robert H. Pearce, A Guide to the Inns of Court and Chancery 1-2 (1855).

2. (pl.) In the United States, an organization (formally named the American Inn of Court Foundation) with more than 100 local chapters, whose members include judges, practicing attorneys, law professors, and law students. • Through monthly meetings, the chapters emphasize practice skills, professionalism, and ethics, and provide mentors to train students and young lawyers in the finer points of good legal practice.

innominate (i-nom-a-nat). adj. (17c) Civil law. Unclassified; having no special name or designation. See innominate contract under contract.

innominate action. See action (4). innominate contract. See contract.
innominate obligations. (1949) Obligations having no specific classification or name because they are not strictly contractual, delictual, or quasi-contractual. • An example is the obligation of a trustee to a beneficiary. — Also termed obligations innominati.

innominate real contract. See innominate contract under contract.

in nomine Dei, Amen (in nahm-ah-nee-dee-e, ay men). [Latin] Hist. In the name of God, Amen. • This phrase formerly appeared at the beginning of a will or other instrument.

innoscimus (in-oh-tis-ah-mas). [Law Latin "we make known"]: Hist. A certification, in the form of letters patent, of a charter of feoffment or other instrument not filed of record. • This term derives from the word of emphasis appearing at the end of the document. Cf. exemplification.
innovata lite dependente (in-oh-vay-ta It-tee dee-pen-den-tee). [Law Latin] Hist. Innovations during the pendency of a suit. • The phrase appeared in reference to the interference with something that is the subject of a lawsuit. See PENDENTE LITE.

innovation. Scots law. See NOVATION.

innoxiare (i-nok-shay-er-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To purge (a person) of fault.

in nubibus (in n[y]oo-bi-bas), adv. & adj. [Law Latin] In the clouds. • An expression for something that is under the protection of the law.

innuendo (in-yoo-en-doh). [Latin “by hinting”) (17c) 1. An oblique remark or indirect suggestion, usu. of a derogatory nature. 2. An explanatory word or passage inserted parenthetically into a legal document. • In criminal law, an innuendo is a statement in an indictment showing the application or meaning of matter previously expressed, the meaning of which would not otherwise be clear. In the law of defamation, an innuendo is the plaintiff’s explanation of a statement’s defamatory meaning when that meaning is not apparent from the statement’s face. For example, the innuendo of the statement “David burned down his house” can be shown by pleading that the statement was understood to mean that David was defrauding his insurance company (the fact that he had insured his house is pleaded and proved by inducement). Cf. INDUCEMENT (4); COLLOQUIUM. [Cases: Libel and Slander <:98.]

“Innuendo (from innu, to nod or beckon with the head) is a word used in declarations and law pleadings, to ascertain a person or thing which was named before . . . . If a man say, that such a one had the pox, innuendo the French pox, this will not be admitted, because the French pox was not mentioned before, and the words shall be construed in a more favourable sense. But, if in discourse of the French pox, one say, that such a one had the pox, innuendo the French pox, this will be admitted to render that certain which was uncertain before.” 2 Richard Burn, A New Law Dictionary 24 (1792).

“It is not a true innuendo to repeat the obvious meaning of defamatory words in other language, or in an embroidered or exaggerated way. Otherwise an ingenious pleader could perplex the judge and jury and harry the defendant by ringing the changes on the same words, creating numerous different causes of action, each requiring a separate verdict. A true innuendo relies on a conjunction of the words used and some extrinsic fact. Thus it is defamatory in itself to say that a man’s affairs are being investigated by the Fraud Squad: but the statement does not support the innuendo that those affairs are being carried on fraudulently. Conversely, the statement ‘X is a good advertiser’ is innocent in itself, but carries a libellous innuendo if published to persons who know the extrinsic fact that X is an eminent member of the Bar.” R.F.V. Houston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 149 (17th ed. 1977). [The example about lawyers’ advertising no longer has relevance to American law. — Eds.]

in nullo est erratum (in nal-oh est i-ray-tam), adj. [Law Latin “in nothing is there error”] Hist. Of or relating to a demurrer that denies any error and at once refers a question of law to the court.

• For example, a gift made to a woman who was later divorced for committing adultery was revoked in odium of her guilt.

• “Innuendo of the statement ‘David burned down his house’ can be shown by pleading that the statement was understood to mean that David was defrauding his insurance company (the fact that he had insured his house is pleaded and proved by inducement).” 2 Richard Burn, A New Law Dictionary 24 (1792).

in operative, adj. (17c) 1. Having no force or effect; not operative <an inoperative statute>. 2. Patents. (Of an invention), the condition of not being capable of functioning as described in the patent application.

“An invention is inoperative if it is obvious in its nature and surprising to the ordinary person.” Roger Sherman Hoar, Patent Tactics and the Law 37 (3d ed. 1950).

inops consilii (in-ahps kan-sil-ee-ee), adj. [Latin] Des­titute of counsel; without legal counsel. • This term described actions taken without benefit of legal advice, as when a testator drafts a will without the help of an attorney.

“[T]hat in devises by last will and testament, (which, being often drawn up when the party is inops consilli, and are always more favoured in construction than formal deeds, which are presumed to be made with great caution, forethought, and advice) in these devises, I say, remainders may be created in some measure contrary to the rules before laid down . . . .” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 172 (1768).

in order. 1. Ready for business <the meeting is in order>. 2. Available and appropriate for consideration under the applicable rules <the motion is in order>. Cf. out of order (1).

inordinatus (in-or-da-nay-tas), n. [Latin “disorderly; unordained”] Hist. See intestate.

in pacato solo (in-pa-kay-toh soh-loh), adv. [Latin] In a country that is at peace.

in pace Dei et regis (in-pay-see-dee-et-ree-jis), adv. [Law Latin] Hist. In the peace of God and the king. • This phrase was used in an appeal from a murder conviction.

in pais (in pay or pays). [Law French “in the country”] Outside court or legal proceedings. See equitable estoppel

in paper, Hist. Of a proceeding that is within the jurisdiction of the trial court; that is, before the record is prepared for an appeal.

"Formerly, the suitors were much perplexed by writs of error brought upon very slight and trivial grounds, as misspellings and other mistakes of the clerks, all which might be amended at the common law, while all the proceedings were in paper, for they were then considered in fieri, and therefore subject to the control of the courts." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 407 (1768).

in pari causa (in par-i kaw-za), adv. [Latin “in an equal case”] In a case affecting two parties equally or in which they have equal rights <in pari causa, the possessor ordinarily defeats the nonpossessor claimant>.

in pari delicto (in par-i da-lik-toh), adv. [Latin “in equal fault”] Equally at fault <the court denied relief because both parties stood in pari delicto>. [Cases: Action C–4; Equity C–65.]

in pari delicto doctrine, n. [Latin] (1917) The principle that a plaintiff who has participated in wrongdoing may not recover damages resulting from the wrongdoing. [Cases: Action C–4; Contracts C–139; Equity C–65.]

in pari materia (in par-i me-tee-ee-a). [Latin “in the same matter”] 1. adj. On the same subject; relating to the same matter. • It is a canon of construction that statutes that are in pari materia may be construed together, so that inconsistencies in one statute may be resolved by looking at another statute on the same subject. [Cases: Statutes C–223.2(1)–223.2(35).]

"[I]t seems that the present position is that, when an earlier statute is in pari materia with a later one, it is simply part of its context to be considered by the judge in deciding whether the meaning of a provision in the later statute is plain." Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 128 (1976).

2. adv. Loosely, in conjunction with <the Maryland constitutional provision is construed in pari materia with the Fourth Amendment>.

in patiendo (in-pash-ee-en-doh), adv. & adj. [fr. Latin patior "suffer"] In suffering or permitting.

in patria potestate (in-pay-tree-a or pa-tree-a-poh-test-tee). [Latin] Roman law. (Of a person) in the power of the father or a senior male ascendant; subject to patria potestas. • Uncles and brothers never had power over nephews or younger brothers. See patria potestas under potestas; sub potestate. Cf. sui juris.

in pectore judicis (in pek-tee-ree joo-di-sis), adv. & adj. [Latin] In the breast of the court. See breast of the court.

in pejorem partem (in jor-am pahr-tam), adv. [Law Latin] In the worst part; on the worst side.

in penny and outpenny. Hist. A customary payment of a penny on entering into and going out of a tenancy.

in perpetuum commandam (in par-pech-oo-am ka-men-dam). [Law Latin] Hist. In perpetual trust. • Something given in perpetuum commandam was equivalent to a gift.

in perpetuum rei memoriam (in par-pech-oo-am or par-pe-tyoo-am) ree-i ma- morph-ee-am). [Latin] In perpetual memory of a matter. • This phrase refers to a deposition taken to preserve the deponent’s testimony. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C–1291; Pretrial Procedure C–61.]

in perpetuum rei testimonium (in par-pech-oo-am or par-pe-tyoo-am) ree-i tes-ti-moh-nee-am). [Law Latin] In perpetual testimony of a matter. • This phrase refers to a statute that confirms existing common law.

"Statutes also are either declaratory of the common law, or remedial of some defects therein. Declaratory, where the old custom of the kingdom is almost fallen into disuse, or become disputable; in which case the parliament has thought proper, in perpetuum rei testimonium, and for avoiding all doubts and difficulties, to declare what the common law is and ever hath been." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 86 (1765).

in personam (in par-soh-nam), adj. [Latin “against a person”] (18c) 1. Involving or determining the personal rights and obligations of the parties. 2. (Of a legal action) brought against a person rather than property. — Also termed personal. See action in personam under action (4). Cf. in rem. [Cases: Courts C–10.] — in personam, adv.

"An action is said to be in personam when its object is to determine the rights and interests of the parties themselves in the subject-matter of the action, however the action may arise, and the effect of a judgment in such an action is merely to bind the parties to it. A normal action brought by one person against another for breach of contract is a common example of an action in personam." R.H. Graveson, Conflict of Laws 98 (7th ed. 1974).

in personam jurisdiction. See personal jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

in pios usus (in pi-<Latin>-as yoo-sas), adv. [Law Latin] Hist. For pious uses; for religious purposes. • This phrase referred to property used by, or claimed by, the church, such as the property of an intestate who had no known heirs.

in point. See ON POINT.

in posse (in pos-ee). [Latin] Not currently existing, but ready to come into existence under certain conditions in the future; potential <the will contemplated both living children and children in posse>. Cf. IN ESSE.

in potestate patris (in poh-tes-tay-tee pay-tris or pa-tris). [Latin] Roman law. Under the power of the father. • The phrase appeared in reference to the position of a child in power. See patria potestas under POTESTAS; SUB POTESTATE. Cf. sui JURIS.

in potestate viri (in poh-tes-tay-tee veer t). [Latin] Hist. Under the power of the husband. • Formerly, this phrase appeared in reference to the position of a wife if she was a guardian of the wife.

in praemissorum fidem (in pree-ma-sor-am or prem-a-) ff-dam), adv. & adj. [Law Latin] Hist. In confirmation or attestation of the premises. • This phrase commonly appeared in notarized documents.

in prae senti (in pri-zen-ti or pree-). [Latin] At present; right now. Cf. IN FUTURO.

in praesentia dominorum (in pri-zen-she-ah dom-e-nor-am). [Latin] Hist. In presence of the lords. • The phrase was added to the presiding judge’s signature to indicate that the remaining judges did not have to sign the document because the presiding judge had signed the writing in their presence. — Abbr. IPD.

in prender (in pren-daar), adj. [Law French “in taking”] Hist. (Of a right) consisting in property taken to fulfill a claim to it, such as an incorporeal hereditament (as a heriot custom) that a lord had to seize in order to exercise the right to it. Cf. IN RENDER.

in-presence rule. The principle that a police officer may make a warrantless arrest of a person who commits a misdemeanor offense not only in the officer’s actual presence but also within the officer’s immediate vicinity.

in primis (in pri-mis). See IMPRIMIS.

(1846) A system of proof-taking used in civil law, whereby the judge conducts the trial, determines what questions to ask, and defines the scope and the extent of the inquiry. • This system prevails in most of continental Europe, in Japan, and in Central and South America. Cf. ADVERSARY SYSTEM.

INR. abbr. BUREAU OF INTELLIGENCE AND RESEARCH.

in re (in ree or ray). [Latin “in the matter of”] (1877) (Of a judicial proceeding) not formally including adverse parties, but rather involving something (such as an estate). • The term is often used in case citations, esp. in uncontested proceedings <In re Butler's Estate>. — Also termed matter of <Matter of Butler's Estate>.

in rebus (in ree-bas), adv. [Latin] In things, cases, or matters.

in rem (in rem), adj. [Latin "against a thing"] (18c) Involving or determining the status of a thing, and therefore the rights of persons generally with respect to that thing. — Also termed (archaically) impersonal. See action in rem under ACTION (4). Cf. IN PERSONAM. [Cases: Admiralty ⊳48; Courts ⊳16.] — in rem, adv.

“An action in rem is one in which the judgment of the court determines the title to property and the rights of the parties, not merely as between themselves, but also as against all persons at any time dealing with them or with the property upon which the court had adjudicated.” R.H. Graveson, Conflict of Laws 98 (7th ed. 1974).

quasi in rem (kway-st in rem or kway-zi). [Latin “as if against a thing”] (1804) Involving or determining the rights of a person having an interest in property located within the court’s jurisdiction. See action quasi in rem under ACTION (4). [Cases: Courts ⊳16.]

in re mercatoria (in ree mar-kor-ee-a). [Latin] Scots law. In a mercantile transaction. • Documents made in or connected with a mercantile transaction did not require the typical formalities in order to be binding.

“All writings in re mercatoria are privileged, and are held valid and binding, although wanting the solemnities common and necessary to ordinary deeds .... This privilege has been given to these documents, because of the rapidity with which, in most cases, they have to be prepared, and the immediate use to which they have to be put, and also because, from the necessity of the case, they are generally prepared by those who are not supposed to be acquainted with the formalities and solemnities of deeds.” John Trayner, Trayner’s Latin Maxims 273 (4th ed. 1894).

in rem judgment. See judgment in rem under JUDGMENT.

in rem jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

The phrase appeared in reference to the supremacy of ecclesiastical-court jurisdiction in certain matters, esp. those involving church doctrine and discipline.

insane, adj. (16c) Mentally deranged; suffering from one or more delusions or false beliefs that (1) have no foundation in reason or reality, (2) are not credible to any reasonable person of sound mind, and (3) cannot be overcome in a sufferer's mind by any amount of evidence or argument. See insanity. [Cases: Mental Health ⊕= 3.]

insane delusion. (1838) An irrational, persistent belief in an imaginary state of facts resulting in a lack of capacity to undertake acts of legal consequence, such as making a will. See capacity (2). [Cases: Criminal Law ⊕= 49.]

insanity, n. (16c) Any mental disorder severe enough that it prevents a person from having legal capacity and excuses the person from criminal or civil responsibility. Also termed legal insanity; lunacy. Cf. sanity. [Cases: Criminal Law ⊕= 47; Homicide ⊕= 817; Mental Health ⊕= 3.]

The lawyers refer to 'insanity.' This is a legal term only, and one that is not used by the psychiatrist; the latter prefers to speak of mental disorder, mental illness, or of psychosis or neurosis." Winfred Overholser, Psychiatry and the Law, 38 Mental Hygiene 243, 244 (1954).

The word 'insanity' is commonly used in discussions of this problem although some other term would seem to be preferable such as 'mental disease or defect,' — which may be shortened to 'mental disorder' in general discussions if this is clearly understood to include disease of the mind, congenital lack, and damage resulting from traumatic injury, but to exclude excitement or stupefaction resulting from liquor or drugs. Apart from its uses in the law 'insanity' is usually employed to indicate mental disorder resulting from deterioration or damage as distinguished from congenital deficiency. Criminal incapacity may result as readily from one as from the other, but while the earlier authorities spoke of the 'idiot' and the 'madman,' . . . the more recent tendency in the law has been to include both under the 'insanity' label." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 952 (3d ed. 1982).

Another objection to the word 'insanity' is the unwarranted assumption that it refers to a very definite mental condition, seldom put into words but apparent in many discussions of the problem." id.

emotional insanity. (1872) Insanity produced by a violent excitement of the emotions or passions, although reasoning faculties may remain unimpaired; a passion that for a period creates complete derangement of intellect. Emotional insanity is sometimes described as an irresistible impulse to do an act. See irresistible-impulse test. [Cases: Criminal Law ⊕= 51; Homicide ⊕= 818.]

temporary insanity. (18c) Insanity that exists only at the time of a criminal act.

insanity defense. Criminal law. (1912) An affirmative defense alleging that a mental disorder caused the accused to commit the crime. See 18 USCA § 17; Fed. R. Crim. P. 12.2. Unlike other defenses, a successful insanity defense may not result in an acquittal but instead in a special verdict ("not guilty by reason of insanity") that usu. leads to the defendant's commitment to a mental institution. Also termed insanity plea. See mcnaghten rules; substantial-capacity test; irresistible-impulse test; durham rule; appreciation test. [Cases: Criminal Law ⊕= 47; Homicide ⊕= 817.]

black-rage insanity defense. An insanity defense based on an African-American's violent eruption of anger induced at least partly by racial tensions. This defense was first used in the mid-1990s.

insanity plea. See insanity defense.

insimul computasset (in-sim-ool or in-sii-mool kahm-pyo-oh-tas-ant). [Latin "they accounted together"] Hist. A count in an assumpsit action asserting that the parties had reviewed their accounts and that the defendant voluntarily agreed to pay the amount sought by the plaintiff. • This term derives from the initial words of the count.

insider trading. The use of material, nonpublic information in trading the shares of a company by a corporate insider or other person who owes a fiduciary duty to the company. • This is the classic definition. The Supreme Court has also approved a broader definition, known as the “misappropriation theory”: the deceitful acquisition and misuse of information that properly belongs to persons to whom one owes a duty. Thus, under the misappropriation theory, it is insider trading for a lawyer to trade in the stock of XYZ Corp. after learning that a client of the lawyer’s firm is planning a takeover of XYZ. But under the classic definition, that is not insider trading because the lawyer owed no duty to XYZ itself. — Also termed insider dealing. [Cases: Securities Regulation ⇐ 60.28.]

“What is insider trading?” The term is probably best defined, to the extent any definition is adequate, as ‘the purchase or sale of securities on the basis of material, non-public information.’ What counts as ‘non-public information’? What non-public information can be deemed ‘material’? When is a trader who is in possession of material, non-public information trading on the basis of that information? Must the information be about the company whose securities are being purchased or sold? What characteristics establish ‘insider’ status sufficient to warrant legal proscriptions of trading? These are all questions that are derived from the definition of insider trading just offered. ... C. Edward Fletcher, Materials or the Law of Insider Trading 3 (1991).

“A number of different parties may be subject to a variety of monetary penalties under the federal securities laws for engaging in illegal insider trading. These parties may include actual traders, their tippers, as well as broker-dealers and investment advisors (when they fail to take appropriate steps to prevent the insider trading violation(s) or fail to maintain and enforce policies and procedures reasonably designed to prevent the occurrence of such trading). Measures that may be ordered include (1) requiring the subject party to ‘disgorge’ the ill-gotten profits (or loss avoided) in an SEC enforcement action, (2) subjecting individuals to a maximum criminal fine of $1 million and 10 years imprisonment, and (3) in an SEC enforcement action, within a court’s discretion, ordering the subject party to pay into the U.S. Treasury a treble damage penalty amounting to three times the profit gained or loss avoided.” Marc I. Steinberg, Understanding Securities Law 277–78 (2d ed. 1996).

insinuatio (in-sin-yoo-ay-shee-oh). [Law Latin] Hist. Information or suggestion. • This term sometimes appeared in the phrase ex insinuatione ("on the information"), which is the precursor to the modern on information and belief. See INFORMATION AND BELIEF.

insist, vb. (Of a house in a bicameral legislature) to reaffirm (an amendment) that the other house has considered but in which it has not concurred, or to reaffirm nonconcurrence in an amendment from which the other house has not receded. • An insistence often results in a request for a conference. See CONCUR (4); CONFERENCE (2); REcede. — insistence, n.

When one house refuses to recede from its amendments, the bill is not thereby lost, because the house may vote to insist upon its amendments. A message is sent to the other house stating that the house has insisted upon its amendments and is usually accompanied by a request for conference. When one house insists upon its amendments, the other house may then insist upon its nonconcurrence in the amendments and request a conference or recede from its nonconcurrence and concur in the amendments, which would constitute a final passage of the bill with the amendments." National Conference of State Legislatures, Mason's Manual of Legislative Procedure § 768, at 556–57 (2000).

in solido (in sol-ə-doh). [Latin "as a whole"] (Of an obligation) creating joint and several liability. • The term is used in most civil-law jurisdictions, but no longer in Louisiana. — Also termed in solidum. See SOLIDARY.

institutionalize, vb. (1865) 1. To place (a person) in an institution. 2. To give (a rule or practice) official sanction.

institutional lender. A business, esp. a bank, that routinely makes loans to the general public.

‘Our second observation relates to what has been called the ‘institutional litigant.’ There are organized groups, such as labour unions or trade associations, that have a continuing interest in the development of the common law. A group of this sort may take a case to litigation, not so much for the sake of a determination of the case itself, but for the purpose of bringing about a change in the law or of defending an existing rule against a change sought by some other group. When such groups are involved, the usual arguments against prospective changes in the law through judicial decisions lose much of their force. A group of this sort may take a case to litigation, not so much for the sake of a determination of the case itself, but for the purpose of bringing about a change in the law or of defending an existing rule against a change sought by some other group. When such groups are involved, the usual arguments against prospective changes in the law through judicial decisions lose much of their force. Indeed, when the litigants have this sort of long-term interest, a judicial proceeding may take on, with the assent of all, the ‘institutional litigant.’ There are organized groups, such as labour unions or trade associations, that have a continuing interest in the development of the common law. incomplete instrument. (1822) A paper that, although intended to be a negotiable instrument, lacks an essential element. • An incomplete instrument may be enforced if it is subsequently completed. UCC § 3-115. [Cases: Bills and Notes C→144.]

indispensable instrument. The formal written evidence of an interest in intangibles, so necessary to represent the intangible that the enjoyment, transfer, or enforcement of the intangible depends on possession of the instrument.

perfect instrument. (18c) An instrument (such as a deed or mortgage) that is executed and filed with a public registry.

sealed instrument. At common law and under some statutes, an instrument to which the bound party has affixed a personal seal, usu. recognized as providing indisputable evidence of the validity of the underlying obligations. • Many states have abolished the common-law distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments. The UCC provides that the laws applicable to sealed instruments do not apply to negotiable instruments or contracts for the sale of goods. UCC § 2-203. Cf. contract under seal under contract. [Cases: Contracts C→36; Seals C→1.]
insular, adj. (17c) 1. Of, relating to, from, or constituting an island <insular origin>. 2. Isolated from, uninterested in, or ignorant of things outside a limited scope <insular viewpoint>.

insular area. A territory or commonwealth. ● This phrase is used by some writers to denote the genus of which the terms territory and commonwealth are species. See COMMONWEALTH (2); TERRITORY (1).

insular court. See court.

insular possession. See possession.

in suo gener (in s[y]oo-oh jen-or-ee). [Latin] Hist. Of their own kind. ● The phrase usu. referred to certain writings that were binding even though they lacked the formal requirements.

"In suo ordine . . . A cautioner who is entitled to the benefit of discussion can only be called upon, for fulfilment of the obligation which he guaranteed, in his order — that is, after the principal creditor has been discussed. So, also, an heir can only be made liable for the moveable debts of his ancestor, after the executor who succeeded to the moveable estate has been discussed, and where the moveable estate has proved insufficient to meet those debts." John Trayer, Trayer's Latin Maxims 277 (4th ed. 1894).

insurable, adj. Able to be insured <an insurable risk>. — insurability, n.

insurable value. The worth of the subject of an insurance contract, usu. expressed as a monetary amount. [Cases: Insurance ⊆ 2171.]

insurance. (17c) 1. A contract by which one party (the insurer) undertakes to indemnify another party (the insured) against risk of loss, damage, or liability arising from the occurrence of some specified contingency, and usu. to defend the insured or to pay for a defense regardless of whether the insured is ultimately found liable. ● An insured party usu. pays a premium to the insurer in exchange for the insurer's assumption of the insured's risk. Although indemnification provisions are most common in insurance policies, parties to any type of contract may agree on indemnification arrangements. [Cases: Insurance ⊆ 1001.] 2. The amount for which someone or something is covered by such an agreement. — insure, v.b.

"Insurance, or as it is sometimes called, assurance, is a contract by which one party, for a consideration, which is usually paid in money either in one sum or at different times during the continuance of the risk, promises to make a certain payment of money upon the destruction or injury of something in which the other party has an interest. In fire insurance and in marine insurance the thing insured is property; in life or accident insurance it is the life or health of the person." J. George J. Couch, Couch on Insurance § 1.2, at 4–5 (2d ed. 1984).

accident and health insurance. See health insurance. accident insurance. Insurance that indemnifies against bodily injury caused by an accident. • Covered losses may include expenses, time, suffering, or death. Cf. casualty insurance. [Cases: Insurance 1012.]

accounts-receivable insurance. 1. Insurance against losses resulting from the insured’s inability to collect outstanding accounts receivable because of damage to or destruction of records. 2. See credit insurance.

car insurance. Insurance added to an existing policy.

all-risk insurance. Insurance that covers every kind of insurable loss except what is specifically excluded.

annuity insurance. An agreement to pay the insured (or annuitant) for a stated period or for life. [Cases: Annuities 15.]

assessable insurance. 1. Insurance in which the insured is liable for additional premiums if a loss is unusually large. 2. See assessable policy (1) under INSURANCE POLICY.

assessment insurance. A type of mutual insurance in which the policyholders are assessed as losses are incurred; a policy in which payments to an insured are not unalterably fixed, but are dependent on the collection of assessments necessary to pay the amount insured.

automobile insurance. An agreement to indemnify against one or more kinds of loss associated with the use of an automobile, including damage to a vehicle and liability for personal injury. [Cases: Insurance 1015.]

aviation insurance. Insurance that protects the insured against a loss connected with the use of an aircraft. • This type of insurance can be written to cover a variety of risks, including bodily injury, property damage, and hangarkeepers’ liability. [Cases: Insurance 2329.]

broad-form insurance. (1959) Comprehensive insurance. • This type of insurance usu. takes the form of an endorsement to a liability or property policy, broadening the coverage that is typically available.

bumbershoot insurance. 1. Marine insurance that provides broad coverage for ocean marine risks. 2. See umbrella insurance. • This term derives from the British slang term for umbrella. The term applies esp. to a policy insured through the London insurance market. See umbrella policy under INSURANCE POLICY.

burial insurance. Insurance that pays for the holder’s burial and funeral expenses.

business-interruption insurance. An agreement to protect against one or more kinds of loss from the interruption of an ongoing business, such as a loss of profits while the business is shut down to repair fire damage. [Cases: Insurance 2163, 2179.]

business-partner insurance. See partnership insurance.

captive insurance. 1. Insurance that provides coverage for the group or business that established it. [Cases: Insurance 1192.] 2. Insurance that a subsidiary provides to its parent company, usu. so that the parent company can deduct the premiums set aside as loss reserves.

cargo insurance. An agreement to pay for damage to freight damaged in transit. [Cases: Insurance 2173(3), 2217.]

casualty insurance. An agreement to indemnify against loss resulting from a broad group of causes such as legal liability, theft, accident, property damage, and workers’ compensation. • The meaning of casualty insurance has become blurred because of the rapid increase in different types of insurance coverage. Cf. accident insurance. [Cases: Insurance 1008; Workers’ Compensation 1061.]

coinsurance. (1889) 1. Insurance provided jointly by two or more insurers. 2. Insurance under which the insurer and insured jointly bear responsibility. • An example is commercial insurance under which only a portion of a property’s value is covered, and the property owner assumes liability for any loss in excess of the policy limits. [Cases: Insurance 2170.]

collision insurance. (1921) Automobile insurance that covers damage to the insured’s vehicle resulting from a rollover or collision with any object, but does not cover a personal injury or damage to other property. [Cases: Insurance 2704.]

commercial insurance. 1. An indemnity agreement in the form of a deed or bond to protect against a loss caused by a party’s breach of contract. 2. A form of coverage that allows an insurer to adjust the premium rates at will, and doesn’t require the insured to accept the premium or renew the coverage from period to period.

“Commercial insurance is a popular and very elastic term, having reference to indemnity agreements issued in the form of an insurance bond or policy, whereby parties to commercial contracts are, to a designated extent, guaranteed against loss by reason of a breach of contractual obligations on the part of the other contracting party. To this class belong policies of ‘contract,’ ‘credit,’ and ‘title’ insurances.” Thomas Gold Frost, A Treatise on Guaranty Insurance § 3, at 14 (2d ed. 1909).

comprehensive general-liability insurance. Insurance that broadly covers an insured’s liability exposure, including product liability, contractual liability, and premises liability.—Abbr. CGL insurance.

comprehensive insurance. (1924) Insurance that combines coverage against many kinds of losses that may also be insured separately. • This is commonly used, for example, in an automobile-insurance policy.

compulsory insurance. (1887) Statutorily required insurance; esp., motor-vehicle liability insurance that a state requires as a condition to register the vehicle. [Cases: Automobiles 43.] convertible collision insurance. Collision insurance that carries a low premium until a claim is made against the policy.

convertible insurance. (1926) Insurance that can be changed to another form without further evidence of insurability, usu. referring to a term-life-insurance policy that can be changed to permanent insurance without a medical examination. [Cases: Insurance C:=-1908–1911.]

credit insurance. An agreement to indemnify against loss that may result from the death, disability, or insolvency of someone to whom credit is extended. • A debtor typically purchases this type of insurance to ensure the repayment of the loan. — Also termed accounts-receivable insurance.

credit life insurance. See life insurance.

crime insurance. Insurance covering losses occasioned by a crime committed by someone other than the insured.

crop insurance. Insurance that protects against loss to growing crops from natural perils such as hail and fire. [Cases: Insurance C:=-2203–2208.]

D&O insurance. See directors' and officers' liability insurance.

decreasing term insurance. Insurance that declines in value during the term; esp., life insurance that lessens in value to zero by the end of the term.

deposit insurance. (1933) A federally sponsored indemnification program to protect depositors against the loss of their money; up to a specified maximum, if the bank or savings-and-loan association fails or defaults. [Cases: Banks and Banking C:=-506.]

directors and officers' liability insurance. An agreement to indemnify corporate directors and officers against judgments, settlements, and fines arising from negligence suits, shareholder actions, and other business-related suits. — Often shortened to De-O liability insurance; D&O insurance. [Cases: Insurance C:=-2377.]

disability insurance. Coverage purchased to protect a person from a loss of income during a period of incapacity for work. See general-disability insurance; occupational-disability insurance. [Cases: Insurance C:=-1012, 2534–2579.]

double insurance. (18c) Insurance coverage by more than one insurer for the same interest and for the same insured. • Except with life insurance, the insured is entitled to only a single indemnity from a loss, and to recover this, the insured may either (1) sue each insurer for its share of the loss, or (2) sue one or more of the insurers for the entire amount, leaving any paying insurers to recover from the others their respective shares of the loss.

dread-disease insurance. Health insurance that covers medical expenses arising from the treatment of any of several specified diseases.

e-commerce insurance. Insurance that covers a business's computer-related damages and losses caused by computer hackers and Internet viruses. • Covered damages usu. include physical destruction or harm to computer circuitry, loss of access, loss of use, loss of functionality, and business interruption.

employers’ liability insurance. 1. An agreement to indemnify an employer against an employee's claim not covered under the workers'-compensation system. 2. An agreement to indemnify against liability imposed on an employer for an employee's negligence that injures a third party. [Cases: Insurance C:=-2317.]

employment-practices liability insurance. Insurance that provides coverage for claims arising from an insured's injury-causing employment practice, such as discrimination, defamation, or sexual harassment. — Abbv. EPL insurance.

endowment insurance. A type of life insurance that is payable either to the insured at the end of the policy period or to the insured's beneficiary if the insured dies before the period ends. See endowment life insurance under life insurance.

errors-and-omissions insurance. An agreement to indemnify for loss sustained because of a mistake or oversight by the insured — though not for loss due to the insured's intentional wrongdoing. • For example, lawyers often carry this insurance as part of their malpractice coverage to protect them in suits for damages resulting from inadvertent mistakes (such as missing a procedural deadline). While this insurance does not cover the insured's intentional wrongdoing, it may cover an employee's intentional, but unauthorized, wrongdoing. — Often shortened to E&O insurance. [Cases: Insurance C:=-2383.]

excess insurance. (1916) An agreement to indemnify against any loss that exceeds the amount of coverage under another policy. — Also termed excess policy. Cf. primary insurance. See excess clause. [Cases: Insurance C:=-2110, 2394.]

extended insurance. Insurance that continues in force beyond the date that the last premium was paid by drawing on its cash value.

extended-term insurance. (1925) Insurance that remains in effect after a default in paying premiums, as long as the policy has cash value to pay premiums. • Many life-insurance policies provide this feature to protect against forfeiture of the policy if the insured falls behind in premium payments.

family-income insurance. An agreement to pay benefits for a stated period following the death of the insured. • At the end of the payment period, the face value is paid to the designated beneficiary.

fidelity insurance. An agreement to indemnify an employer against a loss arising from the lack of integrity or honesty of an employee or of a person holding a position of trust, such as a loss from embezzlement. — Also termed fidelity guaranty insurance; fidelity and guaranty insurance; surety and fidelity insurance. [Cases: Insurance ⊆ 1014.]

fire insurance. An agreement to indemnify against property damage caused by fire, wind, rain, or other similar disaster. [Cases: Insurance ⊆ 1009.]

first-party insurance. (1953) A policy that applies to an insured or the insurer's own property, such as life insurance, health insurance, disability insurance, and fire insurance. — Also termed indemnity insurance; self-insurance.

fleet insurance. Insurance that covers a number of vehicles owned by the same entity.

floater insurance. An agreement to indemnify against a loss sustained to movable property, wherever its location within the territorial limit set by the policy.

flood insurance. Insurance that indemnifies against a loss caused by a flood. ● This type of insurance is often sold privately but subsidized by the federal government. [Cases: Insurance ⊆ 2209–2213.]

fraternal insurance. Life or health insurance issued by a fraternal benefit society to its members.

general-disability insurance. Disability insurance that provides benefits to a person who cannot perform any job that the person is qualified for. — Also termed total-disability insurance. Cf. occupational-disability insurance. [Cases: Insurance ⊆ 2561.]

group insurance. A form of insurance offered to a member of a group, such as the employees of a business, as long as that person remains a member of the group. ● Group insurance is typically health or life (usu. term life) insurance issued under a master policy between the insurer and the employer, who usu. pays all or part of the premium for the insured person. Other groups, such as unions and associations, often offer group insurance to their members.

“Group Insurance’ refers to a method of marketing standard forms of insurance, such as life insurance, whereby a master policy is issued to the party negotiating the contract with the insurer (frequently an employer), and certificates of participation are issued to the individual insured members of the group (frequently employees).” John F. Dobbyn, Insurance Law in a Nutshell 13 (2d ed. 1989).

guaranty insurance (gar-on-tee). An agreement to cover a loss resulting from another's default, insolvency, or specified misconduct. — Also termed surety insurance. [Cases: Insurance ⊆ 1014.]

“The term ‘guaranty insurance’ is generic in its scope and signification, and embraces within it those subsidiary species of insurance contracts known as ‘fidelity’ ‘commercial,’ and ‘judicial’ insurances . . . . In legal acceptation guaranty insurance is an agreement whereby one party (called the ‘insurer’) for a valuable consideration (termed the ‘premium’) agrees to indemnify another (called the ‘insured’) in a stipulated amount against loss or damage arising through dishonesty, fraud, unfaithful performance of duty or breach of contract on the part of a third person . . . sustaining a contractual relationship to the party thus indemnified.” Thomas Gold Frost, A Treatise on Guaranty Insurance § 1, at 11 (2d ed. 1909).

health insurance. Insurance covering medical expenses resulting from sickness or injury. — Also termed accident and health insurance; sickness and accident insurance. [Cases: Insurance ⊆ 1012.] homeowner's insurance. Insurance that covers both damage to the insured's residence and liability claims made against the insured (esp. those arising from the insured's negligence).

indemnity insurance. See first-party insurance.

industrial life insurance. See life insurance.

inland marine insurance. An agreement to indemnify against losses arising from the transport of goods on domestic waters (i.e., rivers, canals, and lakes). Cf. ocean marine insurance.

insurance of the person. Insurance intended to protect the person, such as life, accident, and disability insurance.

interinsurance. See reciprocal insurance.

joint life insurance. See life insurance.

judicial insurance. Insurance intended to protect litigants and others involved in the court system.

“By judicial insurance reference is had to insurance bonds or policies issued, in connection with the regular course of judicial or administrative procedure, for the purpose of securing the faithful performance of duty on the part of court appointees, to guarantee due compliance with the terms of undertakings entered into by parties litigant before the courts, and to secure proper administration of statute law.” Thomas Gold Frost, A Treatise on Guaranty Insurance § 5, at 14 (2d ed. 1909).

key-employee insurance. See key-employee life insurance under life insurance.

last-survivor insurance. See last-survivor life insurance under life insurance.

lease insurance. An agreement to indemnify a leaseholder for the loss of a favorable lease terminated by damage to the property from a peril covered by the policy. ● The amount payable is the difference between the rent and the actual rental value of the property, multiplied by the remaining term of the lease.

level-premium insurance. Insurance whose premiums remain constant throughout the life of the agreement.

● Most whole life policies are set up this way.

liability insurance. An agreement to cover a loss resulting from the insured's liability to a third party, such as a loss incurred by a driver who injures a pedestrian. ● The insured's claim under the policy arises once the insured's liability to a third party has been asserted. — Also termed third-party insurance; public-liability insurance. [Cases: Insurance ⊆ 1010.]

limited-policy insurance. Insurance that covers only specified perils; esp., health insurance that covers a specific type of illness (such as dread-disease insurance) or a risk relating to a stated activity (such as travel-accident insurance).

Lloyd's insurance. (1897) Insurance provided by insurers as individuals, rather than as a corporation. • The insurers' liability is several but not joint. Most states either prohibit or strictly regulate this type of insurance. See LLOYD'S OF LONDON. [Cases: Insurance 220.]

loss insurance. Insurance purchased by a person who may suffer a loss at the hands of another. • This is the converse of liability insurance, which is purchased by potential defendants.

malpractice insurance (mal-prak-tis). (1943) An agreement to indemnify a professional person, such as a doctor or lawyer, against negligence claims. See errors-and-omissions insurance. [Cases: Insurance 2389.]

“Most contemporary lawyers regard malpractice insurance as an expensive, but essential, part of law practice. Its cost, along with other costs of the lawyer's trade, is ultimately borne by the consumer, the client who pays the lawyer's fees. . . . Neither the ABA Code nor the ABA Model Rules impose an ethical obligation to carry adequate malpractice insurance. But contemporary lawyers have found it prudent to do so, both to protect their personal assets and to promote their public image as reliable professionals who are financially responsible.” Mortimer D. Schwartz & Richard C. Wydick, Problems in Legal Ethics 127-28 (2d ed. 1986).

manual-rating insurance. A type of insurance whereby the premium is set using a book that classifies certain risks on a general basis, rather than evaluating each individual case.

marine insurance. An agreement to indemnify against injury to a ship, cargo, or profits involved in a certain voyage or for a specific vessel during a fixed period, or to protect other marine interests. [Cases: Insurance 2214-2256.]

mortgage insurance. 1. An agreement to pay off a mortgage if the insured dies or becomes disabled. [Cases: Insurance 2405; Mortgages 201.] 2. An agreement to provide money to the lender if the mortgagor defaults on the mortgage payments. — Also termed private mortgage insurance (abbr. PMI).

mutual insurance. A system of insurance (esp. life insurance) whereby the policyholders become members of the insurance company, each paying premiums into a common fund from which each can draw in the event of a loss.

national-service life insurance. See LIFE INSURANCE.

no-fault auto insurance. An agreement to indemnify for a loss due to personal injury or property damage arising from the use of an automobile, regardless of who caused the accident. [Cases: Insurance 2817-2856.]

nonassessable insurance. Insurance in which the premium is set and the insurer is barred from demanding additional payments from the insured.

occupational-disability insurance. Disability insurance that provides benefits to a person who cannot perform his or her regular job. [Cases: Insurance 2561(2).]

occurrence-based liability insurance. Insurance that covers bodily injuries or property damage suffered during the policy period. • Each instance of injury or damage is an "occurrence" that may trigger an insured's entitlement to benefits. The terms of occurrence-based liability insurance policies are usu. broad, limited only by specific exclusions. — Also termed accident-based insurance. [Cases: Insurance 2264, 2265.]

ocean marine insurance. Insurance that covers risks arising from the transport of goods by sea. Cf. inland marine insurance. [Cases: Insurance 2214-2256.]

old-age and survivors' insurance. See OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS' INSURANCE.

ordinary insurance. See ordinary life insurance under LIFE INSURANCE.

ordinary life insurance. See LIFE INSURANCE.

overinsurance. See OVERINSURANCE.

paid-up insurance. (1871) Insurance that remains in effect even though no more premiums are due.

participating insurance. A type of insurance that allows a policyholder to receive dividends. • This insurance is invariably issued by a mutual company.

partnership insurance. 1. Life insurance on the life of a partner, purchased to ensure the remaining partners' ability to buy out a deceased partner's interest. — Also termed partnership life insurance. 2. Health insurance for a partner, payable to the partnership to allow it to continue to operate while the partner is unable to work due to illness or injury. — Also termed (in both senses) business-partner insurance.

patent insurance (pat-ant). 1. Insurance against loss from an infringement of the insured's patent. 2. Insurance against a claim that the insured has infringed another's patent. 3. Insurance that funds a claim against a third party for infringing the insured's patent.

port-risk insurance. Insurance on a vessel lying in port. Cf. time insurance; voyage insurance.

primary insurance. Insurance that attaches immediately on the happening of a loss; insurance that is not contingent on the exhaustion of an underlying policy. Cf. excess insurance. [Cases: Insurance 2110.]

private mortgage insurance. See MORTGAGE INSURANCE.

products-liability insurance. An agreement to indemnify a manufacturer, supplier, or retailer for a loss arising from the insured's liability to a user who is harmless by any product manufactured or sold by the insured. [Cases: Insurance 102296, 2359.]

profit insurance. Insurance that reimburses the insured for profits lost because of a specified peril.

property insurance. An agreement to indemnify against property damage or destruction. — Also termed property-damage insurance. [Cases: Insurance 10109.]

public-liability insurance. See liability insurance.

reciprocal insurance. A system whereby several individuals or businesses act through an agent to underwrite one another's risks, making each insured an insurer of the other members of the group. — Also termed interinsurance. [Cases: Insurance 101204.]

reinsurance. See reinsurance.

renewable term insurance. Insurance that the insured may continue at the end of a term, but generally at a higher premium. • The insured usu. has the right to renew for additional terms without a medical examination.

replacement insurance. (1938) Insurance under which the value of the loss is measured by the current cost of replacing the insured property. See replacement cost under cost. [Cases: Insurance 102172, 2184.]

retirement-income insurance. An agreement whereby the insurance company agrees to pay an annuity beginning at a certain age if the insured survives beyond that age, or the value of the policy if the insured dies before reaching that age.

self-insurance. A plan under which a business maintains its own special fund to cover any loss. • Unlike other forms of insurance, there is no contract with an insurance company. — Also termed first-party insurance. [Cases: Insurance 101004.]

single-premium insurance. See single-premium life insurance under life insurance.

social insurance. Insurance provided by a government to persons facing particular perils (such as unemployment or disability) or to persons who have a certain status (such as the elderly or the blind). • Social insurance — such as that created by the Social Security Act of 1935 — is usu. part of a government's broader social policy. See welfare state. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare 10121-149.5, 174-182; Unemployment Compensation 101-1.]

split-dollar insurance. See split-dollar life insurance under life insurance.

step-rate-premium insurance. Insurance whose premiums increase at times specified in the policy.

stop-loss insurance. Insurance that protects a self-insured employer from catastrophic losses or unusually large health costs of covered employees. • Stop-loss insurance essentially provides excess coverage for a self-insured employer. The employer and the insurance carrier agree to the amount the employer will cover, and the stop-loss insurance will cover claims exceeding that amount. [Cases: Insurance 102523, 2525f1.]

straight life insurance. See whole life insurance under life insurance.

surety and fidelity insurance. See fidelity insurance.

surety insurance. See guaranty insurance.

surplus-lines insurance. Insurance with an insurer that is not licensed to transact business within the state where the risk is located. — Also termed excess-lines insurance. [Cases: Insurance 101130.]

term life insurance. See life insurance.

terrorism insurance. Insurance that indemnifies against losses sustained because of an act of terrorism. • Terrorism insurance has been available since the 1970s, its use (and use) is required for U.S. airports of almost all sizes. In the mid-1980s, terrorism insurance was offered to individuals, originally as a form of travel insurance that provided compensation for terrorism-related cancellations or changes in itinerary when traveling to or in certain countries. See terrorism.

third-party insurance. See liability insurance.

time insurance. Marine insurance. Insurance covering the insured for a specified period. Cf. voyage insurance.

title insurance. (1889) An agreement to indemnify against loss arising from a defect in title to real property, usu. issued to the buyer of the property by the title company that conducted the title search. Cf. guarantee of title. [Cases: Insurance 101013.]

"Title insurance is normally written by specialized companies that maintain tract indexes. Companies involved in writing life or casualty usually are not involved in title insurance. Title insurance is an unusual type of insurance in a few respects. For one thing, it is not a recurring policy. There is only a single premium, and a title insurance policy written on behalf of an owner theoretically remains outstanding forever to protect him or her from claims asserted by others. It is more similar to an indemnification agreement than to an insurance policy. For another, title insurance companies generally do not take risks that they know about. If the title search shows that a risk exists, the company will exclude that risk from the coverage of the policy." Robert W. Hamilton, Fundamentals of Modern Business 84 (1989).

total-disability insurance. See general-disability insurance.

travel-accident insurance. Health insurance limited to injuries sustained while traveling.

umbrella insurance. Insurance that is supplemental, providing coverage that exceeds the basic or usual limits of liability. — Also termed umbrella insurance. [Cases: Insurance 1022110, 2394.]

underinsurance. See underinsurance.

unemployment insurance. (1897) A type of social insurance that pays money to workers who are unemployed for reasons unrelated to job performance. • Individual states administer unemployment insurance, which is funded by payroll taxes. — Also termed unemployment compensation. [Cases: Taxation $3260; Unemployment Compensation $1, 40, 60.]

universal life insurance. See life insurance.

variable life insurance. See life insurance.

valuable-papers insurance. Insurance covering the cost of research, labor, and materials necessary to reconstruct damaged or lost documents and records — written, printed, or otherwise inscribed — including books, maps, manuscripts, legal documents, drawings, and films. • This insurance does not cover cash or securities. [Cases: Insurance $2136.]

voyage insurance. Marine insurance. Insurance covering the insured between destinations. Cf. time insurance.

war-risk insurance. 1. Insurance covering damage caused by war. • Ocean marine policies are often written to cover this type of risk. [Cases: Insurance $2159, 2223.] 2. Life and accident insurance provided by the federal government to members of the armed forces. • This type of insurance is offered because the hazardous nature of military service often prevents military personnel from obtaining private insurance. [Cases: Armed Services $55.]

whole life insurance. See life insurance.

insurance adjuster. (1934) A person who determines the value of a loss to the insured and settles the claim against the insurer. — Also termed claims adjuster. See adjuster. [Cases: Insurance $3222.]

insurance agent. (1866) A person authorized by an insurance company to sell its insurance policies. — Also termed producer; (in property insurance) recording agent; record agent. [Cases: Insurance $1604.]

general agent. An agent with the general power of making insurance contracts on behalf of an insurer. [Cases: Insurance $1634(2).]

special agent. An agent whose powers are usu. confined to soliciting applications for insurance, taking initial premiums, and delivering policies when issued. — Also termed local agent; solicitor. [Cases: Insurance $1634(2).]

insurance broker. See broker.

insurance certificate. (1865) 1. A document issued by an insurer as evidence of insurance or membership in an insurance or pension plan. 2. A document issued by an insurer to a shipper as evidence that a shipment of goods is covered by a marine insurance policy.

insurance commissioner. (1889) A public official who supervises the insurance business conducted in a state. [Cases: Insurance $1029.]

insurance company. (18c) A corporation or association that issues insurance policies. [Cases: Insurance $1003.]

captive insurance company. A company that insures the liabilities of its own owner. • The insured is usu. the sole shareholder and the only customer of the captive insurer. — Also termed captive insurer. [Cases: Insurance $1192.]

mixed insurance company. An insurance company having characteristics of both stock and mutual companies in that it distributes part of the profits to stockholders and also makes distributions to the insureds.

mutual insurance company. An insurance company whose policyholders are both insurers and insureds because they pay premiums into a common fund, from which claims are paid; an insurer whose policyholders are its owners, as opposed to a stock insurance company owned by outside shareholders. Cf. stock insurance company. [Cases: Insurance $1121.]

“Mutual insurance companies are organized by a number of persons for the purpose of transacting some particular insurance business . . . . A company is a mutual one when the persons constituting the company contribute either cash or assessable premium notes, or both, to a common fund, out of which each is entitled to indemnity in case of loss. The distinguishing feature is mutuality, evidenced by the co-operation of members, uniting for that purpose, each taking a proportionate part in the management of its affairs and being at once insurer and insured, contributing to a fund from which all losses are paid . . . . Democratic ownership and control is a fundamental characteristic of a mutual insurance company.” 18 John Alan Appleman, Insurance Law and Practice §10041, at 79–80 (1945).

stock insurance company. An insurance company operated as a private corporation and owned by stockholders who share in the company's profits and losses.

stock life-insurance company. A stock insurance company that does life-insurance business.

insurance fraud. See fraud.

insurance of the person. See insurance.

insurance policy. (1869) 1. A contract of insurance. 2. A document detailing such a contract. • Often shortened to policy. — Also termed policy of insurance; contract of insurance.

accident policy. A type of business or personal policy that insures against loss resulting directly from accidental bodily injuries sustained during the policy term. [Cases: Insurance $1012, 1716.]

assessable policy. 1. A policy under which a policyholder may be held liable for losses of the insurance company beyond its reserves. — Also termed assessable insurance. 2. See assessable insurance (1) under insurance.

bailee policy. A floating policy that covers goods in a bailee's possession but does not particularly describe the covered goods.

basic-form policy. (1997) A policy that offers limited coverage against loss. • A basic-form policy generally covers damages from fire, windstorm, explosion, riot, aircraft, vehicles, theft, or vandalism. — Also termed limited policy; specific policy.
blanket policy. (1894) An agreement to indemnify all property, regardless of location. — Also termed compound policy; floating policy.

block policy. An all-risk policy that covers groups of property (such as property held in bailment or a business's merchandise) against most perils. See all-risk insurance under INSURANCE.

broad-form policy. (1950) A policy that offers broad protection with few limitations. • This policy offers greater coverage than a basic-form policy, but less than an open-perils policy.

claims-made policy. (1974) An agreement to indemnify against all claims made during a specified period, regardless of when the incidents that gave rise to the claims occurred. — Also termed discovery policy. [Cases: Insurance 2107–2108.]

closed policy. An insurance policy whose terms cannot be changed. • Fraternal benefit society is not permitted to write closed policies. — Also termed closed insurance contract.

commercial general-liability policy. A comprehensive policy that covers most commercial risks, liabilities, and causes of loss. • This type of policy covers both business losses and situations in which a business is liable to a third party for personal injury or property damage. First introduced in 1986, this policy has largely replaced comprehensive general-liability policies. — Abbrev. CGL policy. Cf. comprehensive general-liability policy.

completed-operations policy. A policy usu. purchased by a building contractor to cover accidents arising out of a job or an operation that the contractor has completed. [Cases: Insurance 2312–2313.]

comprehensive general-liability policy. (1943) A broad-coverage commercial insurance policy covering a variety of general risks, esp. bodily injury and property damage to a third party for which the business entity is liable. • This policy was first offered in 1940. It has largely been replaced by the commercial-general-liability policy. — Also termed CGL policy; general-liability policy. Cf. commercial general-liability policy.

correction policy. (1937) One of two or more insurance policies that cover the same risk. • Concurrent insurance policies are stated in almost identical terms so that liability can be apportioned between the insurers. [Cases: Insurance 2107.]

continuous policy. See perpetual policy.

corrected policy. A policy issued after a redetermination of risk to correct a misstatement in the original policy.

deferred-dividend insurance policy. Hist. A life insurance policy that accumulated a fixed percentage of the insurer's surplus profits, payable as a lump sum on a certain date or at the insured's death, whichever came first. [Cases: Insurance 2107.]
limited policy. (1884) 1. An insurance policy that specifically excludes certain classes or types of loss. 2. See basic-form policy.

manuscript policy. (1962) An insurance policy containing nonstandard provisions that have been negotiated between the insurer and the insured.

master policy. (1926) An insurance policy that covers multiple insureds under a group-insurance plan. — Also termed group policy. See group insurance under insurance.

mixed policy. Marine insurance. A policy combining aspects of both a voyage policy and a time policy.

multiperil policy. (1951) An insurance policy that covers several types of losses, such as a homeowner's policy that covers losses from fire, theft, and personal injury. — Also termed named-perils policy.

nonmedical policy. An insurance policy issued without a prior medical examination of the applicant.

occurrence policy. An agreement to indemnify for any loss from an event that occurs within the policy period, regardless of when the claim is made. [Cases: Insurance C::'=2264.]

open-perils policy. (1997) A property insurance policy covering all risks against loss except those specifically excluded from coverage.

open policy. See unvalued policy.

package policy. An insurance policy providing protection against multiple perils and losses of both the insured and third parties. • A homeowner's policy is usu. a package policy.

paid-up policy. A policy that remains in effect after premiums are no longer due.

participating policy. A policy that allows the holder a right to dividends or rebates from future premiums. • This type of policy is issued by a mutual company.

permanent policy. A renewable policy that is effective for a specified period and is terminable by either the insurer or the insured after giving express notice.

perpetual policy. An insurance policy that remains effective without renewal until one of the parties terminates it according to its terms. — Also termed continuous policy.

regular life policy. See life policy.

running policy. See floating policy.

specific policy. See basic-form policy.

standard policy. (1893) 1. An insurance policy providing insurance that is recommended or required by state law, usu. regulated by a state agency. [Cases: Insurance C::'=1775.] 2. An insurance policy that contains standard terms used for similar insurance policies nationwide, usu. drafted by an insurance industrial association such as Insurance Services Office.

survivorship policy. A joint life policy that is payable after all the insureds have died.

term policy. A life-insurance policy that gives protection for a specified period, but that does not have a cash value or reserve value.

time policy. (1852) An insurance policy that is effective only during a specified period.

tontine policy (tahn-teen or tahn-teen). An insurance policy in which a group of participants share advantages so that upon the default or death of any participant, his or her advantages are distributed among the remaining participants until only one remains, whereupon the whole goes to that sole participant. • Under the tontine plan of insurance, no accumulation or earnings are credited to the policy unless it remains in force for the tontine period of a specified number of years. Thus, those who survive the period and keep their policies in force share in the accumulated funds, and those who die or permit their policies to lapse during the period do not. This type of policy takes its name from Lorenzo Tonti, an Italian who invented it in the 17th century. Today, newer and more ingenious forms of insurance have largely made tontine policies defunct. See TONTINE. [Cases: Insurance C::'=2441.] umbrella policy. An insurance policy covering losses that exceed the basic or usual limits of liability provided by other policies. See umbrella insurance under insurance. [Cases: Insurance C::'=2110, 2394.]

unvalued policy. A policy that does not state a value of the insured property but that, upon loss, requires proof of the property's worth. — Also termed open policy.

valued policy. An insurance policy in which the sum to be paid when a loss occurs is fixed by the terms of the contract. • The value agreed on is conclusive for a total loss and provides a basis for determining recovery in cases of partial loss. This value is in the nature of liquidated damages. [Cases: Insurance C::'=2171.]

voyage policy. A marine-insurance policy that insures a vessel or its cargo during a specified voyage.

wager policy. An insurance policy issued to a person who is shown to have no insurable interest in the person or property covered by the policy. • Wager policies are illegal in most states. — Also termed gambling policy; graveyard insurance. See insurable interest under interest (2). Cf. interest policy. [Cases: Insurance C::'=1784.]

insurance pool. (1935) A group of several insurers that, to spread the risk, combine and share premiums and losses.

insurance premium. See premium (1).

insurance rating. (1905) The process by which an insurer arrives at a policy premium for a particular risk. — Often shortened to rating. [Cases: Insurance C::'=1541.]

Insurance Services Office. A nonprofit organization that provides analytical and decision-support services and tools to the insurance industry, including statistical, actuarial, underwriting, and claims data, and drafts of model insurance policy forms and coverage provisions. • The organization is composed of member insurers. It provides data and information to its members and also to nonmember subscribers, such as risk managers, insurance regulators, and self-insureds. — Abbr. ISO.

insurance trust. See trust.

insurance underwriter. See underwriter.

insurant, n. A person who obtains insurance or to whom an insurance policy is issued. • This term is much less common than the attributive noun insured.

insure, vb. (17c) 1. To secure, by payment of a premium, the payment of a sum of money in the event of a loss. [Cases: Insurance C= 1001.] 2. To issue or procure an insurance policy on or for (someone or something).

insured, n. (17c) A person who is covered or protected by an insurance policy. — Also termed assured. [Cases: Insurance C= 2100.]

additional insured. (1929) A person who is covered by an insurance policy but who is not the primary insured. • An additional insured may, or may not, be specifically named in the policy. If the person is named, then the term is sometimes named additional insured. — Also termed secondary insured. [Cases: Insurance C= 2100.]

class-one insured. (1982) In a motor-vehicle policy, the named insured and any relative residing with the named insured. [Cases: Insurance C= 2660.]

class-two insured. (1985) In a motor-vehicle policy, a person lawfully occupying a vehicle at the time of an accident. [Cases: Insurance C= 2660.]

first-named insured. See primary insured.

named insured. (1899) A person designated in an insurance policy as the one covered by the policy. [Cases: Insurance C= 2100.]

primary insured. The individual or entity whose name appears first in the declarations of an insurance policy. — Also termed first-named insured.

insurer. (17c) One who agrees, by contract, to assume the risk of another's loss and to compensate for that loss. — Also termed underwriter; insurance underwriter; carrier; assurer (for life insurance). [Cases: Insurance C= 1002.]

excess insurer. An insurer who is liable for settling any part of a claim not covered by an insured's primary insurer. — Also termed secondary insurer. See primary insurer. [Cases: Insurance C= 2110.]

primary insurer. An insurer who is contractually committed to settling a claim up to the applicable policy limit before any other insurer becomes liable for any part of the same claim. See excess insurer. [Cases: Insurance C= 2110.]

quasi-insurer. (1830) A service provider who is held to strict liability in the provision of services, such as an innkeeper or a common carrier.

secondary insurer. See excess insurer.

insurgent, n. (18c) A person who, for political purposes, engages in armed hostility against an established government. — insurgent, adj. — insurGENCY, n.

insuring agreement. See insuring clause.

insuring clause. A provision in an insurance policy or bond reciting the risk assumed by the insurer or establishing the scope of the coverage. — Also termed insuring agreement. [Cases: Insurance C= 2097.]

insurrection. (17c) A violent revolt against an oppressive authority, usu. a government.

"Insurrection is distinguished from rout, riot, and offense connected with mob violence by the fact that in insurrection there is an organized and armed uprising against authority or operations of government, while crimes growing out of mob violence, however serious they may be and however numerous the participants, are simply unlawful acts in disturbance of the peace which do not threaten the stability of the government or the existence of political society." 77 C.J.S. RIOT: Insurrection § 79, at 579 (1994).

intact family. See family.

in tail. See tail.

intake, n. (1943) 1. The official screening of a juvenile charged with an offense in order to determine where to determine where to place the juvenile pending formal adjudication or informal disposition. 2. The body of officers who conduct this screening. 3. Hist. English law. A piece of land temporarily taken from a common or moorland by a tenant to raise a crop.

intake day. (1985) The day on which new cases are assigned to the courts.

intaker. Hist. See FENCE (1).

intangible, adj. (17c) Not capable of being touched; impalpable; incorporeal.

intangible, n. (1914) Something that lacks a physical form; an abstraction, such as responsibility; esp., an asset that is not corporeal, such as intellectual property.

general intangible. (1935) Any personal property other than goods, accounts, chattel paper, documents, instruments, investment property, rights to proceeds of written letters of credit, and money. • Some examples are goodwill, things in action, and literary rights. UCC § 9-102(a)(2). See intangible property under property. [Cases: Secured Transactions C= 11.1, 14.1, 115.1.] intangible asset. 1. See asset. 2. See intangible trade value.

intangible drilling cost. Oil & gas. An expense that is incident to and necessary for drilling and completing an oil or gas well and that has no salvage value. • Intangible drilling costs may be deducted in the year they are incurred rather than capitalized and depreciated. 26 USCA § 612.

intangible movable. See movable.

intangible property. See property.

intangible-rights doctrine. The rule that a person is entitled to receive honest services from those in the public sector or in the private sector who have fiduciary duties to the person. • Public-sector intangible rights derive from public officials’ implied fiduciary duty to make governmental decisions in the public interest. Private-sector intangible rights arise out of fiduciary relationships. The intangible-rights doctrine is codified at 18 USCA § 1346. — Also termed honest-services doctrine. [Cases: Postal Service C=35(9).] intangible tax. See tax.

intangible thing. See incorporeal thing under thing.

intangible trade property. See intangible trade value.

intangible trade value. Intellectual property. The measure of an enterprise’s proprietary information, ideas, goodwill, and other nonphysical commercial assets. • The law of misappropriation provides some protection against the taking of intangible trade values to compete unfairly with their original owner. — Also termed intangible asset; intangible trade property.

integrated agreement. See integrated contract.

integrated bar. See bar.

integrated contract. (1930) One or more writings constituting a final expression of one or more terms of an agreement. — Also termed integrated agreement; integrated writing. See integration (2). [Cases: Contracts C=245; Evidence C=397(2).]

completely integrated contract. (1950) An integrated agreement adopted by the parties as a full and exclusive statement of the terms of the agreement. • The parties are therefore prohibited from varying or supplementing the contractual terms through parol (extrinsic) evidence. [Cases: Evidence C=397(2).]

partially integrated contract. (1958) An agreement in which some, but not all, of the terms are integrated: any agreement other than a completely integrated agreement. [Cases: Evidence C=397(2).]

integrated writing. See integrated contract.

integration. (17c) 1. The process of making whole or combining into one. 2. Contracts. The full expression of the parties’ agreement, so that all earlier agreements are superseded, the effect being that neither party may later contradict or add to the contractual terms. • Also termed merger. See parol-evidence rule. [Cases: Contracts C=245; Evidence C=397(2).]

complete integration. (1930) The fact or state of fully expressing the intent of the parties. • Parol evidence is therefore inadmissible. [Cases: Evidence C=397(2).]

partial integration. (1910) The fact or state of not fully expressing the parties’ intent. • Parol (extrinsic) evidence is admissible to clear up ambiguities with respect to the terms that are not integrated. [Cases: Evidence C=397(2).]

3. Wills & estates. The combining of more than one writing into a single document to form the testator’s last will and testament. • The other writing must be present at the time of execution and intended to be included in the will. The issue of integration is more complicated when it concerns a holographic will, which may be composed of more than one document written at different times. 4. The incorporation of different races into existing institutions (such as public schools) for the purpose of reversing the historical effects of racial discrimination. Cf. desegregation. [Cases: Schools C=13(4), 5. Antitrust. A firm’s performance of a function that it could have obtained on the open market. • A firm can achieve integration by entering a new market on its own, by acquiring a firm that operates in a secondary market, or by entering into a contract with a firm that operates in a secondary market. — Also termed vertical integration. See vertical merger under merger.

6. Securities. The requirement that all security offerings over a given period are to be considered a single offering for purposes of determining an exemption from registration. • The Securities and Exchange Commission and the courts apply five criteria to determine whether two or more transactions are part of the same offering of securities: (1) whether the offerings are part of a single plan of financing, (2) whether the offerings involve issuance of the same class of securities, (3) whether the offerings are made at or about the same time, (4) whether the same type of consideration is received, and (5) whether the offerings are made for the same general purpose. 17 CFR § 230.502. [Cases: Securities Regulation C=18.14.] integration clause. (1941) A contractual provision stating that the contract represents the parties’ complete and final agreement and supersedes all informal understandings and oral agreements relating to the subject matter of the contract. — Also termed merger clause; entire-agreement clause. See integration (2); parol-evidence rule. [Cases: Contracts C=245; Evidence C=397(2).]

integration rule. (1899) The rule that if the parties to a contract have embodied their agreement in a final document, any other action or statement is without effect and is immaterial in determining the terms of the contract. See parol-evidence rule. [Cases: Contracts C=245; Evidence C=397(2).]
integrity right. Copyright. The right of authors and artists to insist that their creative works not be changed without their authorization. • Integrity is one of the moral rights of the moral rights of artists recognized in civil-law countries, including much of Europe, but largely unavailable in the United States. Cf. MORA L RIGHT; ATTRIBUTION RIGHT. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property C= 6.]

intellectual property. (1808) 1. A category of intangible rights protecting commercially valuable products of the human intellect. • The category comprises primarily trademark, copyright, and patent rights, but also includes trade-secret rights, publicity rights, moral rights, and rights against unfair competition. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property C= 6.]

intendment (in-tend-m;mt). (14c) 1. The sense in which the law understands something <the intendment of a contract is that the contract is legally enforceable>. — Also termed intendment of law. 2. A decision-maker's inference about the true meaning or intention of a legal instrument <there is no need for intendment, the court reasoned, when the text of the statute is clear>. — Formerly also spelled entendment.

common intendment. The natural or common meaning in legal interpretation.

3. A person's expectations when interacting with others within the legal sphere.

Our institutions and our formalized interactions with one another are accompanied by certain interlocking expectations that may be called intendants, even though there is seldom occasion to bring these underlying expectations across the threshold of consciousness. In a very real sense when I cast my vote in an election my conduct is directed and conditioned by an anticipation that my ballot will be counted in favor of the candidate I actually vote for. This is true even though the possibility that my ballot will be thrown in the wastebasket, or counted for the wrong man, may never enter my mind as an object of conscious attention. In this sense the institution of elections may be said to contain an intendment that the votes cast will be faithfully tallied, though I might hesitate to say, except in a mood of rhetoric, that the election authorities had entered a contract with me to count my vote as I had cast it. — Lon L. Fuller, The Morality of Law 217 (rev. ed. 1969).

intent. (13c) 1. The state of mind accompanying an act, esp. a forbidden act. • While motive is the inducement to do some act, intent is the mental resolution or determination to do it. When the intent to do an act that violates the law exists, motive becomes immaterial. Cf. MOTIVE; SCIENTER.

"The phrase 'with intent to,' or its equivalents, may mean any one of at least four different things: — (1) That the intent referred to must be the sole or exclusive intent; (2) that it is sufficient if it is one of several concurrent intents; (3) that it must be the chief or dominant intent, any others being subordinate or incidental; (4) that it must be a determining intent, that is to say, an intent in the absence of which the act would not have been done, the remaining purposes being insufficient motives by themselves. It is a question of construction which of those meanings is the true one in the particular case." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 383-84 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

criminal intent. (17c) 1. MENS REA. 2. An intent to commit an actus reus without any justification, excuse, or other defense. — Also termed felonious... intent. See specific intent. [Cases: Criminal Law ⊗ 1, 20.]

“The phrase ‘criminal intent’ is one that has been banded about with various meanings not carefully distinguished. At times it has been used in the sense of the ‘intent to do wrong’ (the outline of the mental pattern which is necessary for crime in general), as, for example, in the phrase ‘the mental element commonly called criminal intent.’ At times it has been used in the sense of mens rea as the mental element requisite for guilt of the very offense charged, ‘a varying state of mind which is the contrary of an innocent state of mind, whatever may be pointed out by the nature of the crime as an innocent state of mind.’ Often it is used to include criminal negligence as well as an actual intent to do the harmful deed, although at other times such negligence is referred to as a substitute, so to speak, for criminal intent in connection with certain offenses. Occasionally it is found in the sense of an intent to violate the law, implying a knowledge of the law violated. On the other hand, as such knowledge is a factor not ordinarily required for conviction it has been pointed out that to establish ignorance of the law does not disprove criminal intent. Thus it has been said (assuming the absence of any circumstance of exculpation) ‘whenever an act is criminal, the party doing the act is chargeable with criminal intent.’ . . . This suggests a helpful guide for the use of the phrase ‘criminal intent.’ Some other term such as mens rea or guilty mind should be employed for more general purposes, and ‘criminal intent’ be restricted to those situations in which there is (1) an intent to do the actus reus, and (2) no circumstance of exculpation.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 832-34 (3d ed. 1982).

donative intent. The intent to surrender dominion and control over the gift that is being made. [Cases: Gifts ⊗ 15, 60.]

felonious intent. See criminal intent.

general intent. (17c) The intent to perform an act even though the actor does not desire the consequences that result. • This is the state of mind required for the commission of certain common-law crimes not requiring a specific intent or not imposing strict liability. General intent usu. takes the form of recklessness (involving actual awareness of a risk and the culpable taking of that risk) or negligence (involving blameworthy inadvertence). — Also termed general criminal intent; general mens rea. [Cases: Criminal Law ⊗ 20, 23.]

immediate intent. (18c) The intent relating to a wrongful act; the part of the total intent coincident with the wrongful act itself.

implied intent. (18c) A person’s state of mind that can be inferred from speech or conduct, or from language used in an instrument to which the person is a party.

intent to kill. (16c) An intent to cause the death of another; esp., a state of mind that, if found to exist during an assault, can serve as the basis for an aggravated-assault charge. [Cases: Assault and Battery ⊗ 49; Homicide ⊗ 526.]

larcenous intent. (1832) A state of mind existing when a person (1) knowingly takes away the goods of another without any claim or pretense of a right to do so, and (2) intends to permanently deprive the owner of them or to convert the goods to personal use. See larceny. [Cases: Larceny ⊗ 3.]

manifest intent. (17c) Intent that is apparent or obvious based on the available circumstantial evidence, even if direct evidence of intent is not available. • For example, some fidelity bonds cover an employer’s losses caused by an employee’s dishonest or fraudulent acts committed with a manifest intent to cause a loss to the employer and to obtain a benefit for the employee. Establishing manifest intent sufficient to trigger coverage does not require direct evidence that the employee intended the employer’s loss. Even if the employee did not actively want that result, but the result was substantially certain to follow from the employee’s conduct, the requisite intent will be inferred.

predatory intent. Antitrust. A business’s intent to injure a competitor by unfair means, esp. by sacrificing revenues to drive a competitor out of business. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ⊗ 537.]

specific intent. (18c) The intent to accomplish the precise criminal act that one is later charged with. • At common law, the specific-intent crimes were robbery, assault, larceny, burglary, forgery, false pretenses, embezzlement, attempt, solicitation, and conspiracy. — Also termed specific-intent defense. [Cases: Criminal Law ⊗ 20.]

testamentary intent. (1830) A testator’s intent that a particular instrument function as his or her last will and testament. • Testamentary intent is required for a will to be valid. [Cases: Wills ⊗ 438.]

transferred intent. (1932) Intent that the law may shift from an originally intended wrongful act to a wrongful act actually committed. • For example, if a person intends to kill one person but kills another inadvertently, the intent may be transferred to the actual act. See transferred-intent doctrine. [Cases: Criminal Law ⊗ 25; Homicide ⊗ 553, 792, 731.]

ulterior intent. (1848) The intent that passes beyond a wrongful act and relates to the objective for the sake of which the act is done; motive. • For example, a thief’s immediate intent may be to steal another’s money, but the ulterior intent may be to buy food with that money.

2. A lawmaker’s state of mind and purpose in drafting or voting for a measure. [Cases: Statutes ⊗ 181(1), 184.]

original intent. (17c) The mental state of the drafters or enactors of the U.S. Constitution, a statute, or another document.

intention (in-ten-shee-oh). n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. The part of a formula in which the plaintiff’s claim against the defendant is stated. See formula (1). 2. Hist. A count or declaration in a real action. • Intentio was intention, n. (14c) The willingness to bring about something planned or foreseen; the state of being set to do something. — intentional, adj.

"Intention is the purpose or design with which an act is done. It is the foreknowledge of the act, coupled with the desire of it, such foreknowledge and desire being the cause of the act, inasmuch as they fulfill themselves through the operation of the will. An act is intentional if, and in so far as, it exists in idea before it exists in fact, the idea realizing itself in the fact because of the desire by which it is accompanied." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 378 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"Intention. — This signifies full advertence in the mind of the defendant to his conduct, which is in question, and to its consequences, together with a desire for those consequences." P.H. Winfield, A Textbook of the Law of Tort § 10, at 19 (5th ed. 1950).

intentional, adj. (17c) Done with the aim of carrying out the act.

intentional act. See act.

intentional father. See intentional parent under parent.

intentional fraud. See fraud (1).

intentional infliction of emotional distress. (1958) The tort of intentionally or recklessly causing another person severe emotional distress through one's extreme or outrageous acts. • In a few jurisdictions, a physical manifestation of the mental suffering is required for the plaintiff to recover. — Abbr. IIED. — Also termed (in some states) outrage. See emotional distress. Cf. negligent infliction of emotional distress. [Cases: Damages C-57.19.]

intentional-injury exclusion. See expected/intended exclusion under exclusion (3).

intentional invasion. See invasion.

intentional manslaughter. See voluntary manslaughter under manslaughter.

intentional mother. See intentional parent under parent.

intentional parent. See parent.

intentional tort. See tort.

intentional wrong. See wrong.

intent of the legislature. See legislative intent.

intent to kill. See intent (1).

intent to publish. Defamation. The intent to communicate (defamatory words, etc.) to a third person or with knowledge that the communication will probably reach third persons. See publish (2).

intent to use. See bona fide intent to use.

intent-to-use application. See trademark application.

inter alia (in-tar ay-lee-a or ah-lee-a), adv. [Latin] (17c) Among other things.

inter alios (in-tar ay-lee-as or ah-lee-as), adv. [Latin] (17c) Among other persons.

Inter-American Bar Association. An organization of lawyers from North America, Central America, and South America whose purpose is to promote education, cooperation, and professional exchanges among lawyers from different American countries. — Abbr. IABA.

Inter-American Foundation. An independent federal foundation that supports social and economic development in Latin America and the Caribbean by making grants to private, indigenous organizations that carry out self-help projects benefiting poor people. • The agency is governed by a nine-member board — six from the private sector and three from the government. It was created in 1969 as an experimental foreign-assistance program. 22 USCA § 290f. — Abbr. IAF.

intercalare (in-tar-ka-lair-ee), vb. [Latin] Civil law. To introduce or insert among others; esp., to introduce a day or month into the calendar. • From this Latin term derives the rare English word intercalate, roughly synonymous with interpolate.

intercedere (in-tar see-da-ree), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To assume another's debt; esp., to act as surety for another.

intercept, n. Family law. A mechanism by which a portion of an obligor's unemployment benefits, disability income, income-tax refund, or lottery winnings is automatically diverted to a child-support enforcement agency to satisfy past-due support obligations. [Cases: Child Support C-442, 467.]

intercept, vb. (15c) 1. To divert (money) from a payee to satisfy a financial obligation of the payee. 2. To covertly receive or listen to (a communication). • The term usu. refers to covert reception by a law-enforcement agency. See wiretapping. [Cases: Telecommunications C-1435.]

interchangeable bond. See bond (3).

intercommon, vb. 1. To share in the rights to a common. 2. Hist. Scots law. To communicate or deal with (criminals or others). 3. Hist. Scots law. To prohibit (a person) from communicating or dealing with a criminal.

inter conjunctas personas (in-tar kan-jangk-tas par-soh-纳斯), [Latin] Hist. Between conjunct persons. • Generally, conveyances between certain family members were void if designed to defraud.

intercountry adoption. See international adoption under adoption.

intercourse. (15c) 1. Dealings or communications, esp. between businesses, governmental entities, or the like. 2. Physical sexual contact, esp. involving the penetration of the vagina by the penis. interdependence. *int*l law. The reliance of countries on each other to ensure their mutual subsistence and advancement.

_interdict* (in-tair-dikt), n. (15c) Roman & civil law. 1. An injunction or other prohibitory, exhibitory, or restitutory decree.

Decretal interdict (di-kreet-al). An interdict that signified the praetor's order or decree by applying the remedy in a pending case.

Edictal interdict (ee-dik-tal). An interdict that declared the praetor's intention to give a remedy in certain cases, usu. in a way that preserves or restores possession.

Exhibitory interdict. An interdict by which a praetor compelled a person or thing to be produced.

Possessory interdict. An interdict that protected a person whose possession was disturbed without due process. • A possessor in bad faith could obtain a possessory interdict because the interdict did not depend on title. It would, however, establish whether the possessor would be the defendant or the plaintiff in any subsequent claim. See _interdictum._

Prohibitory interdict. An interdict by which a praetor forbade something to be done.

Restitutory interdict (ri-stich-a-tor-ee or res-ti-t[yl] oo-ta-re). An interdict by which a praetor directed something to be restored to someone who had been dispossessed of it.

2. _Civil law.* A person who has been interdicted; a natural person who, because of an infirmity, cannot make reasoned decisions about personal care or property or communicate those decisions; a person deprived of the capacity to make juridical acts. La. Civ. Code arts. 389, 390, 394.

Limited interdict. A person whose right to care for himself or herself is restricted by a court decision because of mental incapacity; a person subject to limited interdiction. La. Civ. Code art. 390. [Cases: Mental Health _src_ 101.] _interdict.*

Interdiction was either judicial or voluntary; and in whichever of these modes the interdiction was effected and imposed, any disposition of heritage thereafter by the interdicted, without the consent of his interdictors, was liable to reduction on the ground of interdiction, except where the conveyances were onerous and rational." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 193 (4th ed. 1894).

Complete interdiction. See full interdiction.

Full interdiction. The complete removal of one's right to care for oneself and one's affairs or estate because of mental incapacity. La. Civ. Code art. 389. — Also termed complete interdiction. [Cases: Mental Health _src_ 101.]

Limited interdiction. See partial interdiction.

Partial interdiction. The partial removal of one's right to care for oneself and one's affairs or estate because of mental incapacity. — Also termed limited interdiction. [Cases: Mental Health _src_ 101.]

Interdictory (in-tair-dik-tar-ee), adj. 1. Of or relating to an interdiction. 2. Having the power to interdict. — Also termed interdictive.

Interdictum (in-tair-dik-tam), n. [Latin] _Roman law.* A summary order to secure the applicant's rights by preventing something from being done (prohibitory interdict) or requiring property to be produced (exhibitory interdict) or restored (restitutory interdict). • A party might apply for an _interdictum_ when some wrong had been done, or was likely to be done, and it was necessary either to redress or to prevent the wrong at once, without waiting for the ordinary legal processes; often it was a preliminary to an ordinary action (e.g., by settling which party was entitled to be defendant in the action). Pl. _interdicta._

Interdictum quod vi aut clam (in-tair-dik-tam kwod vi awt klam). [Latin "interdict because of force or stealth"] _Roman law.* An interdict issued against a person who forcibly (vi) or secretly (clam) altered or occupied the claimant's property. • The interdict required the defendant to restore the property to its previous condition. Cf. _actio vi bonorum raptorum under actio._

Interest see (in-ta-re-see). See real party in interest under party (2).

Interesse termini (in-tair-ee see tar-ma-nee). [Latin "interest of term or end"] _Archaic.* A lessee's right of entry onto the leased property; esp., a lessee's interest in real property before taking possession. • An _interesse termini_ is not an estate; it is an interest for the term. It gives the lessee a claim against any person who prevents the lessee from entering or accepting delivery of the property. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant _src_ 1, 20, 70.]

"The _interesse termini's_ essential qualities, as a mere interest, in contradiction to a term in possession, seems to arise from a want of possession. It is a right or interest only, and not an estate, and it has the properties of a right, it may be extinguished by a release to the lessor, and it may be assigned or granted away, but it cannot, technically considered, be surrendered; for there is no reversion before entry, in which the interest may drown. Nor will a release from the lessor operate by way of enlargement, for the lessee has no estate before entry.” 4 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law op. cit.

“There was a troublesome doctrine of the common law which established, in the case of a lease not operating under the Statute of Uses, that the lessee acquired no estate in the land until he actually entered into possession. Until that time he was said to have a mere right to take possession, and this right was called an interesse termini. This requisite of entry to perfect a lease has, however, been swept away by the Law of Property Act, 1925, and all terms of years absolute, whether created before or after the commencement of the Act, can take effect from the date fixed for the commencement of the term without actual entry.” G.C. Cheshire, Modern Law of Real Property 128-29 (3d ed. 1933).

interest, n. (15c) 1. The object of any human desire; esp., advantage or profit of a financial nature (conflict of interest). 2. A legal share in something; all or part of a title, and interest. • Collectively, the word includes any aggregation of rights, privileges, powers, and immunities; distributively, it refers to any one right, privilege, power, or immunity.

beneficial interest. (18c) A right or expectancy in something (such as a trust or an estate), as opposed to legal title to that thing. • For example, a person with a beneficial interest in a trust receives income from the trust but does not hold legal title to the trust property. [Cases: Descent and Distribution $\Rightarrow$ 73; Trusts $\Rightarrow$ 140(1).]

carried interest. 1. The share of any profits produced by a partnership’s investment, paid to the general partner as compensation for managing the investment. • The general partner often contributes little or no capital to acquire the investment but gains an interest in it by providing time and skill. The general partner’s interest in the property is “carried” with the property until it is liquidated. 2. Oil & gas. In an oil-and-gas lease, a fractional interest that is free of some or all costs of exploring, drilling, and completing the well. • The owner of a carried lease may earn royalties on production but does not have a working interest, at least until all costs are recouped by the working-interest owner or owners, and often until some multiple of those costs are paid.

contingent interest. (18c) An interest that the holder may enjoy only upon the occurrence of a condition precedent.

controlling interest. Sufficient ownership of stock in a company to control policy and management; esp., a greater-than-50% ownership interest in an enterprise. [Cases: Corporations $\Rightarrow$ 180.]

defeasible interest. An interest that the holder may enjoy until the occurrence of a condition. [Cases: Wills $\Rightarrow$ 602.]

direct interest. (17c) A certain, absolute interest (or no capital to acquire the investment but gains an ownership interest in an enterprise. [Cases: Corporations $\Rightarrow$ 180.]

entailed interest. An interest that devolves through lineal descendants only as a result of a fee tail. [Cases: Estates in Property $\Rightarrow$ 12.]

entire interest. (17c) A whole interest or right, without diminution. See fee simple.

equitable interest. (17c) An interest held by virtue of an equitable title or claim on equitable grounds, such as the interest held by a trust beneficiary. [Cases: Trusts $\Rightarrow$ 139.]

executory interest. See executory interest.

expectation interest. (1836) The interest of a non-reaching party in being put in the position that would have resulted if the contract had been performed. See expectation damages under DAMAGES; BENEFIT-OF-THE-BARGAIN RULE. [Cases: Damages $\Rightarrow$ 117; Fraud $\Rightarrow$ 59(2).]

financial interest. An interest involving money or its equivalent; esp., an interest in the nature of an investment. — Also termed pecuniary interest.

future interest. (17c) A property interest in which the privilege of possession or of other enjoyment is future and not present. • A future interest can exist in either the grantor (as with a reversion) or the grantee (as with a remainder or executory interest). Today, most future interests are equitable interests in stocks and debt securities, with power of sale in a trustee. — Also termed future estate; expectant estate; estate in expectancy. Cf. present interest under interest (2). [Cases: Estates in Property $\Rightarrow$ 1.]

inalienable interest. (1848) An interest that cannot be sold or traded. inchoate interest. (1800) A property interest that has not yet vested. [Cases: Dower and Curtesy ⊃ 29–53.]

insurable interest. (18c) A legal interest in another person's life or health or in the protection of property from injury, loss, destruction, or pecuniary damage. To take out an insurance policy, the purchaser or the potential insured's beneficiary must have an insurable interest. If a policy does not have an insurable interest as its basis, it will usu. be considered a form of wagering and thus be held unenforceable. See wager policy under INSURANCE POLICY. [Cases: Insurance ⊃ 1779–1795.]

interest in the use and enjoyment of land. The pleasure, comfort, and advantage that a person may derive from the occupancy of land. The term includes not only the interests that a person may have for residential, agricultural, commercial, industrial, and other purposes, but also interests in having the present-use value of the land unimpaired by changes in its physical condition. [Cases: Nuisance ⊃ 1.]

joint interest. An interest that is acquired at the same time and by the same title as another person's. See joint tenancy under TENANCY. [Cases: Joint Tenancy ⊃ 1.]

legal interest. (17c) 1. An interest that has its origin in the principles, standards, and rules developed by courts of law as opposed to courts of chancery. 2. An interest recognized by law, such as legal title.

legally protected interest. A property interest that the law will protect against impairment or destruction, whether in law or in equity.

liberty interest. (1960) An interest protected by the due-process clauses of state and federal constitutions. See FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT (2). [Cases: Constitutional Law ⊃ 3873.]

multiple interest. A property interest that is good against an indefinitely large number of people.

pecuniary interest. See financial interest.

possessory interest. See possessory interest.

present interest. (17c) 1. A property interest in which the privilege of possession or enjoyment is present and not merely future; an interest entitling the holder to immediate possession. — Also termed present estate. Cf. FUTURE INTEREST. [Cases: Estates in Property ⊃ 1.] 2. A trust interest in which the beneficiary has the immediate beneficial enjoyment of the trust's proceeds. 3. A trust interest in which the trustee has the immediate right to control and manage the property in trust.

proprietary interest. (17c) A property right; specifically, the interest held by a property owner together with all appurtenant rights, such as a stockholder's right to vote the shares. [Cases: Corporations ⊃ 635.]

reliance interest. (1936) The interest of a nonbreaching party in being put in the position that would have resulted if the contract had not been made, including out-of-pocket costs. [Cases: Damages ⊃ 117.]

restitution interest. A nonbreaching party's interest in preventing the breaching party from retaining a benefit received under the contract and thus being unjustly enriched. The benefit may have been received from the nonbreaching party or from a third party. [Cases: Implied and Constructive Contracts ⊃ 4.]

reversionary interest. A future interest left in the transferee or successor in interest. See REVERSION. [Cases: Reversions ⊃ 1.]

senior interest. An interest that takes precedence over others; esp., a debt security or preferred share that has a higher claim on a corporation's assets and earnings than that of a junior obligation or common share.

terminable interest. (1883) An interest that may be terminated upon the lapse of time or upon the occurrence of some condition.

undivided interest. (18c) An interest held under the same title by two or more persons, whether their rights are equal or unequal in value or quantity. — Also termed undivided right; undivided title; fractional interest. See joint tenancy and tenancy in common under TENANCY. [Cases: Joint Tenancy ⊃ 1; Tenancy in Common ⊃ 1.]

vested interest. (18c) An interest for which the right to its enjoyment, either present or future, is not subject to the happening of a condition precedent.

working interest. See working interest.

3. The compensation fixed by agreement or allowed by law for the use or detention of money, or for the loss of money by one who is entitled to its use; esp., the amount owed to a lender in return for the use of borrowed money. — Also termed finance charge. See USURY. [Cases: Interest ⊃ 1, 8.]

accrued interest. (18c) Interest that is earned but not yet paid, such as interest that accrues on real estate and that will be paid when the property is sold if, in the meantime, the rental income does not cover the mortgage payments.

add-on interest. (1952) Interest that is computed on the original face amount of a loan and that remains the same even as the principal declines. A $13,000 loan with add-on interest at 8% payable over three years would require equal annual interest payments of $800 for three years, regardless of the unpaid principal amount. With add-on interest, the effective rate of interest is typically about twice the stated add-on interest rate. In the example just cited, then, the effective rate of interest would be about 16%. — Also termed block interest. See add-on loan under LOAN.

Boston interest. Interest computed by using a 30-day month rather than the exact number of days in the month. — Also termed New York interest. compound interest. (17c) Interest paid on both the principal and the previously accumulated interest. Cf. simple interest. [Cases: Interest ⊆ 60; usury ⊆ 49.]

conventional interest. (1878) Interest at a rate agreed to by the parties themselves, as distinguished from that prescribed by law. Cf. interest as damages. [Cases: Interest ⊆ 4, 32.]

discount interest. The interest that accures on a discounted investment instrument (such as a government bond) as it matures. • The investor receives the interest when the instrument is redeemed. [Cases: United States ⊆ 91.]

gross interest. (1884) A borrower's interest payment that includes administrative, service, and insurance charges.

imputed interest. (1968) Interest income that the IRS attributes to a lender regardless of whether the lender actually receives interest from the borrower. • This is common esp. in loans between family members. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⊆ 3132.20.]

interest as damages. (1841) Interest allowed by law in the absence of a promise to pay it, as compensation for a delay in paying a fixed sum or a delay in assessing and paying damages. Cf. conventional interest.

lawful interest. 1. A rate of interest that is less than or equal to the statutory maximum. [Cases: Usury ⊆ 42; Wills ⊆ 602.] 2. See legal interest.

legal interest. 1. Interest at a rate usu. prescribed by statute. • Courts often order monetary judgments to accumulate legal interest until paid. Cf. legal rate under interest rate. [Cases: Interest ⊆ 31, 39(3).] 2. See lawful interest.

illegal interest. See usury.

moratory interest. See prejudgment interest.

New York interest. See Boston interest.

prejudgment interest. Statutorily prescribed interest accrued either from the date of the loss or from the date when the complaint was filed up to the date the final judgment is entered. • Prejudgment interest is usu. calculated only for liquidated sums. Depending on the statute, it may or may not be an element of damages. — Also termed moratory interest. [Cases: Interest ⊆ 39.2(5).]

prepaid interest. (1887) Interest paid before it is earned. [Cases: Usury ⊆ 44.]

qualified residence interest. (1993) Tax. Interest paid on debt that is secured by one's home and that was incurred to purchase, build, improve, or refinance the home. • This type of interest is deductible from adjusted gross income. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⊆ 3282.]

simple interest. (17c) Interest paid on the principal only and not on accumulated interest. • Interest accrues only on the principal balance regardless of how often interest is paid. — Also termed straight-line interest. Cf. compound interest. [Cases: Interest ⊆ 60.]

straight-line interest. See simple interest.

unearned interest. (1880) Interest received by a financial institution before it is earned.

unlawful interest. See usury.

interest-analysis technique. (1964) Conflict of laws. A method of resolving choice-of-law questions by reviewing a state's laws and the state's interests in enforcing those laws to determine whether that state's laws or those of another state should apply. — Also termed governmental-interest-analysis technique. [Cases: Action ⊆ 17.]

“Professor Brainerd Currie gets the major credit for developing the interest analysis, or governmental interest analysis, technique. Interest analysis requires an examination into competing laws to determine their underlying policies and the strength of the relative interests the competing sovereigns have in the application of their respective laws in the particular situation. The facts will vary and the strength of the relevant policies will wax and wane accordingly.” David D. Siegel, Conflicts in a Nutshell 237 (2d ed. 1994).

interest arbitration. See arbitration.

interest as damages. See interest (3).

interest-based quorum. See quorum.

interest bond. See bond (3).

interest coupon. See coupon.

interest-coverage ratio. The ratio between a company's pretax earnings and the annual interest payable on bonds and loans.

interested party. See party (2).

interested person. See person (1).

interested shareholder. See shareholder.

interested stockholder. See interested shareholder under shareholder.

interested witness. See witness.

interest-equivalence tax. See tax.

interest factor. Insurance. In life-insurance ratemaking, an estimate of the interest or rate of return that the insurer will earn on premium payments over the life of a policy. • The interest factor is one element that a life insurer uses to calculate premium rates. See premium rate; gross premium (1) under premium (1). Cf. mortality factor; risk factor. [Cases: Insurance ⊆ 1542(1).]

interest-free loan. See loan.

Interest on Lawyers' Trust Accounts. A program that allows a lawyer or law firm to deposit a client's retained funds into an interest-bearing account that designates the interest payments to charitable, law-related purposes, such as providing legal aid to the poor. • Almost all states have either a voluntary or mandatory IOLTA program. — Abbr. IOLTA. [Cases: Attorney and Client ⊆ 120.]

interest-only loan. See loan.

interest-only mortgage. See mortgage.

interest policy. See insurance policy. interest rate. (1886) The percentage that a borrower of money must pay to the lender in return for the use of the money, usu. expressed as a percentage of the principal payable for a one-year period. — Often shortened to rate. — Also termed rate of interest. [Cases: Interest C=27–38.]

annual percentage rate. (1941) The actual cost of borrowing money, expressed in the form of an annualized interest rate. — Abbr. APR.

bank rate. The rate of interest at which the Federal Reserve lends funds to member banks.

contract rate. (1856) The interest rate printed on the face of a bond certificate.

coupon rate. 1. The specific interest rate for a coupon bond. — Also termed coupon interest rate. See coupon bond under bond (3). 2. See nominal rate.

discount rate. (1913) 1. The interest rate at which a member bank may borrow money from the Federal Reserve. • This rate controls the supply of money available to banks for lending. Cf. rediscount rate. 2. The percentage of a commercial paper's face value paid by an issuer who sells the instrument to a financial institution. 3. The interest rate used in calculating present value.

effective rate. (1912) The annual actual interest rate, which incorporates compounding when calculating interest, rather than the stated rate or coupon rate.

face rate. See nominal rate.

floating rate. (1921) A varying interest rate that is tied to a financial index such as the prime rate.

illegal rate. (1867) An interest rate higher than the rate allowed by law. See Usury. [Cases: Usury C=42.]

legal rate. (1857) 1. The interest rate imposed as a matter of law when none is provided by contract. [Cases: Interest C=31.] 2. The maximum interest rate, set by statute, that may be charged on a loan. See legal interest under interest (3). Cf. Usury. [Cases: Usury C=42.]

lock rate. (2000) A mortgage-application interest rate that is established and guaranteed for a specified period. — Also termed locked-in rate.

nominal rate. (1872) The interest rate stated in a loan agreement or on a bond, with no adjustment made for inflation. — Also termed coupon rate; face rate; stated rate; stated interest rate.

prime rate. (1952) The interest rate that a commercial bank holds out as its lowest rate for a short-term loan to its most creditworthy borrowers, usu. large corporations. • This rate, which can vary slightly from bank to bank, often dictates other interest rates for various personal and commercial loans. — Often shortened to prime. — Also termed prime lending rate.

real rate. (1895) An interest rate that has been adjusted for inflation over time.

rediscount rate. The interest rate at which a member bank may borrow from the Federal Reserve on a loan secured by commercial paper that has already been resold by the bank.

stated rate. See nominal rate.

variable rate. (1970) An interest rate that varies at preset intervals in relation to the current market rate (usu. the prime rate).

interest-rate swap. An agreement to exchange interest receipts or interest-payment obligations, usu. to adjust one's risk exposure, to speculate on interest-rate changes, or to convert an instrument or obligation from a fixed to a floating rate — or from a floating to a fixed rate. • The parties to such an agreement are termed "counterparties."

generic swap. See plain-vanilla swap.

plain-vanilla swap. A typical interest-rate swap that involves one counterparty's paying a fixed interest rate while the other assumes a floating interest rate based on the amount of the principal of the underlying debt. • The underlying debt, called the "notional" amount of the swap, does not change hands — only the interest payments are exchanged. — Also termed generic swap.

interest unity. See unity of interest under unity.

interferant. 1. Something that interferes with the proper function of a chemical analysis; specif., a chemical contaminant that renders the results of a blood, breath, or urine test unreliable. 2. Patents. A party to an interference proceeding in the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office. • This term declined in use after the 1960s; today the PTO and courts use the term "contestant." — Also termed (in sense 2) contestant. See contestant (3). [Cases: Patents C=106(1).]

interference, n. (18c). 1. The act of meddling in another's affairs. 2. An obstruction or hindrance. 3. Patents. An administrative proceeding in the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office to determine who is entitled to the patent when two or more applicants claim the same invention, or when an application interferes with an existing patent. • This proceeding occurs when the same invention is claimed (1) in two pending applications, or (2) in one pending application and a patent issued within a year of the pending application's filing date. — Also termed priority contest. [Cases: Patents C=106.] 4. Trademarks. An administrative proceeding in the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office to determine whether a mark one party wants to register will cause confusion among consumers with another party's mark. • An administrative hearing may be held to determine whose mark prevails, but applicants usu. withdraw their applications and devise new marks instead. [Cases: Trademarks C=1289.]

interference-estoppel rejection. See rejection.

interference with a business relationship. See tortious interference with prospective advantage. interference with a contractual relationship. See tortious interference with contractual relations.

interference with contract. See tortious interference with contractual relations.

intergenerational love. 1. Affection between adults and children. • This sense usu. refers to interfamilial affection, as between grandparents and grandchildren, and does not include sexual feelings. 2. Romance or sexual contact between a child below the age of consent and an adult. • Pedophiles use the term as a euphemism to assert that sexual contact between adults and children is consensual.

intergovernmental immunity. See immunity (1). intergovernmental-immunity doctrine. (1939) Constitutional law. The principle that both the federal government and the states are independent sovereigns, and that neither sovereign may intrude on the other in certain political spheres. Cf. preemption (5). [Cases: States C=18.93.]

Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization. A unit of the United Nations charged with setting international standards for vessel safety and personnel training for shipping on the open seas. — Abbr. IMCO.

interim, adj. (16c) Done, made, or occurring for an intervening time; temporary or provisional <an interim director>.

interim bond. See bond (2).

interim committitur (in-ta-rim ka-mit-ta tar). [Latin “in the meantime, let him be committed”] A court order directing that a defendant be incarcerated pending further action.

interim curator. See curator (2).

“A widow is interim domina of terce lands after her service, and in virtue thereof may either possess them herself, or let them out to tenants.” John Trayner, Trayner’s Latin Maxims 286 (4th ed. 1894).

interim financing. See financing.

interim measure of protection. Int’l law. An international tribunal’s order to prevent a litigant from prejudicing the final outcome of a lawsuit by arbitrary action before a judgment has been reached. • This measure is comparable to a temporary injunction in national law.

interim-occupancy agreement. (1962) A contract governing an arrangement (called a leaseback) whereby the seller rents back property from the buyer. See leaseback.

interim order. See order (2).

interim receipt. See receipt.

interim relief. See relief.

interim statement. Accounting. A periodic financial report issued during the fiscal year (usu. quarterly) that indicates the company’s current performance. • The SEC requires the company to file such a statement if it is distributed to the company’s shareholders. — Also termed interim report.

interim trustee. See trustee (2).

interim zoning. See zoning.

interinsurance. See reciprocal insurance under insurance.

interinsurance exchange. See reciprocal exchange.

interior Department. See department of the interior.

interlineation (in-ta-rin ee ay-shan), n. (15c) 1. The act of writing something between the lines of an earlier writing. 2. Something written between the lines of an earlier writing. Cf. interpolation (1). — interline, vb.

interlining. A carrier’s practice of transferring a shipment to another carrier to reach a destination not served by the transferring carrier.

interlocking confessions. See confession.

interlocking director. See director.

interlocutory (in-ta-lok yoo-tar ee), adj. (15c) (Of an order, judgment, appeal, etc.) interim or temporary; not constituting a final resolution of the whole controversy. — Also termed medial. [Cases: Appeal and Error C=66-84; Criminal Law C=1023(3); Federal Courts C=572-583.]

interlocutory appeal. See appeal.

Interlocutory Appeals Act. A federal statute, enacted in 1958, that grants discretion to a U.S. court of appeals to review an interlocutory order in a civil case if the trial judge states in writing that the order involves a controlling question of law on which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion, and that an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the termination of the litigation. 28 USCA § 1292(b). Cf. finality doctrine; final-judgment rule. [Cases: Federal Courts C=660.1.] interlocutory application. See application.

interlocutory costs. See costs (3).

internal security. The field of law dealing with measures taken to protect a country from subversive activities.
International Criminal Police Organization

International Bureau for the Protection of Intellectual Property. Copyright. A predecessor of the World Intellectual Property Organization. • The bureau was created by combining the Paris Convention's Secretariat (the International Bureau for the Paris Convention) with the Berne Copyright Convention of 1886. It was supervised by the Swiss government until 1970, when the bureau became part of WIPO. — Also termed Bureaux Internationaux Reunis pour la Protection de la Propriete Intellectuelle; BIRPI.

International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes. An autonomous division of the World Bank consisting of an international three member tribunal that presides over arbitrations affecting the rights of foreign investors. • The center was created in 1966 under the Convention on the Settlement of Investment Disputes Between States and Nationals of Other States.

It provides services for the conciliation and arbitration of international investment and trade disputes. — Abbr. ICSID.

International commerce. See COMMERCE.

International control. Intl'law. The supervision over countries and their subdivisions for the purpose of ensuring the conformity of their conduct with international law.

"[Supervision is exercised increasingly not only over the conduct of governmental and intergovernmental institutions, but also over the acts and omissions of individuals to establish their conformity with requirements of public international law. Yet even where supranational entities, notably the European Communities, exercise international control over the conduct of individuals and corporate bodies, generally the supervision is destined to verify or secure conformity of governmental measures with relevant rules of law." Hugo J. Hahn, "International Controls," in 2 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 1079–80 (1995).

International Convention for the Protection of Performers, Producers of Phonograms and Broadcasting Organizations. See ROME CONVENTION.

International Court of Justice. The 15-member permanent tribunal that is the principal judicial organ of the United Nations. • The Court sits in the Hague, Netherlands. It has jurisdiction to decide disputes submitted to it by nations, and to render advisory opinions requested by the United Nations and its specialized agencies. The U.N. Security Council has the express power to enforce the Court's judgments. — Abbr. ICJ. — Also termed World Court. [Cases: International Law C–C 10.45.]

International crime. Intl'law. A grave breach of international law, such as genocide or a crime against humanity, made a punishable offense by treaties or applicable rules of customary international law. • An international crime occurs when three conditions are satisfied: (1) the criminal norm must derive either from a treaty concluded under international law or from customary international law, and must have direct binding force on individuals without intermediate provisions of municipal law, (2) the provision must be made for the prosecution of acts penalized by international law in accordance with the principle of universal jurisdiction, so that the international character of the crime might show in the mode of prosecution itself (e.g., before the International Criminal Court), and (3) a treaty establishing liability for the act must bind the great majority of countries. — Also termed international offense.

International Criminal Court. A court established by a treaty known as the Statute of the International Criminal Court (effective 2002), with jurisdiction over genocides, crimes against humanity, war crimes, and aggression. It sits in The Hague, Netherlands. — Abbr. ICC.

International Criminal Police Organization. An international law-enforcement group founded in 1923 and headquartered in Lyons, France. • The organization gathers and shares information on transnational criminals for more than 180 member nations. — Also termed Interpol.

international enclave. See enclave.

international extradition. See extradition.

international filing date. See pCT filing date.

international fund. See mutual fund.

internationalization. The act or process of bringing a territory of one country under the protection or control of another or of several countries.

"[T]he concept of internationalization is characterized by three elements: the abolition or limitation of the sovereignty of a specific State; the serving of community interests or at least the interests of a group of States; and the establishment of an international institutional framework, not necessarily involving an international organization."

international jurisdiction. See jurisdiction.

international law. (18c) The legal system governing the relationships between nations; more modernly, the law of international relations, embracing not only nations but also such participants as international organizations and individuals (such as those who invoke their human rights or commit war crimes). — Also termed public international law; law of nations; law of nature and nations; jus gentium; jus gentium publicum; jus inter gentes; foreign-relations law; interstate law; law between states (the word state, in the latter two phrases, being equivalent to nation or country). Cf. transnational law. [Cases: International Law C-1-13.]

"[I]nternational law or the law of nations must be defined as law applicable to states in their mutual relations and to individuals in their relations with states. International law may also, under this hypothesis, be applicable to certain interrelationships of individuals themselves, where such interrelationships involve matters of international concern."

customary international law. International law that derives from the practice of states and is accepted by them as legally binding. • This is one of the principal sources or building blocks of the international legal system.

private international law. International conflict of laws. • Legal scholars frequently lament the name "private international law" because it misleadingly suggests a body of law somehow parallel to public international law, when in fact it is merely a part of each legal system's private law. — Also termed international private law; jus gentium privatum; intermunicipal law; comity; extraterritorial recognition of rights. See conflict of laws (2).

"[A] word must be said about the name or title of the subject. No name commands universal approval. The expression 'Private International Law,' coined by Story in 1834 [Joseph Story, Commentaries on the Conflict of Laws § 9 (1834)], and used on the Continent by [Jean Jacques Gaspard] Foelix in 1838, has been adopted by Westlake and Foote and most French authors. The chief criticism directed against its use is its tendency to confuse private international law with the law of nations or public international law, as it is usually called. There are obvious differences between the two. The latter primarily governs the relations between sovereign states and it may perhaps be regarded as the common law of mankind in an early state of development; the former is designed to regulate disputes of a private nature, notwithstanding that one of the parties may be a private state. There is, at any rate in theory, one common system of public international law . . . ; but . . . there are as many systems of private international law as there are systems of municipal law." G.C. Cheshire, Private International Law 15 (6th ed. 1961).

International Law Commission. A body created in 1947 by the United Nations for the purpose of encouraging the progressive development and codification of international law. • The Commission is composed of experts in international law. It has drafted many important treaties that have become binding treaty law, including the Vienna Convention on the Law on Treaties.

International legal community. (1928) 1. The collective body of countries whose mutual legal relations are based on sovereign equality. 2. More broadly, all organized entities having the capacity to take part in international legal relations. 3. An integrated organization on which a group of countries, by international treaty, confer part of their powers for amalgamated enterprise. • In this sense, the European Union is a prime example.

international legislation. Int'l law. 1. Law-making among countries or intergovernmental organizations, displaying structural and procedural characteristics that are the same as national legislation. 2. The product of any concerted effort to change international law by statute. 3. The process of trying to change international law by statute. 4. Loosely, the adoption by international bodies of binding decisions, other than judicial and arbitral decisions, concerning specific situations or disputes.

International Monetary Fund. A U.N. specialized agency established to stabilize international exchange rates and promote balanced trade. — Abbr. IMF. [Cases: International Law C-10.10.]

international person. Int’l law. An entity having a legal personality in international law; one who, being a subject of international law, enjoys rights, duties, and powers established in international law and has the ability to act on the international plane.

international private law. 1. See private international law under international law. 2. See Conflict of Laws (2).

international regime. See regime.

International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea. See international rules of the road.

international relations. (1880) 1. World politics. 2. International law. 3. The academic discipline devoted to studying world politics, embracing international law, international economics, and the history and art of diplomacy.

international river. See river.

International Rules of the Road. Maritime law. A set of statutes designed to promote navigational safety. • The International Rules were formalized at the convention on the International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1972. The rules set requirements for navigation lights, day shapes, steering and sailing rules, sound signals in good and restricted visibility conditions, and distress signals, among other things. Congress adopted the rules and enacted them in statutory form. 33 USCA § 1602. — Also termed 72 COLREGS; International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1972.

International Schedule of Classes of Goods and Services. Trademarks. A nearly worldwide classification system that enhances organization and retrieval of registered marks within a category of goods or services. — Abbr. ISCGS.

international seabed. The seabed and ocean floor, as well as the subsoil, lying beyond the territorial limits of nations. — Also termed international seabed area.

international terrorism. See terrorism.

International Trade Administration. A unit in the U.S. Department of Commerce responsible for promoting world trade and strengthening the international trade and investment position of the United States. • Created in 1980, the agency operates through three offices: the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Import Services, the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Market Access and Compliance, and the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Trade Development. — Abbr. ITA. [Cases: Customs Duties ≅ 53, 54.]

interpellatio (in-tar-pay-shay-oh), n. (L. “a demand, interruption”) Roman law. 1. A demand for payment of a debt or for desistance from a course of action. 2. The interruption of a process, e.g., of the acquisition of title by possession. 3. The institution of a legal process or appeal. Pl. interpellationes (in-tar-pa-lay-shay-oh-neez).

interplea. (17c) A pleading by which a stakeholder places the disputed property into the court's registry; the plea made by an interpleader. See interpleader.

interplead, vb. (16c) 1. Of a claimant) to assert one's own claim regarding property or an issue already before the court. 2. (Of a stakeholder) to institute an interpleader action, usu. by depositing disputed property into the court's registry to abide the court's decision about who is entitled to the property. Cf. implead. [Cases: Interpleader C–1.]

interpleaders, n. (16c) 1. A suit to determine a right to property held by a usu. disinterested third party (called a stakeholder) who is in doubt about ownership and who therefore deposits the property with the court to permit interested parties to litigate ownership. • Typically, a stakeholder initiates an interpleader both to determine who should receive the property and to avoid multiple liability. Fed. R. Civ. P. 22. See stakeholder (1). Cf. impleader; intervention (1). [Cases: Interpleader C–1.2. Loosely, a party who interpleads. — Also termed (in civil law) concursus.

"Interpleader is a form of joinder open to one who does not know to which of several claimants he or she is liable, if liable at all. It permits him or her to bring the claimants into a single action, and to require them to litigate among themselves to determine which, if any, has a valid claim. Although the earliest records of a procedure similar to interpleader were at common law, it soon became an equitable rather than a legal procedure." Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 74, at 531 (5th ed. 1994).

Interpol (in-tor-pohl). See international criminal police organization.

interpolation (in-tar-pa-lay-shan), n. (17c) 1. The act of inserting words into a document to change or clarify the meaning. • In a negative sense, interpolation can refer to putting extraneous or false words into a document to change its meaning. Cf. interlineation. 2. (often pl.) Roman law. An editorial change made by one of the compilers of the Digests and the Justinian Code. • The compilers made insertions, deletions, and juxtapositions in the texts, but made few real changes to the substantive law. — interpolat, vb. — interpolative, adj. — interpolator, n.

interposition, n. (14c) 1. The act of submitting something (such as a pleading or motion) as a defense to an opponent's claim. 2. Archaic. The action of a state, while exercising its sovereignty, in rejecting a federal mandate that it believes is unconstitutional or overreaching. • The Supreme Court has declared that interposition is an illegal defiance of constitutional authority. — interpose, vb.

interpretatio (in-tar-pri-tay-shay-oh), n. [L. “interpretation”] Roman law. An opinion of a Roman jurist (an interpreter of the law, not an advocate) who did not usu. appear in court. • Such an opinion was not originally binding, but by the Law of Citations (A.D. 426), the opinions of five jurists acquired binding force. See citations, law of. Pl. interpretationes (in-tar-pri-tay-shay-oh-neez).

interpretatio limitata. See restrictive interpretation under interpretation.

interpretation, n. (14c) 1. The process of determining what something, esp. the law or a legal document, means; the ascertaining of meaning to be given to words or other manifestations of intention. [Cases: Contracts C–143.]

"Interpretation, as applied to written law, is the art or process of discovering and expounding the intended significance of the language used, that is, the meaning which the authors of the law designed it to convey to others." Henry Campbell Black, Handbook on the Construction and Interpretation of the Laws 1 (1896).

"There is more to interpretation in general than the discovery of the meaning attached by the author to his words. Even if, in a particular case, that meaning is discoverable with a high degree of certainty from external sources, the question whether it has been adequately expressed remains." Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 149 (1976).

administrative interpretation. An interpretation given to a law or regulation by an administrative agency. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure C–213; Statutes C–219.]

authentic interpretation. (1967) An interpretation arrived at by asking the drafter or drafting body what the intended meaning was.

"The procedure of referring the doubtful statute to its author has acquired a name in the literature of jurisprudence. It is called ‘authentic interpretation.’... [Although] this device has been tried in... recent times in certain European countries... [it] has always failed, and no thoughtful adviser would recommend it to any government today." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 29–30 (1968).

comparative interpretation. (1933) A method of statutory construction by which parts of the statute are compared to each other, and the statute as a whole is compared to other documents from the same source on a similar subject.

customary interpretation. (1902) Interpretation based on earlier rulings on the same subject. [Cases: Customs and Usages C–15.]

extensive interpretation. (17c) A liberal interpretation that applies a statutory provision to a case not falling within its literal words.

grammatical interpretation. (1830) Interpretation that is based exclusively on the words themselves. [Cases: Statutes C–189.]
interpretation clause. (1827) Interpretation according to what the reader believes the author reasonably intended, even if, through inadvertence, the author failed to think of it. — Also termed mixed interpretation. [Cases: Statutes 235.]

limited interpretation. See restrictive interpretation.

logical interpretation. (1870) That departs from the literal words on the ground that there may be other, more satisfactory evidence of the author’s true intention. — Also termed rational interpretation.

mixed interpretation. See liberal interpretation.

practical interpretation. See contemporaneous construction under construction.

rational interpretation. See logical interpretation.

restrictive interpretation. (17C) An interpretation that is bound by a principle or principles existing outside the interpreted text. — Also termed restricted interpretation; limited interpretation; interpretatio limitata. Cf. unrestrictive interpretation.

strict interpretation. (16C) Interpretation according to what the reader believes the author must have been thinking at the time of the writing, and no more. Typically, this type of reading gives a text a narrow meaning. [Cases: Statutes 174.]

interpretation clause. (1827) A legislative or contractual provision giving the meaning of frequently used words or explaining how the document as a whole is to be construed. [Cases: Statutes 179.]

interpretative rule. Administrative law. 1. The requirement that an administrative agency explain the statutes under which it operates. 2. An administrative rule explaining an agency’s interpretation of a statute. — Also termed interpretive rule. Cf. Legislative Rule. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure 382.1.]

interrogatory interrogation. (1966) Routine, nonaccusatory questioning by the police of a person who is not in custody.

investigatory interrogation. (1962) Police questioning of a detained person about the crime that he or she is suspected of having committed. Miranda warnings must be given before a custodial interrogation. [Cases: Criminal Law 412.1(4).]

interrogation, n. (15C) The formal or systematic questioning of a person; esp., intensive questioning by the police, usu. of a person arrested for or suspected of committing a crime. • The Supreme Court has held that, for purposes of the Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination, interrogation includes not only express questioning but also words or actions that the police should know are reasonably likely to elicit an incriminating response. Rhode Island v. Innis, 446 U.S. 291, 100 S.Ct. 1082 (1980). [Cases: Criminal Law 412.1(4).]

custodial interrogation. (1966) Police questioning of a detained person about the crime that he or she is suspected of having committed. • Miranda warnings must be given before a custodial interrogation. [Cases: Criminal Law 412.1(4).]

interrogator, n. (1962) Routine, nonaccusatory questioning by the police of a person who is not in custody.

noncustodial interrogation. (1966) Police questioning of a suspect who has not been detained and can leave at will. • Miranda warnings are usu. not given before a noncustodial interrogation. [Cases: Criminal Law 1941-2 (14).]

interrogative question. Civil law. In a criminal trial, a question asked of a witness to elicit inadmissible evidence relating to the crime at issue in the case. Cf. assertive question.

interrogator (in-ter-ga-tar). (18c) One who poses questions to another.

interrogatory (in-to-rog-a-tor-ee), n. (16c) A written question (usu. in a set of questions) submitted to an opposing party in a lawsuit as part of discovery. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 33. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 1841-42; Pretrial Procedure 214-216.]

contention interrogatory. An interrogatory designed to discover the factual basis of the allegations in a complaint, answer, or counterclaim, or to determine the theory of the opposing party’s case. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 1841-1506; Pretrial Procedure 217-276.]

cross-interrogatory. (16c) An interrogatory from a party who has received a set of interrogatories. [Cases: Pretrial Procedure 214-216.] See identification interrogatory.

fact interrogatory. See identification interrogatory.

identification interrogatory. A request for the responding party to identify relevant documents, tangible objects, or individuals who have knowledge of facts relating to the lawsuit. — Also termed fact interrogatory; state-all-facts interrogatory.

special interrogatory. (18c) A written jury question whose answer is required to supplement a general verdict. ● This term is not properly used in federal practice, which authorizes interrogatories and special verdicts, but not special interrogatories. Fed. R. Civ. P. 49. The term is properly used, however, in the courts of some states. — Also termed special issue. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 212211-2220; Trial 346-366.]

state-all-facts interrogatory. See identification interrogatory.

in ter re om (in-te-rom-am), adv. & adj. [Latin “in order to frighten”] (17c) By way of threat; as a warning <the demand letter was sent in ter re om; the client has no intention of actually suing.>

in ter re om populi (in-te-rom-am pop-y-a-l), adv. [Latin] H1st. To the terror of the people. ● This phrase was necessary in an indictment for riot.

interruptio (in-tar-rap-shee-oh). [Latin] Interruption. ● This word refers to a break in the possession of land that ends a prescriptive claim.

interruption. (15c) A break in the period of possession of land, possibly ending a claim to ownership by prescriptive right.

legal interruption. Louisiana law. A break in the running of prescription that occurs when the property’s possessor acknowledges another person’s ownership rights, or the owner (or obligor) sues the possessor (or obligor). La. Civ. Code arts. 3462, 3464. — Also termed legal interruption of prescription. [Cases: Adverse Possession 2146; Easements 217(5), 217(6).]

natural interruption. Louisiana law. A break of more than one year in a possessor’s period of possession after a rightful owner or a third person seizes the real property. La. Civ. Code art. 3465. — Also termed natural interruption of prescription. [Cases: Adverse Possession 2146; Easements 217(5), 217(6).]

inter se (in-tar see or say). [Latin “between or among themselves”] (1845) (Of a right or duty) owed between the parties rather than to others. — Also termed inter se.

interspousal, adj. (1906) Between husband and wife.

interstate, adj. (1844) Between two or more states or residents of different states.

interstate agreement. (1876) An agreement between states. Cf. interstate compact under COMPACT. [Cases: States 216.]

Interstate Agreement on Detainers Act. A law, originally enacted in 1956, that allows the federal government, certain states, and the District of Columbia to temporarily obtain custody of a prisoner for trial even though the prisoner is already incarcerated elsewhere. ● Under the Act, if a prisoner makes a written request for a disposition of the untried charges in the second forum, the government obtaining custody must try the prisoner within 180 days of the request. 18 USCA App. arts. 1-9. See UNIFORM MANDATORY DISPOSITION OF DETAINERS ACT.

Interstate Commerce Commission. The now-defunct federal agency established by the Interstate Commerce Act in 1887 to regulate surface transportation between states by certifying carriers and pipelines and by monitoring quality and pricing. • In December 1995, when Congress eliminated this agency, the Surface Transportation Board (STB) — a three-member board that is a division of the Department of Transportation — assumed most of the agency's duties. — Abbr. ICC. See surface transportation board. [Cases: Commerce C=83.]

interstate compact. See compact.

Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children. An agreement whose purpose is to ensure that when states are involved in the placement or adoption of children across state lines, the states cooperate with each other to facilitate the process and to protect the children. • This compact is intended to secure states' cooperation in investigating the suitability of proposed adoptive homes in an interstate adoption and also to alleviate conflicts that often occur when the agencies and courts of more than one state are involved. The compact has been enacted in almost identical form in all 50 states as well as in the District of Columbia and the Virgin Islands. — Abbr. ICPC. — Often shortened to Interstate Compact. [Cases: Infants C=442, 508(1).] interstate extradition. See extradition.

interstate income-withholding order. (1994) A court order entered to enforce a support order of a court of another state by withholding income of the defaulting person. [Cases: Child Support C=442, 508(1).] interstate law. (1866) 1. INTERNATIONAL LAW. 2. The rules and principles used to determine controversies between residents of different states.

interstate rendition. See rendition (2).

interstate trade. See interstate commerce under commerce.

intersubjective zap. In critical legal studies, a so-called spontaneous moment of shared intuition. — Also termed zap.

intertwining doctrine. The principle that if arbitrable and nonarbitrable claims arise from a single transaction and the claims are factually and legally mingled, a court can refuse to compel arbitration of any claims. • This doctrine is of limited effect because the Federal Arbitration Act usu. preempts it. [Cases: Alternative Dispute Resolution C=155.]

intervener. See intervenor.

intervening act. See intervening cause under cause (1).

intervening agency. See intervening cause under cause (1).

intervening cause. See cause (1).

intervening force. 1. See FORCE. 2. See intervening cause under cause (1).

intervening rights. Patents. An infringement defense based on the right of a person who practiced a patent's broadened claims to continue practicing an invention, even though the invention's patent was reissued because of inadvertent claim errors in the original patent. 35 USCA § 252, second paragraph. — Also termed doctrine of intervening rights. [Cases: Patents C=138(2).]

intervenor. (17c) One who voluntarily enters a pending lawsuit because of a personal stake in it. — Also spelled intervenor. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=311; Parties C=37.]

intervention, n. (1860) 1. The entry into a lawsuit by a third party who, despite not being named a party to the action, has a personal stake in the outcome. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 24. • The intervenor sometimes joins the plaintiff in claiming what is sought, sometimes joins the defendant in resisting what is sought, and sometimes takes a position adverse to both the plaintiff and the defendant. Cf. impleader; interpleader. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=311; Parties C=37. 2. The legal procedure by which such a third party is allowed to become a party to the litigation. — Formerly also termed (in senses 1 & 2) trial of right of property. 3. Int'l law. One nation's interference by force, or threat of force, in another nation's internal affairs or in questions arising between other nations. — intervene, vb. — interventionary, adj.

"Intervention may or may not involve the use of force. It is frequently possible for a powerful state to impair the political independence of another weaker state without actually utilizing its armed forces. This result may be accomplished by lending open approval, as by the relaxation of an arms embargo, to a revolutionary group headed by individuals ready to accept the political or economic dominance of the intervening state. It may be accomplished by the withholding of recognition of a new government, combined with various forms of economic and financial pressure until the will of the stronger state prevails through the resignation or overthrow of the government disapproved." Philip C. Jessup, A Modern Law of Nations 172-73 (1949).

humanitarian intervention. An intervention by the international community to curb abuses of human rights within a country, even if the intervention infringes the country's sovereignty.

intervention duty. Maritime law. A shipowner's obligation to remedy hazardous working conditions for longshore workers, even though the shipowner did not create the condition, when the shipowner knows of a nonobvious condition arising in an area that cannot be avoided by the longshore workers in performing their duties. Cf. active operations duty, turnover duty. [Cases: Shipping C=84(3).]

invention, n. (14c) Patents. 1. A patentable device or process created through independent effort and characterized by an extraordinary degree of skill or ingenuity; a newly discovered art or operation. • Invention embraces the concept of nonobviousness. [Cases: Patents C-161(1).] 2. The act or process of creating such a device or process. 3. Generally, anything that is created or devised. — invent, vb.

The truth is, the word cannot be defined in such manner as to afford any substantial aid in determining whether a particular device involves an exercise of the inventive faculty or not. In a given case we may be able to say that there is present invention of a very high order. In another we can see that there is lacking that impalpable something that distinguishes invention from simple mechanical skill. Courts, adopting fixed principles as a guide, have by a process of exclusion determined that certain variations in old devices do or do not involve invention; but whether the variation relied upon in a particular case is anything more than ordinary mechanical skill is a question which cannot be answered by applying the test of any general definition. McClain v. Ortmaryer, 141 U.S. 419, 427, 12 S.Ct. 76, 78 (1891).

An 'invention' is any art, machine, manufacture, design, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, or any variety of plant, which is or may be patentable under the patent laws. 37 C.F.R. § 501.3(d). 60 Am. Jur. 2d Patents § 894, at 601 n. 98 (1987).

abandoned invention. An invention that an inventor has either deliberately stopped trying to exploit, or has otherwise treated in a way that precludes claiming the invention in a later patent. • Under § 102(c) of the Patent Act, abandonment bars a patent on that invention. But abandonment of an imperfect form of an invention does not bar a patent on a later-perfected form. Unless publicly known, an abandoned invention is not prior art to a later inventor. Under § 102(g) of the Patent Act, abandonment of the same invention by a first inventor also prevents the first inventor from blocking the second inventor's patent application in an interference. Cf. ABANDONED APPLICATION. [Cases: Patents C-82.]

distinct invention. One part of an invention that can be used on its own, and the absence of which will not prevent the remainder of the invention from working. • When the subject matter of a patent application is found to be multiple distinct inventions, the examiner requires the inventor to restrict the application to a single invention. See RESTRICTION (4). Cf. independent invention.

improvement invention. A nontrivial and nonobvious betterment of an existing device or process. • The improvement may be patented, but the protection applies only to the improvement, not to the invention improved on.

independent invention. An invention that bears no relation to another invention, esp. to another invention covered in the same patent application. • A single patent may not cover multiple independent inventions; the applicant must elect one and drop any others from the application. See RESTRICTION (4). Cf. distinct invention.

new-use invention. Discovery of a new use for an existing invention. • As long as the new use is nonobvious — and actually useful — it may be patented. 35 USCA §§ 101–03.

small invention. See utility model.

software-based invention. A device or machine that uses innovative software to achieve results. • A software-based invention, process, or method may qualify for a patent, but the physical components and the underlying software are usu, not separately patentable.

inventively new. Patents. Original in any way. • The phrase is sometimes used to distinguish "new" in the usual sense from the term of art in patent law.

inventive step. Patents. In an invention, some advancement that is not obvious to a person reasonably skilled in the art. • The European Patent Convention requires an inventive step to qualify for a patent. The term is roughly equivalent to nonobviousness in American patent practice.

inventory, n. (15c) 1. A detailed list of assets; esp., an executor's or administrator's detailed list of the probate estate assets <make an inventory of the estate>. • The term also sometimes denotes a divorcing spouse's detailed list of all his or her marital and separate assets and liabilities. — Also termed inventory and appraisement. See PROBATE ESTATE; ACCOUNTING. [Cases: Executors and Administrators C-62–73.] 2. Accounting. The portion of a financial statement reflecting the value of a business's raw materials, works-in-progress, and finished products <the company's reported inventory inventory fee. A probate court's fee for services rendered to a decedent's estate.

inventory search. See SEARCH.

inverse floater. See inverse-floating-rate note under NOTE (1).

inverse-floating-rate note. See NOTE (1).

inverse-order-of-alienation doctrine. The principle that if a secured creditor has not collected on the mortgage or lien on a property sold off in successive parcels, the purchaser of the encumbered property may require the creditor to collect first from any parcel still held by the original owner, then from the parcel sold last, then next to last, and so on until the amount has been satisfied. • The creditor must exhaust an asset before attempting to recover the balance of the mortgage or lien from the next most recently transferred asset. — Also termed rule of marshaling liens. [Cases: Debtors and Creditors <= 13; Mortgages <= 290.] inverse zoning. See ZONING.

inverted market. See BACKWARDATION.

invest, vb. (17c) 1. To supply with authority or power <the U.S. Constitution invests the President with the power to conduct foreign affairs>. See INVESTITURE (1). 2. To apply (money) for profit <Jillson invested her entire savings in the mutual fund>. 3. To make an outlay of money for profit <Baird invested in stocks>.

investigate, vb. (16c) 1. To inquire into (a matter) systematically; to make (a suspect) the subject of a criminal inquiry <the police investigated the suspect's involvement in the murder>. 2. To make an official inquiry <after the judge dismissed the case, the police refused to investigate further>.

investiture (in-ves-to-chuur). (14c) 1. The act of formally installing a person in a ceremony in which the person is clothed in the insignia of the office's position or rank; esp., the installation of a cleric in office. — Also termed investment. 2. LIVERY OF SEISIN.

investment. (16c) 1. An expenditure to acquire property or assets to produce revenue; a capital outlay. [Cases: Contracts <= 193.]

fixed-dollar investment. An investment whose value is the same when sold as it was when purchased. • Examples are bonds held to maturity, certain government securities, and savings accounts.

fixed-income investment. An investment (including preferred stock) that pays a fixed dividend throughout its life and is not redeemable unless the corporation makes a special call.

net investment. 1. The net cash required to start a new project. 2. The gross investment in capital goods less capital consumption, including depreciation.

2. The asset acquired or the sum invested. 3. INVESTITURE (1). 4. LIVERY OF SEISIN.

investment adviser. A person who, for pay, advises others, either directly or through publications or writings, about the value of securities or the advisability of investing in, purchasing, or selling securities, or who is in the business of issuing reports on securities. • The term generally excludes an employee of an investment adviser; a depository institution, such as a bank; lawyers, accountants, engineers, and teachers whose investment advice is solely incidental to the practice of their profession; a broker-dealer whose advice is incidental to the conduct of business and who receives no special compensation for that advice; and publishers of bona fide newspapers, newsmagazines, or business or financial publications of general, regular, or paid circulation. [Cases: Securities Regulation <= 223, 224.]

investment banker. A person or institution that underwrites, sells, or assists in raising capital for businesses, esp. for new issues of stocks or bonds; a trader at an investment bank. See investment bank under bank.

investment banking. The business of underwriting or selling securities; esp., the marketing of new stocks or bonds.

"The term 'investment banking' can be used to encompass [underwriting, and acting as a dealer, broker, and market maker], and any person in a firm performing any of those functions could be called an investment banker. By convention, however, those terms are used less broadly. In large securities firms, for example, there are a number of departments. The one most visible to the public handles trades for individuals. The technical term for the persons working with customers in that department is 'registered representative,' but those persons are often called brokers or stockbrokers. Insiders would not call them investment bankers. A department almost invisible to the public handles underwritings and performs a wide range of services primarily for client companies. Among those are: (1) assisting companies in the sale of securities, almost always in large amounts, to such private purchasers as insurance companies; (2) finding acquisition partners for companies that wish to acquire or be acquired by others; and (3) giving financial advice of various sorts to client companies. That department is likely to be called the investment banking department. In any case, its functions are at the heart of the investors' conception of investment banking." Larry D. Soderquist & Theresa A. Gabaldon, Securities Law 30 (1998).

investment company. See company.

Investment Company Act. A 1940 federal statute enacted to curb financial malpractices and abuses by regulating investment-company activities and transactions — specifically, by requiring registration of investment companies and prohibiting transactions by unregistered companies; by making certain persons ineligible as affiliated persons or underwriters; by regulating affiliations of directors, officers, and employees; by barring changes in investment policy without shareholder approval; and by regulating contracts of advisers and underwriters. 15 USCA §§ 80a-1 et seq. [Cases: Securities Regulation $211–222.]

investment contract. 1. A contract in which money is invested in a common enterprise with profits to come solely from the efforts of others; an agreement or transaction in which a party invests money in expectation of profits derived from the efforts of a promoter or other third party. 2. A transaction in which an investor furnishes initial value or risk capital to an enterprise, a portion of that amount being subjected to the risks of the enterprise. • In such an arrangement, the investor typically does not receive the right to exercise control over the managerial decisions of the enterprise. [Cases: Securities Regulation $5.10, 252.]

"[A]n investment contract for purposes of the Securities Act means a contract, transaction or scheme whereby a person invests his money in a common enterprise and is led to expect profits solely from the efforts of the promoter or a third party. . . . It embodies a flexible rather than a static principle, one that is capable of adaptation to meet the countless and variable schemes devised by those who seek the use of the money of others on the promise of profits." SEC v. Howey Co., 328 U.S. 293, 298–99, 66 S.Ct. 1100, 1103 (1946).

guaranteed investment contract. An investment contract under which an institutional investor invests a lump sum (such as a pension fund) with an insurer that promises to return the principal (the lump sum) and a certain amount of interest at the contract's end. — Abbr. GIC.

investment-direction agreement. A contract by which a trustee agrees not to diversify the trust's assets, even though the trustee has the legal right to do so, and the beneficiary agrees to hold the trustee harmless for any losses resulting from not diversifying. — Abbr. IDA. [Cases: Trusts $217.3.]

investment-grade bond. See bond (8).

investment-grade rating. Any of the top four symbols given to a bond after an appraisal of its quality by a securities-evaluation agency such as Moody's. • The rating indicates the degree of risk in an investment in the bond. See (8).

investment income. See unearned income (1) under income.

investment indebtedness. Tax. Debt incurred by a taxpayer to acquire or carry assets that may produce income. • The Internal Revenue Code limits the amount of deductible interest on this type of debt.

investment property. Any asset purchased to produce a profit, whether from income or resale.

investment security. See security.

investment tax credit. See tax credit.

investment trust. See investment company under company.

investor. (17c) 1. A buyer of a security or other property who seeks to profit from it without exhausting the principal. 2. Broadly, a person who spends money with an expectation of earning a profit.

accredited investor. An investor treated under the Securities Act of 1933 as being knowledgeable and sophisticated about financial matters, esp. because of the investor's large net worth. • In a securities offering that is exempt from registration, an accredited investor (either a person or an entity) is not entitled to protection under the Act’s disclosure provisions, although the investor does keep its remedies for fraud. [Cases: Securities Regulation C= 18.11.]

angel investor. A person — usu. an experienced and successful entrepreneur, professional, or entity — that provides start-up or growth financing to a promising company, often together with advice and contacts. — Also termed business angel.

institutional investor. One who trades large volumes of securities, usu. by investing other people's money into large managed funds. • Institutional investors are often pension funds, investment companies, trust managers, or insurance companies. See mutual fund.

qualified investor. Securities. An investor who is an individual and has an investment portfolio worth at least $5 million, or a company that owns or manages investments worth at least $25 million.

sophisticated investor. Securities. An investor who has sufficient knowledge and experience of financial matters to be capable of evaluating a security's qualities. • Sophisticated investors do not require the full protection of securities laws. [Cases: Securities Regulation C= 18.13.]

"The engagement of a magistrate to an accomplice, that if he will give his evidence, he will exercise favor, is merely in the nature of a recommendation to mercy, for no authority is given to a justice of the peace to pardon an offender, and to tell him that he shall be a witness against others. He is not therefore assured of his pardon, but gives his evidence in vinculis, in custody: and it depends on his behaviour, whether he shall or shall not be admitted to mercy." Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 82-83 (2d ed. 1826).

inviolability (in-vl-toh s[yo]o-peer-ee-or-ee). [Law Latin] Roman law. Against the will of the owner. • The common-law doctrine of theft was that the taking must be invito domino.

invitee (in-vi-tee). (1837) A person who has an express or implied invitation to enter or use another's premises, such as a business visitor or a member of the public to whom the premises are held open. • The occupier has a duty to inspect the premises and to warn the invitee of dangerous conditions. — Also termed licensee with an interest. Cf. licensee (2); trespasser; business visitor (1). [Cases: Negligence C= 1037(2).]

public invitee. (1937) An invitee who is invited to enter and remain on property for a purpose for which the property is held open to the public. [Cases: Negligence C= 1037(5).]

inviter. (16c) One who expressly or impliedly invites another onto the premises for business purposes. • Also spelled inviter. Cf. invitee.

invito debitore (in-vi-toh deb-i-tor-ee). [Latin] Roman law. Without the consent of a debtor. • A creditor could assign and a third party could pay a debt invito debitore.

invito domino (in-vi-toh dom-o-noh). [Latin] Roman law. Against the will of the owner. • The common-law doctrine of theft was that the taking must be invito domino.

invitor. See inviter.

invito superiore (in-vi-toh s[yo]o-peer-ee-ee-or-ee). [Law Latin] Scots law. Without the consent of the superior. • Ordinarily, a vassal could not renounce a fee without the superior's consent.

in vitro fertilization. A procedure in which an egg is fertilized outside a woman's body and then inserted into the womb for gestation. — Abbr. IVF. Cf. ARTIFICIAL INSEMINATION; ZYGOTE INTRAFALLOPIAN TRANSFER; GAMETE INTRAFALLOPIAN TRANSFER. [Cases: Child Custody C= 274.5; Child Support C= 63; Children Out-of-Wedlock C= 15; Parent and Child C= 20.]

in vivo fertilization. The process in which an egg is fertilized inside a woman's body. Cf. ARTIFICIAL INSEMINATION; ZYGOTE INTRAFALLOPIAN TRANSFER; GAMETE INTRAFALLOPIAN TRANSFER.

irreparable damages. See damages.

irreparable harm. See irreparable injury under injury.

irreparable injury. See injury.

irreparable-injury rule (i-re-p-a-ra-bal), (1969) The principle that equitable relief (such as an injunction) is available only when no adequate legal remedy (such as monetary damages) exists. • Although courts continue to cite this rule, they do not usu. follow it literally in practice. — Also termed adequacy test. [Cases: Injunction C=14, 138.6] "The irreparable injury rule has received considerable scholarly attention. In 1978, Owen Fiss examined the possible reasons for the rule and found them wanting. A vigorous debate over the economic wisdom of applying the rule to specific performance of contracts began about the same time, and soon came to center on the transaction costs of administering the two remedies. Both Fiss and Dan Dobbs have noted that the rule does not seem to be taken very seriously, and in a review of Fiss’s book, I argued that the definition of adequacy pulls most of the rule’s teeth. The Restatement (Second) of Torts dropped the rule from the blackletter and condemned it as misleading, but replaced it only with a long and unstructured list of factors to be considered. . . . [Many sophisticated lawyers believe that the rule continues to reflect a serious preference for legal over equitable remedies.” Douglas Laycock, The Death of the Irreparable Injury Rule 9 (1991). irretrievable (i-ra-plev-e-a-bal), adj. (Of property) not capable of being releved. — Formerly also spelled irreplevitable. Cf. relevitable.

irresistible force. See force.

irresistible-impulse test. (1892) Criminal law. A test for insanity, holding that a person is not criminally responsible for an act if mental disease prevented that person from controlling potentially criminal conduct. • The few jurisdictions that have adopted this test have combined it with the McNaghten rules. — Also termed control test; volitional test. See insanity defense; McNaghten rules. [Cases: Criminal Law C=50.]

"The first reaction of the legal profession to the irresistible impulse defense, when it was introduced to the law many years ago, was inclined to be favorable. Then a change set in and for many years the prevailing view was strongly against its recognition. Present indications are that the tide is changing again. There seems to be a growing belief to the effect that ignoring the possibility of such a defense fails to give full recognition to the fundamental concept of mens rea.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 975 (3d ed. 1982).

irretrievable superhuman cause. See act of god.

irreversible violence. Archaic. See vis major.

irretrievable breakdown of the marriage. (1973) Family law. A ground for divorce that is based on incompatibility between marriage partners and in many states is the sole ground for no-fault divorce. • Also termed irretrievable breakdown; irremediable breakdown of the marriage; irremediable breakdown. Cf. irreconcilable differences; incompatibility. [Cases: Divorce C=12.]

issuable defense. See defense (1).

issue, n. (16c) 1. A point in dispute between two or more parties. • In an appeal, an issue may take the form of a separate and discrete question of law or fact, or a combination of both.

"In federal civil procedure, an issue is a single, certain, and material point arising out of the allegations and contentions of the parties; it is matter affirmed on one side and denied on the other, and when a fact is alleged in the complaint and denied in the answer, the matter is then put in issue between the parties." 35A C.J.S. Federal Civil Procedure § 357, at 541 (1960).

collateral issue. (18c) A question or issue not directly connected with the matter in dispute. [Cases: Criminal Law C=338(1); Evidence C=99; Witnesses C=405.]

deep issue. (1944) The fundamental issue to be decided by a court in ruling on a point of law. • A deep issue is usu. briefly phrased in separate sentences, with facts interwoven (in chronological order) to show precisely what problem is to be addressed. Cf. surface issue.

"Essentially, a deep issue is the ultimate, concrete question that a court needs to answer to decide a point your way. Deep refers to the deep structure of the case — not to deep thinking. The deep issue is the final question you pose when you can no longer usefully ask the follow-up question, 'And what does that turn on?'" Bryan A. Garner, The Winning Brief 56 (2d ed. 2004).

general issue. (16c) 1. A plea (often a general denial) by which a party denies the truth of every material allegation in an opposing party's pleading. 2. The issue arising from such a plea. [Cases: Pleading C=115.] • The general issue is a denial of the legal conclusion sought to be drawn from the declaration. It denies by a general form of expression the defendant's liability, and enables the defendant to contest, without specific averments of the defense to be asserted, most of the allegations which the plaintiff may be required to prove to sustain his action, and in some actions to raise also various affirmative defenses. It fails to perform the functions of pleading, either in giving notice or in reducing the case to specific issues," Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 169, at 304 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

immaterial issue. (18c) An issue not necessary to decide the point of law. Cf. material issue.

informal issue. Rare. An issue that arises when a defendant does not properly or fully plead in answer to a material allegation.

issue of fact. (17c) A point supported by one party's evidence and controverted by another's. — Also termed fact issue.
issue of law. (18c) A point on which the evidence is undisputed, the outcome depending on the court’s interpretation of the law. — Also termed legal issue.

legal issue. (17c) 1. A legal question, usu. at the foundation of a case and requiring a court’s decision. 2. See issue of law.

material issue. An issue that must be decided in order to resolve a controversy. • The existence of a material issue of disputed fact precludes summary judgment. Cf. immaterial issue. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=2470.1; Judgment C=181(2).]

multifarious issue. An issue that inquires about several different points (esp. facts) when each one should be inquired about in a separate issue.

special issue. (17c) 1. At common law, an issue arising from a specific allegation in a pleading. • Special issues are no longer used in most jurisdictions. 2. See special interrogatory under INTERROGATORY.

surface issue. A superficially stated issue phrased in a single sentence, without many facts, and usu. beginning with the word whether. Cf. deep issue.

ultimate issue. (17c) A not-yet-decided point that is sufficient either in itself or in connection with other points to resolve the entire case. — Also termed ultimate question.

2. A class or series of securities that are simultaneously offered for sale. — Also termed bond issue; stock issue. See offering.

hot issue. A security that, after an initial or secondary offering, is traded in the open market at a substantially higher price. — Also termed hot stock.

lawful issue. (16c) Descendants, including descendants more remote than children. • At common law, the term included only those who were children of legally recognized subsisting marriages. See DESCENDANT; HEIR. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C=25.]

4. Commercial law. The first delivery of a negotiable instrument by its maker or holder.

issue, vb. (14c) 1. To accrue <rents issuing from land> 2. To be put forth officially <without probable cause, the search warrant will not issue> 3. To send out or distribute officially <issue process> <issue stock>. — issuance, n.

issued stock. See STOCK.

issue estoppel. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

issue fee. Patents. The charge that an inventor must pay the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office before an allowed patent application can be issued as a patent. [Cases: Patents C=103.]

issue pleading. See PLEADING (2).

issuer. 1. A person or entity (such as a corporation or bank) that issues securities, negotiable instruments, or letters of credit. 2. A bailee that issues negotiable or nonnegotiable documents of title.

nonreporting issuer. An issuer not subject to the reporting requirements of the Exchange Act because it (1) has not voluntarily become subject to the reporting requirements, (2) has not had an effective registration statement under the Securities Act within the fiscal year, and (3) did not, at the end of its last fiscal year, meet the shareholder or asset tests under the Exchange Act registration requirements.

issue roll. Hist. English law. A court record on which the issues in contested matters are briefly noted. • This practice was abolished in 1834. See INCIPITUR.

ITA. abbr. INTERNATIONAL TRADE ADMINISTRATION.

ita lex scripta est (i-ta leks skrip-ta est). [Latin] So the law is written. • This expression means that the law must be obeyed despite the apparent rigor of its application. The idea is that we must be content with the law as it stands, without inquiring into its reasons. — Sometimes shortened to ita scripta est ("so it is written").

"If practice be the whole he is taught, practice must also be the whole he will ever know: if he be uninstructed in the elements and first principles upon which the rule of practice is founded, the least variation from established precedents will totally distract and bewilder him: ita lex scripta est's the utmost his knowledge will arrive at; he must never aspire to form, and seldom expect to comprehend, any arguments drawn a priori, from the spirit of the laws and the natural foundations of justice." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 32 (1765).

ita te Deus adjuvet (i-ta tee Deus aj-de-et). [Latin] So help you God. • An old form of administering an oath in England, usu. in connection with other words, such as: Ita te Deus adjuvet, et sacrasancta Dei Evangelia ("So help you God, and God’s holy gospels"), and Ita te Deus adjuvet et omnes sancti ("So help you God and all the saints").

ITC. See investment tax credit under TAX CREDIT.

item. (16c) 1. A piece of a whole, not necessarily separated. 2. Commercial law. A negotiable instrument or a promise or order to pay money handled by a bank for collection or payment. • The term does not include a payment order governed by division 11 of the UCC. or a credit- or debit-card slip. UCC 4-104(a)(9). [Cases: Banks and Banking 137, 158–168.]

par item. An item that a drawee bank will remit to another bank without charge.

line item. Accounting. In a financial statement, a single entry or notation to which a particular dollar amount is attached.

3. In drafting, a subpart of text that is the next smaller unit than a subparagraph. • In federal drafting, for example, "(4)" is the item in the following citation: Rule 19(a)(1)(B)(4). — Also termed (in sense 3) clause.

IVA. abbr. See INDIVIDUAL VOLUNTARY ARRANGEMENT.

IVF. abbr. IN VITRO FERTILIZATION.
jactitation (jak-ti-tay-shan). (17c) 1. A false boasting or claim that causes injury to another. [Cases: Libel and Slander ⊑ 140.] 2. Civil law. Slander of title. jactitation of marriage. Hist. 1. False and actionable boasting or claiming that one is married to another. 2. An action against a person who falsely boasts of being married to the complainant.

"Jactitation of marriage is a cause of action which arises when a person falsely alleges that he or she is married to the petitioner, and the remedy sought is a perpetual injunction against the respondent to cease making such allegations. The cause is now uncommon in English municipal law and almost unknown in the conflict of laws." R.H. Graveson, Conflict of Laws 349 (7th ed. 1974).

jactitation of title. See Slander of Title.

jactura (jak-t(y)oor-a), n. [Latin] Civil law. 1. A throwing of goods overboard to lighten or save a vessel; Jettison. 2. A loss incurred from this; general average. See general average under average. — Also termed jactus.

jactus lapilli (jak-tas la-pi-l-i). [Latin "the throwing down of a stone"] Roman law. A landowner's throwing of a small stone onto a neighbor's land to symbolically protest construction that could threaten the thrower's interest. Cf. Novi operis nuntiatio.

jactus mercium navis levandae causa (jak-tas mar-shee-a-nay-vis la-van-dee kaw-za). [Latin "the throwing of goods into the sea for the purpose of lightening the ship"] Roman law. Jettison. See lex Rhodia.

jailhouse. See jail.

jailhouse lawyer. A prison inmate who seeks release through legal procedures or who gives legal advice to other inmates. — Also termed guardhouse lawyer.

jail liberties. Bounds within which a jail or prison lies and throughout which certain prisoners are allowed to move freely, usu. after giving bond for the liberties. • The bounds are considered an extension of the prison walls. Historically, jail liberties were given in England to those imprisoned for debt. The prisoners were allowed to move freely within the city in which the prison was located. — Also spelled (esp. in BrE) gaol liberties. — Also termed jail limits. See bound (2).

“[S]tatutes were from time to time passed enlarging the gaol liberties, in order to mitigate the hardships of imprisonment; thus, the whole city of Boston was held the 'gaol liberties' of its county gaol. And so with a large part of New York City. ... The prisoner, while within the limits, is considered as within the walls of the prison.” 1 John Bouvier, Bouvier’s Law Dictionary 1333-34 (8th ed. 1914).

jail mail. Slang. Correspondence sent by or to an incarcerated person. • It is often screened by prison personnel.

Jamaican switch. An illegal scheme whereby one conspirator convinces the victim of a need for help in handling a large sum of money, usu. by claiming to have found the money or by claiming to be an unsophisticated foreigner, and promises to share part of the money with the victim or asks the victim for help in finding a suitable charity to donate to, at which time the other conspirator appears and promises to assist if both the victim and first conspirator provide good-faith money, the intent being for the two conspirators to leave with all the money, including the victim’s. • The name given to this scheme is likely to be considered offensive by some. — Also termed pigeon drop. [Cases: False Pretenses § 16.]

James hearing. (1981) A court proceeding held to determine whether the out-of-court statements of a coconspirator should be admitted into evidence, by analyzing whether there was a conspiracy, whether the declarant and the defendant were part of the conspiracy, and whether the statement was made in furtherance of the conspiracy. United States v. James, 590 F.2d 575 (5th Cir. 1979); Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E). [Cases: Criminal Law § 427.]

Jane Doe. A fictitious name for a female party to a legal proceeding, used because the party’s true identity is unknown or because her real name is being withheld. — Also termed Jane Roe, Mary Major. Cf. John Doe. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure § 101; Parties § 73.]

Janus-faced (já-nas fayst), adj. (17c) Having two contrasting or contradictory aspects; two-faced .

Jason clause. Maritime law. A bill-of-lading clause requiring contribution in general average even when the peril that justified the sacrifice was the result of the carrier’s negligence, for which the carrier is otherwise exempt from liability by statute. • The clause is named after the Supreme Court case that upheld its enforceability, The Jason, 225 U.S. 32, 32 S.Ct. 560 (1912). See general average under AVERAGE. [Cases: Shipping § 189.]

jaywalking. n. (1919) The act or instance of crossing a street without heeding traffic regulations, as by crossing between intersections or at a place other than a crosswalk. [Cases: Automobiles § 217; Municipal Corporations § 707.] — jaywalk, vb.

jocus partitus (joh-kas pahr-ti-tas), n. [Law Latin “divided game”] Hist. A gambling arrangement made by the parties on a lawsuit’s outcome.

John Doe. A fictitious name used in a legal proceeding to designate a person whose identity is unknown, to protect a person’s known identity, or to indicate that a true defendant does not exist. • In England, "William Styles" was also used. Cf. Jane Doe; Richard Roe. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure <> 101; Parties <> 67, 73.]

"Sheriffs in time growing remiss in their duty, allowed of any persons as pledges, sometimes returning the names of fictitious persons as pledges, at others, neglecting to require or return any at all... And the legislature, to supply the want of real persons as pledges, and remunere the defendant where he has been unjustly or vexatiously sued, has by various statutes, either given him the costs he has incurred in making his defence, or else deprived the plaintiff of recovering those costs he is entitled to by law, in cases of obtaining a verdict, by leaving it to the judge at the trial to certify on the record, that he had little or no cause of action. Since these statutes for allowing the defendant his costs, where the plaintiff fails, or is nonsuited, the writ to the coroner to affeer the pledges has fallen into disuse, and two good-natured personages, John Doe and Richard Roe, from their universal acquaintance and peculiar longevity, have become the ready and common pledges of every suitor." 1 George Crompton, Rules and Cases of Practice in the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas xlvii (3d ed. 1787).

"The fictitious names John Doe and Richard Roe regularly appeared in actions of ejectment... at common law. Doe was the nominal plaintiff, who by a fiction was said to have entered land under a valid lease; Roe was said to have ejected Doe; and the lawsuit took the title Doe v. Roe. These fictional allegations disappeared upon the enactment of the Common Law Procedure Act of 1852... Beyond actions of ejectment, and esp. in the U.S., John Doe, Jane Doe, Richard Roe, Jane Roe, and Peter Roe have come to identify a party to a lawsuit whose true name is either unknown or purposely shielded." Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 290–91 (2d ed. 1995).

John Doe defendant. See defendant.
John Doe summons. See summons.

joint board. Labor law. A committee — usu. made up of an equal number of representatives from management and the union — established to conduct grievance proceedings or resolve grievances.

joint-check rule. The principle that when an owner or general contractor issues a check that is made jointly payable to a subcontractor and the subcontractor’s materialman supplier, the materialman’s indorsement on the check certifies that all amounts due to the materialman, up to the amount of the check, have been paid. • This rule protects the owner or general contractor from lien foreclosure by a materialman who was not paid by the subcontractor. By issuing a joint check, the owner or general contractor is not left merely to hope that the subcontractor pays all the materialmen. And the materialman is protected because it can refuse to indorse the check until it is satisfied that the subcontractor will pay it the appropriate amount. [Cases: Mechanics’ Liens 115(5).]

joint inventor. Patents. A person who collaborates with another or others in developing an invention. • All joint inventors must be identified on a patent application. [Cases: Patents 92.] "Employing a friend, mechanic, model maker or other person to do work for one on an idea does not, as a rule, make him a joint inventor with the originator. One has a right to employ someone else to do one’s work. There are conditions, however, where such person would become a joint inventor, or even sole inventor. It is best to play safe and consult an experienced patent lawyer, laying before him all of the facts." Richard B. Owen, Patents, Trademarks, Copyrights, Departmental Practice 7 (1925).

journal of notarial acts (noh-tair-ee-al). The notary public’s sequential record of notarial transactions, usu. a bound book listing the date, time, and type of each official act, the type of instrument acknowledged or verified before the notary, the signature of each person whose signature is notarized, the type of information used to verify the identity of parties whose signatures are notarized, and the fee charged. • This journal, required by law in many states, provides a record that may be used as evidence in court. — Also termed notarial record; notarial register; notary record book; sequential journal.
journeys accounts. Hist. The number of days (usu. 15) after the abatement of a writ within which a new writ could be obtained. • This number was based on how many days it took for the plaintiff to travel (or journey) to the court.

joyriding, n. (1909) The illegal driving of someone else's automobile without permission, but with no intent to deprive the owner of it permanently. • Under the Model Penal Code, the offender's reasonable belief that the owner would have consented is an affirmative defense. See Model Penal Code § 223.9. — Also termed unauthorized use of a vehicle. [Cases: Automobiles C⇒ 339.] — joyride, vb. — joyrider, n.

"When the automobile began to appear and was limited to the possession of a few of the more fortunate members of the community, many persons who ordinarily respected the property rights of others, yielded to the temptation to drive one of these new contrivances without the consent of the owner. This became so common that the term 'joyrider' was coined to refer to the person who indulge[d] in such unpermitted use of another's car. For the most part it was a relatively harmless type of trespass . . . . " Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce. Criminal Law 333 (3d ed. 1982).

judgment. (13c) 1. A court’s final determination of the rights and obligations of the parties in a case. • The term judgment includes an equitable decree and any order from which an appeal lies. Fed. R. Civ. P. 54. — Also spelled (esp. in BrE) judgement. — Abbr. J. — Also termed (historically) judgment ex cathedra. Cf. ruling (1); opinion (1). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=2391–2628; Judgment C=1.] 2. English law. An opinion delivered by a member of the appellate committee of the House of Lords; a Law Lord’s judicial opinion. — Also termed (in sense 2) speech.

"An action is instituted for the enforcement of a right or the redress of an injury. Hence a judgment, as the culmination of the action declares the existence of the right, recognizes the commission of the injury, or negatives the allegation of one or the other. But as no right can exist without a correlative duty, nor any invasion of it without a corresponding obligation to make amends, the judgment necessarily affirms, or else denies, that such a duty or such a liability rests upon the person against whom the aid of the law is invoked." 1 Henry Campbell Black, A Treatise on the Law of Judgments § 1, at 2 (2d ed. 1902).

accumulative judgment. (1921) A second or additional judgment against a person who has already been convicted, the execution of which is postponed until the completion of any prior sentence.

agreed judgment. (1945) A settlement that becomes a court judgment when the judge sanctions it. • In effect, an agreed judgment is merely a contract acknowledged in open court and ordered to be recorded, but it binds the parties as fully as other judgments. — Also termed consent judgment; stipulated judgment; judgment by consent. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=2397; Judgment C=71–91.]

alternative judgment. A determination that gives the losing party options for satisfying that party’s duties.

cognovit judgment (kog-noh-vit). A debtor’s confession of judgment; judgment entered in accordance with a cognovit. See confession of judgment; cognovit. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=2396; Judgment C=54.]

conditional judgment. A judgment whose force depends on the performance of certain acts to be done in the future by one of the parties. • For example, a conditional judgment may order the sale of mortgaged property in a foreclosure proceeding unless the mortgagor pays the amount decreed within the time specified. — Also termed common order. [Cases: Judgment C=229.]

consent judgment. See agreed judgment.

contradictory judgment. Civil law. A judgment that has been given after the court has heard the parties make their claims and defenses. • In Louisiana, this term is opposed to default judgment. Cf. contradictory motion under motion.

declaratory judgment. (1886) A binding adjudication that establishes the rights and other legal relations of the parties without providing for or ordering enforcement. • Declaratory judgments are often sought, for example, by insurance companies in determining whether a policy covers a given insured or peril. — Also termed declaratory decree; declaration. [Cases: Declaratory Judgment C=1.]

defered judgment. judicial activism, n. (1949) A philosophy of judicial decision-making whereby judges allow their personal views about public policy, among other factors, to guide their decisions, usu. with the suggestion that adherents of this philosophy tend to find constitutional violations and are willing to ignore precedent. Cf. JUDICIAL RESTRANT (3). — judicial activist, n.

"If to resolve the dispute the court must create a new rule or modify an old one, that is law creation. Judges defending themselves from accusations of judicial activism sometimes say they do not make law, they only apply it. It is true that in our system judges are not supposed to and generally do not make new law with the same freedom that legislatures can and do; they are, in Oliver Wendell Holmes’s phrase, ‘confined from molar to molecular motions.’ The qualification is important, but the fact remains that judges make, and do not just find and apply, law.” Richard A. Posner, The Federal Courts: Crisis and Reform 3 (1985).

judicial activity report. A regular report, usu. monthly or quarterly, on caseload and caseflow within a given court or court system.

Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. A United Kingdom tribunal, created in 1833, with jurisdiction to hear certain admiralty and ecclesiastical appeals, and certain appeals from the Commonwealth. • From the 16th century until the 19th, the Court of Delegates was the final court of appeal in England for ecclesiastical suits. During the reign of William IV, the power to hear final appeals was transferred to the Privy Council, and then to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The committee consists entirely of lay people; ecclesiastics become members of the court only if an appeal is brought under the Church Discipline Act. Even then the ecclesiastics must be episcopal priy counselors. The Judicial Committee’s decisions are not treated as binding precedent in the United Kingdom, but they are influential because of the overlapping composition of members of the Privy Council and the House of Lords. in its judicial capacity. — Also termed Court of Final Appeal.

judicial compensation. 1. The remuneration that judges receive for their work. [Cases: Judges &gt;= 22.] 2. Civil law. judicium publicum (pab-li-kam). [Latin "public trial"]
A criminal proceeding under a public statute. • The term derived from the Roman law allowing any member of the public to initiate a prosecution. See COMITIA.

"Judicium publicum may have originally meant trial by or before the actual popular assembly, though it is doubtful whether the phrase existed at all before the 'people' had come to be replaced by quaestores. There is much to be said, in spite of Justinian's explanation [Inst. 4:18:1], for the view that these criminal trials were called 'public' as being 'of public interest,' because, to use Blackstone's words, their subject-matter affects the whole community." 2 E.C. Clark, History of Roman Private Law § 10, at 441 (1914).

judicium Dei (joo-di-kam de-ee). Hist. God's supposed judgment on the merits of the case, made manifest by the outcome of an observable event. • Examples dating from Norman times were the trial by combat and the ordeal. See ORDEAL; TRIAL BY COMBAT.

jura personarum. See jus.

jura praediorum. See jus.

jurat (joor-at). (18c) 1. [fr. Latin jurare “to swear”] A certification added to an affidavit or deposition stating when and before what authority the affidavit or deposition was made. • A jurat typically says “Subscribed and sworn to before me this ______ day of [month], [year],” and the officer (usu. a notary public) thereby certifies three things: (1) that the person signing the document did so in the officer’s presence, (2) that the signer appeared before the officer on the date indicated, and (3) that the officer administered an oath or affirmation to the signer, who swore to or affirmed the contents of the document. — Also termed jurata. Cf. verification. [Cases: Affidavits ⇔ 12.]

witness jurat. A subscribing witness’s certificate acknowledging the act of witnessing. • Even though this certificate is technically an acknowledgment and not a true jurat, the phrase witness jurat is commonly used. See acknowledgment.

2. [fr. Latin juratus “one sworn”] In France and the Channel Islands, a municipal officer or magistrate.

jurata (juu-ray-ta), n. 1. Hist. A jury of 12 persons; esp., a jury existing at common law. 2. jurat (1).

jurative. See juratory.

jurator (juu-ray-tar). Archaic. See juror.

juratorial (joor-a-toh-ri-al) adj. Of or pertaining to a jury.

juratory (joor-a-tor-ee), adj. Of, relating to, or containing an oath. — Also termed jurative.

juratory caution. 1. Maritime law. A court’s permission for an indigent to disregard filing fees and court costs. • A suit upon a juratory caution is the equivalent of a suit in forma pauperis. The right was first recognized in United States admiralty courts in Bradford v. Bradford, 3 F. Cas. 1129 (1878). See in forma pauperis. [Cases: Admiralty ⇔ 123.] 2. Scots law. A security given on oath, such as a bond.

jure (joor-ee), adv. [Latin] 1. By right; in right. 2. By law. See de jure.

jure accessionis (joor-ee ak-sesh-ee-oh-nis). By the law of natural accession. • For example, the fruits of trees on one’s land are one’s property jure accessionis.

jure accretionis (a-kree-shee-oh-nis). By right of accretion.

jure belli (bel-i). By the right or law of war.

jure civilis (sa-vi-li). By the civil law.

jure ecclesiae (e-klee-zee-e). By the church.

jure gentium (jen-shee-om). By the law of nations.

jure officii (a-fish-ee-i). By right of office.

jure proprietatis (pra-pri-tay-tis). By right of property.
jure proprio (proh-pree-oh). By one's own proper right.

jure repraesentationis (rep-ra-zen-tay-shee-oh-nis). By right of representation; in the right of another person.

jure sanguinis (sang-gwi-nis). By right of blood.

jure uxoris (ak-sor-is). In right of a wife.

jure gestionis (joor-ee jes-chee-oh-nis), n. [Latin "by way of doing business"] A nation's acts that are essentially commercial or private, in contrast to its public or governmental acts. Under the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, a foreign country's immunity is limited to claims involving its public acts. The statutory immunity does not extend to claims arising from the private or commercial acts of a foreign state. 28 USCA § 1605. Cf. JURE IMPERII. See COMMERCIAL-ACTIVITY EXCEPTION; RESTRICTIVE PRINCIPLE OF SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY.

jure imperii (joor-ee im-peer-ee-e-i), n. [Latin "by right of sovereignty"] The public acts that a nation undertakes as a sovereign state, for which the sovereign is usu. immune from suit or liability in a foreign country. Cf. JURE GESTIONIS; COMMERCIAL-ACTIVITY EXCEPTION. See RESTRICTIVE PRINCIPLE OF SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY.

jure naturae. 1. See EX JURE NATURAE. 2. See NATURAL LAW.

juridical (juu-rid-i-kal), adj. (16c) 1. Of or relating to judicial proceedings or to the administration of justice. 2. Of or relating to law; legal. — Also termed juridic. Cf. NONJURIDICAL.

juridical act. See ACT.

juridical day. See DAY.

juridical double taxation. See double taxation (3) under TAXATION.

juridical link. (1947) A legal relationship between members of a group, such as those in a potential class action, sufficient to make a single suit more efficient or effective than multiple suits. — Also termed juridical relationship. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ☞ 165; Parties ☞ 35.13.]

juridical person. See artificial person under PERSON (3).

jurimetrics (joor-a-me-triks), n. (1949) The use of scientific or empirical methods, including measurement, in the study or analysis of legal matters. — jurimetrician (joor-a-me-trish-an), jurimetricist (joor-a-me-tris-t), n.

"A variety of contextual frames of reference have been employed by commentators to explain and clarify the basis for judicial decision-making, the most fundamental aspect of the judge's job. These range from exploration of the judge's personality to the employment of small group theory, game theory and Guttman scaling to measure and apprehend the nature of judicial decision-making. Indeed, the disciplined effort to identify with mathematical precision the decision process has been dubiously termed 'jurimetrics.'" Alexander B. Smith & Abraham S. Blumberg, "The Problem of Objectivity," in 2 Crime and Justice 485-86 (1971).
3. A geographic area within which political or judicial authority may be exercised. The accused fled to another jurisdiction. 4. A political or judicial subdivision within such an area. Other jurisdictions have decided the issue differently. Cf. venue. — jurisdictional, adj.

agency jurisdiction. The regulatory or adjudicative power of a government administrative agency over a subject matter or matters. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure C=303, 447] ancillary jurisdiction. (1835) A court's jurisdiction to adjudicate claims and proceedings related to a claim that is properly before the court. For example, if a plaintiff brings a lawsuit in federal court based on a federal question (such as a claim under Title VII), the defendant may assert a counterclaim over which the court would not otherwise have jurisdiction (such as a state-law claim of stealing company property). The concept of ancillary jurisdiction has now been codified, along with the concept of pendent jurisdiction, in the supplemental-jurisdiction statute. 28 USCA § 1367. See supplemental jurisdiction. Cf. pendent jurisdiction. [Cases: Admiralty C=1(3); Courts C=27, 201; Equity C=35; Federal Courts C=20.]

anomalous jurisdiction. (1864) 1. Jurisdiction that is not granted to a court by statute, but that is inherent in the court's authority to govern lawyers and other officers of the court, such as the power to issue a preindictment order suppressing illegally seized property. [Cases: Criminal Law C=394.5(1); Federal Courts C=7; Searches and Seizures C=84.] 2. An appellate court's provisional jurisdiction to review the denial of a motion to intervene in a lower-court case, so that if the court finds that the denial was correct, then its jurisdiction disappears and it must dismiss the appeal for want of jurisdiction because an order denying a motion to intervene is not a final, appealable order. See anomalous jurisdiction rule. [Cases: Federal Courts C=555.] appellate jurisdiction. (18c) The power of a court to review and revise a lower court's decision. For example, U.S. Const. art. III, § 2 vests appellate jurisdiction in the Supreme Court, while 28 USCA §§ 1291–1295 grant appellate jurisdiction to lower federal courts of appeals. Cf. original jurisdiction. [Cases: Appeal and Error C=17; Courts C=203–209; Federal Courts C=541.] arising-in jurisdiction. A bankruptcy court's jurisdiction over issues relating to the administration of the bankruptcy estate, and matters that occur only in a bankruptcy case. 28 USCA §§ 157, 1334. [Cases: Bankruptcy C=2043–2063.]

assistant jurisdiction. The incidental aid provided by an equity court to a court of law when justice requires both legal and equitable processes and remedies. Also termed auxiliary jurisdiction.

common-law jurisdiction. 1. A place where the legal system derives fundamentally from the English common-law system. England, the United States, Australia, and other common-law jurisdictions. 2. A court's jurisdiction to try such cases as were cognizable under the English common law. In the absence of a controlling statute, the court exercised common-law jurisdiction over those claims.

complete jurisdiction. A court's power to decide matters presented to it and to enforce its decisions. [Cases: Admiralty C=5(3); Courts C=1; Equity C=39.]

concurrent jurisdiction. (17c) 1. Jurisdiction that might be exercised simultaneously by more than one court over the same subject matter and within the same territory, a litigant having the right to choose the court in which to file the action. [Cases: Admiralty C=1(1); Courts C=472, 489, 510; Federal Courts C=113.] 2. Jurisdiction shared by two or more states, esp. over the physical boundaries (such as rivers or other bodies of water) between them. Also termed coordinate jurisdiction; overlapping jurisdiction. Cf. exclusive jurisdiction.

“In several cases, two States divided by a river exercise concurrent jurisdiction over the river, no matter where the inter-state boundary may be. In some cases by the Ordinance of 1787 for organizing Territories northwest of the Ohio River, in some cases by Acts of Congress organizing Territories or admitting States, and in some cases by agreements between the States concerned.” 1 Joseph H. Beale, A Treatise on the Conflict of Laws § 44.3, at 279 (1935).

consent jurisdiction. (1855) Jurisdiction that parties have agreed to, either by accord, by contract, or by general appearance. Parties may not, by agreement, confer subject-matter jurisdiction on a federal court that would not otherwise have it. [Cases: Courts C=22.]

contentious jurisdiction. 1. A court's jurisdiction exercised over disputed matters. 2. Eccles. law. The branch of ecclesiastical-court jurisdiction that deals with contested proceedings.

continuing jurisdiction. (1855) A court's power to retain jurisdiction over a matter after entering a judgment, allowing the court to modify its previous rulings or orders. See continuing jurisdiction doctrine. [Cases: Courts C=30; Federal Courts C=26.1.]

coordinate jurisdiction. See concurrent jurisdiction.

criminal jurisdiction. (16c) A court's power to hear criminal cases. [Cases: Criminal Law C=83.]

default jurisdiction. Family law. In a child-custody matter, jurisdiction conferred when it is in the best interests of the child and either (1) there is no other basis for jurisdiction under the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act or the Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act, or (2) when another state has declined jurisdiction in favor of default jurisdiction. Jurisdiction is rarely based on default because either home-state jurisdiction or significant-connection jurisdiction almost always applies, or else emergency jurisdiction is invoked. Default jurisdiction arises only if none of those three applies, or a state with jurisdiction on any of those bases declines to exercise it and default jurisdiction serves the best interests of the child. [Cases: Child Custody C=730, 731.]

delinquency jurisdiction. The power of the court to hear matters regarding juvenile acts that, if committed by an adult, would be criminal. Cf. status-offense jurisdiction. [Cases: Infants C=196.]

diversity jurisdiction. (1927) A federal court’s exercise of authority over a case involving parties who are citizens of different states and an amount in controversy greater than a statutory minimum. 28 USCA § 1332. See diversity of citizenship; amount in controversy. [Cases: Federal Courts C=281-360.]

emergency jurisdiction. Family law. A court’s ability to take jurisdiction of a child who is physically present in the state when that child has been abandoned or when necessary to protect the child from abuse. ● Section 3(a)(3) of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act allows for emergency jurisdiction. It is usu. temporary, lasting only as long as is necessary to protect the child. [Cases: Child Custody C=753.]

equity jurisdiction. (18c) In a common-law judicial system, the power to hear certain civil actions according to the procedure of the court of chancery, and to resolve them according to equitable rules. [Cases: Equity C=1; Federal Courts C=7.]

exclusivity of jurisdiction. (18c) A court’s power to adjudicate an action or class of actions to the exclusion of all other courts <federal district courts have exclusive jurisdiction over actions brought under the Securities Exchange Act>. Cf. concurrent jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts C=472, 489, 510; Equity C=44; Federal Courts C=1131.]

federal jurisdiction. (1800) 1. The exercise of federal-court authority. [Cases: Federal Courts C=3.1.] 2. The area of study dealing with the jurisdiction of federal courts.

federal-juvenile-delinquency jurisdiction. A federal court’s power to hear a case in which a person under the age of 18 violates federal law. ● In such a case, the federal court derives its jurisdictional power from 18 USCA §§ 5031 et seq. The Act severely limits the scope of federal-juvenile-delinquency jurisdiction because Congress recognizes that juvenile delinquency is essentially a state issue. The acts that typically invoke federal jurisdiction are (1) acts committed on federal lands (military bases, national parks, Indian reservations), and (2) acts that violate federal drug laws or other federal criminal statutes.

federal-question jurisdiction. (1941) The exercise of federal-court power over claims arising under the U.S. Constitution, an act of Congress, or a treaty. 28 USCA § 1331. [Cases: Federal Courts C=161–247.] foreign jurisdiction. (16c) 1. The powers of a court of a sister state or foreign country. 2. Extraterritorial process, such as long-arm service of process.

general jurisdiction. (16c) 1. A court’s authority to hear a wide range of cases, civil or criminal, that arise within its geographic area. [Cases: Courts C=117.5–158.1; Federal Courts C=3.1, 76.5.] 2. A court’s authority to hear all claims against a defendant, at the place of the defendant’s domicile or the place of service, without any showing that a connection exists between the claims and the forum state. Cf. limited jurisdiction; specific jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts C=12(2.5); Federal Courts C=76.10.]

general personal jurisdiction. Jurisdiction arising when a person’s continuous and systematic contacts with a forum state enable the forum state’s courts to adjudicate a claim against the person, even when the claim is not related to the person’s contacts with the forum state. Cf. personal jurisdiction; specific personal jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts C=12(2.5); Federal Courts C=76.5.]

home-state jurisdiction. Family law. In interstate child-custody disputes governed by the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act, jurisdiction based on the child’s having been a resident of the state for at least six consecutive months immediately before the commencement of the suit. See home state. [Cases: Child Custody C=736.]

in personam jurisdiction. See personal jurisdiction.

in rem jurisdiction. (in rem). (1930) A court’s power to adjudicate the rights to a given piece of property, including the power to seize and hold it. — Also termed jurisdiction in rem. See in rem. Cf. personal jurisdiction; subject-matter jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts C=18–19; Federal Courts C=93.]

international jurisdiction. A court’s power to hear and determine matters between different countries or persons of different countries.

judicial jurisdiction. The legal power and authority of a court to make a decision that binds the parties to any matter properly brought before it.

jurisdiction in personam. See personal jurisdiction.

jurisdiction in rem. See in rem jurisdiction.

jurisdiction loci. See spatial jurisdiction.

jurisdiction of the person. See personal jurisdiction.

jurisdiction over the person. See personal jurisdiction. jurisdiction quasi in rem. See quasi-in-rem jurisdiction.

jurisdiction ratione materiae. See subject-matter jurisdiction.

jurisdiction ratione personae. See personal jurisdiction.

jurisdiction ratione temporis. See temporal jurisdiction.

legislative jurisdiction. A legislature's general sphere of authority to enact laws and conduct all business related to that authority, such as holding hearings. [Cases: States C:=1.]

limited jurisdiction. (16c) Jurisdiction that is confined to a particular type of case or that may be exercised only under statutory limits and prescriptions. — Also termed special jurisdiction. Cf. general jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts C:=159; Federal Courts C:=5.]

“it is a principle of first importance that the federal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction. . . . The federal courts . . . cannot be courts of general jurisdiction. They are empowered to hear only such cases as are within the judicial power of the United States, as defined in the Constitution, and have been entrusted to them by a jurisdictional grant by Congress.” Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 7, at 27 (5th ed. 1994).

long-arm jurisdiction. Jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant who has had some contact with the jurisdiction in which the petition is filed. [Cases: Courts C:=12(2); Federal Courts C:=76.]

original jurisdiction. (17c) A court’s power to hear and decide a matter before any other court can review the matter. Cf. appellate jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts C:=117.5–158.1, 206; Federal Courts C:=3.1.]

overlapping jurisdiction. See concurrent jurisdiction.

pendent jurisdiction (pen-dent). (1942) A court’s jurisdiction to hear and determine a claim over which it would not otherwise have jurisdiction, because the claim arises from the same transaction or occurrence as another claim that is properly before the court. For example, if a plaintiff brings suit in federal court claiming that the defendant, in one transaction, violated both a federal and a state law, the federal court has jurisdiction over the federal claim (under federal-question jurisdiction) and also has jurisdiction over the state claim that is pendent to the federal claim. Pendent jurisdiction has now been codified as supplemental jurisdiction. 28 USCA § 1367. — Also termed pendent-claim jurisdiction. See supplemental jurisdiction. Cf. ancillary jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts C:=27; Equity C:=35; Federal Courts C:=14.]

pendent-party jurisdiction. (1973) A court’s jurisdiction to adjudicate a claim against a party who is not otherwise subject to the court’s jurisdiction, because the claim by or against that party arises from the same transaction or occurrence as another claim that is properly before the court. — Pendent-party jurisdiction has been a hotly debated subject, and was severely limited by the U.S. Supreme Court in Finley v. United States, 490 U.S. 545, 109 S.Ct. 2003 (1990). The concept is now codified in the supplemental-jurisdiction statute, and it applies to federal-question cases but not to diversity-jurisdiction cases. 28 USCA § 1367. Neither pendent-party jurisdiction nor supplemental jurisdiction may be used to circumvent the complete-diversity requirement in cases founded on diversity jurisdiction. See supplemental jurisdiction. [Cases: Federal Courts C:=23.] personal jurisdiction. A court’s power to bring a person into its adjudicative process; jurisdiction over a defendant’s personal rights, rather than merely over property interests. — Also termed in personam jurisdiction; jurisdiction in personam; jurisdiction of the person; jurisdiction over the person; jurisdiction ratione personae. See in personam. Cf. in rem jurisdiction; general personal jurisdiction; specific personal jurisdiction. [Cases: Admiralty C:=5; Constitutional Law C:=3963–3965; Courts C:=10; Federal Courts C:=71–97.]

plenary jurisdiction (plee-na-ree or plen-a-ree). A court’s full and absolute power over the subject matter and the parties in a case.

primary jurisdiction. The power of an agency to decide an issue in the first instance when a court, having concurrent jurisdiction with the agency, determines that it would be more pragmatic for the agency to handle the case initially. See PRIMARY-JURISDICTION DOCTRINE. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure C:=3228.1.]

“the doctrine of primary jurisdiction typically is raised, not in a proceeding before an administrative agency, but in litigation before a court. Agency and court jurisdiction to resolve disputes and issues frequently overlap. Primary jurisdiction is a concept used by courts to allocate initial decision-making responsibility between agencies and courts where such overlaps exist. . . . A holding that an agency has primary jurisdiction to resolve an issue raised in a judicial proceeding has two important consequences. First, it transfers some of the power to resolve that issue to the agency. . . . Second, if the issues referred to the agency as within its primary jurisdiction are critical to judicial resolution of the underlying dispute, the court cannot proceed with the trial of the case until the agency has resolved those issues and the agency’s decision has been either affirmed or reversed by a reviewing court.” Richard J. Pierce Jr. et al., Administrative Law Process 206, 207–08 (3rd ed. 1999).

probate jurisdiction. Jurisdiction over matters relating to wills, settlement of decedents’ estates, and (in some states) guardianship and the adoption of minors. [Cases: Courts C:=198; Federal Courts C:=9.]

prorogated jurisdiction. Civil law. Jurisdiction conferred by the express consent of all the parties on a judge who would otherwise be disqualified. Cf. tacit prorogation under prorogation.

quasi-in-rem jurisdiction (kway-sti-rem or kway-zl). (1918) Jurisdiction over a person but based on that person’s interest in property located within the court’s territory. — Also termed jurisdiction quasi in rem. See quasi in rem under IN REM. [Cases: Courts C:=16; Federal Courts C:=93.]
significant-connection jurisdiction. Family law. In a child-custody matter, jurisdiction based on (1) the best interests of the child, (2) at least one parent's (or litigant's) significant connection to the state, and (3) the presence in the state of substantial evidence about the child's present or future care, protection, training, and personal relationships. This type of jurisdiction is conferred by both the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act and the Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act. Generally, the home state will also be the state with significant connections and substantial evidence. Jurisdiction based on a significant connection or substantial evidence alone is conferred only when the child has no home state. Also termed significant-connection/substantial-evidence jurisdiction; significant-connection/substantial-evidence jurisdiction; substantial-evidence jurisdiction. See HOME STATE. [Cases: Child Custody C=735.]

spatial jurisdiction. Jurisdiction based on the physical territory that an entity's authority covers. Also termed jurisdiction loci.

specific jurisdiction. (1828) Jurisdiction that stems from the defendant's having certain minimum contacts with the forum state so that the court may hear a case whose issues arise from those minimum contacts. Cf. general jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts C=12(2.10); Federal Courts C=76.10.]

specific personal jurisdiction. Jurisdiction based on a person's minimum contacts with the forum state when the claim arises out of or is related to those contacts. See MINIMUM CONTACTS. Cf. personal jurisdiction; general personal jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts C=12(2.10); Federal Courts C=76.10.]

state jurisdiction. 1. The exercise of state-court authority. 2. A court's power to hear all matters, both civil and criminal, arising within its territorial boundaries.

status-offense jurisdiction. The power of the court to hear matters regarding noncriminal conduct committed by a juvenile. See status offense under OFFENSE (1). Cf. delinquency jurisdiction.

subject-matter jurisdiction. (1936) Jurisdiction over the nature of the case and the type of relief sought; the extent to which a court can rule on the conduct of persons or the status of things. Also termed jurisdiction of the subject matter; jurisdiction of the cause; jurisdiction over the action; jurisdiction ratione materiae. Cf. personal jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts C=4; Federal Courts C=3.1.]

summary jurisdiction. (18c) 1. A court's jurisdiction in a summary proceeding. 2. The court's authority to issue a judgment or order (such as a finding of contempt) without the necessity of a trial or other process. 3. English law. A court's power to make an order immediately, without obtaining authority or referral, as in a magistrate's power to dispose of a criminal case without referring it to the Crown Court for a formal trial or without drawing a jury.

supplemental jurisdiction. (1836) Jurisdiction over a claim that is part of the same case or controversy as another claim over which the court has original jurisdiction. Since 1990, federal district courts have had supplemental jurisdiction which includes jurisdiction over both ancillary and pendant claims. 28 USCA § 1367. See ancillary jurisdiction; pendent jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts C=27; Equity C=35; Federal Courts C=14.]

temporal jurisdiction. Jurisdiction based on the court's having authority to adjudicate a matter when the underlying event occurred. Also termed jurisdiction ratione temporis.

territorial jurisdiction. 1. Jurisdiction over cases arising in or involving persons residing within a defined territory. [Cases: Courts C=29, 171; Federal Courts C=71.] 2. Territory over which a government, one of its courts, or one of its subdivisions has jurisdiction.

transient jurisdiction (trantshant). Personal jurisdiction over a defendant who is served with process while in the forum state only temporarily (such as during travel). [Cases: Courts C=13.]

voluntary jurisdiction. 1. Jurisdiction exercised over unopposed matters. 2. Eccles. law. Jurisdiction that does not require a judicial proceeding, as with granting a license or installing a nominee to a benefice.

jurisdictional amount. See AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

jurisdictional discovery. See DISCOVERY.

jurisdictional-fact doctrine. Administrative law. The principle that if evidence is presented challenging the factual findings that triggered an agency's action, then a court will review the facts to determine whether the agency had authority to act in the first place. This doctrine is generally no longer applied. Cf. constitutional-fact doctrine. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure C=795.]

jurisdictional limits. (1800) The geographic boundaries or the constitutional or statutory limits within which a court's authority may be exercised.

jurisdiction loci. See spatial jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

jurisdictional plea. See PLEA (3).

jurisdictional statement. See JURISDICTION CLAUSE (1).

jurisdictional strike. See STRIKE.

jurisdiction clause. (1861) 1. At law, a statement in a pleading that sets forth the court's jurisdiction to act in the case. Also termed jurisdictional statement. 2. Equity practice. The part of the bill intended to show that the court has jurisdiction, usu. by an averment. that adequate relief is unavailable outside equitable channels.

jurisdiction in personam. See personal jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

jurisdiction in rem. See in rem jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

jurisdiction of the cause. See subject-matter jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

jurisdiction of the person. See personal jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

jurisdiction of the subject matter. See subject-matter jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

jurisdiction over the action. See subject-matter jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

jurisdiction over the person. See personal jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

jurisdiction quasi in rem. See quasi-in-rem jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

jurisdiction ratione materiae. See subject-matter jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

jurisdiction ratione personae. See personal jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

jurisdiction ratione temporis. See temporal jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

Juris Doctor (joor-is-dok-tar). (1895) Doctor of law — the law degree most commonly conferred by an American law school. — Abbr. J.D. — Also termed Doctor of Jurisprudence; Doctor of Law. Cf. MASTER OF LAWS; LL.B.; DOCTOR OF LAWS.

juris et de jure (joor-is et dee joor-ee). [Latin] Of law and of right

jurisperitus (joor-is-pair-tas). adj. [Latin] (Of a person) skilled or learned in law. See LEGISPERITUS.

juris positivi. See JURIS.

jurisprudence (joor-is-proo-densh-see-uh-nach-uh-ray-lee). n. (1937) 1. A person who makes a pretentious display of legal knowledge or who is overzealous about the importance of legal doctrine. 2. JURISPRUDENT.

jurisprudence (joor-is-proo-densh-see-ants), n. (17c) 1. Originally (in the 18th century), the study of the first principles of the law of nature, the civil law, and the law of nations. — Also termed jurisprudentia naturalis (joor-is-proo-densh-see-uh-nach-uh-ray-lee). 2. More modernly, the study of the general or fundamental elements of a particular legal system, as opposed to its practical and concrete details. 3. The study of legal systems in general. 4. Judicial precedents considered collectively. 5. In German literature, the whole of legal knowledge. 6. A system, body, or division of law. 7. CASELAW.

"Jurisprudence addresses the questions about law that an intelligent layperson of speculative bent — not a lawyer — might think particularly interesting. What is law? ... Where does law come from? ... Is law an autonomous discipline? ... What is the purpose of law? ... Is law a science, a humanity, or neither? ... A practicing lawyer or a judge is apt to think questions of this sort at best irrelevant to what he does, at worst naive, impractical, even childlike (how high is up?)." Richard A. Posner, The Problems of Jurisprudence 1 (1990).

analytical jurisprudence. (1876) A method of legal study that concentrates on the logical structure of law, the meanings and uses of its concepts, and the formal terms and the modes of its operation.

censorial jurisprudence. See LAW REFORM.

equity jurisprudence. (1826) 1. The legal science treating the rules, principles, and maxims that govern the decisions of a court of equity. 2. The cases and controversies that are considered proper subjects of equity. 3. The nature and form of the remedies that equity grants.

ethical jurisprudence. (1826) The branch of legal philosophy concerned with the law from the viewpoint of its ethical significance and adequacy. This area of study brings together moral and legal philosophy. — Also termed (in German) Rechtsphilosophie; (in French) philosophie du droit.

expository jurisprudence. (18c) The scholarly exposition of the contents of an actual legal system as it now exists or once existed. — Also termed systematic jurisprudence.

feminist jurisprudence. (1978) A branch of jurisprudence that examines the relationship between women and law, including the history of legal and social biases against women, the elimination of those biases in modern law, and the enhancement of women's legal rights and recognition in society.

"The first published use of the phrase 'feminist jurisprudence' occurred in 1978 when Professor Ann Scales published an article called Toward a Feminist Jurisprudence. Feminist legal theory is diverse, and anything but monolithic. Many feminists believe that it is difficult to generalize about feminist jurisprudence. It is, however, possible to understand feminist legal theory as a reaction to the jurisprudence of modern legal scholars (primarily male scholars) who tend to see law as a process for interpreting and perpetuating a universal, gender-neutral public morality. Feminist legal scholars, despite their differences, appear united in claiming that 'masculine' jurisprudence of 'all stripes' fails to acknowledge, let alone respond to, the interests, values, fears, and harms experienced by women." Gary Minda, Postmodern Legal Movements 129–30 (1995).

general jurisprudence. (18c) 1. The scholarly study of the fundamental elements of a given legal system. — Also termed jurisprudentia generalis.
The term ‘general jurisprudence’ involves the misleading suggestion that this branch of legal science is that which relates not to any single system of law, but to those conceptions and principles that are to be found in all developed legal systems, and which are therefore in this sense general. It is true that a great part of the matter with which it is concerned is common to all mature systems of law. All of these have the same essential nature and purposes, and therefore agree to a large extent in their first principles. But it is not because of universal reception that any principles pertain to the theory or philosophy of law. For this purpose such reception is neither sufficient nor necessary. Even if no system in the world save that of England recognised the legislative efficacy of judicial precedents, the theory of case-law would none the less be a fit and proper subject of general jurisprudence. Jurisprudentia generalis is not the study of legal systems in general, but the study of the general or fundamental elements of a particular legal system.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 3 n.(b) (Glaville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

Historical jurisprudence. (1823) The branch of legal philosophy concerned with the history of the first principles and conceptions of a legal system, dealing with (1) the general principles governing the origin and development of law, and (2) the origin and development of the legal system’s first principles.

“Historical jurisprudence was a passive restraining mode of thought on legal subjects by way of reaction from the active creative thought of the era of philosophy. It was a reaction, too, from the confident disregard of traditional legal institutions and conditions of time and place which characterized the French Revolution. We were not ready for it in the fore part of the last century. But we accepted it eagerly toward the end of that century when it was already moribund in Europe.” Roscoe Pound, The Formative Era of American Law 113 (1938).

Jurisprudence constante (kan-stan-tee). Civil law. The doctrine that a court should give great weight to a rule of law that is accepted and applied in a long line of cases, and should not overrule or modify its own decisions unless clear error is shown and injustice will arise from continuation of a particular rule of law.● Civil-law courts are not bound by the common-law doctrine of stare decisis. But they do recognize the doctrine of jurisprudence constante, which is similar to stare decisis, one exception being that jurisprudence constante does not command strict adherence to a legal principle applied on one occasion in the past. Cf. Stare Decisis. [Cases: Courts ○—89.]

Jurisprudence of conceptions. (1908) The extension of a maxim or definition, usu. to a logical extreme, with relentless disregard for the consequences.● The phrase appears to have been invented by Roscoe Pound. See Mechanical Jurisprudence, 8 Colum. L. Rev. 605, 608 (1908).

stealth juror. A juror, esp. one in a high-profile case, who deliberately fails to disclose a relevant bias in order to qualify as a juror and bases a decision on that bias rather than on the facts and law. • Although a stealth juror may be fined or prosecuted for perjury based on a lie or omission, the usual penalty is only removal from the jury.

tales-juror (tay-leez—or taylz-joor-ar). See TALESMAN.

juror misconduct. See MISCONDUCT.

jury, n. (15c) A group of persons selected according to law and given the power to decide questions of fact and return a verdict in the case submitted to them. • In certain contexts, jury embraces any fact-trier, including an arbitrator or a trial judge sitting in a nonjury proceeding. — Also termed empaneled jury; impan­eled jury.

advisory jury. (1892) A jury empaneled to hear a case when the parties have no right to a jury trial. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 39(c). • The judge may accept or reject the advisory jury’s verdict. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C 1773; Trial C 1639.]

blue-ribbon jury. (1940) A jury consisting of jurors who are selected for their special qualifications, such as advanced education or special training, sometimes used in a complex civil case (usu. by stipulation of the parties) and sometimes also for a grand jury (esp. one investigating governmental corruption). • A blue-ribbon jury is not allowed in criminal trials because it would violate the defendant’s right to trial by a jury of peers. An even more elite group of jurors, involving specialists in a technical field, is called a blue-blue-ribbon jury.

common jury. See petit jury.

coroner’s jury. (17c) A jury summoned by a coroner to investigate the cause of death. [Cases: Coroners C 12.]

deadlocked jury. See hung jury.

death-qualified jury. Criminal law. A jury that is fit to decide a case involving the death penalty because the jurors have no absolute ideological bias against capital punishment. Cf. life-qualified jury. [Cases: Jury C 33(2.15).]

fair and impartial jury. See impartial jury.

foreign jury. A jury obtained from a jurisdiction other than that in which the case is brought. [Cases: Jury C 7.]

good jury. See special jury.

grand jury. See GRAND JURY.

homage jury. Hist. A jury in a court baron, consisting of tenants who made homage to the lord. See COURT BARON.

hung jury. (1854) A jury that cannot reach a verdict by the required voting margin. — Also termed deadlocked jury.

impartial jury. (17c) A jury that has no opinion about the case at the start of the trial and that bases its verdict on competent legal evidence. — Also termed fair and impartial jury. [Cases: Jury C 33(2.10).]

inquest jury. (1873) A jury summoned from a particular district to appear before a sheriff, coroner, or other ministerial officer and inquire about the facts concerning a death. See INQUEST. — Also termed jury of inquest. [Cases: Coroners C 12.]

jury de mediatate linguae (dee mee-de-ee-tay-pee ling-gwwe). [Latin “jury of halfness of language”] Hist. A jury made up of half natives and half aliens, allowed when one of the parties is an alien.

jury of indictment. See GRAND JURY.

jury of inquest. See inquest jury.

jury of matrons. Hist. A jury of “discreet and lawful women” impaneled to try a question of pregnancy, as when a woman sentenced to death pleads, in stay of execution, that she is pregnant.

jury of the vicinage (vis-a-nij). 1. At common law, a jury from the county where the crime occurred. 2. A jury from the county where the court is held. See VINCINAGE. [Cases: Jury C 33(3).]

life-qualified jury. Criminal law. In a case involving a capital crime, a jury selected from a venire from which the judge has excluded anyone unable or unwilling to consider a sentence of life imprisonment, instead of the death penalty, if the defendant is found guilty. Cf. death-qualified jury. [Cases: Jury C 33(2.15).]

mixed jury. (1878) A jury composed of both men and women or persons of different races. [Cases: Jury C 8.]

petit jury (pet-ee). (15c) A jury (usu. consisting of 6 or 12 persons) summoned and empaneled in the trial of a specific case. — Also termed petty jury; trial jury; common jury; traverse jury. Cf. GRAND JURY.

police jury. See POLICE JURY.

presenting jury. See grand juro.

rogue jury. A jury that ignores the law and evidence in reaching a capricious verdict. • Rogue juries include those that base their verdicts on unrevealed, deeply held prejudices; on undue sympathy or antipathy toward a party; or on chance (as by tossing a coin). The verdicts often result in inappropriate awards, punishments, convictions, or acquittals. Unlike jury nullification, a rogue jury’s verdict is not based on a desire to achieve a just, fair, or moral outcome. Cf. JURY NULLIFICATION.

shadow jury. (1974) A group of mock jurors paid to observe a trial and report their reactions to a jury consultant hired by one of the litigants. • The shadow jurors, who are matched as closely as possible to the real jurors, provide counsel with information about the jury’s likely reactions to the trial. — Also termed phantom jury.

sheriff’s jury. Hist. A jury selected and summoned by a sheriff to hold inquests for various purposes, such as assessing damages in an action in which the defendant makes no defense or ascertaining the mental condition of an alleged lunatic.

special jury. (17c) 1. A jury chosen from a panel that is drawn specifically for that case. • Such a jury is usu. empaneled at a party’s request in an unusually important or complicated case. — Also termed struck jury. See striking a jury. [Cases: Jury 1>6, 71.] 2. At common law, a jury composed of persons above the rank of ordinary freeholders, usu. summoned to try more important questions than those heard by ordinary juries. — Also termed good jury.

struck jury. (18c) 1. A jury selected by allowing the parties to alternate in striking from a list any person whom a given party does not wish to have on the jury, until the number is reduced to the appropriate number (traditionally 12). See striking a jury. 2. See special jury. [Cases: Jury 1>6, 71.]

trial jury. See petit jury.

jury box. The enclosed part of a courtroom where the jury sits. — Also spelled jury-box.

jury challenge. See challenge.

jury chancellor. See commissioner.

jury direction. See jury instruction.

jury duty. (1829) 1. The obligation to serve on a jury. 2. Actual service on a jury. — Also termed jury service.

jury fee. See fee.

jury-fixing. (1887) The act or an instance of illegally procuring the cooperation of one or more jurors who actually influence the outcome of the trial. — Also termed fixing a jury. See jury-packing.

jury commissioner. See commissioner.

jury instruction. (usu. pl.) (1943) A direction or guideline that a judge gives a jury concerning the law of the case. — Often shortened to instruction. — Also termed jury charge; charge; jury direction; direction. [Cases: Criminal Law 1>769; Federal Civil Procedure 1>2171–2185; Trial 1>182.]

additional instruction. (1821) A jury charge, beyond the original instructions, that is usu. given in response to the jury’s question about the evidence or some point of law. — Also termed further instruction. [Cases: Criminal Law 1>863; Federal Civil Procedure 1>1975; Trial 1>312, 314(1).]

affirmative converse instruction. (1966) An instruction presenting a hypothetical that, if true, commands a verdict in favor of the defendant. • An affirmative converse instruction usu. begins with language such as “your verdict must be for the defendant if you believe . . . .” [Cases: Trial 1>203(3).]

affirmative instruction. (1835) An instruction that removes an issue from the jury’s consideration, such as an instruction that whatever the evidence, the defendant cannot be convicted under the indictment count to which the charge is directed. — Also termed affirmative charge. [Cases: Criminal Law 1>754; Trial 1>194, 234(4), 253.]

argumentative instruction. (1888) An instruction that assumes facts not in evidence, that singles out or unduly emphasizes a particular issue, theory, or defense, or that otherwise invades the jury’s province regarding the weight, probative value, or sufficiency of the evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law 1>807; Federal Civil Procedure 1>2173.1; Trial 1>240.]

cautionary instruction. (1881) 1. A judge’s instruction to the jurors to disregard certain evidence or consider it for specific purposes only. [Cases: Criminal Law 1>673, 783, 783.5; Federal Civil Procedure 1>2173; Trial 1>133.6(2), 207, 208.] 2. A judge’s instruction for the jury not to be influenced by outside factors and not to talk to anyone about the case while the trial is in progress. [Cases: Criminal Law 1>768, 852; Federal Civil Procedure 1>2173; Trial 1>201, 217.] conscious-avoidance instruction. See willful-blindness instruction. curative instruction. (1890) A judge’s instruction that is intended to correct an erroneous instruction. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 1>2184; Trial 1>296.]

disparaging instruction. A jury charge that discredits or defames a party to a lawsuit.

formula instruction. (1927) A jury charge derived from a standardized statement of the law on which the jury must base its verdict.

further instruction. See additional instruction.

general instruction. Any jury instruction that does not present a question or issue to be answered.

mandatory instruction. (1895) An instruction requiring a jury to find for one party and against the other if the jury determines that, based on a preponderance of the evidence, a given set of facts exists. — Also termed binding instruction. [Cases: Trial 1>234(3, 4), 253.]

model jury instruction. (1964) A form jury charge usu. approved by a state bar association or similar group regarding matters arising in a typical case. • Courts usu. accept model jury instructions as authoritative. — Also termed pattern jury instruction; pattern jury charge; model jury charge. [Cases: Criminal Law 1>865(1); Federal Civil Procedure 1>2173.1; Trial 1>228(1).]

ostrich instruction. (1966) Criminal procedure. Slang. An instruction stating that a defendant who deliberately avoided acquiring actual knowledge can be found to have acted knowingly. Cf. Jewell instruction. [Cases: Criminal Law 1>772(5).] jury list

A list of persons who may be summoned to serve as jurors. [Cases: Jury C=>60.]

juryman.

A member of a jury. - Also termed juror.

jury nullification. (1982) A jury's knowing and deliberate rejection of the evidence or refusal to apply the law either because the jury wants to send a message about some social issue that is larger than the case itself or because the result dictated by law is contrary to the jury's sense of justice, morality, or fairness. Cf. conscience-avoidance instruction. [Cases: Criminal Law C=>772(5).]

jury sequestration. See SEQUESTRATION (8).

jury service. See JURY DUTY.

jury shuffle. Texas law. A process for rearranging a venire whereby the cards with the veniremembers' names on them are shuffled so that the veniremembers will be seated in a different order. • The prosecution and the defense may each request a jury shuffle once before voir dire begins. No reason for the request need be given. After voir dire begins, neither party may request a shuffle. [Cases: Jury C=>64.]

jury summation. See CLOSING ARGUMENT.

jury-tampering. See EMBRACERY.

jury trial. See TRIAL.

jury wheel. (1873) A physical device or electronic system used for storing and randomly selecting names of potential jurors. [Cases: Jury C=>65.]

jurywoman. Archaic. A female juror; esp., a member of a jury of matrons. See jury of matrons under JURY.

juries. (1807) An instruction on some particular point or question involved in the case, usu. in response to counsel's request for such an instruction. - Also termed special charge.

standard instruction. (1914) A jury instruction that has been regularly used in a given jurisdiction.

willful-blindness instruction. An instruction that an otherwise culpable defendant may be held accountable for a crime if the defendant deliberately avoided finding out about the crime. - Also termed conscious-avoidance instruction. [Cases: Criminal Law C=>731; Trial C=>128, 304.]

jury of indictment. See grand jury.

jury-packing. (1887) The act or an instance of contriving to have a jury composed of persons who are predisposed toward one side or the other. — Also termed packing a jury. Cf. EMBRACERY; JURY-FIXING.

jury panel. See VENIRE (1).

jury pardon. (1974) A rule that permits a jury to convict a defendant of a lesser offense than the offense charged if sufficient evidence exists to convict the defendant of either offense.

jury pool. See VENIRE (1).

jury process. (18C) 1. The procedure by which jurors are summoned and their attendance is enforced. [Cases: Jury C=>67.] 2. The papers served on or mailed to potential jurors to compel their attendance.

jury question. (18C) 1. An issue of fact that a jury decides. See question of fact. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=>2141.] 2. A special question that a court may ask a jury that will deliver a special verdict. See special interrogatory under INTERROGATORY. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=>2231; Trial C=>350.]
duty and valid only against that person; an inchoate or incomplete right to a thing. Cf. JUS IN RE.

jus aedilium (jas ee-dil-ee-am). [Latin “law of the aediles”] Roman law. The body of law developed through the edicts of aediles. — Also termed jus aedilicium (jas ee-di-lish-ee-am). See AEDILE; JUS HONORARIUM.

Jus Aelianum (jas ee-lee-ay-nam). [Latin] Roman law. A manual of laws drawn up in the second century B.C. by the consul Sextus Aelianus, consisting of three parts: (1) the laws of the Twelve Tables; (2) a commentary on them; and (3) the forms of procedure. See TWELVE TABLES.

jus aequum (jas ee-kwam). [Latin “law that is equal or fair”] Roman law. Law characterized by equity, flexibility, and adaptation to the circumstances of a particular case. Cf. JUS STRICUTUM.

jus aesneciae (jas ee-sh-ee-ee-ee). [Latin] Hist. The right of primogeniture. — Also spelled aesneciae.

jus agendi (jas a-jen-di). [Latin] Scots law. One’s power to take action to pursue one’s rights.

jus albanagii (jas al-ba-nay-jeel-ee). [Law Latin “confiscating the goods of aliens”] See DROIT D’ABEAINE.

jus albinatus (jas al-bi-nay-tos). [Law Latin “right of alien confiscation”] See DROIT D’ABEAINE.

jus angariae (jas ang-gair-ee-ee-ee). [Latin “right of angary”] See ANGARY.

jus antiquum (jas an-ti-kwam). [Latin] Roman law. The old law. — Also termed JUS VETUS. Cf. JUS NOVUM.

“In the later Empire (which dates from the fourth century) there were two groups of sources of law: first, the ‘jus vetus’, or ‘Jus’ simply, i.e. the old traditional law, the development of which was completed in the classical period of Roman jurisprudence (in the course of the second and the beginning of the third century); secondly, the ‘leges’ or ‘Jus novum’, i.e. the later law which sprang from imperial legislation. These two classes of law, ‘Jus’ and ‘Leges’, mutually supplementing each other, constituted the whole body of law as it existed at the time, and, taken together, represented the result of the entire development of Roman law from the earliest times down to . . . the epoch of the later Empire.”— Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law (1907).

jus apparentiae (jas ap-a-ren-shhee-ee). [Law Latin] Scots law. The right of apparentness. • An heir who was open to succession but not fully vested in title had the right of apparentness, a right that allowed the heir to take certain actions on behalf of the estate, such as defending the ancestor’s title.

jus aquaeductus (jas ak-wa-dak-tas). [Latin] Roman & civil law. A servitude that gives a landowner the right to conduct water from another’s land through pipes or channels.

jus aquaehaustus (jas ak-see-haws-tas). [Latin] Roman law. See AQUAEHAUSTUS.

jus aucupandi (jas awk-yu-pan-di). [Latin] Scots law. The right of catching birds; the right of fowling.

jus banci (jas ban-st). [Law Latin “right of bench”] Hist. The right or privilege of having an elevated and separate seat of judgment, formerly allowed only to the king’s judges, who administered what from then on called “high justice.”

jus bell(1) (jas bel-1). [Latin “law of war”] The law of nations as applied during wartime, defining in particular the rights and duties of the belligerent powers and of neutral nations.

jus capiendi (yas kap-ee-en-di). [Latin “the right to take or receive”] Roman law. The right of taking property under a will.

jus civile (jas si-vi-lee). [Latin] Roman law. The traditional law of the city of Rome, beginning with the Twelve Tables and developed by juristic interpretation.

• It covered areas of law restricted to Roman citizens, such as the formalities of making a will. Over time, the jus civile was modified by, for example, the JUS HONORARIUM (which modified the requisites for a valid will) and the JUS SENTIUM (which modified the stipulation). The original jus civile was eventually absorbed into a general Roman law. See CIVIL LAW (1); JUS QUIRITIUM.

jus civitatis (jas si-vi-tay-tas). [Latin] Roman law. The right of citizenship; the right of a Roman citizen.

jus cloacae (jas clo-ay-see). [Latin “law of a sewer”] Civil law. An easement consisting in the right of having a sewer or conducting surface water over or through the land of one’s neighbor.

jus cognens (jas koh-nen). [Latin “compelling law”]

1. Int’l law. A mandatory or peremptory norm of general international law accepted and recognized by the international community as a norm from which no derogation is permitted. • A peremptory norm can be modified only by a later norm that has the same character. Cf. JUS DISPOSITIVUM. [Cases: International Law (1).]

2. Civil law. A mandatory rule of law that is not subject to the disposition of the parties, such as an absolute limitation on the legal capacity of minors below a certain age. — Also termed (in sense 2) peremptory norm.

jus commercii (jas ka-mar-shhee-ee). [Latin “right of commerce”] Roman & civil law. The right to make contracts, acquire and transfer property, and conduct business transactions.

jus commune (jas ka-moo-nee). [1. Roman & civil law. The common or public law or right, as opposed to a law or right established for special purposes. Cf. JUS SINGULARE. 2. The common law of England. See COMMON LAW (3).] 3. The shared law of much of continental Western Europe during the Middle Ages, consisting of a blend of canon law and rediscovered Roman law.

“[Jus commune is a phrase well known to the canonists. They use it to distinguish the general and ordinary law of the universal church both from any rules peculiar to this or that provincial church, and from those papal privilegia which are always giving rise to ecclesiastical litigation.”

jus compascuum (jās kom-pa-skūm), n. [Latin “the right to feed together”] Hist. The right of common pasture. Cf. common. (1)

jus dare (jās dār-ē), vb. [Latin “to give” or “bequeath”] Roman law. A creditor’s right to recover a debt through legal process. Cf. JUS EXIGENDI.

“[T]he term is frequently used in contradistinction to a mere spes, or defeasible expectancy. This jus dare is often of great importance: for although a person may not be enabled to be put in immediate possession of a subject, yet the obligation to deliver it to him at some future time creates in him a vested right, which forms part of his estate.” William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 620 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

jus deliberandi (jās de-lib-ā-ran-di), n. [Latin “right of deliberating”] Roman & civil law. A right granted to an heir to take time to consider whether to accept or reject an inheritance. Cf. tempus deliberandi under TEmPUS.

jus de non appellando (jās de non ap-ō-lan-dō), n. Latin. Hist. The supreme judicial power. Cf. JUSTICE.

jus devolutum (jās de-vō-lō-tam), n. [Law Latin] “a devolved right” Scots law. The right of the presbytery to appoint a minister to a vacant church if a patron failed to present a fit minister within six months of the vacancy. Cf. TANQUAM JURE DEVOLUTO.

jus dicere (jās di-śar-ē), vb. [Latin] Hist. To declare or decide the law. • This is the function and prerogative of the judiciary. Cf. JUS DARE.

jus disponendi (jās dis-pō-nen-di), n. [Latin “right of disposing”] The right to dispose of property; the power of alienation.

jus dispositivum (jās dis-poz-ā-tiv-ūm), n. [Latin “law subject to the disposition of the parties”] Int’l law. A norm that is created by the consent of participating nations, as by an international agreement, and is binding only on the nations that agree to be bound by it. Cf. JUS COGENS (1).

jus distraendii (jās dis-tra-hen-di), n. [Latin “right of distraining”] The right to sell pledged goods upon default.

jus dividendi (jās div-i-den-di), n. [Latin “right of dividing”] The right to dispose of real property by will.

jus divorcinum (jās di-vir-ī-nam), n. 1. See DIVINE LAW. 2. See NATURAL LAW.

jus domini proximum (jās dom-ē-nō-rah-prok-sā-nam). Law Latin. Scots law. A right nearly equal to that of absolute property; a feuholder’s right. See FEU.

“Jus domini proximum . . . . Such a right is enjoyed by one who holds lands in feu, for he is entitled to sell the subjects, or alter or use them in any way he thinks proper. And yet the property is not absolutely his — that is, he does not hold the property so absolutely as did the superior from whom he acquired, because the land is burdened with the feu-duty payable to the superior, and to this extent the absolute right of property is restricted. Similar to the right of a feuar under our law, was that of the emphyteuta under the civil law.” John Trayner, Trayner’s Latin Maxims 304–05 (4th ed. 1894).

jus ecclesiasticum (jās e-klee-zē-um) [Latin] See ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

jus edicendi (jās ed-i-sen-di or ee-di-i), n. [Latin “right of decreeing”] Roman law. The right (esp. of the praetors) to issue edicts. See JUS PRAETORIUM.

jus et norma loquendi (jās et nor-mah kwon-dī), n. Latin “the law and rule of speech” Idiomatic language, including speech and pronunciation, as established by the custom of a particular nation.

“For example, where a testator directs his testamentary trustees to pay a certain legacy to a legatee until after the six months’ expiry of the six months’ time, he acquires the jus exigendi when the debt has become payable.” John Trayner, Trayner’s Latin Maxims 305 (4th ed. 1894).

jus ex non scripto (jās eks non skrip-tō), n. See unwritten law under LAW.

jus gentium (joh-shee-en-m), [Latin “law of nations”] 1. INTERNATIONAL LAW. 2. Roman law. The body of law, taken to be common to all civilized peoples, and applied in dealing with the relations between Roman citizens and foreigners. — Also termed jus inter gentes.

The early Roman law (the jus civile) applied only to Roman citizens. It was formalistic and hard and reflected the status of a small, unsophisticated society rooted in the soil. It was totally unable to provide a relevant background for an expanding, developing nation. This need was served by the creation and progressive augmentation of the jus gentium. This provided simplified rules to govern the relations between foreigners, and between foreigners and citizens. ... The progressive rules of the jus gentium gradually overrode the narrow jus civile until the latter system ceased to exist. Thus, the jus gentium became the common law of the Roman Empire and was deemed to be of universal application. — Malcolm N. Shaw, International Law 15 (4th ed. 1997).

jus gentium privatum (joh-sjen-shee-en-m pri-vay-tam). See private international law under INTERNATIONAL LAW.

EDFFORD LAW; LYNCH LAW.

justice in personam. See personal justice.

justice in rem. See social justice.

natural justice. Justice as defined in a moral, as opposed to a legal, sense. — Also termed justitia naturalis. Cf. NATURAL LAW.

"Although the judges have frequently asserted that a foreign judgment which contravenes the principles of natural justice cannot be enforced in England, it is extremely difficult to fix with precision the exact cases in which the contravention is sufficiently serious to justify a refusal of enforcement. Shadwell V. C. once said that 'whenever it is manifest that justice has been disregarded, the court is bound to treat the decision as a matter of no value and no substance.' [Price v. Dewhurst, 8 Sim 279, 302 (1837)] But this goes too far . . . The expression 'contrary to natural justice' has, however, figured so prominently in judicial statements that it is essential to fix, if possible, its exact scope. The only statement that can be made with any approach to accuracy is that in the present context, the expression is confined to something glaringly defective in the procedural rules of the foreign law. ... in other words, what the courts are vigilant to watch is that the defendant has not been deprived of an opportunity to present his side of the case.' G.C. Cheshire, Private International Law 675 (6th ed. 1961).

personal justice. (16c) Justice between parties to a dispute, regardless of any larger principles that might be involved. — Also termed justice in personam; popular justice; social justice.

popular justice. (17c) Demotic justice, which is usu. considered less than fully fair and proper even though it satisfies prevailing public opinion in a particular case. Cf. social justice.

"Nothing is more treacherous than popular justice in many of its manifestations, subject as it is to passion, to fallacy, and to the inability to grasp general notions or to distinguish the essential from the inessential." Carleton K. Allen, Law in the Making 387 (7th ed. 1964).

positive justice. (17c) Justice as it is conceived, recognized, and incompletely expressed by the civil law or some other form of human law. Cf. positive law.

preventive justice. Justice intended to protect against probable future misbehavior. • Specific types of preventive justice include appointing a receiver or administrator, issuing a restraining order or injunction, and binding over to keep the peace.

social justice. (1902) 1. Justice that conforms to a moral principle, such as that all people are equal. 2. One or more equitable resolutions sought on behalf of individuals and communities who are disenfranchised, underrepresented, or otherwise excluded from meaningful participation in legal, economic, cultural, and social structures, with the ultimate goal of removing barriers to participation and effecting social change. — Also termed justice in rem. Cf. personal justice; cause lawyering.

substantial justice. (17c) Justice fairly administered according to rules of substantive law, regardless of any procedural errors not affecting the litigant's substantive rights; a fair trial on the merits.

associate justice. (18c) An appellate-court justice other than the chief justice.

justification, n. (14c) 1. A lawful or sufficient reason for one's acts or omissions; any fact that prevents an act from being wrongful. 2. A showing, in court, of a sufficient reason why a defendant acted in a way that, in the absence of the reason, would constitute the offense with which the defendant is charged. • Under the Model Penal Code, the defendant must show that the harm or evil that resulted from taking the action was less than the harm or evil that the law creating the offense charged was seeking to prevent. Model Penal Code § 3.02. — Also termed justification defense; necessity defense. — See lesser evils defense under DEFENSE (1). [Cases: Criminal Law C= 38.] 3. A surety's proof of having enough money or credit to provide security for the party for whom it is required. — justify, vb. — justifiable, adj.

"A little bit of history: the term 'justification' was formerly used for cases where the aim of the law was not frustrated, while 'excuse' was used for cases where it was not thought proper to punish. Killing a dangerous criminal who had tried to avoid arrest was justified since the law if one may personify wished this to happen, whereas killing in self-defense was merely excused. The distinction was important because justification was a defence to the criminal charge while an excuse was not, being merely the occasion for a royal pardon. By the end of the middle ages (it is difficult to assign a fixed date) even excuses were recognised by the courts, since when there has been no reason to distinguish between justification and excuse." Glanville Williams, Textbook of Criminal Law 39 (1978).

defensive-force justification. A justification defense available when an aggressor has threatened harm to the particular interest that is the subject of the defense — usu. to the actor (self-defense), to other persons (defense of others), or to property (defense of property). [Cases: Assault and Battery C= 67, 68; Homicide C= 757, 758, 766–809.]

imperfect justification. (1853) A reason or cause that is insufficient to completely justify a defendant's behavior but that can be used to mitigate criminal punishment. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment C= 72.]

judicial-authority justification. A justification defense available when an actor has engaged in conduct constituting an offense in order to comply with a court order. [Cases: Assault and Battery C= 64; Homicide C= 756.]

public-authority justification. A justification defense available when an actor has been specifically authorized to engage in the conduct constituting an offense in order to protect or further a public interest. [Cases: Assault and Battery C= 64; Homicide C= 752–756.]

justification defense. Criminal & tort law. A defense that arises when the defendant has acted in a way that the law does not seek to prevent. • Traditionally, the following defenses were justifications: consent, self-defense, defense of others, defense of property, necessity (choice of evils), the use of force to make an arrest, and the use of force by public authority. — Sometimes shortened to justification. Cf. EXCUSE (2). [Cases: Action C= 12; Criminal Law C= 38; Torts C= 121.]

Justinian Code (jas-tin-ee-an). Roman law. A collection of imperial constitutions drawn up by a commission of ten persons appointed by the Roman emperor Justinian, and published in A.D. 529. Ten jurists, headed by Tribonian, carried out the project beginning in February A.D. 528 and ending in April 529. It replaced all prior imperial law, but was in force only until A.D. 534, when it was supplanted by a revision, the Codex Repetitae Praelectionis. The precise contents of the first work are unknown. But the second work, containing the 12 books of the revised code, includes the imperial constitutions of the Gregorian, Hermogenian, and Theodosian Codes, together with later legislation, revised and harmonized into one systematic whole. It deals with ecclesiastical law, criminal law, administrative law, and private law. In modern writings, the A.D. 534 version is the work referred to as the Justinian Code. — Also termed Justinianean Code (jø-stin-ee-an); Code of Justinian; Codex Justinianus (koh-deks-jøs-ťin-ee-ay-nas); Codex Vetus ( OLD CODE); Codex Justinianus Repetitae Praelectionis.

"By the time when the Digest and institutes had been completed it was obvious that the Codex, published little more than four years earlier, was incomplete, since in the interval Justinian . . . had promulgated other new constitutions. Tribonian, therefore, was appointed to revise the Codex, so as to bring it fully up to date, and at the end of the year A.D. 534 this new Code, known as the Codex Repetitae Praelectionis, was promulgated, and is the only Code which survives to the present day. Justinian seem to have laboured under the erroneous impression that the system he had framed would be adequate for all time. But as there is nothing static about law, further legislative enactments, termed Novellae Constitutiones, were issued during his reign . . . In modern times Justinian's various compilations came to be called collectively the Corpus Juris Civilis; the Corpus being regarded as a single work, made up of the institutes, the Digest, the Codex Repetitae Praelectionis, and the Novels. R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 44 (C.M. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

Justinianist (jø-stin-ee-a-nist), n. 1. One who is knowledgeable about the Institutes of Justinian. 2. One who has been trained in civil law.

Justinian's Institutes. See INSTITUTE.

keelhaul (keel-hawl), vb. (17c) 1. Hist. To drag (a person) through the water under the bottom of a ship as punishment or torture. 2. To rebuke or reprimand harshly.

Keeling Schedule. English law. A device that shows how an existing statute will read if a proposed amendment is adopted. • A Keeling Schedule is usu. included as an appendix to the proposed amendment. The schedule is named for E.H. Keeling, a member of Parliament who began promoting the use of schedules in 1938 as a way to avoid amending legislation by reference. It is rarely used today.

keeper. (15c) One who has the care, custody, or management of something and who usu. is legally responsible for it  .

Keeper of the Briefs. See custos breviarium.

Keeper of the Broad Seal. See keeper of the great seal.

Keeper of the Great Seal. In England and Scotland, an officer who has custody of the Great Seal and who authenticates state documents of the highest importance. • In England, the duties of the Keeper of the Great Seal are now discharged by the Lord Chancellor. — Also termed Lord Keeper of the Great Seal; Lord Keeper; Keeper of the Broad Seal; Custos Sigilli.

Keeper of the Hanaper. Hist. The head of the receiving and accounting department in Chancery. • The Hanaper received fees collected on charters and letters granted under the Great Seal and fines for Chancery writs, paid Chancery staff wages, purchased office supplies, and accounted for the Chancery’s revenues and expenses.

key encryption. A software-cryptography system that generates and employs a secure key pair, one public key and one private key, to verify a digital signature and decipher a secure, coded document. • The public key is known to all possible receivers of a message. The private key is known only to the message's sender. Key encryption transforms the message's characters into an indecipherable "hash." A person who has the signer's public key can decipher the message and detect whether it has been altered and whether it was transmitted using the sender's private key. It does not necessarily identify the sender; identity is verified using a digital certificate. — Also termed public-key encryption. — Abbr. PKE. See digital certificate; hash.

key-executive insurance. See key-employee insurance under insurance.

key man. See key person.

key-man insurance. See key-employee life insurance under life insurance.

key money. (1948) 1. Payment (as rent or security) required from a new tenant in exchange for a key to the leased property. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant 88(2).] 2. Payment made (usu. secretly) by a prospective tenant to a landlord or current tenant to increase the chance of obtaining a lease in an area where there is a housing shortage. ● Key money in the first sense is a legal transaction; key money in the second sense is usu. an illegal bribe that violates housing laws.

key-number system. (1909) A legal-research indexing system developed by West Publishing Company (now the West Group) to catalogue American caselaw with headnotes. ● In this system, a number designates a point of law, allowing a researcher to find all reported cases addressing a particular point by referring to its number.

kidnap, vb. (17c) To seize and take away (a person) by force or fraud, often with a demand for ransom.

kidnapping. (17c) 1. At common law, the crime of forcibly abducting a person from his or her own country and sending the person to another. ● This offense amounted to false imprisonment aggravated by moving the victim to another country. 2. The crime of seizing and taking away a person by force or fraud. — Also termed simple kidnapping; (loosely) abduction; (archaically) manstealing. See abduction. [Cases: Kidnapping C–14.] "At early common law, kidnapping required a forcible asportation of the victim to another country. Under modern statutes, the asportation need not be this extensive." Arnold H. Loewy, Criminal Law in a Nutshell 64 (2d ed. 1987).

aggravated kidnapping. (1943) Kidnapping accompanied by some aggravating factor (such as a demand for ransom or injury of the victim).

child-kidnapping. (1978) The kidnapping of a minor, often without the element of force or fraud (as when someone walks off with another's baby). — Also termed child-stealing; baby-snatching; childnapping.

kidnapping by cesarean. The kidnapping of a newborn baby by a person who causes the unlawful and forcible delivery of the baby by cesarean section without the mother's consent. ● The kidnapper is usu. a woman of childbearing age who has lost a baby or is unable to bear one. — Also termed newborn kidnapping by cesarean section.

kidnapping for ransom. (1909) The offense of unlawfully seizing a person and then confining the person, usu. in a secret place, while attempting to extort ransom. ● This grave crime is sometimes made a capital offense. In addition to the abductor, a person who acts as a go-between to collect the ransom is generally considered guilty of the crime. [Cases: Kidnapping C–19.]

newborn-kidnapping by cesarean section. See kidnapping by cesarean.

simple kidnapping. (1943) Kidnapping not accompanied by an aggravating factor.

kidnapping by cesarean. See kidnapping.

kill, vb. (14c) To end life; to cause physical death. ● The word is also used figuratively in putting an end to something <opponents were able to kill the proposed amendment>.

kin, n. (bef. 12c) 1. One's relatives; family. — Also termed kindred. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C–20–43; Wills C–508.] 2. A relative by blood, marriage, or adoption, though usu. by blood only; a kinsman or kinswoman. See next of kin.

kinbote. See manbote under bote (2).

kind arbitrage. See arbitrage. kindlie (kind-lee). Scots law. A tenant's right to a lease's renewal.

kindred. 1. See KIN. 2. See KINSHIP.

king. 1. A man who possesses, in his own right, the sovereignty and royal power in a monarchy. Cf. QUEEN (1). 2. (cap.) English law. The British government; the Crown. See CROWN.

"In modern times, it has become usual to speak of the Crown rather than of the King, when we refer to the King in his public capacity as a body politic. We speak of the property of the Crown, when we mean the property which the King holds in right of his Crown. So we speak of the debts due by the Crown, of legal proceedings by and against the Crown, and so on. The usage is one of great convenience, because it avoids a difficulty which is inherent in all speech and thought concerning corporations sole, the difficulty, namely, of distinguishing adequately between the body politic and the human being by whom it is represented and whose name it bears." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 341-42 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

King's advocate. See LORD ADVOCATE.

King's Bench. Historically, the highest common-law court in England, presided over by the reigning monarch. • When a queen begins to reign, the name automatically changes to Queen's Bench. In 1873, during Queen Victoria's reign, the court's jurisdiction was transferred to the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice. — Abrk. K.B. — Also termed Court of King's Bench; Coram Rege Court. Cf. QUEEN'S BENCH; QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

"The court of King's Bench is the highest court of ordinary justice in criminal cases within the realm, and paramount to the authority of justices of gaol delivery, and commissions of oyer and terminer. It has jurisdiction over all criminal causes, from high treason down to the most trivial misdemeanor or breach of the peace." Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 136 (2d ed. 1826).

King's Chambers. In the United Kingdom, waters lying within an imaginary line drawn from headland to headland around the coast of Great Britain.

King's Counsel. In the United Kingdom, Canada, and territories that have retained the rank, an elite, senior-level barrister or advocate. • Originally, a King's Counsel was appointed to serve as counsel to the reigning monarch. — Also termed senior counsel. — Abrk. K.C. Cf. QUEEN'S COUNSEL.

King's Court. See CURIA REGIS.

King's evidence. See Queen's evidence under EVIDENCE.

King's Great Sessions in Wales. See COURT OF GREAT SESSIONS IN WALES.

King's peace. Hist. A royal subject's right to be protected from crime (to "have peace") in certain areas subject to the king's immediate control, such as the king's palace or highway. • A breach of the peace in one of these areas subjected the offender to punishment in the King's Court. Over time, the area subject to the King's peace grew, which in turn increased the jurisdiction of the royal courts. — Also written King's Peace. Cf. AGAINST THE PEACE AND DIGNITY OF THE STATE.

"A breach of the King's Peace was at one time the most comprehensive of all offences against the Crown, it indeed included, and still includes, all the more serious crimes. At one time, in fact, every indictment charged the accused with an offence "against the peace of our Sovereign Lord the King"; and, though this form is no longer employed, that is mainly because the imperative duty of not disturbing the King's Peace has by now evolved into an elaborate system of Criminal Law." Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 134 (P.B. Fairest ed., 6th ed. 1967).

King's proctor. See QUEEN'S PROCTOR.

King's silver. Hist. Money paid in the Court of Common Pleas for a license to levy a feudal fine; an amount due on granting a congé d'accorder in levying a fine of lands. • It amounted to three-twentieths of the supposed annual value of the land, or ten shillings for every five marks of land. — Also termed post-fine. See congé d'accorder; fine (1).

kinship. Relationship by blood, marriage, or adoption. — Also termed kindred.

kinsman. See RELATIVE.

kintal. See QUINTAL.

kissing the Book. Hist. The practice of touching one's lips to a copy of the Bible (esp. the New Testament) after taking an oath in court. • This practice — formerly used in England — was replaced by the practice of placing one's hand on the Bible while swearing.

kitchen cabinet. See CABINET.

kiting. 1. CHECK-KITING. 2. Slang. Commercial law. Raising money on credit, often by using accommodation paper.

kleptomania (klep-ta-may-nee-a), n. (1830) A compulsive urge to steal, esp. without economic motive. — kleptomaniac, n. & adj.

knights. (bef. 12c) 1. Hist. In the Middle Ages, a person of noble birth who, having been trained in arms and chivalry, was bound to follow an earl, baron, or other superior lord into battle. 2. In modern Britain, a man upon whom the monarch has bestowed an honorary dignity (knighthood) as a reward for personal merit of some kind. • The status of knighthood no longer relates to birth or possessions and does not involve military service.

knight bachelor. See BACHELOR (3).

knight-service. Hist. A type of lay tenure in which a knight held land of another person or the Crown in exchange for a pledge of military service. — Also termed knight's service; (Scots law) ward holding. Cf. BASE SERVICE; SOCAGE; VILLEINAGE.
knockoff, knock off, knock-for-knock agreement. (1949) An arrangement between insurers whereby each will pay the claim of its insured without claiming against the other party's insurance.

knock in, vb. To rap on the courtroom door to announce the entry of (one or more judges) <the law clerk, acting as bailiff, knocked in the judges.>

knock off, vb. (1879) 1. To make an unauthorized copy of (another's product), usu. for sale at a substantially lower price than the original <the infringer knocked off popular dress designs>. 2. Slang. To murder <the gang leader was knocked off by one of his lieutenants>. 3. Slang. To rob or burglarize <the thieves knocked off the jewelry store in broad daylight.>

knockoff, n. (1966) Intellectual property. An unauthorized counterfeit and usu. inferior copy of another's product, esp. one protected by patent, trademark, trade dress, or copyright, usu. passed off at a substantially lower price than the original.

know all men by these presents. (16c) Take note. _

knowing. adj. (14c) 1. Having or showing awareness or understanding; well-informed . 2. Deliberate; conscious . — knowingly, adv.

knowing consent. See informed consent under consent (1).

knowledge. (14c) 1. An awareness or understanding of a fact or circumstance; a state of mind in which a person has no substantial doubt about the existence of a fact. Cf. intent (1); notice (1), (2); scienter.

"It is necessary . . . to distinguish between producing a result intentionally and producing it knowingly. Intention and knowledge commonly go together, for he who intends a result usually knows that it will follow, and he who knows the consequences of his act usually intends them. But there may be intention without knowledge, the consequence being desired but not foreknown as certain or even probable. Conversely, there may be knowledge without intention, the consequence being foreknown as the inevitable concomitant of that which is desired, but being itself an object of repugnance rather than desire, and therefore not intended. When King David ordered Uriah the Hittite to be set in the forefront of the hottest battle, he intended the death of Uriah only, yet he knew for a certainty that many others of his men would fall at the same time and place." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 380–81 (Glavine & Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"'Knowingly' or 'knowledge' has a broad sweep when used in connection with the element of a crime, and an untrue representation has been 'knowingly' made if by one who knows it is untrue, believes it is untrue or is quite aware that he has not the slightest notion whether it is true or not." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 379 (3d ed. 1982).

actual knowledge. (16c) 1. Direct and clear knowledge, as distinguished from constructive knowledge <the employer, having witnessed the accident, had actual knowledge of the worker's injury>. — Also termed express actual knowledge. 2. Knowledge of information that would lead a reasonable person to inquire further <under the discovery rule, the limitations period begins to run once the plaintiff has actual knowledge of the injury>. — Also termed (in sense 2) implied actual knowledge.

"The third issue in section 523(a)(3) is the meaning of 'notice or actual knowledge.' Under the Uniform Commercial Code knowledge means actually knowing something; notice means having received information from which one could infer the existence of the relevant fact. What the adjective 'actual' adds to the idea of 'knowledge' is unclear." David G. Epstein et al., Bankruptcy § 7-27, at 516 (1993).

common knowledge. See common knowledge.

express actual knowledge. See actual knowledge (1). firsthand knowledge. See personal knowledge.

implied actual knowledge. See actual knowledge (2).

imputed knowledge. (18c) Knowledge attributed to a given person, esp. because of the person's legal responsibility for another's conduct <the principal's imputed knowledge of its agent's dealings>.

personal knowledge. (17c) Knowledge gained through firsthand observation or experience, as distinguished from a belief based on what someone else has said. • Rule 602 of the Federal Rules of Evidence requires lay witnesses to have personal knowledge of the matters they testify about. An affidavit must also be based on personal knowledge, unless the affiant makes it clear that a statement relies on "information and belief." — Also termed firsthand knowledge. [Cases: Witnesses C≈ 37(2).

reckless knowledge. (1911) A person's awareness that a prohibited circumstance may exist, regardless of which the person accepts the risk and goes on to act.

scientific knowledge. (17c) Evidence. Knowledge that is grounded on scientific methods that have been supported by adequate validation. • Four primary factors are used to determine whether evidence amounts to scientific knowledge: (1) whether it has been tested; (2) whether it has been subjected to peer review and publication; (3) the known or potential rate of error; and (4) the degree of acceptance within the scientific community. See DAUBERT TEST; SCIENTIFIC METHOD. [Cases: Criminal Law C≈-486; Evidence C≈ 555.]

superior knowledge. (17c) Knowledge greater than that of another person, esp. so as to adversely affect that person <in its fraud claim, the subcontractor alleged that the general contractor had superior knowledge of the equipment shortage>. [Cases: Fraud C≈ 7, 17, 23; Negligence C≈ 1088, 1286(2).

2. Archaic. CARNAL KNOWLEDGE.

knowledge-of-falsity exclusion. See EXCLUSION (3).

known creditor. See CREDITOR.

known heir. See HEIR.

known-loss doctrine. Insurance. A principle denying insurance coverage when the insured knows before the policy takes effect that a specific loss has already happened or is substantially certain to happen. — Also termed known-risk doctrine. [Cases: Insurance C≈ 2101, 2261.]

1. A measure of the money supply, including M3 items plus banker’s acceptances, T-bills, and similar long-term investments. See M3.

label, n. (17c) 1. Trademarks. An informative display of written or graphic matter, such as a logo, title, or similar marking, affixed to goods or services to identify their source. • A label may be put on the packaging or container of a manufactured product, or on the packaging or surface of a natural substance. [Cases: Trademarks \(\Leftrightarrow 1057\)]. 2. Any writing (such as a codicil) attached to a larger writing. 3. A narrow slip of paper or parchment attached to a deed or writ in order to hold a seal.

label-and-significant-characteristics test. Securities. The rule that an instrument will be governed by the securities laws if it is labeled a stock and has the significant characteristics typically associated with shares of stock.

labeling. Under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, any label or other written, printed, or graphic matter that is on a product or its container, or that accompanies the product. • To come within the Act, the labeling does not need to accompany the product. It may be sent before or after delivery of the product, as long as delivery of the product and the written material are part of the same distribution program. [Cases: Food \(\Leftrightarrow 15\); Health \(\Leftrightarrow 311\).]

label license. See license.

"Theft, also, constitutes a labes realis in the title of any one holding the subject stolen, no matter how honestly he may have acquired it; and on this defect, which attaches to it until it return to his possession, the true owner may vindicate his right, and recover his subject wherever it can be found." John Trayner, Trayner’s Latin Maxims 312 (4th ed. 1894).

labina (la-bi-na), n. Archaic. Land covered by water; swampland.

la bomba (la bom-ba). (sometimes cap.) An incendiary device consisting of a plastic bag filled with fuel and placed inside a paper bag stuffed with tissue and rigged with a fuse. • A person who uses such a device to start a fire violates the federal arson statute. See 18 USCA § 844(j). [Cases: Explosives \(\Leftrightarrow 4\).] labor, n. 1. Work of any type, including mental exertion <the fruits of one’s labor>. • The term usu. refers to work for wages as opposed to profits.

child labor. See child labor.

spousal labor. See spousal labor.

2. Workers considered as an economic unit or a political element . 3. A Spanish land measure equal to 177\(\frac{1}{2}\) acres. • This measure has been used in Mexico and was once used in Texas.

labor, vb. (14c) 1. To work, esp. with great exertion <David labored long and hard to finish the brief on time>. 2. Archaic. To tamper with or improperly attempt to influence (a jury). • This sense derives from the idea that the tamperer "endeavors" to influence the jury’s verdict. See embracery. — laborer, n.

labor agreement. See collective-bargaining agreement.

laboratius (lay-ba-rair-ee-is), n. [Latin “about laborers”] Hist. An ancient writ against a person who had no other means of support but refused to work throughout the year.

laboratory conditions. Labor law. The ideal conditions for a union election, in which the employees may exercise free choice without interference from the employer, the union, or anyone else. [Cases: Labor and Employment \(\Leftrightarrow 1193\).]

labor–desert model. The view that the inventive process results from the inventor's labor to create something of added value to society, and that this added value justifies some social reward ("just deserts") to the inventor. — Also termed value-added model. Cf. eureka model: labor model.

laesa majestas (lee-zed ma-jes-tas). See lese majesty.

laesio enormis (lee shee-oh i-nor-mis). [Law Latin “excessive loss” or “abnormal loss of more than half”] Roman & civil law. 1. The sale of a thing for which the buyer paid less than half of its real value. • The seller could rescind the sale, but the buyer could keep the item purchased by paying the full value. Generally, this doctrine was limited to land sales. 2. The injury sustained by one party to an onerous contract when the overreaching party receives twice the value of that party's money or property, such as a purchaser who pays less than half of the value of the property sold, or a seller who receives more than double the property's value. • If coowner coheirs partition or sell property, lasio enormis may exist when the purchaser pays less than one-fourth of the value rather than one-half. See La. Civ. Code arts. 824, 1406. — Also spelled lasio enormis. — Also termed lesion; enorm lesion; (in full) lasio enormis vel ultra dimidium (lee-shee-oh i-nor-mis vel al-tra di-mid ee-am); (in Louisiana) lesion beyond moieties.

"Lesion (laesio enormis) was the rule, established very late, that a seller could rescind a contract if he had received less than half its real value. . . . [In spite of its imperfections, lesion not only was adopted in all modern civilian systems (French Code Civil 1674-1682), but became the means of testing the validity of contracts generally by their fairness, a principle embodied in the German Civil Code (section 1398) and the Swiss Code of Obligations (section 21). Such a test is no more difficult to apply in law than in equity, where it has long been established in our system. As the Romans applied it, it was a clumsy and inadequate way of reaching this result. In modern courts, in civil-law countries, it invests judges with a discretion not very likely to be abused, but sufficient to act as a deterrent to the grosser forms of economic exploitation." Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law 233-34 (1927).

laesiwarp (lee-zee-warp), n. [Saxon fr. laisin "bosom" + werpere "to surrender"] Hist. A thing surrendered to another's hands or power; a thing given or delivered.

Lamb-Weston rule. Insurance. The doctrine that, when two insurance policies provide coverage for a loss, and each of them contains an other-insurance clause — creating a conflict in the order or apportionment of coverage — both of the other-insurance clauses will be disregarded and liability will be prorated between the insurers. Lamb-Weston, Inc. v. Oregon Auto. Ins. Co., 341 P.2d 110 (Or. 1959). [Cases: Insurance ] lame duck. (1910) An elected official serving out a term after a successor has been elected. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ]

land. n. (bef. 12c) 1. An immovable and indestructible three-dimensional area consisting of a portion of the earth’s surface, the space above and below the surface, and everything growing on or permanently affixed to it. 2. An estate or interest in real property. [Cases: Estates in Property C=>1.]

“In its legal significance, ‘land’ is not restricted to the earth’s surface, but extends below and above the surface. Nor is it confined to solids, but may encompass within its bounds such things as gases and liquids. A definition of ‘land’ along the lines of ‘a mass of physical matter occupying space’ also is not sufficient, for an owner of land may remove part or all of that physical matter, as by digging up and carrying away the soil, but would nevertheless retain as part of his ‘land’ the space that remains. Ultimately, as a juristic concept, ‘land’ is simply an area of three-dimensional space, its position being identified by natural or imaginary points located by reference to the earth’s surface. ‘Land’ is not the fixed contents of that space, although, as we shall see, the owner of that space may well own those fixed contents. Land is immoveable, as distinct from chattels, which are moveable; it is also, in its legal significance, indestructible. The contents of the space may be physically severed, destroyed or consumed, but the space itself, and so the ‘land’, remains immutable.” Peter Butt, Land Law 9 (2d ed. 1988).

accommodation land. (1843) Land that is bought by a builder or speculator who erects houses or improvements on it and then leases it at an increased rent.

acquired federal land. (usu. pl.) Federal land that was never in the public domain. See federal land.

acquired land. Land acquired by the government from private hands or from another governmental entity; esp., property acquired by the federal government from private or state ownership. • This term is frequently contrasted with public domain. — Also termed acquired lands. See PUBLIC DOMAIN (1). [Cases: Public Lands C=>4.]

“A‘Acquired lands’ are lands the United States acquired from private or state owners by gift, purchase, exchange, or condemnation. In most but not all cases, such lands actually have been ‘reacquired,’ because the United States previously had purchased or won them from foreign and Indian sovereigns. Distinguishing between lands because of ownership origins that go back over a century is a policy with little to recommend it, but some statutes and judicial opinions maintain the distinction.” George Cameron Coggins, Public Natural Resources Law § 1.02[1] (1990).

bounty land. A portion of public land given or donated as a reward, esp. for military service. See MILITARY BOUNTY LAND. [Cases: Public Lands C=>46.]

lapse patent. See patent (2).

lapse statute. See antilapse statute.

lapsus bonis (lap-sas boh-nis). [Latin] Scots law. Reduced in worldly circumstances. • The phrase appeared in reference to a person who was having temporary financial difficulties.
larcenable (lahr-see-na-bal'), adj. (1920) Subject to larceny <because it cannot be carried away, real estate is not larcenable>. [Cases: Larceny C=4-10.]

larcenist, n. (1803) One who commits larceny. See LARCENY.

larcenous (lahr-se-nas), adj; (18c) 1. Of, relating to, or characterized by larceny . 2. (Of a person) contemplating or tainted with larceny; thievish .

larceny (lahr-se-nee), n. (15c) The unlawful taking and carrying away of someone else's personal property with the intent to deprive the possessor of it permanently. • Common-law larceny has been broadened by some statutes to include embezzlement and false pretenses, all three of which are often subsumed under the statutory crime of "theft. Cf. ROBBERY. [Cases: Larceny C=>1.]

"The criminal offence of larceny or theft in the Common Law was intimately connected with the civil wrong of trespass. 'Where there has been no trespass,' said Lord Coleridge, 'there can at law common be no larceny.' Larceny, in other words, is merely a particular kind of trespass to goods which, by virtue of the trespasser's intent, is converted into a crime. Trespass is a wrong, not to ownership but to possession, and theft, therefore, is not the violation of a person's right to ownership, but the infringement of his possession, accompanied with a particular criminal intent." 4 Stephen's Commentaries on the Laws of England 72-73 (L. Crispin Warrington ed., 21st ed. 1950).

"[T]he distinction between larceny, embezzlement and false pretenses serve no useful purpose in the criminal law but are useless handicaps from the standpoint of the administration of criminal justice. One solution has been to combine all three in one section of the code under the name of 'larceny.' This has one disadvantage, however, because it frequently becomes necessary to add a modifier to make clear whether the reference is to common-law larceny or to statutory larceny." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 389 (3d ed. 1982).

aggravated larceny. (1831) Larceny accompanied by some aggravating factor (as when the theft is from a person). — Also termed compound larceny. [Cases: Larceny C=23.]

complicated larceny. See mixed larceny.

compound larceny. 1. See aggravated larceny. 2. See mixed larceny.

constructive larceny. (1827) Larceny in which the perpetrator's felonious intent to appropriate the goods is construed from the defendant's conduct at the time of asportation, although a felonious intent was not present before that time. [Cases: Larceny C=3(2).]

grand larceny. (1828) Larceny of property worth more than a statutory cutoff amount, usu. $100. Cf. petit larceny. [Cases: Larceny C=23.]

"The English law, as the result of an early statute [the Statute of Westminster I, ch. 15 (1275)], classified this offense [larceny] as either (1) grand larceny or (2) petit larceny (now frequently written petty larceny), the former being a capital offense and the latter punishable by forfeiture of goods and whipping, but not death. Both, as mentioned earlier, were felonies. The offense was grand larceny if the value of the property stolen exceeded twelve pence and petit larceny if it did not. Modern statutes very generally retain this same classification (sometimes without using these labels) but with different penalties and different values set as the dividing line." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 335 (3d ed. 1982).

larceny by a constructive trespass. Larceny that occurs when a property owner mistakenly gives another person more property than is due, and the recipient knows about the error but does not disclose it before taking the excess property with the intent of converting it to his or her own use.

larceny by bailee. Larceny committed by a bailee who converts the property to personal use or to the use of a third party. [Cases: Embezzlement C=16; Larceny C=15.]

larceny by fraud and deception. See larceny by trick.

larceny by trick. (1898) Larceny in which the taker misleads the rightful possessor, by misrepresentation of fact, into giving up possession of (but not title to) the goods. — Also termed larceny by trick and deception; larceny by trick and device; larceny by fraud and deception. Cf. FALSE PRETENSES; cheating by false pretenses under CHEATING. [Cases: Larceny C=14.]

larceny from the person. (18c) Larceny in which the goods are taken directly from the person, but without violence or intimidation, the victim usu. being unaware of the taking. • Pickpocketing is a typical example. This offense is similar to robbery except that violence or intimidation is not involved. Cf. ROBBERY. [Cases: Larceny C=19.]

larceny of property lost, mislaid, or delivered by mistake. See theft of property lost, mislaid, or delivered by mistake under THEFT.

mixed larceny. (18c) 1. Larceny accompanied by aggravation or violence to the person. Cf. simple larceny. 2. Larceny involving a taking from a house. — Also termed compound larceny; complicated larceny.

petit larceny. (16c) Larceny of property worth less than an amount fixed by statute, usu. $100. — Also spelled petty larceny. Cf. grand larceny. [Cases: Larceny C=23.]

simple larceny. (18c) Larceny unaccompanied by aggravating factors; larceny of personal goods unattended by an act of violence. Cf. mixed larceny (1).

larger parcel. (1895) Eminent domain. A portion of land that is not a complete parcel, but is the greater part of a bigger tract, entitling the owner to damages both for the parcel taken and for its severance from the larger tract. • To grant both kinds of damages, a court generally requires the owner to show unity of ownership, unity of use, and contiguity of the land. But some states and the federal courts do not require contiguity when there is strong evidence of unity of use. See ECONOMIC UNIT. [Cases: Eminent Domain C=96, 135.]

Larrison rule (lar-a-sun). (1952) Criminal law. The doctrine that a defendant may be entitled to a new trial on the basis of newly discovered evidence of false testimony by a government witness if the jury might have reached a different conclusion without the evidence and it unfairly surprised the defendant at trial. Larrison v. United States, 24 F.2d 82 (7th Cir. 1928). [Cases: Criminal Law ☞ 942.]

The most usual rule in cases in which it is claimed that there was false testimony at the trial or that the witness has since recanted is the 'Larrison rule,' taking its name from the Seventh Circuit case in which it was announced. This is that three requirements must be met before a new trial will be granted on this ground: (a) That the court is reasonably well satisfied that the testimony given by a material witness was false. (b) That without it the jury might have reached a different conclusion. (c) That the party seeking the new trial was taken by surprise when the false testimony was given and was unable to meet it for it did not know of its falsity until after the trial." 3 Charles Alan Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure § 557.1, at 343 (2d ed. 1982) (quoting Larrison, 24 F.2d at 87-88).

lascivious (la-siv-e-as), adj. (15c) (Of conduct) tending to excite lust; lewd; indecent; obscene.

lascivious cohabitation. See illicit cohabitation under cohabitation.

L'Association Litteraire et Artistique Internationale. Copyright. An organization of authors, artists, and other supporters of international copyright protection. • In 1878, the Association drafted five resolutions that would become the starting point for the Berne Convention. In 1883, the organization called the first meeting in Berne, Switzerland for the purpose of creating a union to enforce international copyrights. • Often shortened to the International Association. - Abbr. ALAI.

last antecedent, rule of the. See rule of the last antecedent.

last-clear-chance doctrine. (1904) Torts. The rule that a plaintiff who was contributorily negligent may nonetheless recover from the defendant if the defendant had the last opportunity to prevent the harm but failed to use reasonable care to do so (in other words, if the defendant's negligence is later in time than the plaintiff's). • This doctrine allows the plaintiff to rebut the contributory-negligence defense in the few jurisdictions where contributory negligence completely bars recovery. - Also termed discovered-peril doctrine; humanitarian doctrine; last-opportunity doctrine; subsequent-negligence doctrine; supervening-negligence doctrine; doctrine of ultimate negligence; doctrine of discovered peril; doctrine of subsequent negligence. [Cases: Automobiles ☞ 227; Negligence ☞ 530, 1297.]

last-employer rule. The doctrine that liability for an occupational injury or illness falls to the employer who exposed the worker to the injurious substance just before the first onset of the disease or injury. - Also termed last-injurious-exposure rule. [Cases: Workers' Compensation ☞ 201.]

last heir. Hist. The person — either the lord of the manor or the sovereign — to whom lands come by escheat when there is no lawful heir.

last illness. (1904) The sickness ending in the person's death. - Also termed last sickness.

last-in, first-out. (1934) An accounting method that assumes that the most recent purchases are sold or used first, matching current costs against current revenues. - Abbr. LIFO. Cf. first-in, first-out; next-in, first-out. [Cases: Internal Revenue ☞ 3105.1.]

last-injurious-exposure rule. See last-employer rule.

last-in-time-marriage presumption. Family law. A presumption that the most recently contracted marriage is valid. • This presumption generally arises in a situation similar to this: A person, believing himself or herself to be divorced, remarries. This person dies, and the new spouse makes a claim for the decedent's pension benefits. Then a former spouse, claiming that there was never a valid divorce, also claims the right to receive the benefits. The last-in-time-marriage presumption operates so that the former spouse bears the burden of proving that there was no valid divorce. [Cases: Marriage ☞ 40(5).]

last-opportunity doctrine. See last-clear-chance doctrine.

last-proximate-act test. (1961) Criminal law. A common-law test for the crime of attempt, based on whether the defendant does the final act necessary to commit an offense (such as pulling the trigger of a gun, not merely aiming it). • Most courts have rejected this test as being too lenient. See attempt (2). [Cases: Criminal Law ☞ 44.]

last resort, court of. See court of last resort under court.

last sickness. See last illness.

last-straw doctrine. Employment law. The rule that the termination of employment may be justified by a series of incidents of poor performance, not one of which alone would justify termination, followed by a final incident showing a blatant disregard for the employer's interests.

last-survivor life insurance. See life insurance.
last-treatment rule. The doctrine that, for an ongoing physician–patient relationship, the statute of limitations on a medical-malpractice claim begins to run when the treatment stops or the relationship ends. [Cases: Limitation of Actions C diplomatic relations.

last will. See will.

last will and testament. See last will under WILL.

lata culpa. See CULPA.

lata neglegentia (la-ta neg-1j-en-shee-ah). See NEGLIGENCE.

latching. A survey of a mine; an underground survey.

late, adj. (bef. 12c) 1. Tardy; coming after an appointed or expected time <late filing>. 2. Of a person only recently having died <the late Secretary of State>.

late charge. See CHARGE.

latecomer. See JUNIOR USER.

latens (lay-tenz), adj. [Latin] Hidden or unapparent.

latent (lay-tant), adj. (15c) Concealed; dormant . Cf. PATENT.

latent deed. See DEED.

latent intention. See INTENT.

lateral departure. See DEPARTURE.

lateral support. See SUPPORT (4).

laterarum (lat-a-rair-ee). [Law Latin] Hist. To lie sideways, rather than endways. • This term was formerly used in land descriptions.

late-term abortion. See ABORTION.

latifundium (lat-a-fan-dee-um), n. [Latin fr. latus “broad” + fundus “land”] Roman law. A large private estate, common in the late Republic.

Latin. The language of the ancient Romans and a primary language of the civil and canon law, and formerly of the common law.

"The value of the Latin has always consisted in its peculiar expressiveness as a language of law terms, in its superior conciseness which has made it the appropriate language of law maxims, and in its almost unlimited capacity of condensation by means of abbreviations and contractions, many of which are retained in popular use at the present day." 2 Alexander M. Burrell, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 131 (2d ed. 1867).

"The Latin maxims have largely disappeared from arguments and opinions. In their original phraseology they convey no idea that cannot be well expressed in modern English." William C. Anderson, Law Dictionaries, 28 Am. L. Rev. 531, 532 (1894).

Latini Juniani (lo-ti-nt joo-nee-ah-ah-ni), n. pl. [Latin "Junian Latins"] Roman law. Informally manumitted slaves who acquired some rights and privileges as free people, but not Roman citizenship. • They were a special class of freedmen (libertini) who could become citizens. If a Latinus Junianus did not become a citizen, then upon death that person’s status reverted to slavery, and his or her patron acquired all the decedent’s property. — Also termed libertine Junian Latins. See LEG JUNIA NORBANA. Cf. INGENUUS; SERVUS.

Upon all these persons . . . a new and definite status was conferred; they were henceforth to be known as Latini Juniani, their position being based upon Latinitas, a status which had been enjoyed by certain Latin colonists. A Latinus Junianus had no public rights . . . . But he had part of the commercium, i.e. he could acquire proprietary and other rights inter vivos, but not mortis causa. A Latinus Junianus, therefore, could neither take under a will . . . nor could he make one . . . . But, subject to these disabilities, a Latinus Junianus was a free man, and his children, though not, like the children of citizens, under his potestas, were free-born citizens." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 68-69 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

latitut (lat-a-tat), n. [Law Latin "he lurks"] Hist. A writ issued in a personal action after the sheriff returned a bill of Middlesex with the notation that the defendant lurks about in the county. It was abolished by the Process in Courts of Law at Westminster Act of 1832 (St. 2, Will. 4, ch. 39). See BILL OF MIDDLESEX; TESTATUM.

"Latitat is a writ by which all men in personal actions are originally called in the king’s bench to answer. And it is called latitat, because it is supposed by the writ that the defendant cannot be found; • The writ was called latitat because of its fictitious recital that the defendant lurks in another county: and therefore to the sheriff of that county is this writ directed to apprehend him." Termes de la Ley 277 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

latitatio (lat-a-tay-shoo-oh), n. [Law Latin] Civil law. A lurking; a hiding; a concealment, esp. to avoid a trial.

Latium majus (lay-shew-em may-jas). [Latin] Roman law. The greater rights conferred on the inhabitants of Latium and, later, of colonies outside Italy, giving citizenship to all members of the local curia or town council and their children. Cf. LATIUM MINUS.

"Under the Principate there is a distinction between Latium maius and Latium minus. The former referred to the rights granted to colonies founded as a coloniae Latine outside Italy, combined with the concession of Roman citizenship to a larger group of individuals than Latium minus, in which only the municipal magistrates and members of the municipal council . . . were rewarded with Roman citizenship." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 537-38 (1953).

Latium minus (lay-shew-em mi-nas). [Latin] Roman law. The right of citizenship granted to the superior magistrates of provincial colonies. — Also termed minus LATIUM. Cf. LATIUM MAIUS.

lator (lay-tar), n. [Latin "a bearer, proposer"] Civil law. 1. A bearer; a messenger. 2. A maker or giver of laws.
latori praesentium (lay-tor-1 or la-tor-1 pri-sen shee-am). [Law Latin] Scots law. To the bearer of these presents.
- The phrase appeared in reference to written notes or bonds made payable to an unnamed creditor.

lato sensu (lay-toh sen-s[yloo]). [Latin] Hist. In a wide sense; in a broad sense.

latro (la-troh), n. [Latin] Roman law. A robber; a brigand.

latrocinium (la-tr<si-n-eem), n. [Latin latrocinium “highway robbery”] Archaic. The act of robbing; a depredation; a theft. — Also termed latrociny; latrocINIum.

laudare (law-dair-e), vb. [Latin] 1. Civil law. To name; to cite or quote as authority. 2. Hist. To determine or pass upon (a case, etc.) judicially.

laudatio (law-day-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. Court testimony concerning an accused person’s good behavior and integrity of life. • This testimony resembles the practice in modern criminal trials of calling persons to speak favorably about a defendant’s character. Pl. laudationes (law-day-shee-oh-neez).

laudatory words. Patents. In a patent claim, descriptive but self-serving and conclusory words about the invention’s quality or features, such as “faster” or “more effective.” The laudatory words are usu. not allowed in the claims of utility-patent applications, but they are allowed in plant-patent applications.

laudemium (law-dee-mee-um), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A sum paid to a landowner by a person succeeding to a particular form of land contract by gift, devise, exchange, or sale; HERIOT. • The payment equaled 2% of the purchase money, and was paid to the landowner for acceptance of the successor. — Also termed (in old English law) acknowledgment money. See EMMETYS.

laudere auctorem (law-deer-ee-awk tor-am). See NOMICATIO AUCTORIS.

laudum (law-dom), n. [Law Latin] Hist. An arbitration. See ARBITRAMENT.

laughe, n. See FRANKPLEDGE.

laughing heir. See HEIR.

launch, n. (18c) 1. The movement of a vessel from the land into the water, esp. by sliding along ways from the stocks on which the vessel was built. 2. A large open boat used in any service; LIGHTER.

laundering, n. See MONEY-LAUNDERING.

laundry list. (1958) Slang. An enumeration of items, as in a statute or court opinion <Texas’s consumer-protection law contains a laundry list of deceptive trade practices>.

laureate (lor-ee-it), n. (16c) 1. Hist. An officer of the sovereign’s household, who composed odes annually on the sovereign’s birthday, on the new year, and occasionally on the occurrence of a remarkable victory. 2. A person honored for great achievement in the arts and sciences, and esp. in poetry.

laus Deo (laws dee-oh or lows day-oh). [Latin] Archaic. Praise be to God. • This was a heading to a bill of exchange.

law. (be<12c) 1. The regime that orders human activities and relations through systematic application of the force of politically organized society, or through social pressure, backed by force, in such a society; the legal system <respect and obey the law>. 2. The aggregate of legislation, judicial precedents, and accepted legal principles; the body of authoritative grounds of judicial and administrative action; esp., the body of rules, standards, and principles that the courts of a particular jurisdiction apply in deciding controversies brought before them <the law of the land>. 3. The set of rules or principles dealing with a specific area of a legal system <copyright law>. 4. The judicial and administrative process; legal action and proceedings <when settlement negotiations failed, they submitted their dispute to the law>. 5. A statute <Congress passed a law>. — Abbrev. L. 6. COMMON LAW <law but not equity>. 7. The legal profession <she spent her entire career in law>.

"Some twenty years ago I pointed out two ideas running through definitions of law: one an imperative idea, an idea of a rule laid down by the lawmaking organ of a politically organized society, deriving its force from the authority of the sovereign; and the other a rational or ethical idea, an idea of a rule of right and justice deriving its authority from its intrinsic reasonableness or conformity to ideals of right and merely recognized, not made, by the sovereign." Roscoe Pound, "More About the Nature of Law," in Legal Essays in Tribute to Orrin Kip McMurray at 513, 515 (1935).

"All law is the law of a group of individuals or of groups made up of individuals. No one can make a law purely for himself. He may form a resolution, frame an ambition, or adopt a rule, but these are private prescriptions, not laws." Tony Honore, Making Law Bind: Essays Legal and Philosophical 33 (1987).

"It will help to distinguish three senses of the word law. The first is law as a distinctive social institution; that is the sense invoked when we ask whether primitive law is really law. The second is law as a collection of sets of propositions — the sets we refer to as antitrust law, the law of torts, the Statute of Frauds, and so on. The third is law as a source of rights, duties, and powers, as in the sentence "The law forbids the murdering heir to inherit." Richard A. Posner, The Problems of Jurisprudence 220-21 (1990).

adjective law. See ADJECTIVE LAW.

canon law. See CANON LAW.

civil law. See CIVIL LAW.

common law. See COMMON LAW.

customary law. See customary law.

divine law. See divine law.

direct law. Law that has its source in legislation; written law.

federal law. See federal law.

general law. 1. Law that is neither local nor confined in application to particular persons. • Even if there is only one person or entity to which a given law applies when enacted, it is general law if it purports to apply to all persons or places of a specified class throughout the jurisdiction. — Also termed general statute; law of a general nature. Cf. special law. [Cases: Statutes C-77.]

imperative law. A rule in the form of a command; a rule of action imposed on people by some authority that enforces obedience.

"Strictly speaking, it is not possible to say that imperative law is a command in the ordinary sense of the word. A 'command' in the ordinary meaning of the word is an expression of a wish by a person or body as to the conduct of another person, communicated to that other person. But (1) in the case of the law there is no determinate person who as a matter of psychological fact commands all the law. We are all born into a community in which law already exists, and at no time in our lives do any of us command the whole law. The most that we do is to play our part in enforcing or altering particular portions of it. (2) Ignorance of the law is no excuse; thus a rule of law is binding even though not communicated to the subject of the law." John Salmond, jurisprudence 21 n.(c) (Clanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

internal law. 1. Law that regulates the domestic affairs of a country. Cf. international law. 2. local law (3).

local law. See local law.

moral law. See moral law.

natural law. See natural law.

partial law. A statute designed (usu. intentionally) to affect the rights of only one particular person or only certain classes of people, rather than all people. [Cases: Statutes C-77.

permanence law. A statute that continues in force for an indefinite time.

positive law. See positive law.

procedural law. See procedural law.

prospectual law. See prospectual statute under statute.

special law. A law that pertains to and affects a particular case, person, place, or thing, as opposed to the general public. — Also termed special act; private law. Cf. general law (1). [Cases: Statutes C-77.

state law. See state law.

sumptuary law. See sumptuary law.

tacit law. A law that derives its authority from the people's consent, without a positive enactment.

unenacted law. Law that does not have its source in legislation; unwritten law (1).

unwritten law. A rule, custom, or practice that has not been enacted in the form of a statute or ordinance.

written law. Statutory law, together with constitutions and treaties, as opposed to judge-made law. — Also termed jus scriptum; lex scripta. Cf. unwritten law.

law agent. Scots law. See solicitor (4).

law and economics. (often cap.) (1979) 1. A discipline advocating the economic analysis of the law, whereby legal rules are subjected to a cost-benefit analysis to determine whether a change from one legal rule to another will increase or decrease allocative efficiency and social wealth. • Originally developed as an approach to antitrust policy, law and economics is today used by its proponents to explain and interpret a variety of legal subjects. 2. The field or movement in which scholars devote themselves to this discipline. 3. The body of work produced by these scholars.

law and literature. (often cap.) (1997) 1. Traditionally, the study of how lawyers and legal institutions are depicted in literature; esp., the examination of law-related fiction as sociological evidence of how a given culture, at a given time, views law. — Also termed law in literature. 2. More modernly, the application of literary theory to legal texts, focusing esp. on lawyers' rhetoric, logic, and style, as well as legal syntax and semantics. — Also termed law as literature. 3. The field or movement in which scholars devote themselves to this study or application. 4. The body of work produced by these scholars.

law and language. (often cap.) (1997) 1. Traditionally, the study of how lawyers and legal institutions are depicted in literature; esp., the examination of law-related fiction as sociological evidence of how a given culture, at a given time, views law. — Also termed law in literature. 2. More modernly, the application of literary theory to legal texts, focusing esp. on lawyers' rhetoric, logic, and style, as well as legal syntax and semantics. — Also termed law as literature. 3. The field or movement in which scholars devote themselves to this study or application. 4. The body of work produced by these scholars.
law arbitrary. A law not found in the nature of things, but imposed by the legislature’s mere will; a bill not immutable.

law as literature. See law and literature (2).

law between states. See international law.

lawbook. (16c) A book, usu. a technical one, about the law; esp., a primary legal text such as a statute book or book that reports caselaw. — Also written law book.

lawbreaker, n. (15c) A person who violates or has violated the law.

lawburrows (law-bar-ohz). Scots law. 1. An action requiring security for the peaceable behavior of a party. 2. Security obtained by a party apprehensive of danger to safeguard the peace.

law clerk. 1. See clerk (4). 2. See paralegal (2).

law commission. (often cap.) An official or quasi-official body of people formed to propose legal reforms intended to improve the administration of justice. ● Such a body is often charged with the task of reviewing the law with an eye toward systematic development and reform, esp. through codification.

law court. 1. See court (1). 2. See court (2). — Also written law-court.

law court of appeals. Hist. An appellate tribunal, formerly existing in South Carolina, for hearing appeals from the courts of law.

law-craft, n. (16c) The practice of law.

“...This quest for ever-broader empirical understanding must, of course, be kept under reasonable control in practice law-craft, lest it delay necessary decisions in a continually expanding and pointlessly expensive fact-finding spiral.” Bruce A. Ackerman, Reconstructing American Law 30 (1984).

law day. 1. Archaic. The yearly or twice-yearly meeting of one of the early common-law courts. 2. Archaic. The day appointed for a debtor to discharge a mortgage or else forfeit the property to the lender. [Cases: Mortgages C=301, 335, 599(O).] 3. (cap.) A day on which American schools, public assemblies, and courts draw attention to the importance of law in modern society. ● Since 1958, the ABA has sponsored Law Day on May 1 of each year.

law department. A branch of a corporation, government agency, university, or the like charged with handling the entity’s legal affairs.

law enforcement. (1895) 1. The detection and punishment of violations of the law. ● This term is not limited to the enforcement of criminal laws. For example, the Freedom of Information Act contains an exemption for the enforcement of noncriminal laws (such as national-security laws) as well as criminal laws. See 5 USCA § 552(b)(7). 2. criminal justice (2). 3. Police officers and other members of the executive branch of government charged with carrying out and enforcing the criminal law.

Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. A former federal agency (part of the Department of Justice) that was responsible for administering law-enforcement grants under the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968. ● It has been replaced by a variety of federal agencies, including the National Institute of Corrections and National Institute of Justice. — Abbr. LEAA.

Law Enforcement Information Network. A computerized communications system that some states use to document driver’s-license records, automobile registrations, wanted-persons’ files, and the like. — Abbr. LEIN.

law-enforcement officer. A person whose duty is to enforce the laws and preserve the peace. See peace officer; sheriff. [Cases: Municipal Corporations C=180(O).] law-enforcement system. See criminal-justice system.

law firm. (1852) An association of lawyers who practice law together, usu. sharing clients and profits, in a business organized traditionally as a partnership but often today as either a professional corporation or a limited-liability company. ● Many law firms have a hierarchical structure in which the partners (or shareholders) supervise junior lawyers known as “associates,” who are usu. employed on a track to partnership. [Cases: Attorney and Client C=30.] captive law firm. A law firm staffed by employees of an insurance company. ● These lawyers typically defend insureds in lawsuits covered under the insurer’s liability policies. The insurer’s use of a captive firm to defend an insured raises ethical questions about whether the lawyers will act in the insured’s best interests. — Often shortened to captive firm. [Cases: Attorney and Client C=32(4), 32(9).]

Law French. (17c) The corrupted form of the Norman French language that arose in England in the centuries after William the Conqueror invaded England in 1066 and that was used for several centuries as the primary language of the English legal system; the Anglo-French used in medieval England in judicial proceedings, pleadings, and lawbooks. — Also written law French. — Abbr. L.F. See norman french.

“...To the linguist, law French is a corrupt dialect by definition. Anglo-French was in steady decline after 1300. Lawyers such as Fortescue, on the other hand, were probably serious in maintaining that it was the vernacular of France which was deteriorating by comparison with the pristine Norman of the English courts. That Fortescue could make such a claim, while living in France, is in itself a clear demonstration that by the middle of the fifteenth century there was a marked difference between the French of English lawyers and the French of France.” J.H. Baker, A Manual of Law French 11 (1979).

“...Law French refers to the Anglo-Norman patois used in legal documents and all judicial proceedings from the 1260s to the reign of Edward III (1327-1377), and used with frequency in legal literature up to the early 18th century.

Law Latin. (16c) A corrupted form of Latin formerly used in law and legal documents, including judicial writs, royal charters, and private deeds. • It primarily consists of a mixture of Latin, French, and English words used in English sentence structures. • Abbr. L.L.; L. Lat. • Also written law Latin.

"Law Latin, a technical kind of Latin, in which the pleadings and proceedings of the English courts were enrolled and recorded from a very early period to the reign of George II. . . . The principal peculiarities of this language consist first, in its construction, which is adapted so closely to the English idiom as to answer to it sometimes word for word; and, secondly, in the use of numerous words 'not allowed by grammarians nor having any countenance of Latin,' but framed from the English by merely adding a Latin termination, as murdrum from murder. . . ." 2 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 135 (2d ed. 1867).

"Law Latin, sometimes formerly called 'dog Latin,' is the bastardized or debased Latin formerly used in law and legal documents. For the most part, we have escaped its clutches. In 1730, Parliament abolished Law Latin in legal proceedings, but two years later found it necessary to allow Latin phrases that had previously been in common use, such as fieri facias, habeas corpus, ne exeat, and nisi prius. As Blackstone would later say, some Latinisms were 'not . . . capable of an English dress with any degree of seriousness.'" 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries 323 (1769). Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 505 (2d ed. 1995).

lawyer-referral service. A program, usu. offered by a bar association, that helps nonindigent clients clarify their legal problems and provides either contact information for lawyers who practice in the appropriate field or information about government agencies or consumer organizations that may be able to provide services. — Also termed lawyer referral and information service.

lawyer-witness rule. (1982) The principle that an attorney who will likely be called as a fact witness at trial may not participate as an advocate in the case, unless the testimony will be about an uncontested matter or the amount of attorney's fees in the case, or if disqualifying the attorney would create a substantial hardship for the client. • The rule permits an attorney actively participating in the case to be a witness on merely formal matters but discourages testimony on other matters on behalf of a client. Model Rules of Professional Conduct Rule 3.7 (1983). — Also termed advocate-witness rule; attorney-witness rule. [Cases: Attorney and Client C=22; Witnesses C=67.]

lay, adj. (14c) 1. Not ecclesiastical; not of the clergy. 2. Not expert, esp. with reference to law or medicine; nonprofessional.

lay, n. Maritime law. A share of the profits of a fishing or whaling trip, akin to wages, allotted to the officers and seamen. [Cases: Seamen C=28.]

lay, vb. (14c) To allege or assert.

layaway. An agreement between a retail seller and a consumer to hold goods for future sale. • The seller sets the goods aside and agrees to sell them to the consumer at an agreed price in the future. The consumer deposits with the seller some portion of the price of the goods, and may agree to other conditions with the seller, such as progress payments. The consumer receives the goods once the full purchase price has been paid.

lay corporation. See CORPORATION.

lay damages, vb. To allege damages, esp. in the complaint. See AD DAMNUM CLAUSE.

layday. Maritime law. A day allowed by a voyage charterparty for the charterer to load or unload cargo. • If more time is used, the vessel's owner is entitled to compensation for the delay, usu. in the form of demurrage. If less time is used, the owner may pay dispatch. — Also written lay day. See DEMURRAGE; DISPATCH; LAYTIME. Cf. day of demurrage under day. [Cases: Shipping C=45, 47.]

lay impropropriator (im-proh-pree-ay-tor). Eccles. law. A layperson holding a benefice or other spiritual impro­priation.

laying a foundation. Evidence. Introducing evidence of certain facts needed to render later evidence relevant, material, or competent. • For example, propounding a hypothetical question to an expert is necessary before the expert may render an opinion. [Cases: Criminal Law C=404.10, 444, 485; Evidence C=117, 366-381.]

laying of the venue. (18c) A statement in a complaint naming the district or county in which the plaintiff proposes that any trial of the matter should occur. See VENUE. [Cases: Pleading C=43.]

leading economic indicator. See ECONOMIC INDICATOR.

leading indicator. See INDICATOR.

leading object rule. See MAIN-PURPOSE RULE.

leading of a use. Hist. In a deed, the specification, before the levy of a fine of land, of the person to whose use the fine will inure. • If the deed is executed after the fine, it “declares” the use.

Accordingly, if a, tenant in tail, with reversion to himself in fee, would settle his estate on B. for life, remainder to C. in fee tail, remainder to D. in fee .... He therefore usually, after making the settlement proposed, covenants to levy a fine ... and directs that the same shall enure to the uses of the fine or recovery, and the fine when levied, or recovery when suffered, shall enure to the uses so specified, and no other.” — William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 363 (1766).

leading question. (1824) A question that suggests the answer to the person being interrogated; esp., a question that may be answered by a mere “yes” or “no.” • Leading questions are generally allowed only in cross-examination. — Also termed categorical question; suggestive lead-lag study. A survey used to determine the amount of working capital that a utility company must reserve and include in its rate base, by comparing the time the company has to pay its bills and the time taken by its customers to pay for service. The term comes from the phrases "lead time" and "lag time." Lead time is the average number of days between the company's receipt and payment of invoices it receives. Lag time is the average number of days between the company's billing of its customers and its receipt of payment. By analyzing the difference in timing between inward cash flow and outward cash flow, the company can calculate the amount of necessary reserves. [Cases: Electricity C-11.3(2), 11.3(4).]

leads doctrine. Tax. In a tax-evasion case, the rule that the government must investigate all the taxpayer's leads that are reasonably accessible and that, if true, would establish the taxpayer's innocence, or the government risks having the trial judge presume that any leads not investigated are true and exonerating. [Cases: Internal Revenue C-5312.]

league. (15c) 1. A covenant made by nations, groups, or individuals for promoting common interests or ensuring mutual protection. 2. An alliance or association of nations, groups, or individuals formed by such a covenant. 3. A unit of distance, usu. measuring about three miles (chiefly, nautical). [Cases: Weights and Measures C-3.]

marine league. A geographical measure of distance equal to one-twentieth part of a degree of latitude, or three nautical miles. [Cases: Weights and Measures C-3.]

League of Nations. An organization of nations formed in 1919 to promote international cooperation and peace. President Woodrow Wilson endorsed the League in an address to Congress, but the United States never joined. The League dissolved in 1946 and turned its assets over to the United Nations.

leakage. (15c) 1. The waste of a liquid caused by its leaking from a storage container. 2. An allowance against duties granted by customs to an importer of liquids for losses sustained by this waste. 3. Intellectual property. Loss in value of a piece of intellectual property because of unauthorized copying. Types of intellectual property most susceptible to leakage are recordable media such as compact discs and videotapes. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property C-87(1).]

learn, vb. (bef. 12c) 1. To incline or tend in opinion or preference. A court is sometimes said to "learn toward" or "learn against" an advocate's position, meaning that the court regards that position favorably or unfavorably. 2. To yield; to submit.

learned, adj. (14c) 1. Having a great deal of learning; erudite. A lawyer might refer to an adversary as a "learned colleague" or "learned opponent" — a comment that, depending on the situation and tone of voice, may be either a genuine compliment or a sarcastic slight. 2. Well-versed in the law and its history. Statutes sometimes require that judges be "learned in the law," a phrase commonly construed as meaning that they must have earned a law degree and been admitted to the bar.

learned intermediary. See informed intermediary under intermediary.

learned-intermediary doctrine. The principle that a prescription-drug manufacturer fulfills its duty to warn of a drug's potentially harmful effects by informing the prescribing physician, rather than the end-user, of those effects. [Cases: Products Liability C-136.]

learned-treatise rule. (1946) Evidence. An exception to the hearsay rule, by which a published text may be established as authoritative, either by expert testimony or by judicial notice. Under the Federal Rules of Evidence, a statement in a published treatise, periodical, or pamphlet on sciences or arts (such as history or medicine) can be established as authoritative — and thereby admitted into evidence for the purpose of examining or cross-examining an expert witness — by expert testimony or by the court's taking judicial notice of the authoritative nature or reliability of the text. If the statement is admitted into evidence, it may be read into the trial record, but it may not be received as an exhibit. Fed. R. Evid. 803(18). [Cases: Criminal Law C-439; Evidence C-363.]

lease, n. (14c) 1. A contract by which a rightful possessor of real property conveys the right to use and occupy the property in exchange for consideration, usu. rent. The lease term can be for life, for a fixed period, or for a period terminable at will. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant C-20.] 2. Such a conveyance plus all covenants attached to it. 3. The written instrument memorializing such a conveyance and its covenants. Also termed lease agreement; lease contract. 4. The piece of real property so conveyed. 5. A contract by which the rightful possessor of personal property conveys the right to use that property in exchange for consideration. [Cases: Bailment C-1.]

assignable lease. (1915) A lease that the lessee can transfer to a successor. See sublease. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant C-74.] building lease. A long-term lease of land that includes a covenant to erect or alter a building or other improvement. Cf. ground lease. [Cases: Estates in Property C-13.]

capital lease. See lease-purchase agreement.

commercial lease. (1909) A lease for business purposes. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ☞ 20.]

community lease. (1919) A lease in which a number of lessors owning interests in separate tracts execute a lease in favor of a single lessee.

concurrent lease. (1946) A lease that begins before a previous lease ends, entitling the new lessee to be paid all rents that accrue on the previous lease after the new lease begins, and to remedies against the holding tenant.

"A landlord who has granted a lease may nevertheless grant another lease of the same land for all or some of the period of the first lease. The second lease does not deprive the lessee under the first lease of the right to possession of the property, but is, in reality, a lease of the reversion. Because the two leases operate concurrently during at least some part of their respective durations, they are known as 'concurrent leases.'" Peter Butt, Land Law 233 (2d ed. 1988).

durable lease. (1816) A lease that reserves a rent payable annually, usu. with a right of reentry for nonpayment.

descent lease. [Cases: Estates in Property ☞ 20.]

financial lease. (1966) A fixed-term lease used by a business to finance capital equipment. • The lessor's service is usu. limited to financing the asset, and the lessee pays maintenance costs and taxes and has the option of purchasing the asset at lease-end for a nominal price. Finance leases strongly resemble security agreements and are written almost exclusively by financial institutions as a way to help a commercial customer obtain an expensive capital item that the customer might not otherwise be able to afford. UCC § 2A-103(1)(g). — Also termed full payout lease; tripartite lease. [Cases: Bailment ☞ 2.]

"By carving out the 'finance lease' for special treatment, the drafters of Article 2A have recognized a distinct species of lease that is written almost exclusively by financial institutions and — although treated as a true lease — does not normally carry with it certain of the responsibilities that the typical lessor bears under Article 2A." 2 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 13-3, at 4 (4th ed. 1995).

"A finance lease is the product of a three-party transaction. The supplier manufactures or supplies the goods pursuant to the lessee's specification, perhaps even pursuant to a purchase order, sales agreement, or lease agreement between the supplier and the lessor. After the prospective finance lease is negotiated, a purchase order, sales agreement, or lease agreement is entered into by the lessor (as buyer or prime lessor) or an existing order, agreement, or lease is assigned by the lessee to the lessor, and the lessor and the lessee then enter into a lease or sublease of the goods. Due to the limited function usually performed by the lessor, the lessee looks almost entirely to the supplier for representations, covenants, and warranties. If a manufacturer's warranty carries through, the lessee may also look to that. Yet, this definition does not restrict the lessor's function solely to the supply of funds; if the lessor undertakes or performs other functions, express warranties, covenants, and the common law will protect the lessee." UCC § 2A-102 cmt. at 14-15 (Proposed Final Draft, 30 Apr. 1999).

full-service lease. (1967) A lease in which the lessor agrees to pay all maintenance expenses, insurance premiums, and property taxes. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ☞ 148(1), 156.] graduated lease. (1930) A lease in which rent varies depending on future contingencies, such as operating expenses or gross income.

gross lease. (1939) A lease in which the lessee pays a flat amount for rent, out of which the lessor pays all the expenses (such as fuel, water, and electricity). ground lease. (1840) A long-term (usu. 99-year) lease of land only. • Such a lease typically involves commercial property, and any improvements built by the lessee usu. revert to the lessor. — Also termed ground-rent lease; land lease. [Cases: Estates in Property ☞ 13.]

headlease. See headlease.

index lease. A lease that provides for increases in rent according to the changes in the consumer price index. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ☞ 200.7.]

land lease. See ground lease.

leveraged lease. (1972) A lease that is collateral for the loan through which the lessor acquired the leased asset, and that provides the lender's only recourse for nonpayment of the debt; a lease in which a creditor provides nonrecourse financing to the lessor (who has substantial leverage in the property) and in which the lessor's net investment in the lease, apart from nonrecourse financing, declines during the early years and increases in later years. — Also termed third-party equity lease; tax lease.

master lease. (1935) A contract that establishes a leasehold's basic terms and conditions applicable to all related contracts for rental properties.

mineral lease. A lease in which the lessee has the right to explore for and extract oil, gas, or other minerals. • The rent usu. is based on the amount or value of the minerals extracted. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ☞ 56-81.]

mining lease. A lease of a mine or mining claim, in which the lessee has the right to work the mine or claim, usu. with conditions on the amount and type of work to be done. • The lessor is compensated with either fixed rent or royalties based on the amount of ore mined. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ☞ 62-71.]

month-to-month lease. (1914) A tenancy with no written contract. • Rent is paid monthly, and usu. one month's notice by the landlord or tenant is required to terminate the tenancy. See periodic tenancy under tenancy. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ☞ 113.]
net lease. A lease in which the lessee pays rent plus property expenses (such as taxes and insurance).

net-net-net lease. A lease in which the lessee pays all the expenses, including mortgage interest and amortization, leaving the lessor with an amount free of all claims. — Also termed triple net lease.

oil-and-gas lease. (1892) A lease granting the right to extract oil and gas from a specified piece of land. • Although called a “lease,” this interest is typically considered a determinable fee in the minerals rather than a grant of possession for a term of years. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⊕73–81.]

operating lease. A lease of property (esp. equipment) for a term that is shorter than the property’s useful life. • Under an operating lease, the lessor is typically responsible for paying taxes and other expenses on the property. Cf. capital lease; lease-purchase agreement.

or lease. Oil & gas. A mineral lease with a drilling-delay rental clause structured so that the lessee promises to start drilling operations or to pay delay rentals from time to time during the primary term. • If the lessee fails to do one or the other, the lease does not automatically terminate, but the lessee is liable for the delay-rental amount.

parol lease (pə-rəl or par-əl). A lease based on an oral agreement; an unwritten lease. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⊕23.]

percentage lease. A lease in which the rent is based on a percentage of gross (or net) sales or profits, typically with a set minimum rent. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⊕200.1.]

perpetual lease. 1. An ongoing lease not limited in duration. 2. A grant of lands in fee with a reservation of a rent in fee; a fee farm. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⊕87.]

perpetual renewable lease. Hist. A lease that a tenant may renew for another period as often as it expires, usu. by making a payment upon exercising the right. • In 1922, this type of lease was effectively abolished in England by the Law of Property Act, which provided for the conversion of existing and future perpetually renewable leases to term-of-years leases, and set the maximum term at 2000 years.

proprietary lease. A lease between a cooperative apartment association and a tenant.

reversionary lease. A lease that will take effect when a prior lease terminates.

sandwich lease. (1976) A lease in which the lessee subleases the property to a third party, esp. for more rent than under the original lease.

short lease. (17c) A lease of brief duration, often less than six months.

sublease. See sublease.

synthetic lease. A method for financing the purchase of real estate, whereby the lender creates a special-purpose entity that buys the property and then leases it to the ultimate user (usu. a corporation). • A synthetic lease is treated as a loan for tax purposes and as an operating lease for accounting purposes, so that the “lessee” can deduct the property’s depreciation and the loan’s interest yet keep both the asset and the debt off its balance sheet.

tax lease. 1. The instrument or estate given to the purchaser of land at a tax sale when the law does not permit the sale of an estate in fee for nonpayment of taxes but instead directs the sale of an estate for years. 2. See leveraged lease.

third-party equity lease. See leveraged lease.

timber lease. (1853) A real-property lease that contemplates that the lessee will cut timber on the leased premises. [Cases: Logs and Logging ⊕3.]

top lease. Oil & gas. A lease granted on property already subject to an oil-and-gas lease. • Generally, any rights granted by a top lease grants are valid only if the existing lease ends. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⊕56, 73.]

triple net lease. See net-net-net lease.

“unless” lease. Oil & gas. An oil-and-gas lease with a drilling-delay rental clause structured as a special limitation to the primary term. • Unless delay rentals are paid or drilling operations are started from time to time as specified, an “unless” lease automatically terminates, and the lessee has no liability for its failure to perform. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⊕78.13(9).]

lease, vb. (16c) 1. To grant the possession and use of (land, buildings, rooms, movable property, etc.) to another in return for rent or other consideration <the city leased the stadium to the football team>. [Cases: Bailment ⊕1; Landlord and Tenant ⊕20.] 2. To take a lease of; to hold by a lease <Carol leased the townhouse from her uncle>.

lease and release. Hist. A method of transferring seisin without livery, whereby the owner and the transferee would enter into a lease for a term of years, to take effect only when the transferee entered the property, whereupon the owner would release all interest in the property to the transferee by written instrument. • Once the transferee owned both the term and the freehold interest, the two interests would merge to form one estate in fee simple. This lease-and-release procedure was fully acceptable to the courts, on the theory that livery of seisin to one already occupying the land was unnecessary.

leaseback, n. (1947) The sale of property on the understanding, or with the express option, that the seller may lease the property from the buyer immediately upon the sale. — Also termed sale and leaseback; sale-leaseback. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⊕1.]

lease for life. Hist. A lease of land for the duration of a specified number of lives instead of for a specified term of years. • Unlike a tenant for a term of years, a lessee for life could recover the land if dispossessed. The rent payable was usually fairly small, but a fine was paid when the lease was granted; a further fine was payable when, on the termination of the lives, the tenant exercised the right the lease gave him to replace them and so extend the lease. If the lessor was a corporation such as a monastery or college, the fines were treated as income by the then members of the corporation, to the disadvantage of their successors. Leases for life finally lost their popularity when legislation in the first half of the nineteenth century compelled corporations to add such fines to their capital.

lease for years. See tenancy for a term under tenancy.

leasehold, n. (18c) A tenant's possessory estate in land or premises, the four types being the tenancy for years, the periodic tenancy, the tenancy at will, and the tenancy at sufferance. • Although a leasehold has some of the characteristics of real property, it has historically been classified as a chattel real. — Also termed leasehold estate; leasehold interest. See tenancy. Cf. frehold. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant C=-70, 113, 117.]

leaseholder royalty. See landowner's royalty under royalty (2).

leasehold improvements. (1845) Beneficial changes to leased property (such as a parking lot or driveway) made by or for the benefit of the lessee. • The phrase is used in a condemnation proceeding to determine the share of compensation to be allocated to the lessee.

leasehold interest. (18c) 1. LEASEHOLD; esp., for purposes of eminent domain, the lessee's interest in the lease itself, measured by the difference between the total remaining rent and the rent the lessee would pay for similar space for the same period. [Cases: Eminent Domain C=-147.] 2. A lessor's or lessee's interest under a lease contract. UCC § 2A-103. [Cases: Bailment C=-7.3, working interest. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant C=-20.]

leasehold mortgage. See mortgage.

leasehold-mortgage bond. See bond (3).

leasehold royalty. See landowner's royalty under royalty (2).

leasehold value. The value of a leasehold interest. • This term usu. applies to a long-term lease when the rent paid under the lease is lower than current market rates. Some states permit the lessee to claim the leasehold interest from the landlord in a condemnation proceeding, unless the lease prohibits such a claim. Other states prohibit these claims by statute. See leasehold interest; no-bonus clause.

lease insurance. See insurance.

lease-lend. See lend-lease.

lease option. See option.

lease-purchase agreement. (1939) A rent-to-own purchase plan under which the buyer takes possession of the goods with the first payment and takes ownership with the final payment; a lease of property (esp. equipment) by which ownership of the property is transferred to the lessee at the end of the lease term. • Such a lease is usu. treated as an installment sale. Under a capital lease, the lessee is responsible for paying taxes and other expenses on the property. — Also termed lease-to-purchase agreement; hire-purchase agreement; capital lease. Cf. operating lease under lease. [Cases: Bailment C=-22; Sales C=-5.] lease with an option to purchase. See lease option under option.

least-intrusive-means doctrine. (1978) A doctrine requiring the government to exhaust all other investigatory means before seeking sensitive testimony, as by compelling an attorney to testify before a grand jury on matters that may be protected by the attorney-client privilege.

least-intrusive-remedy doctrine. (1989) The rule that a legal remedy should provide the damaged party with appropriate relief, without unduly penalizing the opposing party or the jurisdiction's legal system, as by striking only the unconstitutional portion of a challenged statute while leaving the rest intact. [Cases: Statutes C=-64(1).] least-restrictive educational environment. See least-restrictive environment.

least-restrictive environment. Under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, the school setting that, to the greatest extent appropriate, educates a disabled child together with children who are not disabled. 20 USCA § 1412(5). — Also termed least-restrictive-educational environment. Cf. mainstreaming. [Cases: Schools C=-148(2).]

least-restrictive-means test. (1972) The rule that a law or governmental regulation should be crafted in a way that will protect individual civil liberties as much as possible and should be only as restrictive as necessary to accomplish a legitimate governmental purpose.

legal consideration. See valuable consideration under CONSIDERATION (1).

legal correlative. A legal status that has a corresponding or reciprocal status, such as a right that corresponds to a duty. • Wesley Newcomb Hohfeld of Yale Law School first introduced the bases for the concept of legal correlatives in two articles published in the Yale Law Journal in 1913 and 1917. He polished the concept in the book Fundamental Legal Conceptions, as Applied in Judicial Reasoning and Other Legal Essays, published posthumously in 1919.

"Rights and duties have a distinct relationship and are called legal correlatives by Hohfeld. In terms of intellectual property, the right is a right to do certain things, such as making copies of a work of copyright, making articles to a design covered by a design right, or making products in accordance with a patented invention. The correlative duty is a duty owed by all others not to infringe the right. This duty exists even if the person infringing the right does not know of it. Looking at Hohfeld's scheme again, it can be seen that there are associated privileges and 'no rights.' The right resulting from the operation of intellectual property gives the owner of that right a corresponding privilege, that is the privilege to exploit the work. The correlative 'no right' is to the effect that persons other than the owner do not have this privilege." David Bainbridge, Intellectual Property 11 (5th ed. 2002).

legal ethics. (1828) 1. Standards of professional conduct applicable to members of the legal profession. • Ethical rules consist primarily of the ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct and the earlier ABA Model Code of Professional Responsibility, together with related regulatory judgments and opinions. The Model Rules of Professional Conduct have been enacted into law, often in a modified form, in most states. 2. The study of such standards. 3. A lawyer's practical observance of or conformity to established standards of professional conduct. See MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT. [Cases: Attorney and Client <32(2).]

"In one sense, the term 'legal ethics' refers narrowly to the system of professional regulations governing the conduct of lawyers. In a broader sense, however, legal ethics is simply a special case of ethics in general, as ethics is understood in the central traditions of philosophy and religion. From this broader perspective, legal ethics cuts more deeply than legal regulation: it concerns the fundamentals of our moral lives as lawyers." Deborah L. Rhode & David Luban, Legal Ethics 3 (1992).

legal etiquette. The professional courtesy that lawyers have traditionally observed in their professional conduct, shown through civility and a strong sense of honor. — Also termed etiquette of the profession.

legalis homo (la-gay-lis ho-hoh-moh). [Latin "lawful man"] Hist. A person who has full legal capacity and full legal rights; one who has not been deprived of any rights in court by outlawry, excommunication, or infamy. • A legalis homo was said to stand rectus in curia ("right in court"). A lawful man was able to serve as a juror and to swear an oath. Pl. legales homines (la-gay-leez ho-mee-neez). — Also termed legal man; lawful man; lageman; liber et legalis homo. See rectus in curia.

legalism, n. (1928) 1. Formalism carried almost to the point of meaninglessness; an inclination to exalt the importance of law or formulated rules in any area of action.

2. A mode of expression characteristic of lawyers; a jargonistic phrase characteristic of lawyers, such as "pursuant to."

legal issue. See issue (1).

legalist. n. (1829) A person who views things from a legal or formalistic standpoint; esp., one who believes in strict adherence to the letter of the law rather than its spirit.

legalistic, adj. (17c) Characterized by legalism; exalting the importance of law or formulated rules in any area of action

legality. (15c) 1. Strict adherence to law, prescription, or doctrine; the quality of being legal. 2. The principle that a person may not be prosecuted under a criminal law that has not been previously published. — Also termed (in sense 2) principle of legality.

legalize, vb. (18c) 1. To make lawful; to authorize or justify by legal sanction <the bill to legalize marijuana never made it to the Senate floor.> 2. To imbue with the spirit of the law; to make legalistic <as religions age, they tend to become legalized.> — legalization, n.

legal malice. See implied malice under MALICE.

legal malpractice. See MALPRACTICE.

legal man. See LEGALIS HOMO.

legal memory. (1882) The period during which a legal right or custom can be determined or established. ● Traditionally, common-law legal memory began in the year 1189, but in 1540 it became a steadily moving period of 60 years. Cf. TIME INMEMORIAL (1).

"Because of the importance to feudal landholders of seisin and of real property in general, the writ of right has been called 'the most solemn of all actions.' Nevertheless, it was believed that the time within which such a complainant would be allowed to prove an ancestor to have been seised of the estate in question must be limited. At first this was done by selecting an arbitrary date in the past, before which 'legal memory' would not run. The date initially was Dec. 1, 1135 (the death of Henry II); in 1236 it was changed by statute to Dec. 19, 1154 (the coronation of Henry II); and in 1275 it became Sept. 3, 1189 (the coronation of Richard I). Finally, in 1540, an arbitrary period of sixty years was set as the period of 'legal memory.' The latter change was probably made because it was felt that a 350-year statute of limitations was somewhat awkward." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 45 n.65 (2d ed. 1984).

legal mind. (18c) The intellect, legal capacities, and attitudes of a well-trained lawyer — often used as a personified being <although this distinction occurs naturally to the legal mind, it is too technical to be satisfactory>.

legal moralism. (1963) The theory that a government or legal system may prohibit conduct that is considered immoral.

legal mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

legal owner. See OWNER.

legal parent. See PARENT (1).

legal paternalism. (1913) The theory that a government or legal system is justified in controlling the individual and private affairs of citizens. ● This theory is often associated with legal positivists. See PATERNALISM; LEGAL POSITIVISM.

legal person. See artificial person under PERSON (3).

legal personality. See PERSONALITY (1).

legal—personal representative. See REPRESENTATIVE.

legal philosophy. See general jurisprudence (2) under JURISPRUDENCE.

legal pneuconiosis. See PNEUMOCONIOSIS.

legal portion. See LEGITIME.

legal positivism, n. (1939) The theory that legal rules are valid only because they are enacted by an existing political authority or accepted as binding in a given society, not because they are grounded in morality or in natural law. ● Legal positivism has been espoused by such scholars as H.L.A. Hart. See POSITIVE LAW. Cf. LOGICAL POSITIVISM. — legal positivist, n.

"[I]t will be helpful to offer some comparisons between legal positivism and its counterpart in science. Scientific positivism confines any inquiry projecting itself beyond observable phenomena; it abjures metaphysics; it renounces in advance any explanation in terms of ultimate causes. Its program of research is to chart the regularities discernible in the phenomena of nature at the point where they become open to human observation, without asking — as it were — how they got there. In the setting of limits to inquiry there is an obvious parallel between scientific and legal positivism. The legal positivist concentrates his attention on law at the point where it emerges from the institutional processes that brought it into being. It is the finally made law itself that furnishes the subject of his inquiries. How it was made and what directions of human effort went into its creation are for him irrelevancies." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 177-78 (1968).

legal possessor. See POSSESSOR.

legal practice. See PRACTICE OF LAW.

legal practitioner. 1. A lawyer. 2. In the traditional English system, a member of one of the recognized branches of practice.

"Legal practitioners may be either barristers, special pleaders not at the bar, certified conveyancers, or solicitors. The three latter may recover their fees, but the first may not, their acting being deemed of a voluntary nature, and their fees merely in the light of honorary payments; and it follows from this, that no action lies against them for negligence or unskilfulness." John Indermaur, Principles of the Common Law 169 (Edmund H. Bennett ed., 1st Am. ed. 1878).

legal prejudice. See PREJUDICE.
legal presumption. See presumption of law under presumption.

Legal Writing Institute. A nonprofit corporation founded in 1984 to promote the exchange of information and ideas about the teaching of legal writing. • It is composed mainly of legal-writing teachers at American law schools. Like its sister organization, the Association of Legal Writing Directors, it seeks to improve the teaching of legal writing through research and scholarship, a biennial conference, an annual survey of legal-writing programs, an active listserv, and publications that include a journal called Legal Writing. — Abbr. LWI.

legal wrong. See wrong.

legantine. See legatine.

legare (la-gair-ee), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To bequeath one or more specified items to some person other than an heir, or to make such a bequest to an heir in advance of the estate’s division between the heirs.

legatarius (leg-a-tair-ee-as), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. The person to whom property is bequeathed; the named recipient of a legatum; legatee. 2. Hist. A legate; a messenger or envoy. See legate. Pl. legatarii.

legatary (leg-a-ter-ee), n. Archaic. See legatee.

legate (leg it), n. [fr. Latin legare “to send as an envoy”] (12c) 1. Roman law. An official who undertakes a special mission for the emperor, or an official or body such as a municipality. 2. Roman law. A person deputed to assist

legate a latere (ay lat ə ree). See legatus a latere under LEGATUS.

legate missus (mis-əs). See legatus missus under LEGATUS.

legate natus (nay-təs). See legatus natus under LEGATUS.

4. A representative of a state or the highest authority in a state; an ambassador; a person commissioned to represent a country in a foreign country. — Also termed legatus. — legatine, adj.

legate (la-gayt), vb. To give or leave as a legacy; to make a testamentary gift of (property); BEQUEATH.

general legatee. A person whose bequest is of a specified quantity to be paid out of the estate's personal assets. [Cases: Wills 1875–1756.] residuary legatee (ri-zij-oo-er-e). (18c) A person designated to receive the residue of a decedent's estate. See residuary estate under ESTATE (3). [Cases: Wills 1853, 1754.]

specific legatee. (18c) The recipient, under a will, of designated property that is transferred by the owner's death. [Cases: Wills 1753, 1754.]

universal legatee. A residuary legatee that receives the entire residuary estate.

legatine (leg-ə-teen or -tə-n), adj. Or of relating to a legate. — Also termed (erroneously) legantine.

legatine constitution. Hist. Eccles. law. A code of ecclesiastical laws issued with the authority of a papal legate, such as those enacted in English national synods in 1220 and 1268.

legatine court. See COURT.

legation (la-gay-shən). (14c) Int'l law. 1. The act or practice of sending a diplomat to another country; a diplomatic mission. 2. A body of diplomats sent to a foreign country and headed by an envoy extraordinary or a minister plenipotentiary. 3. The official residence of a diplomatic minister in a foreign country. Cf. EMBASSY.

legator (la-gay-tər or leg-a-tər), n. Rare. One who bequeaths a legacy; testator.

legatory (leg-ə-tor-e). n. Hist. The one-third portion of a freeman's estate in land that he could dispose of by will. • The other two portions of the estate were subject to claims of the wife and children.

legatum (la-gay-təm), n. [Latin fr. legare “to bequeath”]

1. Roman law. A special bequest; a gift left by a deceased person to be paid from the estate by the heir. • Unlike an heir, a legatee acquired a benefit and no duties attached.

2. Hist. A legacy or bequest to the church, esp. for tithes not paid while the donor lived. See MORTUARY.

legatum debiti (la-gay-təm deb-a-ti). [Latin “legacy of debt”] Roman law. A legacy to the decedent's creditor of what the decedent owes. • This type of legacy was void unless it bettered the creditor's position in some way, as by removing a valid defense that the debtor had to the creditor's claim.

legatum dotis (la-gay-təm doh-tis). [Latin] Roman law. A legacy of dowry. • A husband might bequeath a dowry back to his wife, the result being that the husband's heirs were not entitled to retain the usual deductions for children, and the widow could receive her dowry immediately.

legatum generis (la-gay-təm jen-a-ri). [Latin “legacy of a genus”] Roman law. A legacy of a subject of a general class; a legacy of a kind of thing, rather than a specifically named item. • For example, the testator might make a gift of a horse without specifically naming which one of ten horses in the estate.

“Legatum, generis . . . Normally the testator set in his testament who had to make the choice from among the things of the same kind (slaves, horses) belonging to the estate, the heir, the legatee or a third person. The jurists did not agree about the solution when . . . the testator did not entitle any person to make the selection. Apparently the rules varied according to the form in which such a legacy (legatum) was left. The Justinian law favored the choice by the legatee.” Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 540 (1953).

legatum liberationis (la-gay-təm lib-a-ray-shee-oh-nis). [Latin “legacy of a discharge”] Roman law. A legacy by which a testator released the indebted legatee from a debt. — Also termed liberatio legata (lib-a-ray-shee-oh la-gay-təm).

legatum nominis (la-gay-təm nahm-a-nis). [Latin “legacy of a name”] Roman law. A legacy by which a testator willed to the legatee a debt owed to the testator from a third party. • The heir was obliged to hand over the relevant documents and cede any rights of action on them.

legatum optionis (la-gay-təm op-shee-oh-nis). [Latin “legacy of an option”] Roman law. A legacy of one of several items that the designated beneficiary chooses from the testator's estate. • Originally, if the legatee died after the testator but before making the selection, the legacy failed. Justinian later changed the law to make selection by the legatee's representative under these circumstances valid.

legatum peculii (la-gay-təm pi-kyoo-lee-ti). [Latin] Roman law. A legacy of a peculium to a free person or to a manumitted slave; a legacy of a slave's peculium with or without the slave. See PECULIUM.

legatum quantitatis (la-gay-təm kwon-ti-tay-ti). [Latin “a legacy of quantity”] Roman law. A general legacy of a certain amount, such as a legacy of two horses.

legatum rei alienae (la-gay-tam rey-ay-lee-ee-neer or al-ee-). [Latin “a legacy of something belonging to another”] Roman law. A legacy of an item that belongs to a third party. • The heir was obliged to purchase the item from the third party, if that was possible, and give it to the legatee or otherwise pay its value to the legatee.

legatus (la-gay-tas), n. A legate. Pl. legati (la-gay-ti) See LEGATE.

legatus a latere (ay lat-a-ree). [Latin "legate from the (Popes') side"] A papal legate (esp. a cardinal) appointed for a special diplomatic mission and not as a permanent representative. • This is a type of legatus missus. — Also termed legate a latere. Cf. nuncio.

legatus datus (day-tas). See legatus missus.

legatus missus (mis-as). [Latin “legate sent”] A legate sent on a special mission. — Also termed legatus datus; legatus datus missus. — Also termed legate sent. — Also termed legate born. A bishop or archbishop who claims to be a legate by virtue of office in an important see, such as Canterbury. — Also termed legate born.

legem amittere (lee-jem a-mit-ree), vb. [Latin “to lose one’s law”] Hist. To lose the privilege of taking an oath, usu. because of a criminal conviction.

legem facere (lee-jem fay-sa-ree), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To make an oath; to wage law.

legem ferre (lee-jem fer-ee), vb. [Latin “to carry the proposal”] Roman law. 1. To propose a law to the popular assembly. 2. To enact a law.

legem habere (lee-jem ha-beer-ee), vb. [Latin] Hist. To be able to testify under oath. • In England, witnesses with criminal convictions were unable to testify until the 19th century, by the Evidence Act of 1843 (6 & 7 Vict., ch. 85).

legem jubere (lee-jem ja-beer-ee), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To pass a proposed law.

legem sciscere (lee-jem sis-a-ree), vb. [Latin] Roman law. (Of the people) to consent to a proposed law.

legem vadiare (lee-jem vad-ee-air-ee), vb. [Latin] Hist. To wage law; to offer to make a sworn account to an action for debt, accompanied by 11 neighbors as character witnesses. See compurgation.

legenita. See lairewrite.

leger, n. Archaic. See ledger (2).

leges (lee-jeex), n. pl. [Latin] 1. See lex. 2. See leges publicae.

leges barbarorum (lee-jeex bahr-bor-am). [Latin “laws of the barbarians”] Hist. The customary laws of medieval European law; esp., the customary laws of Germanic tribes during the Middle Ages. • These include the lex romana Visigothorum, the lex Burgundionum, and the lex Salica. — Also termed folk laws. See SALIC LAW.

“Many of the conquering Germanic tribes sought to state their own tribal customs in writing. Several of these so-called codes or leges barbarorum were published from time to time shortly after the fall of the Western Empire in the middle of the fifth century until about the time of Charlemagne, 800. The most famous is a Frankish one, the Lex Salica, which probably dates from the second half of the fifth century.” W.J. Windeyer, Lectures on Legal History 1 (2d ed. 1949).

leges centuriae. See LEX CENTURIATA.

leges curiae. See LEX CURIATA.

leges de imperio. See LEGES IMPERII.

“[W]e have a book [leges Edwardi Confessoris] written in Latin which expressly purports to give us the law of Edward as it was stated to the Conqueror in the fourth year of his reign by juries representing the various parts of England. ... It is a private work of a bad and untrustworthy kind. It has about it something of the political pamphlet and is adorned with pious legends. The author, perhaps a secular clerk of French parentage, writes in the interest of the churches, and, it is to be feared, tells lies for them.”

1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 103 (2d ed. 1898).

leges et consuetudines regni (lee-jeex et kon-swa-tay-nee), n. [Latin “laws and customs of the kingdom”] Hist. The common law. • This was the accepted term for the common law since at least the late 12th century.

leges Henrici (lee-jeex hen-ri-si), n. [Latin] Hist. A book anonymously written between 1114 and 1118 containing Anglo-Saxon and Norman law. • The book lends insight to the period before the full development of Norman law in England. — Also termed leges Henrici Primi.

‘Closely connected with the Quadripartitus is a far more important book, the so-called Leges Henrici. It seems to have been compiled shortly before the year 1118. After a brief preface, it gives us Henry’s coronation charter (this accounts for the name which has unfortunately been given in modern days to the whole book), and then the author makes a gallant, if forlorn, attempt to state the law of England. At first sight the outcome seems to be a mere jumble of fragments. ... But the more closely we examine the book, the more thoroughly convinced we shall be that its author has undertaken a serious task in a serious spirit; he means to state the existing law of the land ...’

leges Juliae (lee-jeez joo-lee-ee). See lex Julia judiciorum publicorum under lex Julia.

leges publicae (lee-jeez pau-blee-see). [Latin] Roman law. Statutes passed by the vote of the Roman people in popular assemblies. • Most leges publicae were of temporary political interest but some, such as the lex Aquilia or the lex Falcidia, had a long life. — Often shortened to leges.

leges sacrae (lee-jeez sa-kray-tee). [Latin] Roman law. Laws whose violation was punished by devoting the offender to the infernal gods.

leges scriptae (lee-jeez skrip-tee), n. [Latin] Hist. Written laws; esp., statutory laws or acts of Parliament that are reduced to writing before becoming binding. Cf. leges non scriptae.

leges sub graviori lege (lee-jeez sub gray-ee-or-ee-lee-ee). [Latin] Laws under a weightier law.

legibus solutus (lee-ja-bas sa-loo-tas), adj. [Latin] "released from the laws" Roman law. (Of the emperor or other designated person) not bound by the law.

legis actio (lee-jis ak-shee-oh). Roman law. A legal or lawful action; an action at law requiring the use of a fixed form of words. • These actions were abolished by the leges Juliae. — Also termed actio legis. Pl. legis actiones (lee-jis ak-shee-oh-neez).

legis actio sacramento. See sacramento.

legislate, vb. (180) 1. To make or enact laws <the role of our lawmakers is to legislate, not to adjudicate>. 2. To bring (something) into or out of existence by making laws; to attempt to control (something) by legislation <virtually every attempt to legislate morality has failed>.

legislation. (17c) 1. The process of making or enacting a positive law in written form, according to some type of formal procedure, by a branch of government constituted to perform this process. — Also termed lawmaking; statute-making. 2. The law so enacted. 3. The whole body of enacted laws.

ancillary legislation. (1860) Legislation that is auxiliary to principal legislation.

antideficiency legislation. 1. Legislation enacted to provide revenue to cover a budget deficiency. 2. Legislation enacted to limit the rights of secured creditors to recover in excess of the security. — Also termed (in sense 2) antideficiency statute.

bare-bones legislation. See skeletal legislation.

class legislation. See local and special legislation.

general legislation. (18c) Legislation that applies to the community at large. [Cases: Statutes C→68.]

judicial legislation. (18c) The making of new legal rules by judges; judge-made law (2).

local and special legislation. (1853) Legislation that affects only a specific geographic area or a particular class of persons. • Such legislation is unconstitutional if it arbitrarily or capriciously distinguishes between members of the same class. — Also termed class legis­lation. [Cases: Statutes C→76–104.] pork-barrel legislation. (1961) Legislation that favors a particular local district by allocating funds or resources to projects (such as constructing a highway or a post office) of economic value to the district and of political advantage to the district’s legislator.

skeletal legislation. Basic legislation that broadly states objectives and standards rather than prescribing precise and definite rules, usu. with the expectation that it will be amplified by a body other than the legislature. • Administrative and regulatory agencies are usu. authorized to interpret the legislation and create rules and regulations for its application and enforcement. But the executive branch may also be called upon to flesh out the law. — Also termed skeleton legislation; bare-bones legislation.

subordinate legislation. (18c) 1. Legislation that derives from any authority other than the sovereign power in a state and that therefore depends for its continued existence and validity on some superior or supreme authority. 2. Regulation (3).

supreme legislation. (17c) Legislation that derives directly from the supreme or sovereign power in a state and is therefore incapable of being repealed, annulled, or controlled by any other legislative authority.

4. A proposed law being considered by a legislature <gun-control legislation was debated in the House>. 5. The field of study concentrating on statutes.

legislatice, adj. Of or relating to lawmaking or to the power to enact laws. legislative branch. (18c) The branch of government responsible for enacting laws; legislature. Cf. executive branch; judicial branch.

legislative committee. See committee.

legislative council. 1. A state agency that studies legislative problems and plans legislative strategy between regular legislative sessions. 2. In some English-speaking jurisdictions, the upper house of a legislature (corresponding to an American Senate). 3. In some English-speaking jurisdictions, the lower house of a legislature (corresponding to an American House of Representatives).

legislative counsel. (1839) A person or group charged with helping legislators fulfill their legislative duties, such as by performing research, drafting bills, and the like.

legislative court. See court.

legislative district. See district.

legislative districting. (1962) The process of dividing a state into territorial districts to be represented in the state or federal legislature. See apportionment (3); reapportionment; gerrymandering. Cf. malapportionment. [Cases: States C=27.]

legislative divorce. See divorce.

legislative-equivalency doctrine. (2003) The rule that a law should be amended or repealed only by the same procedures that were used to enact it. [Cases: Statutes C=129, 149.] legislative fact. See fact.

legislative function. 1. The duty to determine legislative policy. 2. The duty to form and determine future rights and duties. See legislative power.

legislative history. (1844) The background and events leading to the enactment of a statute, including hearings, committee reports, and floor debates. Legislative history is sometimes recorded so that it can later be used to aid in interpreting the statute. [Cases: Statutes C=216–217.4.] legislative immunity. See immunity (1).

legislative intent. (1812) The design or plan that the legislature had at the time of enacting a statute. — Also termed intention of the legislature; intent of the legislature; congressional intent; parliamentary intent. [Cases: Statutes C=181(1).]

"The intention of the legislature is a common but very slippery phrase, which, popularly understood, may signify anything from intention embodied in positive enactment to speculative opinion as to what the legislature probably would have meant, although there has been an omission to enact it. In a court of law or equity, what the legislature intended to be done or not to be done can only be legitimately ascertained from that which it has chosen to enact, either in express words or by reasonable and necessary implication." Saloman v. Saloman Co., [1897] A.C. 22, at 38 (as quoted in Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 36–37 (1976)).

dormant legislative intent. The intent that the legislature would have had if a given ambiguity, inconsistency, or omission had been called to the legislators' minds. — Sometimes shortened to dormant intent. — Also termed laten intent; latent intention.

legislative investigation. A formal inquiry conducted by a legislative body incident to its legislative authority. • A legislature has many of the same powers as a court to support a legislative inquiry, including the power to subpoena and cross-examine a witness and to hold a witness in contempt. [Cases: United States C=23.]

legitimacy. (17c) 1. Lawfulness. 2. The status of a person who is born within a lawful marriage or who acquires that status by later action of the parents; legal kinship between a child and its parent or parents. Cf. ILLEGENCy. [Cases: Children Out-of-Wedlock C 1.]

"In this age of equality, the question might fairly be asked whether a discussion of child support should even be concerned about 'legitimacy' and 'illegitimacy.' The answer is 'yes,' for several reasons. Most rules regarding child support were fashioned at a time when legitimacy was the precondition to full support entitlement and illegitimate paternity had only limited legal consequences. True, by U.S. Supreme Court doctrine, distinctions between 'legitimate' and 'illegitimate' children should no longer be maintainable, but many state statutes have not yet been adapted to this view. Distinctions on the basis of legitimacy, however unconstitutional, continue to be made." Harry D. Krause, Child Support in America (1981).

legitimacy presumption. See PREJmxION OF PATERNITY.

legitima gubernatio (la-jit-ə-ma g[ə]-bər-nə-nay-shee-oh). [Latin "lawful government"] See RRECTA GUBERNATIO.

legume. (17c) 1. A statute designed to protect a consumer who buys a substandard automobile, usu. by requiring the manufacturer or dealer either to replace the vehicle or to refund the full purchase price. • Almost all states have lemon laws in effect. — Also termed lemon protection. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation C 206.] 2. By extension, a statute designed to protect a consumer who buys any product of inferior quality. — Also termed (in sense 2) quality-of-products legislation.

Lemon test. (1971) A legal standard for judging the state's violation of the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment. • The Lemon test has most often been used in school-related cases. It employs a three-pronged test to determine the state’s action: (1) Does the state’s action have a religious purpose? (2) Does the state’s action have the primary effect of either promoting or inhibiting religion? (3) Does the state’s action create an “excessive entanglement” between church and state? Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 501, 91 S.Ct. 2105 (1971). In recent years, the Court has not overruled Lemon but has declined to apply it when deciding Establishment Clause cases.

le mort saisit le vivant doctrine ([le mor se-zee la veef]). [French “the dead seizes the living”] The principle requiring that there be no gap in the possession of a freehold estate in land, so that legal title vests immediately in the heirs upon the death of the person through whom they claim title. • The doctrine does not exclude unknown heirs or heirs absent at the date of death.

lend, vb. (bef. 12c) 1. To allow the temporary use of (something), sometimes in exchange for compensation, on condition that the thing or its equivalent be returned. 2. To provide (money) temporarily on condition of repayment, usu. with interest. [Cases: Contracts C—194.]

letter of attornment. A grantor’s letter to a tenant, stating that the leased property has been sold and directing the tenant to pay rent to the new owner. See attornment (1).

letter of comfort. See comfort letter.

letter of commitment. See commitment letter.

letter of comment. See deficiency letter.

letter of credence. Int’l law. A document that accredits a diplomat to the government of the country to which he or she is sent. — Abbr. I.C.; L/C. — Also termed letters of credence.

letter of credit. (17c) Commercial law. An instrument under which the issuer (usu. a bank), at a customer’s request, agrees to honor a draft or other demand for payment made by a third party (the beneficiary), as long as the draft or demand complies with specified conditions, and regardless of whether any underlying agreement between the customer and the beneficiary is satisfied. • Letters of credit are governed by Article 5 of the UCC. — Abbr. L.C.; L/C. — Often shortened to credit. — Also termed circular letter of credit; circular note; bill of credit. [Cases: Banks and Banking C= 191.]

“There is some confusion over the exact nature of credits. They resemble a number of commercial devices that are not credits. Often, there is confusion between letters of credit and guaranties, and occasionally between letters of credit and lines of credit. In the credit transaction itself, it is important to distinguish the credit from other contracts and from the acceptance. Generally, the broad credit transaction consists of three separate relationships. These include those that are (1) between the issuer and the beneficiary; (2) between the beneficiary and the account party; and (3) between the account party and the issuer. The first is the letter-of-credit engagement. The second is usually called the underlying contract, and the third is called the application agreement.” John F. Dolan, The Law of Letters of Credit ¶ 2.01, at 2-2 (1984).

“A seller hesitates to give up possession of its goods before it is paid. But a buyer wishes to have control of the goods before parting with its money. To relieve this simple tension, merchants developed the device known as the ‘letter of credit’ or simply the ‘credit’ or the ‘letter.’ Today, letters of credit come in two broad varieties. The ‘commercial’ letter dates back at least 700 years. It is a mode of payment in the purchase of goods, mostly in international sales. The ‘standby’ letter of credit is a much more recent mutant. It ‘backs up’ obligations in a myriad of settings. In the most common standby a bank promises to pay a creditor upon documentary certification of the applicant’s default.” 3 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 26-1, at 105 (4th ed. 1995).

clean letter of credit. A letter of credit that is payable on its presentation. • No document needs to be presented along with it. — Also termed suicide letter of credit. Cf. documentary letter of credit.

confirmed letter of credit. A letter of credit that directly obligates a financing agency (such as a bank) doing business in the seller’s financial market to a contract of sale. UCC § 2-325(3).

documentary letter of credit. A letter of credit that is payable when presented with another document, such as a certificate of title or invoice. — Abbr. D/L/C. Cf. clean letter of credit.

export letter of credit. A commercial letter of credit issued by a foreign bank, at a foreign buyer’s request, in favor of a domestic exporter.

general letter of credit. A letter of credit addressed to any and all persons without naming anyone in particular. Cf. special letter of credit.

guaranty letter of credit. See standby letter of credit.

import letter of credit. A commercial letter of credit issued by a domestic bank, at an importer’s request, in favor of a foreign seller.

irrevocable letter of credit (i-re-v-o-ka-bal). 1. A letter of credit that the issuing bank guarantees will not be withdrawn or canceled before the expiration date. 2. A letter of credit that cannot be modified or revoked without the customer’s consent. 3. A letter of credit that cannot be modified or canceled without the consent of all parties.

negotiation letter of credit. A letter of credit in which the issuer’s engagement runs to drawers and indorsers under a standard negotiation clause.

“Letter-of-credit law has long distinguished the straight credit from the negotiation credit. The engagement of the former runs to the beneficiary; the engagement of the latter runs to ‘drawers, endorsers, and bona fide holders.’ This quoted phrase is the traditional negotiation clause. The significance of it is that it obviously extends the credit engagement to parties other than the person with whom the account party is doing business.” John F. Dolan, The Law of Letters of Credit ¶ 8.02[6], at 8-11 (1984).

open letter of credit. A letter of credit that can be paid on a simple draft without the need for documentary title.

revocable letter of credit (rev-o-ka-bal). A letter of credit in which the issuing bank reserves the right to cancel and withdraw from the transaction upon appropriate notice. • The letter cannot be revoked if the credit has already been paid by a third party. [Cases: Banks and Banking C= 191.10] revolving letter of credit. A letter of credit that self-renews by providing for a continuing line of credit that the beneficiary periodically draws on and the bank customer periodically repays. • A revolving letter of credit is used when there will be multiple drafts under a single transaction or multiple transactions under a single credit. — Abbr. RL/C.

special letter of credit. A letter of credit addressed to a particular individual, firm, or corporation. Cf. general letter of credit.

standby letter of credit. A letter of credit used to guarantee either a monetary or a nonmonetary obligation (such as the performance of construction work), whereby the issuing bank agrees to pay the beneficiary if the bank customer defaults on its obligation. — Abbr. SL/C. — Also termed guaranty letter of credit. [Cases: Banks and Banking ☞ 191.10.]

straight letter of credit. A letter of credit requiring that drafts drawn under it be presented to a specified party.

suicide letter of credit. See clean letter of credit.

time letter of credit. A letter of credit that is duly honored by the issuer accepting drafts drawn under it. — Also termed acceptance credit; usance credit.

transferable letter of credit. A letter of credit that authorizes the beneficiary to assign the right to draw under it. [Cases: Banks and Banking ☞ 191.10.]

traveler's letter of credit. 1. A letter of credit addressed to a correspondent bank, from which one can draw credit by identifying oneself as the person in whose favor the credit is drawn. 2. A letter of credit used by a person traveling abroad, by which the issuing bank authorizes payment of funds to the holder in the local currency by a local bank. • The holder signs a check on the issuing bank, and the local bank forwards it to a correspondent bank, from which one can draw money. The holder signs a check on the local bank, and the local bank forwards it to a correspondent bank, from which one can draw money.

letter of exchange. See draft (1).

letter of intent. (1942) A written statement detailing the preliminary understanding of parties who plan to enter into a contract or some other agreement; a noncommittal writing preliminary to a contract. • A letter of intent is not meant to be binding and does not hinder the parties from bargaining with a third party. Business people typically mean not to be bound by a letter of intent, and courts ordinarily do not enforce one; but courts occasionally find that a commitment has been made. — Abbr. LOI. — Also termed memorandum of intent; memorandum of understanding; term sheet; commitment letter. Cf. precontract under CONTRACT. [Cases: Contracts ☞ 25.]

letter of license. English law. An agreement signed by all the creditors of a financially troubled business that does the following: (1) grants the debtor more time to pay debts, (2) permits the debtor to continue business in the hope of overcoming its financial distress, and (3) protects the debtor from arrest, lawsuit, or other interference while the letter is in effect. See ARRANGEMENT WITH CREDITORS.

letter of recall. 1. A document sent from one nation's executive to that of another, summoning a minister back to his or her own country. 2. A manufacturer's letter to a buyer of a particular product, asking the buyer to bring the product back to the dealer for repair or replacement. — Also termed recall letter.

letter of recredentials (ree-krä-den-shəlz). A formal letter from a host country's diplomatic secretary of state to a minister or ambassador who has been recalled by his or her own country. • The letter officially accredits the foreign minister back to his or her home country.

letter of request. 1. A document issued by one court to a foreign court, requesting that the foreign court (1) take evidence from a specific person within the foreign jurisdiction or serve process on an individual or corporation within the foreign jurisdiction and (2) return the testimony or proof of service for use in a pending case. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 28. — Also termed letter rogatory (rog-ə-tor-ee); rogatory letter; requisitory letter (ri-kwə-zə-tor-ee). Cf. COMMISSION TO EXAMINE A WITNESS. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ☞ 1312.]

2. An instrument by which an inferior court withdraws or waives jurisdiction so that a matter can be heard in the court immediately above. Pl. letters of request.

letter of the law. (17c) The strictly literal meaning of the law, rather than the intention or policy behind it. — Also termed litera legis. Cf. SPIRIT OF THE LAW. [Cases: Statutes ☞ 189.]

letter of undertaking. An agreement by which a shipowner — to avoid having creditors seize the ship and release it on bond — agrees to post security on the ship, and to enter an appearance, acknowledge ownership, and pay any final decree entered against the vessel whether it is lost or not. • A letter of undertaking is often issued by the shipowner's liability insurer. [Cases: Admiralty ☞ 57.]

Such informal or extra-legal agreements save court costs and the marshal's fees, avoid the annoyance of having the vessel even temporarily arrested and may well be cheaper than the usual surety bond. ... In Continental Grain Co. v. Federal Barge Lines, Inc., [268 F.2d 240 (5th Cir. 1959), aff'd, 364 U.S. 19, 80 S.Ct. 1470 (1960)], Judge Brown commented that a letter of undertaking given by a shipowner would be treated 'as though, upon the libel being filed, the vessel had actually been seized, a claim filed, a stipulation to abide decrees with sureties executed and filed by claimant, and the vessel formally released. Any other course would imperil the desirable avoidance of needless cost, time and inconvenience to litigants, counsel, ships, clerks, marshals, keepers and court personnel through the ready acceptance of such letters of undertakings.' [268 F.2d at 243.] If, as Judge Brown suggests, the informal agreement is treated as having the same effect as a formal release under bond or stipulation, few questions relating to their use will ever have to be litigated.' Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 9-89, at 800-01 (2d ed. 1975).

letter rogatory. See letter of request.

letter ruling. (1950) Tax. A written statement issued by the IRS to an inquiring taxpayer, explaining the tax implications of a particular transaction. — Also letters of administration. (16c) A formal document giving official authority to a fiduciary to conduct appointed tasks. Examples are letters of administration, letters of conservatorship, letters of guardianship, and letters testamentary. Unif. Probate Code § 1-201(23). See LETTER (2). [Cases: Executors and Administrators ⊙= 27; Guardian and Ward ⊙=16.]

letters close. See LETTERS SECRET.

letter security. See restricted security under security.

letters of absolution. Hist. Letters issued by an abbot releasing a member of his order from his vows of obedience to that order, thus permitting entry into another order.

letters of administration. (16c) A formal document issued by a probate court to appoint the administrator of an estate. Letters of administration originated in the Probate of Testaments Act of 1357 (31 Edw. 3, ch. 4), which provided that in case of intestacy the ordinary should depute the decedent's closest friends to administer the estate; a later statute, the Executors Act of 1529 (21 Hen. 8, ch. 4), authorized the ordinary to grant administration to the surviving spouse, to next of kin, or to both of them jointly. Also termed administration letters. See ADMINISTRATION (4). Cf. LETTERS TESTAMENTARY. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ⊙= 27.]

letters of administration c.t.a. (1894) Letters of administration appointing an administrator cum testamento annexo (with the will annexed) either because the will does not name an executor or because the named executor does not qualify. See administration cum testamento annexo under ADMINISTRATION.

letters of administration d.b.n. (1877) Letters of administration appointing an administrator de bonis non (concerning goods not yet administered) because the named executor failed to complete the estate's probate. See administration de bonis non under ADMINISTRATION.

letters of credence. See LETTER OF CREDENCE.

letters of guardianship. (18c) A court order appointing a guardian to care for the well-being, property, and affairs of a minor or an incapacitated adult. It defines the scope of the guardian's rights and duties, including the extent of control over the ward's education and medical issues. See GUARDIAN. [Cases: Guardian and Ward ⊙=16.]

letters of horning. Hist. Scots law. An execution process in which the creditor holding a decree obtained royal letters commanding the debtor to either perform or be outlawed. See HORNING.

letters of marque (mahrk). A license authorizing a private citizen to engage in reprisals against citizens or vessels of another nation. Congress has the exclusive power to grant letters of marque (U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11), but it has done so only once since the 19th century. Also termed letters of marque and reprisal.

"Formerly it was not uncommon for a state to issue 'letters of marque' to one of its own subjects, who had met with a denial of justice in another state, authorizing him to redress the wrong for himself by forcible action, such as the seizure of the property of subjects of the delinquent state." J.L. Brierly, The Law of Nations 321 (5th ed. 1955).

letters of safe conduct. Hist. Formal written permission from the English sovereign to a citizen of a nation at war with England, permitting that person to travel and ship goods, to England or on the high seas, without risk of seizure. Passports or licenses from foreign ambassadors now may serve the same purpose. See SAFE CONDUCT.

letters of slains. Hist. Letters to the Crown from the relatives of a slain person concurring with the offender's application for a royal pardon. A pardon could not be granted without the family's concurrence. Also spelled letters of slanes.

letters patent. (15c) I. Hist. A document granting some right or privilege, issued under governmental seal but open to public inspection. Also termed literae patentes (lit-ar-ee pa-ten-teez). Cf. LETTERS SECRET. 2. A governmental grant of the exclusive right to use an invention or design. Also termed (in both senses) patent deed. See PATENT (2). [Cases: Patents ⊙=1.]

letters rogatory. See LETTER OF REQUEST.

letters secret. Hist. A governmental document that is issued to a private person, closed and sealed, and thus not made available for public inspection. Also termed letters close. Cf. LETTERS PATENT (1).

letters testamentary. (17c) A probate-court order approving the appointment of an executor under a will and authorizing the executor to administer the estate. Cf. LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ⊙= 27, 32.]

ancillary letters testamentary. Letters testamentary issued at a place where the testator owned property but did not have a domicile. The executor or administrator is not authorized to act outside the issuing court's territorial jurisdiction. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ⊙= 518.]

domiciliary letters testamentary. Letters testamentary issued at the place where the testator was domiciled.

lettre de cachet (le-tra da ka-shay), [French "letter with a seal"] A royal warrant issued for the imprisonment of a person without trial.
leva (lō-ka), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. French law. A league, consisting of 1,500 paces. 2. A league, consisting of 1,000 paces. 3. A privileged space of one mile around a monastery.

levance and couchance (lev-ants / kow-chants). Hist. The state or condition of being levant and couchant. See LEVANT AND COUCHANT.

levant and couchant (lev-ant / kow-chant), adj. [Law French couchant et levant "lying down and rising up"] Hist. (Of cattle and other beasts) trespassing on land for a period long enough to have lain down to rest and risen to feed (usu. at least one night and one day). • This period was the minimum required as grounds for distraint. — Also termed couchant and levant.

levare facias (la-vair-I fay-shee-əs). [Law Latin "that you cause to be levied"] A writ of execution ordering a sheriff to seize a judgment debtor's goods and income from lands until the judgment debt is satisfied. • This writ is now used chiefly in Delaware. Cf. fieri facias. [Cases: Execution ≤ 15.] levare facias damna de disseisitoribus (la-vair-I fay-shee-əs dam-əs ē-dis-see-ə-tər-ə-bas), n. [Law Latin "that you cause to be levied the damages from the disseisors"] Hist. A writ directing the sheriff to levy property to pay damages owed to one wrongfully dispossessed of a freehold estate. See DISSEISIN.

levare facias quando vicecomes returnavit quod non habitur empteres (la-vair-I fay-shee-əs kwon-doh vise-koh-meer ree-tar-nay-vit kwod nōn fay-byoo-it em-pr-ee), n. [Law Latin "that you cause to be levied when the sheriff has returned that it had no buyers"] Hist. A writ directing a sheriff, who had already seized some of the debtor's property and found it unsalable, to sell as much additional property as necessary to pay the entire debt.

levare facias residuum debiti (la-vair-I fay-shee-əs ri-zij-əm deb-ə-ti), n. [Law Latin "that you cause to be levied the rest of the debt"] Hist. A writ directing the sheriff to levy upon a debtor's lands or goods to pay the remainder of a partially satisfied debt.

levato velo (lo-vay-oh vee-loh). [Latin "with the curtain raised"] Roman law. The principle, applied to cases of wreck and salvage, and later to all maritime matters, that cases should be heard in public. • Although commentators disagree about the origin of the expression, it probably refers to the place where causes were heard. A sail was spread before the door, and when the cases were heard, the sail was raised, allowing the proceedings to be open to the public.

lever (lev-er), n. (17c) 1. An embankment constructed along the edge of a river to prevent flooding. 2. A landing place on a body of navigable water for loading and unloading goods or receiving and delivering passengers and boats.

levee district. See district.

levé en masse. See LEVY EN MASSE.

level of abstraction. Copyright. The degree to which a work describes an idea or process in a general rather than concrete way. • Judge Learned Hand posited that from any work one can restate the idea in more and more abstract ways, omitting more and more details, until one is left with an uncopyrightable idea rather than a protectable work of originality. See Nichols v. Universal Pictures Corp., 45 F.2d 119 (1930). [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ≤ 4.5.]

level-premium insurance. See INSURANCE.

level-rate legal-reserve policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

leverage, n. (1830) 1. Positional advantage; effectiveness. 2. The use of credit or borrowed funds (such as buying on margin) to improve one's speculative ability and to increase an investment's rate of return. 3. The advantage obtained from using credit or borrowed funds rather than equity capital. 4. The ratio between a corporation's debt and its equity capital. — Also termed leverage ratio. 5. The effect of this ratio on common-stock prices.

leverage, vb. (1957) 1. To provide (a borrower or investor) with credit or funds to improve speculative ability and to seek a high rate of return. 2. To supplement (available capital) with credit or outside funds. 3. To fund (a company) with debt as well as shareholder equity. 4. Antitrust. To use power in one market to gain an unfair advantage in another market. 5. INSURANCE. To manipulate two coverages, as by an insurer's withholding settlement of one claim to influence a claim arising under another source of coverage.

leverage contract. (1975) An agreement for the purchase or sale of a contract for the future delivery of a specified commodity, usu. silver, gold, or another precious metal, in a standard unit and quantity, for a particular price, with no right to a particular lot of the commodity. • A leverage contract operates much like a futures contract, except that there is no designated contract market for leverage contracts. The market sets the uniform terms of a futures contract. But in a leverage contract, the individual merchant sets the terms, does not guarantee a repurchase market, and does not guarantee to continue serving or acting as the broker for the purchaser. Leverage contracts are generally forbidden for agricultural commodities. 7 USCA § 23(a). Cf. Futures CONTRACT. [Cases: Commodity Futures Trading Regulation ≤ 10.] leveraged buyout. See Buyout.

leveraged lease. See LEASE.

lew and lascivious cohabitation. See illicit cohabitation under cohabitation.

lew house. See disorderly house (2).

lewddness. (16c) Gross, wanton, and public indecency that is outlawed by many state statutes; a sexual act that the actor knows will likely be observed by someone who will be affronted or alarmed by it. See Model Penal Code § 251.1. — Also termed open lewdness. Cf. indecent exposure; obscenity. [Cases: Lewdness ⇔ 1; Obscenity ⇔ 1.]

lex (leks), n. [Latin “law”] 1. Law, esp. statutory law. 2. Positive law, as opposed to natural law. • Strictly speaking, lex is a statute, whereas jus is law in general (as well as a right). 3. A system or body of laws, written or unwritten, that are peculiar to a jurisdiction or to a field of human activity. 4. A collection of uncodified laws within a jurisdiction. 5. Lex publica. 6. Lex privata. 7. Civil law: A legislative bill. Pl. legis (lee-jeez). Cf. jus. 8. The acquisition of property under some specific law, when the property is made over by a magistrate to the claimant. 9. A term of a contract, treaty, or other agreement.

lex actus (leks ak-tas). See lex loci actus.

lex Aebutia (leks i-byoo- shee-a). [Latin] Roman law. A statute that introduced simplified forms of pleading and procedure. • This was probably enacted in the later part of the second century B.C. See lex Julia judicorum publicorum under lex Julia.

lex Aelia Sentia (leks ee-lee-ee sen-tee-a). Roman law. A law that set minimum age requirements for an owner and a slave in a valid manumission, voided manumissions made to defraud creditors, and created the status of dediiciti for some manumitted slaves, esp. criminals. See deditici; latini juniani.

lex Anastasiana (leks an-a-stay-shee-a). [Latin] Roman law. 1. A law establishing that emancipated brothers and sisters receive an intestate inheritance equal to those not emancipated. See agnati. 2. A law providing that a person purchasing a debt from the original creditor for less than its nominal value was not entitled to recover from the debtor more than the amount paid with lawful interest.

lex Angliae (leks ang-glee-ee), n. [Latin] Hist. The law of England; the common law.

lex annua. See edictum perpetuum under edictum.

lex apparens (leks a-par-een), n. [Law Latin “apparent law”] Hist. The legal processes of trial by ordeal or wager of battle. • The plaintiff could not summon the defendant for trial by these processes before establishing a clear or apparent right through testimony. See ordeal.

lex Apuleia (leks ap-yoo-lee-a). [Latin] Roman law. A law giving a coguarantor, who had paid more than the proper share of debt, an action of reimbursement against the remaining guarantors. — Also spelled lex Appuleia.

lex Aquilia (leks a-kuh-lee-a). [Latin “Aquilian law”] Roman law. A Roman statute imposing liability for pecuniary loss tortiously caused and generally regulating loss caused by damage to property, including compensation to be paid for injury to another’s slave or livestock. • A loss had to be financially measurable and caused wrongfully. If the liable party denied liability, then damages were doubled. This law applied to negligence as well as dolus. The law, enacted around 287 B.C., superseded the earlier provisions of the Twelve Tables. — Also termed Aquilian law. See damnum Injuria datum; dolus. See actio legis Aquiliae under actio.

Lex Atilia (leks a-ti-l-cl-ee-a). [Latin] Roman law. A law granting to magistrates the right to appoint guardians. • The law is named after the person who proposed it, perhaps the tribune L. Atilius Regulus. It was enacted about 210 B.C. — Also termed Atilian law.

Lex Atinia (leks a-ti-n-ee-a). [Latin] Roman law. A law declaring that a prescriptive right cannot be acquired in stolen property. • It was enacted in the late third or early second century B.C. — Also termed Atitian law.

Lex Baiuvariorum (leks bay-av-va-ror-ee-or-am). [Latin] Hist. The law of Bavaria, a barbarian nation in the Early Middle Ages, first collected (together with the law of the Franks and Alemanni) by Theodoric (ca. 454–526), and finally completed and promulgated by Dagobert (ca. 612–639). — Also termed Lex Baioriorum; lex Boiorum.

Lex Barbara (leks bah-bar-rah). [Latin] Roman law. The law of barbarian nations, i.e., those that were not subject to the Roman Empire.

Lex Boiorum. See Lex Baiuvariorum.

Lex Calpurnia (leks kal-par-nee-a). [Latin] Roman law. A law extending the lex Silia by establishing procedures to recover goods other than money. • This affected the actiones legis. See Lex Silia; legis actio.

Lex Cincia (leks sin-shay-ah). [Latin] Roman law. A law of 204 B.C. prohibiting certain types of gifts and all gifts or donations of property beyond a certain measure, except to a near relative.

Lex Claudia (leks kla-w-dee-a). [Latin] Roman law. A law that abolished the ancient guardianship of adult women by their male agnate relatives. • This became effective in the first century A.D. — Also termed Lex Claudia de tutela.

Lex comitatus (leks kom-a-tay-tas). n. [Law Latin] Hist. The law of the county; the law administered in the county court before the earl and his deputies.

Lex commercii (leks ka-mar-shay-t). n. [Latin] The law of business or commerce; commercial law. — Also termed Lex commissoria (leks kom-i-sor-ee-a). See Lex commissoria.

Lex commissoria (leks kom-i-sor-ee-a). [Latin “forfeiture clause” or “cancellation clause”] Roman law. 1. A term in a contract of sale allowing the seller to rescind the sale if the price was not paid by the agreed time. 2. A clause by which, in a pledge agreement, a debtor and creditor could agree that if the debtor fails to timely pay the debt, the creditor obtains absolute title of the pledged property.

"By the lex commissoria at Rome, the debtor and creditor might agree that if the debtor did not pay at the day, the pledge should become the absolute property of the creditor. But a law of Constantine abolished this power, as unjust and oppressive, and having a growing aspersity in practice." 2 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *583 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

3. An agreement in which such a failure-to timely-pay clause appears. — Also written commissoria lex.

Lex commercii. “But the position of the seller was a good deal more awkward, especially if he had sold a unique object, such as a piece of land, for, apart from express agreement, he would have to retain the land or other object in case the buyer later came along with the price and demanded delivery. The difficulty could be avoided by the insertion of a term known as lex commissoria, which gave the seller an option of declaring the contract at an end if the buyer did not pay within the agreed time. This term probably became common form in Roman law, but was never implied. It always had to be expressly inserted in the contract ... Not until the time of Lord Mansfield was a similar development complete in English law, though in the end we carried it much further than the Romans." W.W. Buckland & Arnold D. McHale, Roman Law & Common Law: A Comparison in Outline 231 (F.H. Lawson ed., 2d ed. 1952).

Lex contractus (leks kon-trak-tas). See Lex loci contractus.

Lex Cornelia (leks kor-nee-ee-a). [Latin] Roman law. One of several laws passed by the dictator L. Cornelius Sulla in 82–81 B.C. — Also termed Cornelian law.

Lex Cornelia de edictis (leks kor-nee-ee-a de edik-tas). See Lex Cornelia de jurisdictione.

Lex Cornelia de injuriis (leks kor-nee-ee-a de in-joo-er-ee-is). [Latin] Roman law. The Cornelian law providing a civil action for the recovery of a penalty in certain cases of bodily injury and violent invasion of property. • The precise boundary between the crime and the delict is not clear. But the two procedures probably existed side by side.

"Lex Cornelia de injuriis ... Punished three kinds of injury committed by violence: pulsare (beating), verberare (striking, causing pain) and domum introire (forcible invasion of another's domicile)." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 549 (1953).
lex Cornelia de jurisdictione (leks kor-nee-lee-ə de joo-ri-dikt-shə-nə). [Latin] Roman law. The law forbidding a praetor from departing, during his term of office, from the edict he had promulgated at the term's commencement. • It did not, however, forbid the offer of new remedies. — Also termed lex Cornelia de edictis.

lex Cornelia de siccariis et veneficis (leks kor-nee-lee-ə de sik-kair-ə-i̇s et ve-neef-ə-fə-sis). [Latin] Roman law. A law combining jurisdiction over gangster-type killings and poisoning, or attempts at such crimes, and addressing the bringing of false witness and bribery of a judge or juror, if those actions brought about a person's death. • The statute was soon extended to cover murder generally when committed within or close to Rome. Emperor Antoninus Pius added a provision for murder to include a slave owner who deliberately killed his own slave.

lex Cornelia de sponsu (leks kor-nee-lee-ə de spoon-sə). [Latin] Roman law. A law prohibiting a person from acting as surety for the same debtor to the same creditor in the same year for more than a specified amount.

lex Cornelia nummaria testamentaria (leks kor-nee-lee-ə na-mair-ə-tə-men-tair-ə-e). Roman law. A statute making forgery (falsum) a crime, and creating a special court to try forgery cases. • Until the later Roman Empire, falsum included both counterfeiting and document forgery. — Also termed lex Cornelia de falsis (leks kor-nee-lee-ə de fa-lə-soh or fawl-sis). See FALSUM (2). • It is not absolutely clear whether Sulla passed two laws, one on forging wills and the other on forging money, or whether the one lex Cornelia nummaria testamentaria provided for both sorts of offence to be heard by the quaestio of falsis which it created.” O.F. Professor Robinson, The Criminal Law of Ancient Rome 36 (1995).

lex Danorum (leks dən-or-əm). See DANELAW.

lex delicti (leks də-līk-ti). See LEX LOCI DELICTI.

lex deraisma (leks də-rayn-ə-e-ə). n. [Law Latin] Hist. A law by which a party denies an accusation, showing it to be against reason or probability.

lex de responsis prudentium (leks də ri-spon-sis proo-dən-shə-am). [Latin] "law on the replies of the juris-prudents" See CITATIONS, LAW OF.

lex domicilii (leks dom-i-sil-ee-ə). [Latin] (18c) 1. The law of the country where a person is domiciled. 2. The determination of a person's rights by establishing where, in law, that person is domiciled. See Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws §§ 11 et seq (1971).

Lex Duodecim Tabularum (leks d'yoo-ə-des-am tab-yə-lair-əm). See TWELVE TABLES.

lex et consuetudo regni (leks et kon-swal-tee-reg-ni). n. [Latin] Hist. The law and custom of the realm; the common law.

lex Falcidia (leks fal-sid-ə-eə). See FALCIDIAN LAW.

lex feudatoria (leks fyoo-də-to-ar-ə). [Law Latin] The law of the feud; the law pertaining to feudal title.

lex fori (leks for-i). [Latin] (1803) "The law of the forum; the law of the jurisdiction where the case is pending <the lex fori governs whether the death penalty is a possible punishment for a first-degree-murder conviction>. — Also termed lex ordinationi. Cf. LEX LOCI (1). [Cases: Action C-- 17.]

lex Francorum (leks frang-kor-əm). n. [Law Latin] The law of the Franks, promulgated by Theodoric I, son of Clovis I, at the same time as the law of Alemann and Bavaria.

lex Frisionum (leks frizh-ə-oh-nəm). n. [Law Latin] The law of the Frisians, promulgated in the middle of the eighth century.

lex Fusia Caninia (leks foof-ə-ə ka-ni-ə-nə-ə). [Latin] Roman law. A law prohibiting owners from freeing by will more than a certain number or proportion of their slaves. — Justinian later abrogated this law. — Also termed lex Fufia Caninia; Fufian Caninian law; Fufian Caninian law.

lex Furia testamentaria (leks fyoo-o-ə-tə-men-tair-ə-eə). [Latin] Roman law. A law prohibiting a testator from bequeathing more than 1,000 asses (i.e., 722 pounds) of copper or the equivalent. • This law, dating from the middle of the republic, was one of the first to restrict legacies. It was passed between 204 and 169 B.C. "The lex Furia . . . provided that no one except [close] relatives . . . should take by will or gift in view of death more than 1000 asses [copper coins]. It did not rescind the disposition, but enacted a penalty of four times the amount, recoverable by a stringent procedure from anyone who took such a legacy or gift, contrary to the law. But this law left it open to a testator to leave nothing to the heir, supposing he made a sufficient number of legates up to the statable limit." 1 Henry John Roby, Roman Private Law 344–45 (1902).

lex Fusia Caninia. See LEX FUFIA CANINIA.

lex Gabinia (leks ga-bin-ə-eə). [Latin] Roman law. A law introducing popular election by secret ballot. • Secret ballots were also used in judicial meetings. — Also termed lex Gabinia tabellaria (leks ga-bin-ə-eə tab-ə-lair-ə-eə). See GABINIAN LAW.

lex generalis (leks jen-ə-ray-lis). A law of general application, as opposed to one that affects only a particular person or a small group of people.
lex Genucia (leks ʝa-ɲyoo-shee-ə). [Latin] Roman law. A law prohibiting the charging of interest on loans between Roman citizens. • The statute was proposed in the 4th century B.C., but it is uncertain when, if ever, it was enacted. If enacted, it was not enforced.

lex Gothica (leks goth-ik-ə). n. [Law Latin] Hist. The law of the Goths. • It was first promulgated in writing in A.D. 466.

lex Horatia Valeria. See lex VALERIA HORATIA.

lex Hortensia (leks ʰɔr-tən-sə). [Latin] Roman law. A law extending to the plebeians full participation in public laws of government and worship; specif., an important constitutional law that made laws passed by the assemblies of the common people (the plebeians) binding on all citizens. • Previously, plebeian assemblies could not bind the patrician class. This statute put enactments of the concilium plebis on the same footing as leges. See JUS PUBLICUM; JUS SACRUM.

lex Hostilia de furtis (leks hos-ti-əl-de ʃər-təs). [Latin] Roman law. A law of the early Republic providing that the state could prosecute a person for theft on behalf of an owner when the owner was captive or abroad. • This affected the actions legis. See LEGIS ACTIO.

lexical definition. See definition.

lex incorporationis. [Latin] The law of the state where incorporation takes place. See INTERNAL-AFFAIRS DOCTRINE.

LEXIS (lek-sis). A proprietary online computer service that provides access to databases of legal information, including federal and state caselaw, statutes, and secondary materials.

lex Julia de annona (leks ʝoo-lee-ə ə-nə-nə-nə). [Latin] Roman law. A law against business combinations that negatively affected the grain supply, esp. attempts to raise the price of corn.

lex Julia de cessione bonorum (leks ʝoo-lee-ə ə-seshn-bənor-əm). [Latin] Roman law. A law governing bankruptcies allowing a debtor to avoid further adverse action by ceding all the debtor's property to the creditors.

lex Julia de majestate (leks ʝoo-lee-ə ə maj-ə-stə-tə-ti). [Latin] Roman law. A treason law imposing capital punishment on a person acting against the emperor or state. • Enacted about 8 B.C., this was the last specific law on treason.

lex Julia de maritandis ordinibus (leks ʝoo-lee-ə ə mar-ə-tan-ə-dis ər-din-ə-bəs). [Latin] Roman law. A law regulating marriages, imposing a duty to be married on all men between 25 and 60, and on all women between 20 and 50, and forbidding marriages between senators and freedwomen, and forbidding senators and all other freeborn citizens from marrying actresses, prostitutes, and the like. • This 18 B.C. statute is usu. considered as one law with the lex Papia Poppea of A.D. 9, which exempted women with three children or more from being placed under guardianship.

lex Julia de peculatu (leks ʝoo-lee-ə ə pek-ə-la-tə). [Latin] Roman law. A law punishing the embezzlement of public monies. • Originally a magistrate determined the punishment. The same court had jurisdiction for transgressions under lex Julia de residuis and for sacrilege, the wrongful taking of money dedicated to sacred or religious purposes. See lex Julia de residuis.

lex Julia judiciorum publicorum (leks ʝoo-lee-ə ə ʃud-ə-ər-əm pə-bli-kər-əm). [Latin] Roman law. An Augustan law that, with the lex Julia judiciorum privatorum, reformed various aspects of civil procedure. • The two laws are often referred to together as leges Juliae, or duae Juliae. Together with the lex Aebutia, the leges Juliae largely abolished the legis actiones, the ancient form of Roman civil procedure that relied on fixed oral forms.

lex Junia Norbana (leks ɲi-ə-ə nor-ə-ba-nə). [Latin] Roman law. A law creating the status of Junian Latin for informally manumitted slaves. • Often shortened to lex Junia. See LATINI JUNIANI.

lex Junia Velleia (leks ɲi-ə-ə ə və-ə-ə-yə). [Latin] Roman law. A law providing that certain kinds of descendants must be treated as posthumously born children of a decedent for purposes of heirship. • This probably was enacted in A.D. 26.

lex Langobardorum. See lex LONGOBARDORUM.

lex ligeantiae (leks lij-yee-ee-an-shee-e). [Law Latin] The law of the country to which a person owes national allegiance. • Some jurists have thought that this law ought to decide many of the questions that have usu. been determined by the lex domicilii.

lex loci (leks loh-si). [Latin] 1. The law of the place; local law. Cf. lex FORI. 2. LEX LOCI CONTRACTUS.

lex loci actus (leks loh-si ak-tas). [Law Latin] The law of the place where an act is done or a transaction is completed. — Often shortened to lex actus.

lex loci celebrationis (leks loh-si sel-a-bray-shee oh-nis). [Latin “law of the place of the ceremony”] The law of the place where a contract, esp. of marriage, is made. • This law usu. governs when the validity of a marriage is at issue. Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § 283(2) (1971).

lex loci contractus (leks loh-si kan-trak-tas). [Latin] The law of the place where a contract is executed or to be performed. • Lex loci contractus is often the proper law by which to decide contractual disputes. — Often shortened to lex loci; lex contractus. [Cases: Contracts C≈144.]

lex loci delicti (leks loh-si da-lik-ti). [Latin] The law of the place where the tort or other wrong was committed. — Often shortened to lex delicti. — Also termed lex loci delictus; lex loci delicti commissi; place-of-wrong rule; place-of-wrong law. Cf. LOCUS DELICTI. [Cases: Torts C≈103.]

lex loci solutionis (leks loh-si sa-loo-shee oh-nis). [Latin “law of the place of solution”] The law of the place where a contract is to be performed (esp. by payment). — Often shortened to lex solutionis.

lex Longobardorum (leks long-goh-bahr-dor-am). [Latin “law of the Lombards”] Hist. An ancient legal code developed between the fifth and eighth centuries, in force until the reign of Charlemagne; the laws of the Lombards, seen cumulatively from the Edict of Rothari in A.D. 643, and added to by Liutprand. • It was a subject of study in the early law school at Pavia. — Also spelled lex Langobardorum; lex Langobardica.

lex majoris partis [Latin “law of the major party”] Majority rule. See MAYORITY RULE.

lex manifesta (leks man-ah-fees-ta). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. Open law; manifest law. 2. Trial by duel or ordeal. — Also termed manifest law.

lex marityma. Hist. The body of customs, usage, and local rules governing seagoing commerce that developed in the maritime countries of medieval Europe.

lex mercatoria (leks mar-ka-tor-ee-ah). [Latin “mercantile law”] See LAW MERCHANT.

lex merciorum (leks mar-shhee-oh-ahm). See MERCENARY.

lex monetae (leks ma-nee-tee). [Latin] The law of the country whose money is in question.

lex naturae (leks na-toor-ee-ee). See NATURAL LAW.

lex naturale (leks nach-ay-ray-lee). [Law Latin] See NATURAL LAW.

lex non scripta (leks non skrip-ta). [Latin “unwritten law”] See unwritten law under LAW. Pl. leges non scriptae.

lex ordinandi (leks or-dahn-don-di). See LEX FORI.

lex Papia Poppea (leks pay-p Pee-ah pah-pee-a). [Latin] Roman law. A law proposed by the consuls Papius and Poppeus at the request of Augustus. • It is usu. considered with the lex Julia de maritandis ordinibus as one law. — Also termed Papian law; Poppean law. See lex Julia de maritandis ordinibus under LEX JULIA.

lex patriae (leks pay-tree-e or pa-tree-e). [Latin] National law; the law of one’s country. See PERSONAL LAW.

lex Petronia (leks pa-troh-nee-ah). [Latin] Roman law. A law abolishing a creditor’s right to reduce his debtor to slave-like treatment. • This law was enacted sometime before 300 B.C.

lex Plietoria (leks pli-ee-pee-ee-ee-ah). [Latin] Roman law. A law protecting minors against frauds and probably permitting them to apply for a guardian or curator to assist them.

lex Poetelia (leks poh-tee-e-lee-ee-ah). [Latin] Roman law. A law abolishing a creditor’s right to reduce his debtor to slave-like treatment. • This law was enacted sometime before 300 B.C.

lex Pompeia de parricidio (leks pom-pee-ah deh par-ree-si-dee-ee-ee-ah). [Latin] Roman law. A law defining what murders amounted to parricide and establishing a special expiatory punishment, in which the offender was executed by being sewn up in a sack with a dog, a rooster, a viper, and a monkey, and thrown into the sea or a river.

lex posterior derogat priori (leks pawt-ee-ee-oh-der-gah-pror-ee-ee). [Latin “a later law prevails over an earlier one”] The principle that a later statute negates the effect of a prior one if the later statute expressly repeals, or is obviously repugnant to, the earlier law.

lex privata (leks pri-vay-to). [Latin "private law"] Roman law. A term in a private contract. — Sometimes shortened to lex.

lex publica (leks pab-lik-ka). [Latin "public law"] Roman law. A law passed by a popular assembly and binding on all people. 2. A written law. — Sometimes shortened to lex.

lex Romana (leks ra-may-nee-a). [Latin] See ROMAN LAW.

lex regia (leks ree-jee-a). [Latin "royal law"] Roman law. A law ostensibly enacted by the Roman people granting wide legislative and executive powers to the emperor, later interpreted as providing that the emperor was a source of law, the emperor had full legislative powers, and the emperor's will or pleasure had the full force of law. See LEX IMPERII.

lex rei sitae (leks ree-I sit-ee). [Law Latin] Scots law. The law of the place where the property is situated.

lex Rhodia (leks roh-dee-a). [Latin] Roman law. The Rhodian law governing the subject of jettison. • This began as the common law of the ancient Mediterranean Sea. It required that all consignors and the shipmaster share losses equally. — Also termed leges Pubiliae Philonis.

lex Sempronia (leks sem-pray-nee-a). [Latin] See SEMPRONIAN CODE.

lex solutionis. See LEX LOCI SOLUTIONIS.

lex talionis (leks tal-ee-oh-nis). [Law Latin] The law of retaliation, under which punishment should be in kind — an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, and so on — but no more. — Also termed "eye for an eye; jus taliones; principle of retribution."

"Kant, for example, expresses the opinion that punishment cannot rightly be inflicted for the sake of any benefit to be derived from it either by the criminal himself or by society, and that the sole and sufficient reason and justification of it lies in the fact that evil has been done by him who suffers it. Consistently with this view, he derives the measure of punishment, not from any elaborate considerations as to the amount needed for the repression of crime, but from the simple principle of lex talionis: 'Thine eye shall not pity, but life shall go for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot' [Deuteronomy, XIX. 21]. No such principle, indeed, is capable of literal interpretation; but subject to metaphorical and symbolical applications it is in Kant's view the guiding rule of the ideal scheme of criminal justice." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 118 (Glazville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"But if the old form of the lex talionis, an eye for an eye or a tooth for a tooth, sounds too barbaric today, may we not reformulate the retributive theory and put it thus: Everyone is to be punished alike in proportion to the gravity of his offense or to the extent to which he has made others suffer?" Morris R. Cohen, Reason and Law 53 (1961).

lex Theodosiana (leks thee-oh-dye-see-an-a). See THEODOSIAN CODE.

lex Valeria Horatia (leks va-leer-ee-a ho-ray-shee-a). [Latin] Roman law. A law making enactments by the assembly of the people in tribes binding on all citizens. • Several laws of this name were passed in 449 B.C. One was aimed at strengthening the force of plebiscita. Another protected plebeian tribunes with sacrosanctity. A third, more dubious, law falls between the lex Valeria of 509 B.C. and the lex Valeria of 300 B.C. in granting the right of provocatio to the Roman citizen oppressed by a magistrate. Cf. LEX HORTENSIA.

lex validitatis (leks val-a-day-tee). [Latin] Conflict of laws. The presumption of validity given to marriages, contracts, and other matters.

lex Visigothorum (leks viz-a-gah-thor-ee-a). [Latin "law of the Visigoths"] The law of a division of the Goths (a Germanic tribe) known as the Visigoths, who conquered Spain in the 5th century. • In the late 7th century, Kings Receswinth and Erwig imposed a Visigothic common law, and it is to this law that the phrase lex Visigothorum usu. applies. — Also spelled lex Visigotum. — Also termed liber iudiciorum.

lex Voconia (leks veh-oh-nee-a). [Latin] Roman law. A law enacted in 169 B.C. to regulate inheritance (esp. by women) by capping the amount receivable by anyone as legacy or gift in view of death at no more than the heirs took. • The Falcidian law superseded the lex...
Voconia. — Also termed Voconian law. See FALCIDIAN LAW.

"Lex Voconia . . . Contained several provisions concerned with the law of succession: (1) No woman could be heir . . . to an estate having a value greater than a fixed amount . . . . (2) Admitted among female agnates only the sisters of the deceased to intestate succession. (3) No one person — male or female — could receive by legacy more than the heir (or all heirs together) instituted in the last will." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 561 (1953).

ley civile (lay see- or so-veel), n. [Law French] Hist. 1. The civil law. 2. The Roman law. — Also termed ley escripte.

leyerwite. See LAIRWIT.

ley escripte. See LEY CIVILE.

L.F. abbr. LAW FRENCH.

LHWCA. abbr. LONGSHORE AND HARBOR WORKERS' COMPENSATION ACT.

liability, n. (18c) 1. The quality or state of being legally obligated or accountable; legal responsibility to another or to society, enforceable by civil remedy or criminal punishment <liability for injuries caused by negligence>. — Also termed legal liability; subjection. Cf. FAULT. 2. (often pl.) A financial or pecuniary obligation; DEBT <tax liability> <assets and liabilities>.

"The term 'liability' is one of at least double significance. In one sense it is the synonym of duty, the correlative of right; it signifies the opposite of privilege or liberty. If a duty rests upon a party, society is now commanding performance by him and threatening penalties. In a second sense, the term 'liability' is the correlative of power and the opposite of immunity. In this case society is not yet commanding performance, but it will so command if the possessor of the power does some operative act. If one has a power, the other has a liability. It would be wise to adopt the second sense exclusively. Accurate legal thinking is difficult when the fundamental terms have shifting senses." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 364 (1919).

"Liability or responsibility is the bond of necessity that exists between the wrongdoer and the remedy of the wrong. This vinculum juris is not one of mere duty or obligation; it pertains not to the sphere of ought but to that of must." John S. Salmon, Jurisprudence 364 (1897).

absolute liability. See strict liability.

accomplice liability. (1958) Criminal responsibility of one who acts with another before, during, or (in some jurisdictions) after a crime. See 18 USCA § 2. [Cases: Criminal Law C=>59.]

acrued liability. (1877) A debt or obligation that is properly chargeable in a given accounting period but that is not yet paid.

alternative liability. (1929) Liability arising from the tortious acts of two or more parties — when the plaintiff proves that one of the defendants has caused harm but cannot prove which one caused it — resulting in a shifting of the burden of proof to each defendant. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 433B(3) (1965). [Cases: Torts C=>130.]

civil liability. (1817) 1. Liability imposed under the civil, as opposed to the criminal, law. 2. The state of being legally obligated for civil damages.

contingent liability. (18c) A liability that will occur only if a specific event happens; a liability that depends on the occurrence of a future and uncertain event. — In financial statements, contingent liabilities are usu. stated in footnotes.

current liability. A business liability that will be paid or otherwise discharged with current assets or by creating other current liabilities within the next year (or operating cycle). — Also termed short-term debt.

derivative liability. (1886) Liability for a wrong that a person other than the one wronged has a right to redress. • Examples include liability to a widow in a wrongful-death action and liability to a corporation in a shareholder’s derivative suit.

enterprise liability. (1941) 1. Liability imposed on each member of an industry responsible for manufacturing a harmful or defective product, allotted by each manufacturer’s market share of the industry. — Also termed industry-wide liability. See market-share liability. [Cases: Products Liability C=>164, 165.] 2. Criminal liability imposed on a business (such as a corporation or partnership) for certain offenses, such as public-welfare offenses or offenses for which the legislature specifically intended to impose criminal sanctions. See Model Penal Code § 2.07. See public-welfare offense under OFFENSE (1).

fault liability. Liability based on some degree of blameworthiness. — Also termed fault-based liability. Cf. strict liability.

joint and several liability. (1819) Liability that may be apportioned either among two or more parties or to one or a few select members of the group, at the adversary’s discretion. • Thus, each liable party is individually responsible for the entire obligation, but a paying party may have a right of contribution and indemnity from nonpaying parties. See solidary liability. [Cases: Contracts C=>181; Negligence C=>484; Torts C=>135.]

joint liability. (18c) Liability shared by two or more parties. [Cases: Negligence C=>484; Torts C=>135.]

liability in solido. See solidary liability.

liability without fault. See strict liability.

limited liability. (1833) Liability restricted by law or contract; esp., the liability of a company’s owners for nothing more than the capital they have invested in the business. [Cases: Corporations \(\Leftrightarrow 215\).]

market-share liability. (1980) Liability that is imposed, usu. severally, on each member of an industry, based on each member's share of the market or respective percentage of the product that is placed on the market. • This theory of liability usu. applies only in the situation in which a plaintiff cannot trace the harmful exposure to a particular product, as when several products contain a fungible substance. For example, it is sometimes applied to a claim that the plaintiff was harmed by exposure to asbestos. See enterprise liability. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees \(\Leftrightarrow 114\); Products Liability \(\Leftrightarrow 166\); Receivers \(\Leftrightarrow 168\).]

official liability. Liability of an officer or receiver for a breach of contract or a tort committed during the officer's or receiver's tenure, but not involving any personal liability.

penal liability. Liability arising from a proceeding intended at least partly to penalize a wrongdoer. Cf. remedial liability.

personal liability. (18c) Liability for which one is personally accountable and for which a wronged party can seek satisfaction out of the wrongdoer's personal assets.

premises liability. See premises liability.

primary liability. (1834) Liability for which one is directly responsible, as opposed to secondary liability.

products liability. See products liability.

remedial liability. Liability arising from a proceeding whose object contains no penal element. • The two types of proceedings giving rise to this liability are specific enforcement and restitution. Cf. penal liability.

secondary liability. (1830) Liability that does not arise unless the primarily liable party fails to honor its obligation.

several liability. (1819) Liability that is separate and distinct from another's liability, so that the plaintiff may bring a separate action against one defendant without joining the other liable parties. [Cases: Negligence \(\Leftrightarrow 484\); Torts \(\Leftrightarrow 135\).]

shareholder's liability. 1. The statutory, added, or double liability of a shareholder for a corporation's debts, despite full payment for the stock. 2. The liability of a shareholder for any unpaid stock listed as fully owned on the stock certificate, usu. occurring either when the shareholder agrees to pay full par value for the stock and obtains the certificate before the stock is paid for, or when partially paid-for stock is intentionally issued by a corporation as fully paid, the consideration for it being entirely fictitious. • Also termed stockholder's liability. [Cases: Corporations \(\Leftrightarrow 215, 227\).]

solidary liability \(\text{sol-}\text{a-dair-ee}\). Civil law. The liability of any one debtor among two or more joint debtors to pay the entire debt if the creditor so chooses. La. Civ. Code art. 1794. • This is equivalent to joint and several liability in the common law. • Also termed liability in solido. See joint and several liability. [Cases: Negligence \(\Leftrightarrow 484\); Torts \(\Leftrightarrow 135\).]

statutory liability. Liability that is created by a statute (or regulation) as opposed to common law.

stockholder's liability. See shareholder's liability.

strict liability. (1844) Liability that does not depend on actual negligence or intent to harm, but that is based on the breach of an absolute duty to make something safe. • Strict liability most often applies either to ultrahazardous activities or in products-liability cases. • Also termed absolute liability; liability without fault. Cf. fault liability; outcome responsibility. [Cases: Negligence \(\Leftrightarrow 301-307\); Products Liability \(\Leftrightarrow 113\).]

tortious liability. Liability that arises from the breach of a duty that (1) is fixed primarily by the law, (2) is owed to persons generally, and (3) when breached, is redressable by an action for unliquidated damages.

vicarious liability \(\text{vi-kae-ree-as}\). (1890) Liability that a supervisory party (such as an employer) bears for the actionable conduct of a subordinate or associate (such as an employee) based on the relationship between the two parties. See responsiblity. [Cases: Labor and Employment \(\Leftrightarrow 3026\); Negligence \(\Leftrightarrow 483\).]

The vicarious liability of an employer for torts committed by employees should not be confused with the liability an employer has for his own torts. An employer whose employee commits a tort may be liable in his own right for negligence in hiring or supervising the employee. If in my business I hire a truck driver who has a record of drunk driving and on whom one day I detect the smell of bourbon, I (along with my employee) may be held liable for negligence if his driving causes injury. But that is not 'vicarious' liability—I am held liable for my own negligence in hiring that employee or letting him drive after I know he has been drinking." Kenneth S. Abraham, The Forms and Functions of Tort Law 166 (2002).

liability dividend. See scrip dividend under dividend.

liability in solido. See solidarity liability under liability.

liability insurance. See insurance.

liability limit. Insurance. The maximum amount of coverage that an insurance company will provide on a single claim under an insurance policy. • Also termed limit of liability; policy limits. [Cases: Insurance \(\Leftrightarrow 2105\).]

liability without fault. See strict liability under liability.

liable \(\text{I-t} \text{-a-bal also I-t-bal}\), adj. (15c) 1. Responsible or answerable in law; legally obligated. 2. (Of a person) subject to or likely to incur (a fine, penalty, etc.). • Also termed legally liable. See liability.

liar's loan. See loan.
libel (li-bal), n. (14c) 1. A defamatory statement expressed in a fixed medium, esp. writing but also a picture, sign, or electronic broadcast. • Libel is classified as both a crime and a tort but is no longer prosecuted as a crime. — Also termed defamatory libel. 2. The act of making such a statement; publication of defamatory matter by written or printed words, by its embodiment in physical form or by any other form of communication that has the potentially harmful qualities characteristic of written or printed words. See defamation. Cf. Slander. [Cases: Libel and Slander ⊆ 1, 14, 25.]

"Libel is written or visual defamation; slander is oral or aural defamation." Robert D. Sack & Sandra S. Baron, Libel, Slander, and Related Problems § 2.3, at 67 (2d ed. 1994).

"The distinction itself between libel and slander is not free from difficulty and uncertainty. As it took form in the seventeenth century, it was one between written and oral words. But later on libel was extended to include pictures, signs, statues, motion pictures, and even conduct carrying a defamatory imputation, such as hanging the plaintiff in effigy, erecting a gallows before his door, dishonoring his valid check drawn upon the defendant's bank, or even... following him over a considerable period in a conspicuous manner. From this it has been concluded that libel is that which is communicated by the sense of sight, or perhaps also by touch or smell, while slander is that which is conveyed by the sense of hearing." W. Page Keeton et al., The Law of Torts § 112, at 786 (5th ed. 1984).

criminal libel. At common law, a malicious libel that is designed to expose a person to hatred, contempt, or ridicule and that may subject the author to criminal sanctions. • Because of constitutional protections of free speech, libel is no longer criminally prosecuted. [Cases: Libel and Slander ⊆ 141.]

false-implication libel. Libel that creates a false implication or impression even though each statement in the article, taken separately, is true. See false light; invasion of privacy.

group libel. (1940) Libel that defames a class of persons, esp. because of their race, sex, national origin, religious belief, or the like. • Civil liability for group libel is rare because the plaintiff must prove that the statement applied particularly to him or her. Cf. hate speech under speech. [Cases: Libel and Slander ⊆ 21.]

libel per quod (par kwod). (1927) 1. Libel that is actionable only on allegation and proof of special damages. • Most jurisdictions do not recognize libel per quod, holding instead that general damages from libel are presumed. 2. Libel in which the defamatory meaning is not apparent from the statement on its face but rather must be proved from extrinsic circumstances. See innuendo (2). [Cases: Libel and Slander ⊆ 1, 6–13, 32, 33.]

libel per se (par say). (1843) 1. Libel that is actionable in itself, requiring no proof of special damages. • Most jurisdictions do not distinguish between libel per se and libel per quod, holding instead that general damages from libel are presumed. 2. Libel that is defamatory on its face, such as the statement "Frank is a thief. [Cases: Libel and Slander ⊆ 33.]

obscene libel. Hist. 1. The common-law crime of publishing, with the intent to corrupt, material (esp. sexual words or pictures) that tends to deprave or corrupt those whose minds are open to immoral influences. 2. A writing, book, picture, or print that is so obscene that it shocks the public sense of decency.

seditious libel. Libel made with the intent of inciting sedition. • Like other forms of criminal libel, seditious libel is no longer prosecuted. See sedition. [Cases: Libel and Slander ⊆ 141, 145.]

trade libel. Trade defamation that is written or recorded. See trade defamation under defamation; disparagement (3). Cf. trade slander under slander. [Cases: Libel and Slander ⊆ 130.]

3. The complaint or initial pleading in an admiralty or ecclesiastical case. [Cases: Admiralty ⊆ 60.] — Also termed (in sense 3) libel of information.

libel, vb. (16c) 1. To defame (someone) in a permanent medium, esp. in writing. [Cases: Libel and Slander ⊆ 1, 25.] 2. Hist. Maritime law. To sue in admiralty or ecclesiastical court. • This use of the term was eliminated with the merging of the Admiralty Rules into the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in 1986.

libellant (li-bal-ent). (16c) 1. The party who institutes a suit in admiralty or ecclesiastical court by filing a libel. [Cases: Admiralty ⊆ 41.] 2. LIBELER. — Also spelled libellant.

libellee (li-bal-ee). The party against whom a libel has been filed in admiralty or ecclesiastical court. — Also spelled libellee. [Cases: Admiralty ⊆ 42.]

libeler. One who publishes a written defamatory statement. — Also spelled libeller. — Also termed libellant.

libellary procedure (li-bal-er-ee). Roman law. The preliminary proceedings in a lawsuit, initiated by a plaintiff's written claims (in a libellus) to the magistrate.

libellos agere (li-bel-as a-jee-re). vb. [Latin] Roman law. To assist the emperor in responding to petitions. — Also termed libellum agere.

libellous, adj. See libelous.

libellus (li-bel-as), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. A small book; a written statement to a court; a petition. 2. Hist. An instrument conveying all or part of land. 3. Any one of a number of legal petitions or documents, such as a bill of complaint.

"The libellus conventionis was very like the intentio of the formulary system, and the modern statement of claim, since it set forth in a succinct manner the nature of the libellus divortii (la-bel-as di vor-sh thee-i). [Latin] Roman law. A bill of divorce. — In the later Roman empire, also termed libellus repudii.

"Libellus famosus . . . . According to the Lex Cornelia de iniuriis punishment was inflicted on the person who wrote (scriptor), composed (compositor) or edited (edidit) such a lampoon, even if the publication was made under another name or anonymously (sine nomine)." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 562 (1953).

libellus repudii (la-bel-as ri-pee-oh-dee-i). See LIEBELL DIVORTII.

libellus supply (la-bel-as sap-leks). [Latin] Roman law. A petition, esp. to the emperor. • All petitions to the emperor had to be in writing.

libel of accusation. Scots law. The instrument stating the criminal charge against an accused person.

libel of information. Maritime law. See LIEBEL (3).

libel of review. Maritime law. A new proceeding attacking a final decree after the right to appeal has expired. See LIBEL (3).

libelous, adj. Constituting or involving libel; defamatory . — Also spelled libellous. [Cases: Libel and Slander C=6-14.]

libel per quod. See LIEBEL.

libel per se. See LIBEL.

(Of an interpretation, construction, etc.) not strict or literal; loose .

liberal construction. See CONSTRUCTION.

libera lex (lib-ar-a leks), n. [Latin "free law"] Hist. Free law; the law of the land. • This phrase referred to the law enjoyed by free and lawful men, as opposed to men who had lost the benefit and protection of the law as a result of committing crimes. See LIBERAM LEGEM AMITTERE.

liberal interpretation. See INTERPRETATION.

liberar legem amittere (lib-ar-am lee-jem a-mit-ee-re). [Latin] Hist. To lose one's free law. • This phrase refers to falling, by crime or infamy, from the status of libera lex. By what was known as a "villenous judgment," a person would be discredited as juror and witness, would forfeit goods and chattels and lands for life, would have his houses razed and trees uprooted, and would go to prison. This was the ancient punishment of a conspirator and of a party involved in a wager of battle who cried "craven." — Also termed amittere liberam legem; amittere legem terrae ("to lose the law of the land"). See VILENOS JUDGMENT.

libera piscaria (lib-ar-a pis-kair-ea). See free fishery under FISHERY (1).

liberare (lib-ar-a-ray-re), vb. 1. Civil law. To set (a person) free. 2. Hist. To deliver or transfer (a writ, etc.).

liberari facias (lib-ar-a-ray-cee fay-shhee-as). [Law Latin] "that you cause to be delivered" Hist. A writ of execution ordering a sheriff to seize the debtor's unsalable real property and deliver it to the creditor to satisfy the creditor's claim. Cf. LEVAR FACIAS; FERI FACIAS.

liber assisarum (lib-ar-as-sair-am), n. [Law Latin] "Book of Assizes" Hist. A collection of cases arising in assizes and other country trials. • It was the fourth volume of the reports of the reign of Edward III.

liberate (lib-ar-a-ray-tee), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A chancery writ to the Exchequer ordering the payment of an annual pension or other sum. 2. A writ to the sheriff authorizing delivery of any property given as bond and then taken when a defendant forfeited a recognizance. 3. A writ to a jailer ordering delivery of a prisoner who had paid bail. 4. A writ to a sheriff commanding him to deliver to the plaintiff lands or goods pledged as part of a commercial trade loan arrangement (a statute staple) available in certain merchant towns in England. • If a debtor defaulted on this obligation, the creditor could obtain a writ of extent, which directed the sheriff to take an inventory and entitled the creditor to keep the debtor's property for a time until the rentals on the property equaled the amount due. The writ of liberate was issued after the inventory had been performed under the writ of extent. See EXTENT; STAPLE (1), (2).

liberate, vb. (17c) To set (a person) free, as from slavery, bondage, or hostile control.

liberatio (lib-ar-a-ray-shee-oh), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Money paid for the delivery or use of a thing; a payment.

libertas ecclesiastica (lib-ar-tas e-klee-zee-as-ti-ka), n. [Law Latin “church liberty”] Hist. Immunity from secular law, enjoyed by the church and the clergy, who are subject to ecclesiastical law. • This immunity was created in Magna Carta (1215).
libertatibus exigendis in itinere (lib-ar-ray-ta-bas ek-sa-jen-dis in-in-true-ree), n. [Latin] Hist. A writ from the king to one of a panel of itinerant judges (the justices in eyre) ordering them to admit an attorney to represent a criminal defendant. See eyre.
liberti (lib-ar-ti), n. pl. [Latin] Roman law. Manumitted slaves, considered in their relation with their former masters, who were known as patrons. Cf. INGENVUS; LIBERTINI. liberticide (lib-ar-tay-sid), n. 1. The destruction of liberty. 2. A destroyer of liberty. — liberticidal, adj.
liberty. (14c) 1. Freedom from arbitrary or undue external restraint, esp. by a government <give me liberty or give me death>. 2. A right, privilege, or immunity enjoyed by prescription or by grant; the absence of a legal duty imposed on a person <the liberties protected by the Constitution>. [Cases: Constitutional Law C->1079, 3873.]
“[Liberty] denotes not merely freedom from bodily restraint but also the right of the individual to contract, to engage in any of the common occupations of life, to acquire useful knowledge, to marry, establish a home and bring up children, to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, and generally to enjoy those privileges long recognized at common law as essential to the orderly pursuit of happiness by free men.” — Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 399, 43 S.Ct. 625, 626 (1923).
“The sphere of my legal liberty is that sphere of activity within which the law is content to leave me alone.” John Salmond, ‘The word liberty has become a symbol around which we have clung some of the most generous human emotions. We have been brought up to thrill with admiration at the men who say, Give me liberty or give me death. But the philosopher asks whether all those who are devoted to liberty mean the same thing. Does liberty or freedom, for instance, involve free trade? Does it involve freedom to preach race hatred or the overthrow of all that we regard as sacred? Many who believe in liberty characterize the freedom which they are not willing to grant, as license, and they do it so often that one may be inclined to think that what we really need is less liberty and more license. Moreover, there is a confusion between the absence of legal restraint and the presence of real freedom as positive power to do what we want. The legal freedom to earn a million dollars is not worth a cent to one who has no real opportunity. It is fashionable to assert that men want freedom above all other things, but a strong case may be made out for the direct contrary. Absolute freedom is just what people do not want . . . .” — Morris R. Cohen, Reason and Law 101-02 (1961).

civil liberty. See CIVIL LIBERTY.
individual liberty. See personal liberty. natural liberty. (16c) The power to act as one wishes, without any restraint or control, unless by nature.
“… This natural liberty . . . being a right inherent in us by birth . . . . But every man, when he enters into society, gives up a part of his natural liberty, as the price of so valuable a purchase, and, in consideration of receiving the advantages of mutual commerce, obliges himself to conform to those laws, which the community has thought proper to establish. * William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 121 (1765).

personal liberty. (16c) One's freedom to do as one pleases, limited only by the government's right to regulate the public health, safety, and welfare. — Also termed individual liberty. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⊂ 1079.]

political liberty. (17c) A person's freedom to participate in the operation of government, esp. in elections and in the making and administration of laws.

religious liberty. (17c) Freedom — as guaranteed by the First Amendment — to express, without external control other than one's own conscience, any or no system of religious opinion and to engage in or refrain from any form of religious observance or public or private religious worship, as long as it is consistent with the peace and order of society. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⊂ 1290–1428.]

Liberty Clause. (1971) The Due Process Clause in the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. See DUE PROCESS CLAUSE. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⊂ 3840–4841.]

liberty of a port. Marine insurance. A license incorporated in a marine policy allowing the vessel to dock and trade at a designated port other than the principal port of destination.

liberty of contract. See FREEDOM OF CONTRACT.

liberty of speech. See FREEDOM OF SPEECH.

liberty of the globe. Marine insurance. A license incorporated in a marine policy authorizing the vessel to go to any part of the world, rather than be confined to a particular port of destination. [Cases: Insurance ⊂ 2214.]

liberty of the press. See FREEDOM OF THE PRESS.

liberum maritagium (lib-ar-am mar-a-tay-jee-am). See FRANKMARRIAGE.

liberum servitium (lib-ar-am sar-vish-ee-am), n. [Law Latin] See SERVITIUM LIBERUM.

liberum socagium (lib-ar-am sok-ay-ee-am), n. [Law Latin] See free socage under SOCAGE.

liberum tenementum (lib-ar-am ten-a-men-tam), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A plea of freehold; a defensive common-law pleading in an action for trespass to lands. • The defendant pleaded either ownership of the land in question or authorization from the freehold owner. [Cases: Trespass ⊂ 27. 2. FREEHOLD.

liberum veto. See VETO.

LIBOR. abbr. See LONDON INTERBANK OFFERED RATE.

libra (l-bottom-br-a), n. [Latin] Hist. An English pound; a sum of money equal to a pound sterling. Pl. librae.

libra arsa (l-bottom-br-a ahr-sa), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A pound melted to test its purity.

libra numerata (l-bottom-br-a n(y)oo-mar-ray-ta), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A pound of money that has been counted.

libra pensa (l-bottom-br-a pen-sa), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A pound of money by weight.

librarian. Parliamentary law. An officer charged with custody of an organization's books, periodicals, and other published matter, and sometimes of the organization's own archives and files as well.

Library of Congress. A library on the U.S. Capitol grounds responsible for conducting research for members of Congress and congressional committees. • The Library maintains collections of materials that in many areas are the world's most extensive. Headed by a Librarian appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, it was established in 1860. 2 USCA §§ 131 et seq.

librrippens (l-bottom-ra-penz), n. [Latin] Roman law. A person who holds a bronze balance during actual or ritual sales, such as the ceremonies of emancipating a son from his father or conveying important property; a scale-holder. • The purchaser strikes the balance with a piece of bronze to symbolize completion of the sale. The seller then receives the bronze as a sign of the purchase money. See MANCIPATION.

licevity. (1-is-tee or li-) Ecclesiastical law. The legality of an act, esp. of a sacrament. • Liceity is distinguished from validity in ecclesiastical law. Although an act or some part of it may be illegal, its performance or effects may be valid. For example, Roman Catholic law requires that the Eucharist be celebrated with unleavened wheat bread. If leavened bread is used, the bread would be an illegal substance, but the sacrament's validity would not be affected.

license, n. (15c) 1. A permission, usu. revocable, to commit some act that would otherwise be unlawful; esp., an agreement (not amounting to a lease or profit à prendre) that it is lawful for the licensee to enter the licensor's land to do some act that would otherwise be illegal, such as hunting game. See SERVITUDE (1). [Cases: Licenses ⊂ 43.]

"[A] license is an authority to do a particular act, or series of acts, upon another's land, without possessing any estate therein. It is founded in personal confidence, and is not assignable, nor within the statute of frauds." 2 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *452–53 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

2. The certificate or document evidencing such permission. — license, vb.

artistic license. An open-source license that prohibits the sale of modified software unless it is included in a package with other software.

bare license. (17c) A license in which no property interest passes to the licensee, who is merely not a trespasser. • It is revocable at will. — Also termed NAKED LICENSE; MERE LICENSE. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⊂ 48.] blanket license. Copyright. A license granted by a performing-rights society, such as ASCAP or BMI, to use all works in the society’s portfolio in exchange for a fixed percentage of the user’s revenues.

box-top license. See shrink-wrap license.

BSD license. A form of open-source license that allows users to incorporate the source code into proprietary products as long as the names of the original creator or contributors are not used to endorse or promote the products without permission. • It was originally created for the Berkeley Software Distribution operating system developed at the University of California. — Also termed BSD-style license.

click-wrap license. See point-and-click agreement.

compulsory license. 1. Copyright. A statutorily created license that allows certain parties to use copyrighted material without the explicit permission of the copyright owner in exchange for a specified royalty. — Also termed equitable remuneration. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property 48.1] 2. Patents. A statutorily created license that allows certain people to pay a royalty and use an invention without the patentee’s permission. • While some nations currently recognize compulsory licenses, the United States never has.

cross-license. Patents. An agreement between two or more patentees to exchange licenses for their mutual benefit and use of the licensed products. [Cases: Patents 206.]

distribution license. A marketing license, usu. limited by geography.

exclusive license. [18c] A license that gives the licensee the sole right to perform the licensed act, often in a defined territory, and that prohibits the licensor from performing the licensed act and from granting the right to anyone else; esp., such a license of a copyright, patent, or trademark right. [Cases: Patents 211.1.]

general-public license. See open-source license.

implied license. A royalty-free license arising from a property owner’s conduct regarding another person’s use of the property even though the owner has not expressly consented to the property’s use. • In a patent context, for example, the circumstances surrounding the conduct give rise to an affirmative grant of consent or permission to infringe a patent’s claims. For example, the conduct of a patentee who encourages the manufacture of infringing products may be construed as an implied license to use the patent. An implied license may also arise when a patentee authorizes the sale or express grant of a license to a buyer, who then resells the license to a third party; the third party is the patentee’s implied licensee. [Cases: Patents 210.]

implied license by acquiescence. An implied license that arises from the patentee’s tacit or passive acceptance of or implied consent to an otherwise infringing act.

implied license by conduct. An implied license based on the patentee’s course of conduct, including language, from which another person could properly infer that the patentee consented to the other’s use of the patent. See implied license by equitable estoppel; implied license by legal estoppel.

implied license by equitable estoppel. An implied license usu. based on the patentee’s failure to take timely action to enforce patent rights against an infringer after objecting to the infringer’s actions, thereby misleading the infringer to believe that the patentee will not act. See A.C. Aukerman Co. v. R.L. Chaides Constr. Co., 960 F.2d 1020, 1042-43 (Fed. Cir.1992).

implied license by legal estoppel. An implied license usu. based on the patentee’s broadcast grant of a right or interest that cannot be derogated by the patentee’s later acts.

label license. A notice on an item’s package granting the purchaser a license to practice the process by using the item without additional payments to the licensor.

license coupled with an interest. [1836] An irrevocable license in real estate that confers the right (not the mere permission) to perform an act or acts upon the property; esp., a license incidental to the ownership of an interest in a chattel located on the land with respect to which the license exists. • This type of license is considered an interest in the land itself. An injunction may be obtained to prevent the wrongful revocation of such a license. — Also termed license coupled with the grant of an interest. [Cases: Licenses 43, 58.2.]

“A licence may be coupled with some interest in the land or chattels thereon. Thus the right to enter another man’s land to hunt and take away the deer killed, or to cut down a tree and remove it, involves the grant of an interest in the deer or tree and also a license annexed to it to come on the land. The interest must be a recognised interest in the property, and it must have been validly created. Thus at law a right to take game or minerals, being a profit à prendre, must have been created by deed or prescription, whereas no formalities are required for the grant of a right to take away chattels, such as felled or cut hay. Equity will give effect to a specifically enforceable agreement to grant an interest, so that a licence coupled with a profit à prendre granted merely in writing but for value may be protected by injunction.” Robert E. Megarry & M.P. Thompson, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 428 (6th ed. 1993).

limited license. A license that is narrow in scope or narrower than another license granted for the same purpose, or a license subject to conditions or limitations.

mechanical license. A grant of the right to produce and release a copyrighted work in exchange for a royalty based on the number of units manufactured and sold. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property 48.]

mere license. See bare license.
Mozilla public license. An open-source license that allows software users to modify and publicly distribute the software, but requires users to release the changed software under the same copyright as the original source code, and to release all claims to patent rights. The Mozilla public license was developed for the Netscape and Netscape Communicator browsers but is not limited to use with them. — Abbr. MPL.

naked license. 1. A license allowing a licensee to use a trademark on any goods and services the licensee chooses. [Cases: Trademarks C=1208.] 2. See bare license.

nonexclusive license. A license of intellectual-property rights that gives the licensee a right to use, make, or sell the licensed item on a shared basis with the licensor and possibly other licensees.

nonmetered license. Patents. An agreement to allow a patent's use in exchange for a flat percentage of sales, regardless of how much the patent is actually used. The Supreme Court rejected a nonmetered license as patent misuse, saying the buyer has a right to insist on paying only for actual use. Zenith Radio Co. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 89 S.Ct. 1562 (1969). See patent-misuse doctrine. [Cases: Patents C=218(5).]

off-sale license. A state-issued permit to sell alcoholic beverages that may be taken away from and consumed off the premises. — Also termed off-premises license. Cf. on-sale license. [Cases: Intoxicating Liquors C=59.]

on-sale license. A state-issued permit to sell alcoholic beverages to be consumed on the premises only. — Also termed on-premises license. Cf. off-sale license. [Cases: Intoxicating Liquors C=59.]

open-source license. A license that allows open-source software users to copy, distribute, or modify the source code, and publicly distribute derived works based upon the source code. Open-source licenses usu. do not require royalty or other fees on distribution. The license typically requires a user who redistributes original or modified software that was received under an open-source license to provide the original license terms, including all disclaimers, to all future users, and to distribute the source code with any machine-executable software. It is unclear who has the right to enforce the terms of an open-source license. — Sometimes termed generalized public license. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property C=107.] proprietary license. A license that restricts a software user's ability to copy, distribute, or modify the software.

shrink-wrap license. (1984) A license printed on the outside of a software package to advise the buyer that by opening the package, the buyer becomes legally bound to abide by the terms of the license. Shrink-wrap licenses usu. seek to (1) prohibit users from making unauthorized copies of the software, (2) prohibit modifications to the software, (3) limit use of the software to one computer, (4) limit the manufacturer's liability, and (5) disclaim warranties. Also written shrink-wrap license. Also termed box-top license; tear-me-open license. See point-and-click agreement. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property C=107.]

site license. Copyright. A software license that allows a company to install a set number of copies on individual computers within the company.

synchronization license. A license to reproduce and synchronize a copyrighted musical composition with visual images that are not covered by the musical work's copyright. Synchronization rights are commonly associated with audiovisual productions, such as music videos or movies. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property C=107.]

tear-me-open license. See shrink-wrap license.

use-based license. An open-source software license to which the user assents by acting according to the license's terms, namely by using, modifying, or distributing the licensed software. Unlike a point-and-click agreement, the user does not have to expressly declare acceptance of the license terms before using the software. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property C=107.]

license coupled with the grant of an interest. See license coupled with an interest under license.

licensee. (1864) 1. One to whom a license is granted. 2. One who has permission to enter or use another's premises, but only for one's own purposes and not for the occupier's benefit. The occupier has a duty to warn the licensee of any dangerous conditions known to the occupier but unknown to the licensee. An example of a licensee is a social guest. Cf. invitee; trespasser. [Cases: Licenses C=43.]

bare licensee. (1864) A licensee whose presence on the premises the occupier tolerates but does not necessarily approve, such as one who takes a shortcut across another's land. — Also termed naked licensee; mere licensee. [Cases: Licenses C=43.]

licensee by invitation. (1894) One who is expressly or impliedly permitted to enter another's premises to transact business with the owner or occupant or to perform an act benefiting the owner or occupant. [Cases: Licenses C=43.]

licensee by permission. (1894) One who has the owner's permission or passive consent to enter the owner's premises for one's own convenience, curiosity, or entertainment. [Cases: Licenses C=43.]

licensee with an interest. See invitee.

mere licensee. See bare licensee.

naked licensee. See bare licensee. license fee. 1. A monetary charge imposed by a governmental authority for the privilege of pursuing a particular occupation, business, or activity. — Also termed license tax. [Cases: Licenses 2.] 2. A charge of this type accompanied by a requirement that the licensee take some action, or be subjected to regulations or restrictions. [Cases: Licenses 2.]

license in amortization. Hist. A license authorizing the conveyance of property otherwise invalid under the statutes of mortmain. See mortmain.

licenser. See licensor.

license tax. See license fee (1).

licensing. (15c) 1. The sale of a license authorizing another to use something (such as computer software) protected by copyright, patent, or trademark. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property 2; Trademarks 1.] 2. A governmental body's process of issuing a license. — Also termed licensure. [Cases: Licenses 1.]

licensor. One who grants a license to another. — Also spelled licenser. [Cases: Licenses 43.]

licensure. See licensing (2).

licentia (li-sen-she-ə), n. [Lat. licere “to be lawful”] Hist. License; permission.

licentia concordandi (li-sen-she-ə kon-kor-dan-di), n. [Law Latin “license to agree”] Hist. One of the proceedings on levying a fine of lands. See congé d’accorder.

The licentia concordandi, or leave to agree the suit. For, as soon as the action is brought, the defendant knowing himself to be in the wrong, is supposed to make overtures of peace and accommodation to the plaintiff. Who, accepting them, but having, upon suing out the writ, given pledges to prosecute his suit, which he endangers if he now deserts it without license, he therefore applies to the court for leave to make the matter up.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 350 (1766).

licentia loquendi (li-sen-she-ə loh-kwen-di), [Lat. licere “to be lawful”] See Imparlance.

licentia surgendi (li-sen-she-ə sar-jen-di), n. [Law Latin “license to arise”] Hist. Permission or writ from the court to a tenant in a real action to get out of bed and appear in court, following the tenant’s earlier plea of inability to appear because of illness that confined the tenant to bed. • The tenant could lose the case by default for falsely claiming illness. See de malo; essoin.

licentiate (li-sen-she-ət), n. (16c) One who has obtained a license or authoritative permission to exercise some function, esp. to practice a profession .

licentia transfretandi. See de licentia transfretandi.

licentious (li-sen-shəs), adj. (16c) Lacking or ignoring moral or legal restraint, esp. in sexual activity; lewd; lascivious. — licentiousness, n. licere (li-see-ər), vb. [Lat.] Roman law. To be allowed by law. • The stipulation habere licere guaranteed the buyer indemnity from eviction.

licit. (li-set or lis-ət). [Latin] Hist. 1. It is permitted; it is lawful. 2. It is conceded; it is granted.

licit (lis-ət), adj. (15c) Not forbidden by law; permitted; legal. — licitly, adv.

licitari (lis-ə-tair-ee), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To bid for an item, esp. repeatedly during the same sale. — Also termed liciter.

licitation (lis-ə-ta-shən). (17c) 1. The offering for sale or bidding for purchase at an auction; esp., in civil law, a judicial sale of property held in common. See La. Civ. Code art. 811. [Cases: Husband and Wife 272(4), 272(5); Partition 99; 2. cant.]

licitator (lis-ə-ta-tor), n. [Latin] Roman law. The bidder at a sale.

lictor (lik-tor), n. [Latin] Roman law. An officer who accompanied a magistrate having imperium and traditionally carried a bundle of rods and an ax, symbolizing the magistrate’s powers of life and death and of corporal punishment over citizens. See imperium.

Lidford law (lid-fərd). Hist. A form of lynch law permitting a person to be punished first and tried later. • The term took its name from the English town of Lidford (now Lydford) where this type of action supposedly took place. Cf fedburn justice under justice (1).

lie, vb. (bef. 12c) 1. To tell an untruth; to speak or write falsely <she lied on the witness stand>. See perjury. Cf. fabricate. [Cases: Perjury 12.] 2. To have found a defendant <in such a situation, an action lies in tort>. 3. To exist; to reside <final appeal lies with the Supreme Court>.

Lieber Code. A codification of rules and customs of warfare, which set out the humane and ethical treatment of persons. • It was first developed by Francis Lieber during the American Revolution, formally adopted as law by Abraham Lincoln during the Civil War, and used as the basis for the first codified international rules of law at The Hague Peace Conference of 1899. The rules were extended and refined in another Hague convention in 1907, and became known as the Law of The Hague. See Law of the Hague.

lie detector. See polygraph.

liege (leej), adj. (14c) Hist. 1. Entitled to feudal allegiance and service. 2. Bound by feudal tenure to a lord paramount; owing allegiance and service. 3. Loyal; faithful. — Also termed ligius.

liege, n. Hist. 1. A vassal bound to feudal allegiance. — Also termed liege man; liege woman. 2. A loyal subject of a monarch or other sovereign. 3. A feudal lord entitled to allegiance and service; a sovereign or superior lord. — Also termed (in sense 3) liege lord.

liegance. See ligance.

liege homage, n. Hist. Homage paid by one sovereign to another, including pledges of loyalty and services.

liege lord, n. Hist. See liege.
liege man, n. Hist. See LIEGE (1).

liege poustie [lee pow-stee]. [Law French "liege power" fr. Latin legitima potestas "lawful power"] Scots law. The lawful power of one in good health, as a result of which the person might dispose of heritable property. • The phrase often appeared attributively, as in liege poustie conveyance. Cf. LEGITIMA POTESTAS.

"LIEGE POUSTIE" is that state of health which gives a person full power to dispose mortis causa, or otherwise, of his heritable property. The term, according to our institutional writers, is derived from the words legitima potestas, signifying the lawful power of disposing of property at pleasure. It is used in contradistinction to deathbed — a liege poustie conveyance being a conveyance not challengeable on the head of deathbed. The tests of liege poustie, opposed to the presumption of deathbed, are survivals during sixty days, and going to kirk or market unsuported. William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 662 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

"[A] liege poustie conveyance being one not challengeable by the heir on the ground of death-bed. This condition of health the granter of a deed was held to have enjoyed, if at the time of granting it he was not affected by the disease of which he died, or if, after executing it, he attended kirk or market, unsuported, or survived for sixty days." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 329 (4th ed. 1894).

lieger, n. Archaic. See LEDGER (2).

liege subject. See natural-born subject under SUBJECT.

lie in franchise, vb. Hist. (Of wrecks, waifs, strays, etc.) to be seizable without judicial action.

lie in grant, vb. Hist. (Of incorporeal hereditaments) to be passable by deed or charter without the ceremony of livery of seisin.

lie in livery, vb. Hist. (Of corporeal hereditaments) to be passable by livery of seisin rather than by deed.

lien (leen or lee-on), n. (16c) A legal right or interest that a creditor has in another's property, lasting usu. until a debt or duty that it secures is satisfied. • Typically, the creditor does not take possession of the property on which the lien has been obtained. Cf. PLEDGE (3). [Cases: Liens (1) — lien, vb. — lienable, liened, adj.

accountant's lien. The right of an accountant to retain a client's papers until the accountant's fees have been paid.

agent's lien. A lien against property of the estate, in favor of an agent, to secure the agent's compensation as well as all necessary expenses incurred under the agent's power. [Cases: Principal and Agent (190)] agister's lien (a-jis-tarz). A lien on the animals under an agister's care, to secure payment of the agister's fee. See AGISTER; AGISTMENT. [Cases: Animals (12).

agricultural lien. 1. A statutory lien that protects a seller of farming equipment by giving the seller a lien on crops grown with the equipment. [Cases: Agriculture (10)]. 2. Secured transactions. An interest (other than a security interest) in farm products having three characteristics: (1) it must secure payment or performance of an obligation for goods or services furnished in connection with a debtor's farming operation, or of an obligation for rent on real property leased by a debtor in connection with farming; (2) it must be created by statute in favor of a person either who in the ordinary course of business furnished goods or services to a debtor in connection with the debtor's farming, or who leased real property to a debtor in connection with the debtor's farming; and (3) the effectiveness of the interest must not depend on the person's possession of the personal property. UCC § 9-102(a)(5). architect's lien. A statutory lien on real property in favor of an architect who has drawn the plans for and supervised the construction of improvements on the property. [Cases: Mechanics' Liens (36)].

artisan's lien. See mechanic's lien.

attachment lien. A lien on property seized by prejudgment attachment. • Such a lien is initially inchoate but becomes final and perfected upon entry of a judgment for the attaching creditor and relates back to the date when the lien first arose. — Also termed lien of attachment. See ATTACHMENT. [Cases: Attachment (177); Federal Civil Procedure (589).

attorney's lien. The right of an attorney to hold or retain a client's money or property (a retaining lien) or to encumber money payable to the client (a charging lien) until the attorney's fees have been properly determined and paid. [Cases: Attorney and Client (171)].

banker's lien. The right of a bank to satisfy a customer's matured debt by seizing the customer's money or property in the bank's possession. [Cases: Banks and Banking (134, 136).

blanket lien. A lien that gives a creditor the entitlement to take possession of any or all of the debtor's real property to cover a delinquent loan.

charging lien. 1. An attorney's lien on a claim that the attorney has helped the client perfect, as through a judgment or settlement. [Cases: Attorney and Client (171). 2. A lien on specified property in the debtor's possession.

chattel lien. See mechanic's lien.

choate lien (koh-it). A lien in which the lienholder, the property, and the monetary amount are established so that the lien is perfected and nothing else needs to be done to make it enforceable. [Cases: Internal Revenue (478); Liens (1, 12).

common-law lien. 1. A lien granted by the common law, rather than by statute, equity, or agreement by the parties. [Cases: Liens (1)]. 2. The right of one person to retain possession of property belonging to another until certain demands of the possessing party are met. • This type of lien, unlike an equitable lien, cannot exist without possession.
concurrent lien. One of two or more liens of equal priority attaching to the same property.

construction lien. See mechanic's lien.

consummate lien (kan-sum-ət). A judgment lien arising after the denial of a motion for a new trial. Cf. inchoate lien.

conventional lien. A lien that is created by the express agreement of the parties, in circumstances in which the law would not create a lien.

deferred lien. A lien effective at a future date, as distinguished from a present lien that is currently possessory.

demurrage lien (də-mor-ag). A carrier's lien on goods for any unpaid demurrage charges. See demurrage. [Cases: Shipping ☞ 185.]

drag net lien. A lien that is enlarged to cover any additional credit extended to the debtor by the same creditor. [Cases: Secured Transactions ☞ 114.]

equitable lien. A right, enforceable only in equity, to have a demand satisfied from a particular fund or specific property, without having possession of the fund or property. • It arises mainly in four circumstances: (1) when an occupant of land, believing in good faith to be the owner of that land, makes improvements, repairs, or other expenditures that permanently increase the land's value, (2) when one of two or more joint owners makes expenditures of that kind, (3) when a tenant for life completes permanent and beneficial improvements to the estate begun earlier by the testator, and (4) when land or other property is transferred subject to the payment of debts, legacies, portions, or annuities to third persons. • Also termed equitable levy. [Cases: Liens ☞ 7.]

execution lien. A lien on property seized by a levy of execution. • Such a lien gives the execution creditor priority over later transferees of the property and over prior unrecorded conveyances of interests in the property. See execution (3). [Cases: Execution ☞ 106.]

factor's lien. A lien, usu. statutory, on property held on consignment by a factor. • It allows the factor to keep the credits arising on the particular goods, but for the purpose of their trade or business, except on condition that they shall have a lien upon it, not only in respect to the charges arising on the particular goods, but for the general balance of account. All persons who afterwards deal with them, with the knowledge of such notice, will be deemed to have acceded to that agreement.” 2 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *637 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

healthcare lien. A statutory lien asserted by an HMO, insurer, medical group, or independent practice association against those liable to the patient for damages, to recover money paid or claim money payable for healthcare services provided under a healthcare service plan or a disability insurance policy. • Also termed medical lien. Cf. hospital lien; workers'-compensation lien.

hospital lien. A statutory lien asserted by a hospital to recover the costs of emergency and ongoing medical and other services. • The lien applies against any judgment, compromise, or settlement received by a hospital patient either from a third person who caused the patient's injuries or from the third person's insurer. See healthcare lien. [Cases: Health ☞ 961.]

hotelkeeper's lien. A possessory or statutory lien allowing an innkeeper to hold, as security for payment, personal property that a guest brought into the hotel. • Also termed innkeeper's lien. [Cases: Innkeepers ☞ 13.]

inchoate lien (in-koh-ət). A judgment lien that may be defeated if the judgment is vacated or a motion for new trial is granted. Cf. consummate lien.

innkeeper's lien. See hotelkeeper's lien.

involuntary lien. A lien arising without the debtor's consent.

judgment lien. A lien imposed on a judgment debtor's nonexempt property. • This lien gives the judgment creditor the right to attach the judgment debtor's property. • Also termed lien of judgment. See exempt lien. A lien obtained by judgment, levy, sequestration, or other legal or equitable process or proceeding. • If a debtor is adjudged to owe money to a creditor and the judgment has not been satisfied, the creditor can ask the court to impose a lien on specific property owned and possessed by the debtor. After the court imposes the lien, it usu. issues a writ directing the local sheriff to seize the property, sell it, and turn over the proceeds to the creditor. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=267; Judgment C=752–802.]

junior lien. A lien that is subordinate to one or more other liens on the same property.

laborer’s lien. See mechanic’s lien.

landlord’s lien. 1. At common law, a lien that gave a landlord the right to seize a tenant’s property and sell it publicly to satisfy overdue rent. See distress. 2. Generally, a statutory lien on a tenant’s personal property at the leased premises in favor of a landlord who receives preferred-creditor status on that property. • Such a lien usu. secures the payment of overdue rent or compensation for damage to the premises. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant C=239–257.] lien of attachment. See attachment lien.

lien of factor at common law. Hist. A lien not created by statute; a common-law lien. [Cases: Factors C=47.]

lien of garnishment. See garnishment lien.

lien of judgment. See judgment lien.

manufacturer’s lien. A statutory lien that secures payment for labor or materials expended in producing goods for another.

maritime lien. A lien on a vessel, given to secure the claim of a creditor who provided maritime services to the vessel or who suffered an injury from the vessel’s use. — Also termed tacit hypothecation. [Cases: Maritime Liens C=1–1.

"The maritime lien has been described as one of the most striking peculiarities of Admiralty law, constituting a charge upon ships of a nature unknown alike to common law and equity. It arises by operation of law and exists as a claim upon the property, secret and invisible. A maritime lien may be defined as: (1) a privileged claim, (2) upon maritime property, (3) for service done to it or injury caused by it, (4) accruing from the moment when the claim attaches, (5) travelling with the property unconditionally, (6) enforced by means of an action in rem." Griffith Price, The Law of Maritime Liens 1 (1940).

mechanic’s lien. A statutory lien that secures payment for labor or materials supplied in improving, repairing, or maintaining real or personal property, such as a building, an automobile, or the like. — Also termed artisan’s lien; chattel lien (for personal property); construction lien (for labor); garageman’s lien (for repaired vehicles); laborer’s lien (for labor); materialman’s lien (for materials). [Cases: Bailment C=18(2); Mechanics’ Liens C=1–1.]

medical lien. See healthcare lien.

mortgage lien. A lien on the mortgagor’s property securing the mortgage. [Cases: Mortgages C=145.]

municipal lien. A lien by a municipal corporation against a property owner for the owner’s proportionate share of a public improvement that specially and individually benefits the owner. [Cases: Municipal Corporations C=519.]

particular lien. A possessory lien by which the possessor of goods has the right to retain specific goods until a debt incurred in connection with those goods has been paid. — Also termed special lien. Cf. general lien.

"A general lien is the right to retain the property of another, for a general balance of accounts; but a particular lien is a right to retain it only for a charge on account of labor employed or expenses bestowed upon the identical property detained. The former is taken strictly, but the latter is favored in law. The right rests on principles of natural equity and commercial necessity, and it prevents circuitry of action, and gives security and confidence. ..." 2 Kent, Commentaries on American Law *634 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

possessor’s garageman’s lien. A lien on a vehicle in the amount of the repairs performed by the garage. [Cases: Automobiles C=374.]

possessor’s lien. A lien allowing the creditor to keep possession of the encumbered property until the debt is satisfied. • A power of sale may or may not be combined with this right of possession. Examples include pledges of chattels, the liens of innkeepers, garageman’s liens, and vendor’s liens. See pledge.

prior lien. A lien that is superior to one or more other liens on the same property, usu. because it was perfected first. — Also termed priority lien.

retaining lien. An attorney’s right to keep a client’s papers until the client has paid for the attorney’s services. • The attorney’s retaining lien is not recognized in some states. [Cases: Attorney and Client C=171, 182(3).]

second lien. A lien that is next in rank after a first lien on the same property and therefore is next entitled to satisfaction out of the proceeds from the property’s sale.

secret lien. A lien not appearing of record and unknown to purchasers; a lien reserved by the vendor and kept hidden from third parties, to secure the payment of goods after delivery.

senior lien. A lien that has priority over other liens on the same property.

special lien. See particular lien.

specific lien. A lien secured on a particular thing by a contract or by a judgment, execution, attachment, or other legal proceeding.

statutory lien. 1. A lien arising solely by force of statute, not by agreement of the parties. • Examples are federal tax liens and mechanic’s liens. 2. Bankruptcy. Either of two types of liens: (1) a lien arising solely by force of a statute on specified circumstances or lien avoidance. Bankruptcy. A debtor's depriving a creditor of a security interest in an asset of the bankruptcy estate. 11 USCA §§ 506(d), 522(f). [Cases: Bankruptcy C—2571, 2584.]

lien of factor at common law. See LIEN.

lien of garnishment. See garnishment lien under LIEN.

lien of judgment. See judgment lien under LIEN.

lienor. See LIENHOLDER.

lien-stripping. Bankruptcy. The practice of splitting a mortgagee's secured claim into secured and unsecured components and releasing the claim to the market value of the debtor's residence, thereby allowing the debtor to modify the terms of the mortgage and reduce the amount of the debt. • The U.S. Supreme Court has prohibited lien-stripping in all Chapter 7 cases (Nobelman v. American Savs. Bank, 508 U.S. 324, 113 S.Ct. 2106 (1993) and in Chapter 13 cases involving a debtor's principal residence (Dewsnup v. Timm, 502 U.S. 410, 112 S.Ct. 773 (1992)), and the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994 modified the Bankruptcy Code to prohibit lien-stripping in Chapter 11 cases involving an individual's principal residence. [Cases: Bankruptcy C—2575.]

lien theory. (1882) The idea that a mortgage resembles a lien, so that the mortgagee acquires only a lien on the property and the mortgagor retains both legal and equitable title unless a valid foreclosure occurs. • Most American states — commonly called lien states, lien jurisdictions, or lien-theory jurisdictions — have adopted this theory. Cf. TITLE THEORY. [Cases: Mortgages C—136.]

lieu conus (lly]oo kon-yoo), n. [Law French] Hist. A place generally known and noticed by those in the area of it, such as a castle or manor.

liquidated account. See account.

liquidated amount. A figure readily computed, based on an agreement’s terms.

liquidated claim. See claim (3).

liquidated damages. See damages.

liquidated-damages clause. (1873) A contractual provision that determines in advance the measure of damages if a party breaches the agreement. • Traditionally, courts have upheld such a clause unless the agreed-on sum is deemed a penalty for one of the following reasons: (1) the sum grossly exceeds the probable damages on breach, (2) the same sum is made payable for any variety of different breaches (some major, some minor), or (3) a mere delay in payment has been listed among the events of default. Cf. LIMITATION-OF-REMEDIES CLAUSE; PENALTY CLAUSE. [Cases: Damages § 74–84.] liquidated debt. See debt.

liquidated demand. See liquidated claim under claim (3).

liquidating distribution. See distribution.

liquidating dividend. See liquidation dividend under dividend.

liquidating partner. See partner.

liquidating price. See redemption price under price.

liquidating trust. See trust.

liquidation, n. (16c) 1. The act of determining by agreement or by litigation the exact amount of something (as a debt or damages) that before was uncertain. 2. The act of settling a debt by payment or other satisfaction. 3. The act or process of converting assets into cash, esp. to settle debts.

one-month liquidation. A special election, available to certain shareholders, that determines how the distributions received in liquidation by electing shareholders will be treated for federal income-tax purposes. • To qualify for the election, the corporation must be completely liquidated within one month. IRC § 333.

partial liquidation. A liquidation that does not completely dispose of a company’s assets; esp., a liquidation occurring when some corporate assets are distributed to shareholders (usu. on a pro rata basis) and the corporation continues to operate in a restricted form. [Cases: Internal Revenue § 3698, 3711.]

twelve-month liquidation. A liquidation occurring within 12 months from adoption of the liquidation plan to complete liquidation, subject to a tax law prohibiting the company from recognizing any gains or losses on property sold within that time frame. • Generally, inventory will not be included unless a bulk sale occurs. IRC § 337. [Cases: Internal Revenue § 3698, 3711.]

4. Bankruptcy. The process — under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code — of collecting a debtor’s nonexempt property, converting that property to cash, and distributing the cash to the various creditors. • Upon liquidation, the debtor hopes to obtain a discharge, which releases the debtor from any further personal liability for prebankruptcy debts. See chapter 7. Cf. rehabilitation (3). [Cases: Bankruptcy § 2251.]

liquidation bankruptcy. See chapter 7 (2). liquidation court. See court.

liquidation dividend. See dividend.

liquidation preference. See court.

liquidation price. See price.

liquidation value. See value (2).

liquidator. (1858) A person appointed to wind up a business’s affairs, esp. by selling off its assets. See liquidation (3), (4). Cf. receiver.

liquid debt. See debt.

liquidity. 1. The quality or state of being readily convertible to cash. 2. Securities. The characteristic of having enough units in the market that large transactions can occur without substantial price variations. • Most stocks traded on the New York Stock Exchange, for example, have liquidity.

liquidity ratio. The ratio between a person’s or entity’s assets that are held in cash or liquid form and the amount of the person’s or entity’s current liabilities, indicating the ability to pay current debts as they come due.

lis est soprta (lis est so-pr·to). [Latin] Hist. The suit is concluded; the issues in a case are decided. — Also termed lis est finita (lis est fi·ni·ta).

lis mota (lis mo·ta), n. [Latin “a lawsuit moved”] Hist. A dispute that has begun and later forms the basis of a lawsuit.

lis pendens (lis pen·dan·z). [Latin] (17c) 1. A pending lawsuit. 2. The jurisdiction, power, or control acquired by a court over property while a legal action is pending. 3. A notice, recorded in the chain of title to real property, required or permitted in some jurisdictions to warn all persons that certain property is the subject matter of litigation, and that any interests acquired during the pendency of the suit are subject to its outcome. — Also termed (in sense 3) notice of lis pendens; notice of pendency. Cf. pendente lite. [Cases: Lis Pendens § 1, 12.1.] list, n. (13c) 1. A roll or register, as of names. 2. A docket of cases ready for hearing or trial. See calendar (2); docket.

list, vb. (bef. 12c) 1. To set down or enter (information) in a list. 2. To register (a security) on an exchange so that it may be publicly traded. 3. To place (property) for sale under an agreement with a real-estate agent or broker.

listed security. See security.

listed security exchange. An organized secondary security market operating at a designated location, such as the New York Stock Exchange.

listed species. See candidate species under species (1).

listed stock. See listed security under security.

lister. A person authorized to compile lists of taxable property for assessment and appraisal; an assessor.

listing. (1891) 1. Real estate. An agreement between a property owner and an agent, whereby the agent agrees to try to secure a buyer or tenant for a specific property at a certain price and terms in return for a fee or commission. — Also termed listing agreement; authorization to sell. [Cases: Brokers C 40, 46.]

exclusive-agency listing. A listing providing that one agent has the right to be the only person, other than the owner, to sell the property during a specified period. — Also termed exclusive listing; exclusive-authorization-to-sell listing. [Cases: Brokers C 40, 46, 66.]

general listing. See open listing.

multiple listing. A listing providing that the agent will allow other agents to try to sell the property. • Under this agreement, the original agent gives the selling agent a percentage of the commission or some other stipulated amount. [Cases: Brokers C 40, 66.]

net listing. A listing providing that the agent agrees to sell the owner’s property for a set minimum price, any amount over the minimum being retained by the agent as commission. — Also termed net sale contract. [Cases: Brokers C 40, 40.]

open listing. A listing that allows selling rights to be given to more than one agent at a time, obligates the owner to pay a commission when a specified broker makes a sale, and reserves the owner’s right to personally sell the property without paying a commission. — Also termed nonexclusive listing; general listing; simple listing. [Cases: Brokers C 46, 46.]

2. Securities. The contract between a firm and a stock exchange by which the trading of the firm’s securities on the exchange is handled. See listed security under security. [Cases: Exchanges C 13, 10.]

dual listing. The listing of a security on more than one exchange.

3. Tax. The creation of a schedule or inventory of a person’s taxable property; the list of a person’s taxable property. [Cases: Taxation C 2462, 2493.]

listing agent. See agent (2).

list of creditors. (1818) A schedule giving the names and addresses of creditors, along with amounts owed them. • This list is required in a bankruptcy proceeding. [Cases: Bankruptcy C 2324.]

list price. See price.

litem. (lit-tem or -tam). See ad litem.

litem denuntiare. (lit-tem da-nan-shoo-air-ee). [Latin “to announce a suit”] Roman law. 1. The summoning of a defendant by a magistrate exercising cognitio in the late classical period. 2. The notification by a buyer to the seller of a claim by a third party to the things sold. — Also spelled litem denunciare. Cf. litis denuntiatio.

litem suam facere. (lit-tem s[y-oo-am-fay-sar-ee). [Latin “to make a suit one’s own”] Roman law. (Of a judge) to fail in his official duty through imprudence, such as not adhering to the formula, or not following due procedure. • This failure amounted to misconduct in the judge’s duties, and a litigant was given a private action against him. The scope of actionable misconduct is not certain. It included not obeying the formula and not adjourning the trial properly, but it may also have included overt acts of corruption, such as accepting bribes.

literacy test. Hist. A test of one’s ability to read and write, formerly required in some states as a condition for registering to vote. • Literacy tests were abused at various times in United States history to preclude minorities from exercising the right to vote. This practice was prohibited by the Voting Rights Act of 1965. 42 USCA §§ 1971-1974. See South Carolina v. Katzenbach, 383 U.S. 301, 86 S.Ct. 8 (1966). [Cases: Elections C 59.]

literae mortuae. (lit-ee mor-choo-ee), n. [Latin] Hist. Dead letters; filler words in a statute.

literae patentes. (lit-ee pa-ten-teez), n. [Latin “open letters”] Hist. A public grant from the sovereign to a subject, conferring the right to land, a franchise, a title, liberty, or some other endowment. • The modern “patent” and, more closely, “letters patent” derive from this term. See letters patent (1).

"The term 'patent' is short for 'letters patent,' derived from the Latin literae patentes, meaning open letters. Generally, letters patent were letters addressed by the sovereign to all whom these presents shall come, reciting a grant of some dignity, office, franchise, or other privilege that has been given by the sovereign to the patentee." Donald S. Chisum et al., Principles of Patent Law 2 (1998).

literae sigillatae (lit-ør-ee sij-ll-tee), n. [Latin] Hist. Sealed letters. A sheriff’s return on a writ was often called literae sigillatae.

literary property. 1. The physical property in which an intellectual production is embodied, such as a book, screenplay, or lecture. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property C=41.3.] 2. An owner’s exclusive right to possess, use, and dispose of such a production. See COPYRIGHT; INTELLIGENT PROPERTY. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property C=36.] literary work. See WORK (2). literate, adj. (15c) 1. Able to read and write a language. 2. Knowledgeable and educated. — literacy, n. literatura (lit-ør-tuhr-uh), n. [Latin fr. litera “a letter”] Hist. Education. Ad literaturam ponere means the right to educate one’s children, esp. male children. During feudal times, serf-tenants could not educate their children without the lord’s consent.
litigable (lit-ør-gal-bal), adj. (18c) Able to be contested or disputed in court <litigable claims>. — litigability, n. litigant. (17c) A party to a lawsuit.
institutional litigant. See INSTITUTIONAL LITIGANT. self-represented litigant. See PRO SE. vexatious litigant. A litigant who repeatedly files frivolous lawsuits. Many jurisdictions have statutes or local rules requiring a vexatious litigant to obtain the court’s permission to file any further lawsuits or pleadings. The litigant may also be subject to sanctions. [Cases: Action C=13; Injunction C=26(4), 26(5).]
litigation, n. (17c) 1. The process of carrying on a lawsuit <the attorney advised his client to make a generous settlement offer in order to avoid litigation>. 2. A lawsuit itself <several litigations pending before the court>. — litigate, vb. — litigatory, litigational, adj.
complex litigation. Litigation involving several parties who are separately represented, and usu. involving multifarious factual and legal issues.
What exactly is ‘complex litigation?’ The problem is that no one really knows — or, more accurately perhaps, various definitions don’t agree. Complex civil litigation has an ‘I-know-it-when-I-see-it’ quality. Nearly everyone agrees that matters like the massive asbestos litigation, the AT&T antitrust suit, or the remedial phase of a school desegregation case are complex. But trying to find a common thread that both describes these cases and distinguishes them from the run-of-the-mill car crash is difficult.” Jay Tidmarsh & Roger H. Transgrud, Complex Litigation 1 (2002).
litigation costs. See COST (3). litigation hold. See HOLD.
litigation-hold letter. A writing that orders the segregation and retention of certain documents and data that are or may be relevant to a threatened or pending litigation or an official investigation.
internal litigation-hold letter. A litigation-hold letter sent by a company, directly or through its attorneys, to its own employees.
litigation privilege. See PRIVILEGE (1). litigator. (16c) 1. A trial lawyer. 2. A lawyer who prepares cases for trial, as by conducting discovery and pretrial motions, trying cases, and handling appeals. 3. Archaic. A party to a lawsuit; a litigant.
litigious (lit-ij-ee), adj. (14c) 1. Prone to legal disputes; contentious <our litigious society>. 2. Archaic. Of or relating to the subject of a lawsuit <the litigious property>. 3. Archaic. Of or relating to lawsuits; litigatory <they couldn’t settle the litigious dispute>. — litigiousness, litigiosity (lit-ij-ee-os-tee), n. litigious right. Civil law. A right that cannot be exercised without first being determined in a lawsuit. La. Civ. Code art. 2652. If the right is sold, it must be in litigation at the time of sale to be considered a litigious right.
litis aestimatio (lit-ee-est-may-see-oh). [Latin] Roman law. The judicial estimate of the measure of damages.
litis contestatio (lit-tis kon-tess-tay-see-oh). [Latin] 1. Roman law. The final agreement of the parties to a suit on the formula the praetor would issue to the judex. Also termed contestatio litis. See FORMULA.
"Both parties being present, or represented, before the praetor, the plaintiff stated the nature of his claim and asked for an action. It lay in the discretion of the praetor to give or to refuse it. If, in the event, the praetor refused any action at all, or any action which the plaintiff was willing to accept, the matter was at an end . . . If, on the other hand, subject to the direction and approval of the praetor, the parties agreed upon the issues to be referred . . . [a] document framed in identical terms was issued to the judex by the praetor as his authority to act. This ceremonial in which three persons concurred (plain-livery office. An office designated for the delivery of livery in chivalry.

livery of seisin. The ceremony by which a grantor conveyed land to a grantee. • Livery of seisin involved either (1) going on the land and having the grantor symbolically deliver possession of the land to the grantee by handing over a twig, a cloud of dirt, or a piece of turf (called livery in deed) or (2) going within sight of the land and having the grantor tell the grantee that possession was being given, followed by the grantee’s entering the land (called livery in law). See investment; seisin. [Cases: Deeds 21.]

‘We may now pause to wonder how transfer of these potentially infinite interests was accomplished. Without a modern system of land records, it would be desirable that the transfer be effected with sufficient ceremony not only to mark itself indelibly in the memories of the participants, but also to give notice to interested persons such as the mesne lord above the transferor. The central idea was to make ritual livery (meaning ‘delivery,’ from the Old French lier) of seisin (meaning, roughly, ‘possession,’ from the Old French saisir or seire). The transferor and transferee would go to the land to be transferred, and the transferor would then hand to the transferee a lump of soil or a twig from a tree — all the while intoning the appropriate words of grant, together with the magical words ‘and his heirs’ if the interest transferred was to be a potentially infinite one.’ Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 10-11 (2d ed. 1984).

lives in being. See life in being.

livestock, n. (18c) Domestic animals and fowls that (1) are kept for profit or pleasure, (2) can normally be confined within boundaries without seriously impairing their utility, and (3) do not normally intrude on others’ land in such a way as to harm the land or growing crops. [Cases: Animals C 1.5(5).]

live storage. The storage of cars in active daily use, rather than cars put away for an extended period. • A garage owner’s responsibility sometimes depends on whether a car is in live or dead storage. Cf. dead storage. [Cases: Automobiles C 370.]

live thalweg. See thalweg.

living, n. One’s source of monetary support or resources; esp., one’s employment.

living separate and apart. (18c) Of spouses living away from each other, along with at least one spouse’s intent to dissolve the marriage. • One basis for no-fault divorce in many states exists if the spouses have lived apart for a specified period. — Sometimes shortened to separate and apart. [Cases: Divorce C 36, 37; Husband and Wife C 272(1).]

living-together agreement. See cohabitation agreement.

living trust. See inter vivos trust under trust.

living will. (1972) An instrument, signed with the formalities statutorily required for a will, by which a person directs that his or her life not be artificially prolonged by extraordinary measures when there is no reasonable expectation of recovery from extreme physical or mental disability. • Most states have living-will legislation. — Also termed declaration of a desire for a natural death; directive to physicians. See natural-death act; uniform health-care decision act. Cf. advance directive (1), (2); instruction directive. [Cases: Health C 916.]

loading. Insurance. An amount added to a life-insurance premium to cover the insurer's business expenses and contingencies. — Also termed expense loading. See gross premium (1) under premium (1). [Cases: Insurance C=2000, 2005.]

load line. Maritime law. 1. The depth to which a safely loaded ship will sink in salt water. 2. One of a set of graduated marks on the side of a ship, indicating the depth to which the ship can be loaded in varying waters (such as salt water or freshwater) and weather conditions. • Load lines must, by law in most maritime countries, be cut and painted amidships. — Also termed (in sense 2) load-line marks; Plimsoll marks.

"The interest of shipowners led them, in early times, to load vessels to a point beyond safety; the greater the weight of the vessel's load, of course, the lower she rides in the water, and the more vulnerable she is to heavy seas. Many seamen consequently lost their lives. Britain led the way in establishing standards of depth in the water believed to be safe; Samuel Plimsoll, M.P., was the moving spirit, and gave his name to the Plimsoll mark, now seen on the side of all large vessels, which marks the limits of safety for different seas and seasons. Since 1929, the United States has made mandatory the placing of and compliance with loadline marks. ..." — Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 11-12, at 987 (2d ed. 1975).

loadmanage. Hist. 1. The fee paid to loadsmen, who sail in small vessels acting as pilots for larger ships. 2. The hiring of a pilot for a vessel. 3. A pilot's or loadsman's skill. — Also spelled lodemanage; lode manage.

loadsman. Hist. 1. A person who directs a ship's course from a small boat traveling in front of the larger ship rather than from the ship itself. • The loadsmen had a monopoly on piloting in the five ports. 2. A person who took the ship to a berth after a pilot had brought it into port. — Also spelled loadman; lodeman; lodesman.

loan, n. (12c) 1. An act of lending; a grant of something for temporary use <Turner gave the laptop as a loan, not a gift>. [Cases: Contracts C=194.] 2. A thing lent for the borrower's temporary use; esp., a sum of money lent at interest <Hull applied for a car loan>. accommodation loan. (1834) A loan for which the lender receives no consideration in return. See ACCOMMODATION.

add-on loan. (1972) A loan in which the interest is calculated at the stated rate for the loan agreement's full term for the full principal amount, and then the interest is added to the principal before installment payments are calculated, resulting in an interest amount higher than if it were calculated on the monthly unpaid balance. • Consumer loans are typically add-on loans. — Also termed contract loan. See add-on interest under interest (3).

amortized loan. (1930) A loan calling for periodic payments that are applied first to interest and then to principal, as provided by the terms of the note. See AMORTIZATION (1).

back-to-back loan. A loan arrangement by which two banks lend each other funds denominated in different currencies for a specified period. The purpose is usu. to protect against fluctuations in the currencies’ exchange rates.

balloon loan. An installment loan in which one or more of the later repayments are much larger than earlier payments; esp., a loan featuring a string of payments that are too small to amortize the entire loan within the loan period, coupled with a large final lump-sum payment of the outstanding balance.

below-market loan. See interest-free loan.

bridge loan. A short-term loan that is used to cover costs until more permanent financing is arranged or to cover a portion of costs that are expected to be covered by an imminent sale. Also termed bridge financing; swing loan.

broker call loan. See call loan.

building loan. A type of bridge loan used primarily for erecting a building. The loan is typically advanced in parts as work progresses and is used to pay the contractor, subcontractors, and material suppliers. Also termed construction loan. See interim financing under financing.

call loan. (1869) A loan for which the lender can demand payment at any time, usu. with 24 hours’ notice, because there is no fixed maturity date. Also termed broker call loan; demand loan. Cf. term loan. [Cases: Bills and Notes \(\approx 129(3)\).]

character loan. A loan made in reliance on the borrower’s character and stable earnings. Character loans are usu. secured by a mortgage or by other property, but sometimes they are unsecured.

clearing loan. A loan made to a bond dealer pending the sale of a bond issue.

collateral loan. See secured loan.

commercial loan. (1875) A loan that a financial institution gives to a business, generally for 30 to 90 days.

commodity loan. A loan secured by a commodity (such as cotton or wool) in the form of a warehouse receipt or other negotiable instrument.

consolidation loan. (1875) A loan whose proceeds are used to pay off other individual loans, thereby creating a more manageable debt.

construction loan. See building loan.

consumer loan. (1957) A loan that is given to an individual for family, household, personal, or agricultural purposes and that is generally governed by truth-in-lending statutes and regulations. [Cases: Consumer Credit \(\approx 1\).]

contract loan. See add-on loan.

Crown loan. Tax. An interest-free demand loan, usu. from parent to child, in which the borrowed funds are invested and the income from the investment is taxed at the child’s rate. This type of loan is named for one Harry Crown of Chicago, reputedly one of the first persons to use it. See kiddie tax under TAX.

day loan. A short-term loan to a broker to finance daily transactions.

demand loan. See call loan.

discount loan. A loan in which interest is deducted in advance, at the time the loan is made.

doorstep loan. A loan offered by a door-to-door solicitor, usu. for home repairs at a high interest rate and under misleading or fraudulent terms. The term is used primarily in the United Kingdom.

GI loan. See veteran’s loan.

home-equity loan. (1984) A line of bank credit given to a homeowner, using as collateral the homeowner’s equity in the home. Often shortened to equity loan. Also termed home-equity line of credit. See equity (7).

installment loan. (1916) A loan that is to be repaid in usu. equal portions over a specified period.

interest-free loan. (1946) Money loaned to a borrower at no charge or, under the Internal Revenue Code, with a charge that is lower than the market rate. IRC (26 USCA) § 7872. Also termed (in the IRC) below-market loan.

interest-only loan. A loan for which the borrower pays only the interest on the principal balance of the loan for a stated period, usu. a few years. At the end of the stated period, the principal balance is unchanged. An interest-only loan features low initial payments in return for significantly larger payments later or a balloon payment at the end of the term.

liar’s loan. 1. A loan that involves no background check and can be obtained by claiming that one meets the lender’s income and other requirements. 2. See no-doc loan (1). 3. See stated-income loan (1). Cf. NINJA loan.

maritime loan. A loan providing that a lender will not be repaid if the cargo is damaged or lost because of a navigational peril, but that the lender will be repaid plus interest if the cargo arrives safely or is damaged because of the carrier’s negligence. Also termed marine loan.

mortgage loan. (1846) A loan secured by a mortgage or deed of trust on real property. [Cases: Mortgages \(\approx 14\).]

NINJA loan. abbr. No-income, no-job, no-assets loan. Cf. liar’s loan (1); no-doc loan (1); stated-income loan (1).

no-doc loan. 1. A loan for which a borrower provides only minimal proof of ability to repay. The name is short for "no documentation." 2. See liar’s loan (1). Cf. NINJA loan.

nonperforming loan. (1984) An outstanding loan that is not being repaid.

nonrecourse loan. (1941) A secured loan that allows the lender to attach only the collateral, not the borrower’s personal assets, if the loan is not repaid. [Cases: Bills and Notes C= 44; Secured Transactions C= 227, 240.

participation loan. (1928) A loan issued by two or more lenders. See loan participation. [Cases: Contracts C= 194.]

policy loan. An insurer's loan to an insured, secured by the policy's cash reserve. [Cases: Insurance C= 1868.]

precarious loan. 1. A loan that may be recalled at any time. 2. A loan in danger of not being repaid.

premium loan. A loan made to an insured by the insurer to enable the insured to pay further premiums. • The reserve value of the policy serves as collateral. [Cases: Insurance C= 1868, 2037.]

recourse loan. A loan that allows the lender, if the borrower defaults, not only to attach the collateral but also to seek judgment against the borrower's (or guarantor's) personal assets. [Cases: Secured Transactions C= 227, 240.]

revolver loan. (1985) A single loan that a debtor takes out in lieu of several lines of credit or other loans from various creditors, and that is subject to review and approval at certain intervals. • A revolver loan is usu. taken out in an attempt to resolve problems with creditors. Cf. revolving credit under credit (4).

revolving loan. (1927) A loan that is renewed at maturity.

scratch-and-dent loan. A loan made to a borrower who was able to repay when the loan was made but has since fallen behind on payments.

secured loan. (1862) A loan that is secured by property or securities. — Also termed collateral loan.

short-term loan. (1902) A loan with a due date of less than one year, usu. evidenced by a note.

signature loan. An unsecured loan based solely on the borrower's promise or signature. • To obtain such a loan, the borrower must usu. be highly creditworthy.

stated-income loan. 1. A loan extended to a borrower who claimed a certain income but has not verified the claim. 2. See liar's loan (1). Cf. NINJA loan.

subprime loan. A loan, esp. a mortgage or home-equity loan, made to one whose financial condition and creditworthiness are poor, creating a high risk of default.

• A subprime loan usu. has an adjustable interest rate that is low at inception, to help a financially weak borrower qualify, then rises over the life of the loan.

swing loan. See bridge loan.

term loan. A loan with a specified due date, usu. of more than one year. • Such a loan typically cannot be repaid before maturity without incurring a penalty. — Also termed time loan. Cf. call loan. [Cases: Bills and Notes C= 129(1).]

veteran's loan. A federally guaranteed loan extended to armed-forces veterans for the purchase of a home. — Also written veterans' loan; veteran loan. — Also termed VA loan; GI loan. [Cases: Armed Services C= 108.]

loan-amortization schedule. (1958) A schedule that divides each loan payment into an interest component and a principal component. • Typically, the interest component begins as the largest part of each payment and declines over time. See amortization (1).

loan association. See savings-and-loan association.

loan broker. See broker.

loan-brokerage fee. See mortgage discount.

loan certificate. A certificate that a clearinghouse issues to a borrowing bank in an amount equal to a specified percentage of the value of the borrowing bank's collateral on deposit with the clearinghouse's loan committee.

loan commitment. (1940) A lender's binding promise to a borrower to lend a specified amount of money at a certain interest rate, usu. within a specified period and for a specified purpose (such as buying real estate). See mortgage commitment. [Cases: Contracts C= 194.]

loaned employee. See borrowed employee under employee.

loaned servant. See borrowed employee under employee.

loan for consumption. (1840) An agreement by which a lender delivers goods to a borrower who consumes them and who is obligated to return goods of the same quantity, type, and quality. [Cases: Contracts C= 194.]

loan for exchange. (1915) A contract by which a lender delivers personal property to a borrower who agrees to return similar property, usu. without compensation for its use.

loan for use. (1837) An agreement by which a lender delivers an asset to a borrower who must use it according to its normal function or according to the agreement, and who must return it when finished using it. • No interest is charged.

loanland. Hist. A tenancy involving the loan of land by one person to another. — Also spelled laenland. Cf. bookland; folkland.

“Laenlands were loaned lands, that is, lands granted for a period, either the life of the grantee or some longer time such as three lives. In return the grantees performed services, usually of an agricultural nature, or made payments in kind to their landlords. Laenlands, like boclands, were usually held under a written instrument, and they are therefore sometimes included in the boclands. But strictly, laenland and bocland differed. Bocland, we may say, was held directly as a result of a charter from the king, whereas laenland was temporarily held by grant from some great landlord.” W.J.V. Windeyer, Lectures on Legal History 28 (2d ed. 1949).

loan-origination fee. See fee.

loan participation. (1934) The coming together of multiple lenders to issue a large loan (called a loan ratio. See loan-to-value ratio.

loan-receipt agreement. (1943) Torts. A settlement agreement by which the defendant lends money to the plaintiff interest-free, the plaintiff not being obligated to repay the loan unless he or she recovers money from other tortfeasors responsible for the same injury. [Cases: Compromise and Settlement @ 71; Insurance @ 3524.]

loansharking. n. (1914) The practice of lending money at excessive and esp. usurious rates, and often using threats or extortion to enforce repayment. — Also termed extortionate credit transaction. — loan-shark, vb. — loan shark, n.

loan society. English law. A club organized to collect deposits from and make loans to industrial workers. • The loan societies were forerunners of the American savings-and-loan associations.

loan-to-value ratio. The ratio, usu. expressed as a percentage, between the amount of a mortgage loan and the value of the property pledged as security for the mortgage. • For example, an $80,000 loan on property worth $100,000 results in a loan-to-value ratio of 80% — which is usu. the highest ratio that lenders will agree to without requiring the debtor to buy mortgage insurance. — Often shortened to LTV ratio. — Also termed loan ratio. [Cases: Mortgages @ 145.]

loan value. Insurance. 1. The maximum amount that may be lent safely on property or life insurance without jeopardizing the lender’s need for protection from the borrower’s default. 2. The amount of money an insured can borrow against the cash value of his or her life-insurance policy. [Cases: Insurance @ 1868.]

lobby, vb. (1837) 1. To talk with or curry favor with a legislator, usu. repeatedly or frequently, in an attempt to influence the legislator’s vote <she routinely lobbied for tort reform in the state legislature>. [Cases: Statutes @ 24.] 2. To support or oppose (a measure) by working to influence a legislator’s vote <the organization lobbied the bill through the Senate>. 3. To try to influence (a decision-maker) <the lawyer lobbied the judge for a favorable ruling>. — lobbying, n. — lobbyist, n.

lobbying act. (1948) A federal or state law governing the conduct of lobbyists, usu. by requiring them to register and file activity reports. • An example is the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act, 12 USCA § 261. [Cases: Statutes @ 24.]

local act. 1. See local law (1). 2. See local law (2).

local action. See action (4).

local administrator. See administrator (1).

local agency. See agency (3).

local agent. 1. See agent (2). 2. See special agent under insurance agent. locality rule. 1. The doctrine that, in a professional malpractice suit, the standard of care applicable to the professional’s conduct is the reasonable care exercised by similar professionals in the same vicinity and professional community. [Cases: Health C=620.]

“With respect to medical doctors (and sometimes dentists and others), the standard of care has been further limited by the so-called ‘locality rule.’ A physician historically was required only to possess and apply the knowledge and use the skill and care that is ordinarily used by reasonably well-qualified physicians in the locality in which he practices, or, usually, in ‘similar localities.’ This frequently made it difficult or impossible for a plaintiff to prove the applicable standard since other doctors in the same locality are notoriously reluctant to testify against their professional colleagues. However, with the advent of improved communication and continuing medical education, the reason for the rule has abated, and today the trend is toward its abolition.” Edward J. Kionka, Torts in a Nutshell 270-71 (2d ed. 1992).

2. The doctrine that, in determining the appropriate amount of attorney’s fees to be awarded in a suit, the proper basis is the rate charged by similar attorneys for similar work in the vicinity. [Cases: Costs C=194.18; Federal Civil Procedure C=2737.4.]

locality test. Maritime law. The requirement that, for a federal court to exercise admiralty tort jurisdiction, the alleged wrong must have occurred on navigable waters. The test was replaced by the locality-plus test in Executive Jet Aviation, Inc. v. Cleveland, 409 U.S. 249, 93 S.Ct. 493 (1972). — Also termed locality rule. See locality-plus test. [Cases: Admiralty C=17.]

localization doctrine. The doctrine that a foreign corporation, by doing sufficient business in a state, will subject itself to that state’s laws. [Cases: Corporations C=661.]

local law. 1. A statute that relates to or operates in a particular locality rather than the entire state. 2. A statute that applies to particular persons or things rather than an entire class of persons or things. — Also termed (in senses 1 & 2) local act; local statute. [Cases: Statutes C=76-104.]

3. The law of a particular jurisdiction, as opposed to the law of a foreign state. — Also termed internal law. 4. Conflict of laws. The body of standards, principles, and rules — excluding conflict-of-laws rules — that the state courts apply to controversies before them. Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § 4(1) (1971). [Cases: Action C=17.]

local-law theory. Conflict of laws. The view that, although a court of the forum recognizes and enforces a local right (that is, one created under its own law), in a foreign element case it does not necessarily apply the rule that would govern an analogous case of a purely domestic character, but instead takes into account the law of the foreign country by fashioning a local right as nearly as possible upon the law of the country in which the decisive facts have occurred. This theory is credited to Walter Wheeler Cook, who expounded it in the first chapter of his Logical and Legal Bases of the Conflict of Laws (1949). [Cases: Action C=17.

“Since the court of the forum adopting the view that the chosen law would have taken not of the actual case, but of an equivalent domestic case, it does not necessarily recognize the right that would have been vested in the plaintiff according to that law.... It is scarcely deniable, however, that this local law theory is little more than what a learned writer has stigmatized as a sterile truism — sterile because it affords no basis for the systematic development of private international law. To remind an English judge, about to try a case containing a foreign element, that whatever decision he gives he must enforce only the lex fori, is a technical quibble that explains nothing and solves nothing. It provides no guidance whatever upon the limits within which he must have regard to the foreign law.” G.C. Cheshire, Private International Law 35 (6th ed. 1961).

local option. An option that allows a municipality or other governmental unit to determine a particular course of action without the specific approval of state officials. — Also termed local veto. Cf. HOME RULE. [Cases: Intoxicating Liquors C=24-43; Municipal Corporations C=65.]

local receiver. See RECEIVER.

local rule. (1819) 1. A rule based on the physical conditions of a state and the character, customs, and beliefs of its people. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=25.]

2. A rule by which an individual court supplements the procedural rules applying generally to all courts within the jurisdiction. Local rules deal with a variety of matters, such as requiring extra copies of motions to be filed with the court or prohibiting the reading of newspapers in the courtroom. Fed. R. Civ. P. 83. [Cases: Courts C=85; Federal Civil Procedure C=25.]

local statute. 1. See local law (1). 2. See local law (2).

local union. See UNION.

local usage. See USAGE.

local veto. See local option.

locare (lo-kair-ee), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To let or hire out. See LOCATOR.

locare aliquid utendum (lo-kair-ee al-i-kwid yoo-ten-dam). [Latin] Roman law. To let something on hire for the use of the lessee; to accept consideration for the use of an object. Cf. conducere aliquid utendum.

locarium (lo-kair-ee-ee-am), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Rent.

locaturius (loh-ko-tair-ee-ee-as), n. [Latin] Hist. A person with whom something is deposited; a depository.

locatio (lo-kay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman & civil law. Any contract by which the use of the thing bailed, or the use of the labor or services, is agreed to be given for a compensation. — Also termed lease; hiring. Cf. ABLLOCATION. Pl. locationes (lo-kay-shee-oh-neez).

locatio conductio (lo-kay-shee-oh kon-duk-shee-oh). [Latin] Roman law. A letting for hire; specif, a contract by which one person agreed to give to another the use, or the use and enjoyment, of a thing or of services or labor in return for remuneration, usu. money. — in locative calls (lok-o-tiv). (1807) Property. In land descriptions, specific descriptions that fix the boundaries of the land. • Locative calls may be marks of location, landmarks, or other physical objects. If calls in a description conflict, locative calls control over those indicating a general area of a boundary. See call (5); directory calls. [Cases: Boundaries 🌐 1-23.]

locator (loʊkɛr). n. [Latin 1. Roman law. The hiring of care or service, as when the bailee is to protect the thing bailed.

locator rei, n. A lessor or landlord.

locator operas faciendi, n. One who employs contract labor.

locale, n. (lə-kay-tdr), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. The hiring of care or service, as when the bailee is to protect the thing bailed.

location. (lə-kay-shee-oh) 1. The specific place or position of a person or thing. 2. The act or process of locating. 3. Real estate. The designation of the boundaries of a particular piece of land, either on the record or on the land itself. [Cases: Boundaries 🌐 7-9.] 4. Mining law. The act of appropriating a mining claim. — Also termed mining location. See mining claim. [Cases: Mines and Minerals 🌐 9-38.] 5. The claim so appropriated. 6. Civil law. A contract for the temporary use of something for hire; a leasing for hire. See location.

location damage clause. See surface-damage clause.

location. (lə-kay-shee-oh ə-ris fay-shə-en-dət). [Latin "the letting of a job to be done"] Roman law. A contract by which someone hires a contractor (conductor) to undertake work (e.g., to build a home or teach a slave to read) on behalf of the hirer. • Sometimes shortened to locatio operis. See locatum.

locational (lə-kay-shee-oh ə-ris mər-shə-əm vee-hən-dair-əm). [Latin "the letting of the job of carrying goods"] Roman law. A bailment in which goods are delivered to the bailee for transport elsewhere, esp. by sea. — Also termed locatio mercium vehendarum.

locatio mercium vehendarum. See locatio operis mercium vehendarum.

locatoio rei (lə-kay-shee-oh rə-ee-ə). [Latin "letting of a thing"] Roman law. The hiring of a thing for use, by which the hirer gains the temporary use of the thing for a fee.

"Locatio rei was the letting of a rei for hire. Roman law differed in several aspects from the relevant rules of English law. Firstly, there was not in Roman law a fundamental distinction between the hiring of personal property and the lease of real property. locatio rei applied both to land and movables. Secondly, in Roman law the hirer did not obtain possession. Thirdly, the locatio was a mere contract and even the tenant of land did not have a right to be restored if he were [wrongfully] ejected, his sole remedy being an action for breach of contract. Fourthly, the Roman contract gave more consideration to the tenant or hirer than does English law." G.W. Paton, Bailment in the Common Law 53 (1952).

lockdown. (1977) The temporary confinement of prisoners in their cells during a state of heightened alert caused by an escape, riot, or other emergency. [Cases: Lockdown Cases 🌐 233.]

Lockeanism. See Lockean labor theory.

Lockean labor theory. The philosopher John Locke's justification of private property, based on the natural right of one's ownership of one's own labor, and the right to nature's common property to the extent that one's labor can make use of it. • Locke's theory, from the fifth chapter of his Second Treatise on Civil Government, is often used to analyze the natural rights of inventors, authors, and artists in their own creations. — Also termed labor theory; Lockeanism. Cf. personality theory; utilitarianism.

locked in, adj. 1. (Of a person) unable to sell appreciated securities and realize the gain because of liability for capital gains taxes <my accountant advised me not to sell the stock because I am locked in>. 2. (Of a price, rate, etc.) staying the same for a given period <the 7% mortgage rate is locked in for 30 days>.

locked-in rate. See lock rate under interest rate.

lockout. (1854) 1. An employer's withholding of work and closing of a business because of a labor dispute. [Cases: Labor and Employment 🌐 392.]

defensive lockout. A lockout that is called to prevent imminent and irreparable financial harm to the lockup agreement. A contract between an underwriter and a corporation's insiders that prohibits the insiders from selling any personal stockholdings for a specified time after the corporation makes a public offering of securities. Cf. MARKET-STANDOFF AGREEMENT. [Cases: Corporations C=310(1).]

lockup option. A defense against a corporate takeover, in which a friendly party is entitled to buy parts of a corporation for a set price when a person or group acquires a certain percentage of the corporation's shares. An agreement of this kind may be illegal, to the extent it is not undertaken to serve the best interests of the shareholders. — Often shortened to lockup. [Cases: Corporations C=312(5).]

locus parentis. See in LOCO PARENTIS.

locum tenens (lo-kom tay-enz or ten-anz), n. [Law Latin “holding the place”]. Hist. A deputy; a substitute; a representative.

locuples (lok-yu-pluzez), adj. [Latin] Civil law. Having the means to pay any amount that the plaintiff might recover. — Also termed locuplete.

lockout. A lockout called by management to assert economic pressure on workers and thereby gain a bargaining advantage over a union. Offensive lockouts were illegal before the U.S. Supreme Court abolished the legal distinction between offensive and defensive lockouts in favor of a balancing test. American Ship Bldg. Co. v. NLRB, 380 U.S. 300, 85 S.Ct. 955 (1965).

offensive lockout. A lockout called by management to assert economic pressure on workers and thereby gain a bargaining advantage over a union. Defensive lockouts were illegal before the U.S. Supreme Court abolished the legal distinction between offensive and defensive lockouts in favor of a balancing test. American Ship Bldg. Co. v. NLRB, 380 U.S. 300, 85 S.Ct. 955 (1965).

2. Loosely, an employee's refusal to work because the employer unreasonably refuses to abide by an expired employment contract while a new one is being negotiated. Cf. STRIKE; BOYCOTT; PICKETING.

lockup rate. See INTEREST RATE.

lockup, n. 1. See JAIL. 2. See LOCKUP OPTION.

lockup agreement. Securities. locus contractus (loh-kas kan-trak-tas). [Latin “place of the contract”]. The place where a contract was made. Cf. LEX LOCI CONTRACTUS. [Cases: Contracts C=144, 145.]

locus criminis (loh-kas krim-o-nis), n. [Latin] The place where a crime was committed.

locus delicti (loh-kas da-lik-ti). [Latin “place of the wrong”]. The place where an offense was committed; the place where the last event necessary to make the actor liable occurred. Cf. LEX LOCI DELICTI. [Cases: Torts C=103.]

locus in quo (loh-kas in kwob). [Latin “place in which”]. (18c) The place where something is alleged to have occurred.

locus partitus (loh-kas pahr-ti-tas), n. [Latin “a place divided”]. Hist. The act of dividing two towns or counties to determine which of them contains the land or place in question.

locus poenitentiae (loh-kas pen-a-ten-she-ee). [Latin “place of repentance”]. 1. A point at which it is not too late for one to change one's legal position; the possibility of withdrawing from a contemplated course of action, esp. a wrong, before being committed to it.

locus regit actum (loh-kas ree-jit ak-tam), n. [Latin “the place rules the act”]. Int’l law. The rule that a transaction complying with the legal formalities of the country where it is created will be considered valid.
in the country where it is to be effective, even if that country requires additional formalities.

locus rei sitae (loh-kaS ree-i si-te), n. [Latin "place where a thing is situated"] Civil law. The rule that the place where the land is located is the proper forum in a case involving real estate.

locus sigilli (loh-kaS si-jil-i), n. [Latin] The place of the seal. • Today this phrase is almost always abbreviated "L.S." These are the traditional letters appearing on many notarial certificates to indicate where the notary public’s embossed seal should be placed. If a rubber-stamp seal is used, it should be placed near but not over this abbreviation. See NOTARY SEAL. [Cases: Seals C=3.] For some period in history seals were required to consist of wax affixed to the parchment or paper on which the terms of the instrument were written. The wax was required to have an identifiable impression made upon it. Usually this was made by a signet ring. In time when ordinary people, who did not have signet rings, learned to read and write, it was to be expected that substitutes for the traditional seal would be accepted by the law. Thus, today it would be generally accurate to say that a seal may consist of wax, a gummed wafer, an impression on the paper, the word "seal," the letters "L.S. ( locus sigilli) or even a pen scratch." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 7-3, at 296 (3d ed. 1987).

locus solutionis (loh-kaS so-loo-shee-oh-nis), [Latin] Hist. The place of performance. Locus standi (loh-kaS stan-di or -dee), [Latin "place of standing"] (1835) The right to bring an action or to be heard in a given forum; STANDING.

lode, n. 1. MINERAL LODE. 2. LADE. lode claim. See MINING CLAIM. lodeman. See LOADSMAN. lodemanage, n. See LOADMANAGE. lodesman. See LOADSMAN.
lodestar. (14c) 1. A guiding star; an inspiration or model. 2. A reasonable amount of attorney's fees in a given case, usu. calculated by multiplying a reasonable number of hours worked by the prevailing hourly rate in the community for similar work, and often considering such additional factors as the degree of skill and difficulty involved in the case, the degree of its urgency, its novelty, and the like. • Most statutes that authorize an award of attorney's fees use the lodestar method for computing the award. [Cases: Costs C=194.18; Federal Civil Procedure C=776; Set-off and Counterclaim C=60.] "Under the fourth test — frequently referred to as the 'logical relationship' standard — the principal consideration in determining whether a counterclaim is compulsory rests on the efficiency or economy of trying the counterclaim in the same litigation as the main claim. As a result, the convenience of the court, rather than soley the counterclaim's relationship to the facts or issues of the opposing claim, is controlling. The hallmark of this approach is flexibility. Although the fourth test has been criticized for being overly broad in scope and uncertain in application, it has by far the widest acceptance among the courts." Jack H. Friedenthal et al., Civil Procedure § 6.7, at 352 (2d ed. 1993).

logic bomb. Destructive or disruptive computer software that is planted on a computer, server, or network and waits until a certain time to activate itself.

logbook. (17c) 1. A ship’s or aircraft’s journal containing an account of each trip, often with a history of events during the voyage; JOURNAL (1). 2. Any journal or record of events.

logia (loj-ee-a), n. [Latin] Hist. A small house or cottage.

logical-cause doctrine. (1980) The principle that, if the plaintiff proves that an injury occurred and proves a logical cause of it, a party desiring to defeat the claim cannot succeed merely by showing that there is another imaginable cause, but must also show that the alternative cause is more probable than the cause shown by the plaintiff. [Cases: Workers’ Compensation C=13564] logical interpretation. See INTERPRETATION.

logical positivism. (1931) A philosophical system or movement requiring that meaningful statements be in principle verifiable. Cf. LEGAL POSITIVISM.

logical-relationship standard. (1976) Civil procedure. A test applied to determine whether a defendant's counterclaim is compulsory, by examining whether both claims are based on the same operative facts or whether those facts activate additional rights, otherwise dormant, for the defendant. • One of the most important factors considered is whether hearing the claims together would promote judicial economy and efficiency. Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(a). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=776; Set-off and Counterclaim C=60.] "Under the fourth test — frequently referred to as the 'logical relationship' standard — the principal consideration in determining whether a counterclaim is compulsory rests on the efficiency or economy of trying the counterclaim in the same litigation as the main claim. As a result, the convenience of the court, rather than solely the counterclaim's relationship to the facts or issues of the opposing claim, is controlling. The hallmark of this approach is flexibility. Although the fourth test has been criticized for being overly broad in scope and uncertain in application, it has by far the widest acceptance among the courts." Jack H. Friedenthal et al., Civil Procedure § 6.7, at 352 (2d ed. 1993).

logic bomb. Destructive or disruptive computer software that is planted on a computer, server, or network and waits until a certain time to activate itself.

logium (loj-ee-am), n. [Latin] Hist. A lodge, hovel, or outhouse.

logrolling, n. (1812) 1. The exchanging of political favors; esp., the trading of votes among legislators to gain support of measures that are beneficial to each legislator's constituency. 2. The legislative practice of including several propositions in one measure or proposed constitutional amendment so that the legislature or voters will pass all of them, even though these propositions might not have passed if they had been submitted separately. • Many state constitutions have single-subject clauses that prohibit this practice. [Cases: Constitutional Law C=9; Statutes C=107.] — logroll, vb.

LOL abbr. LETTER OF INTENT.
loitering, n. (14c) The criminal offense of remaining in a certain place (such as a public street) for no apparent reason. • Loitering statutes are generally held to be unconstitutionally vague. Cf. vagrancy. [Cases: Disorderly Conduct C–122; Vagrancy C–1.] — loiter, vb.

lollipop syndrome. (1986) Family law. A situation in which one or both parents, often in a custody battle, manipulate the child with gifts, fun, good times, and minimal discipline in an attempt to win over the child. See Disneyland parent under Parent. Cf. rescue syndrome.

Lombard law. A Germanic customary law based primarily on a code called the Edict of Rothar, published in A.D. 643. • Rothar was the King of the Lombards at the time (A.D. 636–652), and his code (written in Latin) was more complete than the Germanic leges barbarorum. — Also termed law of Lombardy; law of Langobardi. Cf. leges barbarorum.

London commodity option. An agreement to buy or sell a futures contract for a commodity traded on the London markets, for a particular price and within a particular time.

London Interbank Offered Rate. A daily compilation by the British Bankers Association of the rates that major international banks charge each other for large-volume, short-term loans of Eurodollars, with monthly maturity rates calculated out to one year. • These daily rates are used as the underlying interest rates for derivative contracts in currencies other than the euro. — Abbr. LIBOR. Cf. euro interbank offered rate.

London Lloyd's. See Lloyd's of London.

Lone Pine order. A case-management order in a toxic-tort lawsuit involving many plaintiffs, establishing procedures and deadlines for discovery, including requiring the plaintiffs to timely produce evidence and expert opinions to substantiate each plaintiff’s exposure to the hazardous substance, the injury suffered, and the cause of the injury. Lore v. Lone Pine Corp., No. L-33606-85 (N.J. Super. Ct. Nov. 18, 1986). • Although the Lone Pine opinion is unreported, it has become famous for the kind of case-management order involved, in part because the plaintiffs' claims were dismissed for failure to timely provide expert opinions. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C–1925.1; Pretrial Procedure C–747.1.]

long, adj. 1. Holding a security or commodity in anticipation of a rise in price . 2. Of or relating to a purchase of securities or commodities in anticipation of rising prices . Cf. short.

long, adv. By a long purchase; into or in a long position <bought the wheat long>.

long account. See account.

longa manu (long-o mano), adv. [Latin “with a long hand”] Roman & civil law. Indirectly; by the longest route. • This described the transfer of ownership by pointing out, at some distance, the thing to the transferee and authorizing its taking. This could be done, for example, by handing over the keys at the door of a warehouse, or by pointing out the boundaries of land. See constitutum possessorium. Cf. breve manu.

long-arm, adj. Of, relating to, or arising from a long-arm statute <long-arm jurisdiction>. [Cases: Courts C–12(2); Federal Courts C–76.1.]

long-arm jurisdiction. See jurisdiction.

long-arm statute. (1951) A statute providing for jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant who has had contacts with the territory where the statute is in effect. • Most state long-arm statutes extend this jurisdiction to its constitutional limits. — Also termed single-act statute. See long-arm jurisdiction under Jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts C–12(2); Federal Courts C–76.1.]

long-firm fraud. See fraud.

long-form bill of lading. See bill of lading.

longi temporis praescriptio (long-gi tem-por-is prai-skrip-shoe-oh). [Latin] Roman law. The prescriptive period after which a possessor of property could defeat any challenge to his title. See usucaption.

Long Parliament.Hist. 1. The English Parliament of Charles I meeting between 1640 and 1653, dissolved by Oliver Cromwell in 1653, then recalled and finally dissolved in 1660. 2. The English Parliament that met between 1661 and 1678, after the restoration of the monarchy. • This Parliament is sometimes called the “Long Parliament of Charles II” to distinguish it from that of sense 1.

long robe. Hist. The legal profession <gentlemen of the long robe>. See robe.

long-run incremental cost. Antitrust. A cost threshold for determining whether predatory pricing has occurred, consisting of all costs that, over a several-year period, would not be incurred if the product in question were not offered. • It differs from average variable cost because it includes some costs that do not vary in the short run but that do vary over a longer period, depending on whether a particular product is offered. — Abbr. LRIC. Cf. average variable cost under cost (i).

Longshore and Harbor Workers’ Compensation Act. A federal law designed to provide workers’ compensation benefits to persons, other than seamen, who work in maritime occupations, esp. stevedoring and ship service. 33 USCA § 901–50. • Abbr. LHWCA. [Cases: Workers’ Compensation C–93, 260, 262, 2085.]

‘Employees who are engaged in maritime-related activities but who do not qualify as ‘seamen’ may be classified as ‘maritime workers’ entitled to the benefits provided by the Longshore and Harbor Workers’ Compensation Act . . . . Persons covered by the act, which has the attributes of the usual workers’ compensation law, include (1) employees injured on the Outer Continental Shelf in the course of mineral exploration and production activities, and (2) employees within American territorial waters who fall within the Congressional definition of a ‘maritime worker’ and who are injured on ‘navigable waters.’” Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 44 (2d ed. 1988).

longshoreman. (1811) A maritime laborer who works on the wharves in a port; esp., a person who loads and

look-through principle. (1993) Tax. A doctrine for allocating transfer-gains taxes on real estate by looking beyond the entity possessing legal title to identify the beneficial owners of the property. [Cases: Internal Revenue \(\Rightarrow \) 3071.]

loopification, n. (1982) In critical legal studies, the collapse of a legal distinction resulting when the two ends of a continuum become so similar that they become indistinguishable <it may be impossible to distinguish “public” from “private” because of loopification>. — loopify, vb.

loose construction. See liberal construction under construction.

loose constructionism. See liberal constructionism under constructionism.

loose constructionist. See liberal constructionist under constructionist.

looseleaf service. (1927) A type of lawbook having pages that are periodically replaced with updated pages, designed to cope with constant change and increasing bulk.

“...The first loose leaf service covered the federal income tax, and was published in 1913 shortly after the Federal Income Tax Law of 1913 went into effect. It was followed in 1914 by a service reporting on the activities of the Federal Trade Commission, which had just been established. The loose leaf method was, therefore, first used as a means of reporting new tax and business laws which were to be subject to administrative interpretation ... These first loose leaf services were designed ... not to reprint just the bare text of the revenue and commission acts, but to follow up and report each new development on these new laws as it occurred.” Arthur Sydney Beardsley, Legal Bibliography and the Use of Law Books § 185, at 315–14 (1937).

loquela (la-kwee-la), n. [Law Latin “talk”] Hist. 1. The oral discussions between the parties to a lawsuit leading to the issue, now called the pleadings. 2. Settlement discussions.

lord. (bef. 12c) 1. A title of honor or nobility belonging properly to a baron but applied also to anyone who attains the rank of a peer. — Abbr. L. 2. (cap. & pl.) HOUSE OF LORDS. 3. A property owner whose land is in a tenant’s possession; LANDLORD (1).

temporal lord (tem-po-ral). One of the English peers (other than ecclesiastical) who sit in Parliament.

Lord Advocate. Scots law. An important political functionary in Scottish affairs who acts as the principal Crown counsel in civil cases, the chief public prosecutor of crimes, and legal adviser to the Scottish government on matters of Scots law. — Formerly also termed King’s advocate. Cf. ADVOCATE GENERAL.

lord-and-master rule. See head-and-master rule.

Lord Campbell’s Act. 1. The 1846 English statute that created a wrongful-death claim for the relatives of a decedent when the decedent would have had a claim if he or she had been merely injured and not killed. • Technically known as the Fatal Accidents Act of 1846, this statute changed the earlier rule, under which a tortfeasor who would have been liable to another escaped liability if the victim died. Cf. wrongful-death action.

“The common law not only denied a tort recovery for injury once the tort victim had died, it also refused to recognize any new and independent cause of action in the victim’s dependents or heirs for their own loss at his death ... The result was that it was cheaper for the defendant to kill the plaintiff than to injure him, and that the most grievous of all injuries left the bereaved family of the victim, who frequently were destitute, without a remedy. Since this was intolerable, it was changed in England by the passage of the Fatal Accidents Act of 1846, otherwise known as Lord Campbell’s Act, which has become a generic name for similar statutes.” Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 127, at 945 (W. Page Keeton ed., 5th ed. 1984).

2. An American state’s wrongful-death statute patterned after the original English act.

Lord Chamberlain. The second officer of the royal household in England, who serves as a peer, a privy councilor, and a member of the ruling government. — Also termed Lord Chamberlain of the Household.

Lord Chancellor. The highest judicial officer in England. • The Lord Chancellor sits as speaker of the House of Lords, is a member of the Cabinet, and presides at appellate judicial proceedings. — Also termed High Chancellor; Keeper of the King’s Conscience.

Lord Chief Justice of England. The chief judge of the Queen’s Bench Division of the High Court of Justice. • The Lord Chief Justice also serves on the Court of Appeal, and ranks second only to the Lord Chancellor in the English judicial hierarchy. — Formerly termed Lord Mansfield's rule. The principle that neither spouse may testify about whether the husband had access to the wife at the time of a child's conception. ● In effect, this rule — which has been abandoned by most states — made it impossible to bastardize a child born during a marriage. [Cases: Witnesses C=::oS7.]

Lord Mayor. 1. Hist. The chief officer of the corporation of the city of London, so called because the fourth charter of Edward III conferred on that officer the honor of having maces carried before him by the sergeants. 2. The title of the principal magistrate of a city, the office of which has been conferred by letters patent.

Lord mayor's court. See court.

Lord of Appeal. A member of the House of Lords, of whom at least three must be present for the hearing and determination of appeals, and including the Lord Chancellor, the Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, and the peers that have held high judicial offices, such as ex-chancellors and judges of the superior court in Great Britain and Ireland.

Lord of Appeal in Ordinary. A person appointed and salaried to aid the House of Lords in the hearing of appeals. ● These lords rank as barons for life, and sit and vote in the House of Lords even after retirement. Cf. law lord.

Lord of Parliament. A member of the House of Lords.

Lord of Session. Scots law. Any judge of the Court of Session. — Also termed Senator of the College of Justice. See court of session (1).

Lord President. Scots law. The highest judicial officer in Scotland, heading the Court of Session, sitting alone at first instance in the Outer House. See court of session (1).

Lord Privy Seal (priv-ee). English law. An officer who has custody of the privy seal and who authenticates either a state document before it passes to receive the Great Seal or a document that does not require the Great Seal because of its minor importance. ● The Lord Privy Seal has nominal official duties but is often made a member of the British cabinet. — Also termed Keeper of the Privy Seal; Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal; Privy Seal.

Lords. See house of lords.

lord temporal. A House of Lords member who is not an ecclesiastic.

Lord Tenterden's rule. See ejusdem generis.

loser-pays rule. See english rule.

loss. (bef. 12c) 1. An undesirable outcome of a risk; the disappearance or diminution of value, usu. in an unexpected or relatively unpredictable way. ● When... the loss is a decrease in value, the usual method of calculating the loss is to ascertain the amount by which a thing's original cost exceeds its later selling price. 2. Tax. The excess of a property's adjusted value over the amount realized from its sale or other disposition. IRC (26 USCA) § 1001. — Also termed realized loss. [Cases: Internal Revenue C=3178.] 3. Insurance. The amount of financial detriment caused by an insured person's death or an insured property's damage, for which the insurer becomes liable. 4. The failure to maintain possession of a thing.

actual loss. (18c) A loss resulting from the real and substantial destruction of insured property.

actual total loss. 1. See total loss. 2. Marine insurance. The total loss of a vessel covered by an insurance policy (1) by its real and substantive destruction, (2) by injuries that destroy its existence as a distinct individual of a particular class, (3) by its being reduced to a wreck irretrievably beyond repair, or (4) by its being placed beyond the insured's control and beyond the insured's power of recovery. [Cases: Insurance C= 2235.]

business loss. See ordinary loss.

capital loss. (1921) The loss realized upon selling or exchanging a capital asset. Cf. CAPITAL GAIN.

casualty loss. (1934) For tax purposes, the total or partial destruction of an asset resulting from an unexpected or unusual event, such as an automobile accident or a tornado. [Cases: Internal Revenue C= 3416; Taxation C=3510.]

consequential loss. (1829) A loss arising from the results of damage rather than from the damage itself. • A consequential loss is proximate when the natural and probable effect of the wrongful conduct, under the circumstances, is to set in operation the intervening cause from which the loss directly results. When the loss is not the natural and probable effect of the wrongful conduct, the loss is remote. — Also termed indirect loss; consequential injury. Cf. direct loss. [Cases: Damages C=15-23.]

direct loss. (18c) A loss that results immediately and proximately from an event. Cf. consequential loss.

disaster loss. A casualty loss sustained in a geographic area that the President designates as a disaster area. • It may be treated as having occurred during the previous tax year so that a victim may receive immediate tax benefits.

economic loss. See ECONOMIC LOSS.

extraordinary loss. (17c) A loss that is both unusual and infrequent, such as a loss resulting from a natural disaster.

general average loss. Marine underwriting. A loss at sea usu. incurred when cargo is thrown overboard to save the ship; a loss due to the voluntary and intentional sacrifice of part of a venture (usu. cargo) to save the rest of the venture from imminent peril. • Such a loss is borne equally by all the interests concerned in the venture. See average (3). [Cases: Insurance C=2240.]

hobby loss. A nondeductible loss arising from a personal hobby, as contrasted with an activity engaged in for profit. • The law generally presumes that an activity is engaged in for profit if profits are earned during at least three of the last five years. IRC (26 USCA) § 183. [Cases: Internal Revenue C=3396, 3397.]

indirect loss. See consequential loss.

long-term capital loss. A loss on a capital asset held for an extended period, usu. at least 12 months. [Cases: Internal Revenue C=3260.]

net loss. The excess of all expenses and losses over all revenues and gains.

net operating loss. (1921) The excess of operating expenses over revenues, the amount of which can be deducted from gross income if other deductions do not exceed gross income. — Abbr. NOL. [Cases: Internal Revenue C=3399.]

ordinary loss. (1850) Tax. A loss incurred from the sale or exchange of an item that is used in a trade or business. • The loss is deductible from ordinary income, and thus is more beneficial to the taxpayer than a capital loss. — Also termed business loss.

out-of-pocket loss. (1921) The difference between the value of what the buyer paid and the market value of what was received in return. • In breach-of-contract cases, out-of-pocket loss is used to measure restitution damages. [Cases: Damages C=36; Fraud C=59(3).]

paper loss. (1924) A loss that is realized only by selling something (such as a security) that has decreased in market value. — Also termed unrealized loss.

partial loss. A loss of part of the insured property; damage not amounting to a total loss. Cf. total loss. [Cases: Insurance C=2177.]

particular average loss. Marine underwriting. A loss suffered by and borne alone by particular interests in a maritime venture. • Such a loss is usu. a partial loss. [Cases: Insurance C=2241.]

passive loss. A loss, with limited tax deductibility, from an activity in which the taxpayer does not materially participate, from a rental activity, or from a tax-shelter activity. [Cases: Internal Revenue C=3418.]

pecuniary loss. A loss of money or of something having monetary value. [Cases: Damages C=1.]

product-liability loss. The total of a taxpayer's product-liability expenses up to the amount of the taxpayer's net operating loss. IRC (26 USCA) § 172(j)(1). — Abbr. PLL. See net operating loss. [Cases: Internal Revenue C=3438.]

progressive loss. 1. Loss that spreads or becomes more expensive to repair over time. 2. Late-manifesting harm that is related to an event that caused immediate harm, worsens over time, and is not catalyzed by any additional causative agent. • A classic example is asbestosis, a disease that manifests long after exposure to asbestos fibers.

recognized loss. Tax. The portion of a loss that is subject to income taxation. IRC (26 USCA) § 1001(c).

salvage loss. 1. Generally, a loss that presumptively would have been a total loss if certain services had not been rendered. 2. Marine underwriting. The difference between the salvage value, less the salvage charges, and the original value of the insured property. [Cases: Insurance C=2233.]

total loss. (1924) The complete destruction of insured property so that nothing of value remains and the subject matter no longer exists in its original form. • Generally, a loss is total if, after the damage occurs, no substantial remnant remains standing that a reasonably prudent uninsured owner, desiring to rebuild, would use as a basis to restore the property to its original condition. — Also termed actual total loss. Cf. partial loss; constructive total loss. [Cases: Insurance C=2175.]

loss carryback. See carryback.

loss carryforward. See carryover.

loss carryover. See carryover.

loss insurance. See insurance.

loss leader. (1922) A good or commodity sold at a very low price, usu. below cost, to attract customers to buy other items. — Sometimes shortened to leader. See bait and switch.

loss-of-bargain damages. See benefit-of-the-bargain damages under damages.

loss-of-bargain rule. (1903) The doctrine that damages for a breach of a contract should put the injured party in the position it would have been in if both parties had performed their contractual duties. [Cases: Damages C=117, 120(1).]

loss-of-chance doctrine. (1987) A rule in some states providing a claim against a doctor who has engaged in medical malpractice that, although it does not result in a particular injury, decreases or eliminates the chance of surviving or recovering from the preexisting condition for which the doctor was consulted. — Also termed lost-chance doctrine; increased-risk-of-harm doctrine. [Cases: Health C=838.]

loss of consortium (kon-sor'-she-um). (1878) 1. A loss of the benefits that one spouse is entitled to receive from the other, including companionship, cooperation, aid, affection, and sexual relations. • Loss of consortium can be recoverable as damages from a tortfeasor in a personal-injury or wrongful-death action. Originally, only the husband could sue for loss of consortium. But in 1950, nearly a century after the enactment of the married women's property acts, a wife's action for negligent impairment of consortium was first recognized. Hitaffer v. Argonne Co., 183 F.2d 811 (D.C. Cir. 1950). Today 48 states and the District of Columbia recognize both a husband's and a wife's right to sue for loss of consortium (Utah and Virginia do not). [Cases: Husband and Wife C=209(3, 4).] 2. A similar loss of benefits that one is entitled to receive from a parent or child. See consortium.

loss-of-use exclusion. See failure-to-perform exclusion under exclusion (3).

loss-payable clause. Insurance. An insurance-policy provision that authorizes the payment of proceeds to someone other than the named insured, esp. to someone who has a security interest in the insured property. • Typically, a loss-payable clause either designates the person as a beneficiary of the proceeds or assigns to the person a claim against the insurer, but the clause usu. does not treat the person as an additional insured. See mortgage clause. [Cases: Insurance C=3450.]

loss payee. Insurance. A person or entity named in an insurance policy (under a loss-payable clause) to be paid if the insured property suffers a loss. [Cases: Insurance C=3450.]

loss ratio. 1. Insurance. The ratio between premiums paid and losses incurred during a given period. [Cases: Insurance C=1540.] 2. A bank's loan losses compared to its loan assets; a business's receivable losses compared to its receivables.

loss reserve. See reserve.

lost. adj. (16c) 1. (Of property) beyond the possession and custody of its owner and not locatable by diligent search. 2. (Of a person) missing. 3. Parliamentary law. (Of a motion) rejected; not adopted (the motion is lost).

lost boundary. See boundary.

lost-chance doctrine. (1985) 1. LOSS-OF-CHANCE DOCTRINE. 2. A rule permitting a claim, in limited circumstances, against someone who fails to come to the aid of a person who is in imminent danger of being injured or killed. Cf. good samaritan doctrine.

lost corner. See corner.

lost earning capacity. (1908) A person's diminished earning power resulting from an injury. • This impairment is recoverable as an element of damages in a tort action. Cf. lost earnings under earnings. [Cases: Damages C=38.]

"To some extent the phrases 'loss of earnings' and 'loss of earning capacity' are used interchangeably. But the preferred view is that they are different concepts. The former covers real loss which can be proved at the trial; the latter covers loss of the chances of getting equivalent work in the future," R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 572 (17th ed. 1977).
lost earnings. See earnings.

lost-expectation damages. See expectation damages under damages.

lost or not lost. Marine insurance. A policy provision fixing the effective date of the policy to a time preceding the policy date, even if the insured ship has already been lost when the policy is executed, as long as neither party then knows, or has means of knowing, that the ship has been lost.

lost profits. 1. Contracts. A measure of damages that allows a seller to collect the profits that would have been made on the sale if the buyer had not breached. UCC §§ 2-708(2). [Cases: Damages ⊆ 40; Sales ⊆ 384(1).] 2. Patents. A measure of damages set by estimating the net amount lost by a plaintiff-inventor because of the infringing defendant’s actions. • The plaintiff can ask for a lost-profits recovery by showing that the patent is in demand, that the plaintiff is able to meet the demand, and that there are no acceptable noninfringing alternatives on the market. — Also termed (redundantly) lost-profits damages. [Cases: Patents ⊆ 318.]

lost property. See property.

lost-sales-of-unpatented-items theory. Patents. A theory of lost-profits remedy whereby compensation is sought for sales of unpatented items that the plaintiff would have sold along with patented items but for the defendant’s infringement.

lost-volume seller. (1974) A seller of goods who, after a buyer has breached a sales contract, resells the goods to a different buyer who would have bought identical goods from the seller’s inventory even if the original buyer had not breached. • Such a seller is entitled to lost profits, rather than contract price less market price, as damages from the original buyer’s breach. UCC §§ 2-708(2). [Cases: Sales ⊆ 384(7).]

lost will. See will.

lot. (bef. 12c) 1. A tract of land, esp. one having specific boundaries or being used for a given purpose.

minimum lot. A lot that has the least amount of square footage allowed by a local zoning law. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ⊆ 63, 254.]

nonconforming lot. A previously lawful lot that now violates an amended or newly adopted zoning ordinance. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ⊆ 321.]

2. An article that is the subject of a separate sale, lease, or delivery, whether or not it is sufficient to perform the contract. UCC §§ 2-105(5); 2A-103(1)(b). 3. A specified number of shares or a specific quantity of a commodity designated for trading.

odd lot. A number of shares of stock or the value of a bond that is less than a round lot.

round lot. The established unit of trading for stocks and bonds. • A round lot of stock is usu. 100 shares, and a round lot of bonds is usu. $1,000 or $5,000 par value. — Also termed even lot; board lot.

lot and scot. Hist. A collection of duties paid by voters before voting in certain cities and boroughs.

lot line. (1829) A land boundary that separates one tract from another <from the street to the alley, the lot line is 150 feet>.

lottery. (16c) A method of raising revenues, esp. state-government revenues, by selling tickets and giving prizes (usu. cash prizes) to those who hold tickets with winning numbers that are drawn at random. — Also termed lotto. [Cases: Lotteries ⊆ 3.]

Dutch lottery. A lottery in which tickets are drawn from classes, and the number and value of prizes are fixed and increasing with each class. • This type of lottery originated in Holland in the 16th century. — Also termed class lottery.

Genoese lottery (jen-oh-eez or -ees). A lottery in which, out of 90 consecutive numbers, five are drawn by lot, each player wagering that one or more of the numbers they have chosen will be drawn. • This type of lottery originated in Genoa in about 1530. — Also termed number lottery; numerical lottery.

love day. See day.

Lovely claim. Hist. Property. An entitlement to settle on and take ownership of public land in Arkansas, created by the federal government for Lovely County settlers who were displaced by an 1828 treaty that gave the settlers’ land to the Cherokee nation. • The term gets its name from Lovely County in the Arkansas territory, which straddled what is now the Oklahoma-Arkansas border. The treaty divided the county, granted the portion west of the Mississippi River to the Cherokee nation, and required the settlers in that territory to relocate. On May 24, 1828, Congress passed an act granting relief to Lovely County settlers who were forced to leave the Cherokee land and granted them land on the eastern side of the river. Lovely claims are found in chains of title in Arkansas. [Cases: Public Lands ⊆ 45.]

lucr (loo-kar), n. Monetary gain; profit.
lucrare (lu-krar-ay-oh-sah). [Latin] For the sake of gain. • Lucrare was formerly an essential element of larceny, but today the thief’s intent to deprive the possessor of property is generally sufficient. See larceny.

- "Lucrare" literally means for the sake of gain. On rare occasions the suggestion has been made that no taking is with intent to steal unless the thief is motivated by some purpose of gain or advantage. Even those advancing this suggestion have not insisted upon an intent to gain a pecuniary advantage. An intent to take away property and destroy it for the purpose of destroying evidence has been held to be sufficient even by those who have been inclined to insist upon lucrare as essential to an intent to steal. The generally accepted view does not include this element at all. It regards intent to deprive the owner of his property permanently, or an intent to deal with another’s property unlawfully in such a manner as to create an obviously unreasonable risk of permanent deprivation, as all that is required to constitute the animus furandi — or intent to steal,” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 332-33 (3d ed. 1982).
lucro captando. 1. See CERTANS DE LUCRO CAPTANDO.
2. IN LUCRO CAPTANDO.

Mad Parliaments. In 1258, a commission of 24 barons summoned to Oxford by Henry III to carry out certain reforms and settle differences between the king and the barons. • The assembly was called the Mad Parliament because it ultimately abridged the king's power and gave unprecedented powers to the barons. The commission produced the Provisions of Oxford. — Also termed parliamentum insanum. See PROVISIONS OF OXFORD.

Madrid Agreement. Trademarks. 1. An 1890 treaty establishing a system for the international registration of trademarks. • The agreement's official name is the Madrid Arrangement Concerning the International Registration of Marks. A product of the Madrid Revision Conference of the Paris Convention in 1890, it was last revised in 1967. Under this treaty's registration system, called the Madrid Union, a mark registered in a treaty nation that is also registered (in French) with the World Intellectual Property Organization receives equal protection in all signatory nations. The United States ratified the treaty in 2002. 2. An 1890 treaty designed to discourage false indications of geographic source by permitting member nations to seize falsely marked imported goods. — Also termed Madrid Arrangement; Madrid Registration of Marks Treaty; Madrid Union. • Also a product of the Madrid Revision Conference of the Paris Convention in 1890, the treaty's official name is the Madrid Arrangement Concerning the Prevention of False or Deceptive Indications of Source. It applies to manufactured and handmade goods, and agricultural products. — Also termed (in sense 2) Madrid Agreement for the Repression of False or Deceptive Indications of Source of Goods.

Madrid Protocol. Trademarks. 1. A 1996 international agreement that allows citizens of a Madrid Agreement signatory nation to apply for a single international trademark through the World Intellectual Property Organization instead of registering the trademark in each individual nation. • An applicant must apply for the trademark's registration in a treaty-member nation before applying for international trademark protection. 2. A 1989 international trademark registration agreement that supplements the Madrid Agreement on trademark registration, harmonizes the Agreement's registration system with that of the European Union, and allows citizens of nonmember nations to apply for international trademark registration without first registering the trademark in a member nation. • When referred to along with the Madrid Registration of Marks Treaty, it is sometimes also termed the Madrid System. See Madrid Agreement (1).

district-court magistrate. (1932) In some states, a quasi-judicial officer given the power to set bail, accept bond, accept guilty pleas, impose sentences for traffic violations and similar offenses, and conduct informal hearings on civil infractions. [Cases: Justices of the Peace І—ІІІ.]

federal magistrate. See united states magistrate judge.

investigating magistrat. (1908) A quasi-judicial officer responsible for examining and sometimes ruling on certain aspects of a criminal proceeding before it comes before a judge.

“the institution of the investigating magistrate is another measure for preserving the integrity of the law at the level of enforcement. In this case the measure is directed not toward curing the evils of a lax or sporadic enforcement, but toward the evils of an opposite nature, those resulting from an excess of zeal on the part of the prosecutor. Under the system in question, before a criminal charge may be brought before the regular courts it must be investigated by a special official and, in effect, certified as deserving trial in court. The investigating magistrate is thus a kind of quasi-judge standing halfway between the prosecutor and the regular court. The danger of the institution lies precisely in this twilight zone of function which it occupies. The certification of a case for trial inevitably tends to confirm the criminal charge against the suspect, thus creating what may amount in practice to a strong presumption of guilt. The element of prejudgment involved constitutes a threat to the integrity of the trial in open court; the accused has, in effect, had a kind of half-trial in advance of the real trial, and this half-trial is conducted, not before but by a kind of half-judge who acts essentially as an inquisitorial court. In those countries where it is a part of the legal system, the role of the investigating magistrate continues to be a subject of some debate, and even where it is generally accepted, there is always some lingering concern lest it become the subject of inconspicuous abuse." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 38–39 (1968).

metropolitan stipendiary magistrate (sti-pen-dee-er-ee). English law: A stipendiary magistrate with jurisdiction in inner London areas. • Under the Access to Justice Act 1999, these magistrates have been renamed district judges (magistrates' courts). See stipendiary magistrate.

police magistrate. (18c) A judicial officer who has jurisdiction to try minor criminal offenses, breaches of police regulations, and similar violations. — Also termed police justice.

stipendiary magistrate (sti-pen-dee-er-ee). English law: A salaried magistrate that performs either in the place of or along with Justices of the Peace, and is appointed from barristers and solicitors of seven years standing.

U.S. Magistrate. See United States Magistrate Judge.

Magistrate Judge, U.S. See United States Magistrate Judge.

magistratic, adj. See magisterial.

"Magistratus. Denotes both the public office and the official himself. Magistracy was a Republican institution: under the Principate some magistratus continued to exist but with gradually diminishing importance; in the post-Diocletian Empire some former magistracies still exist but reduced nearly completely to an honorific title . . . . The most characteristic features of the Republican magistracy were the limited duration (one year) and colleague-ship since each magistracy was covered by at least two persons . . . with equal power . . . Magistrates were elected by the people . . . During his year of service a magistratus could not be removed. Misdemeanor in office could be prosecuted only after the term, hence the tenure of an office for two consecutive years was prohibited . . . The tenure of a public office was considered an honor; for that reason the magistrates did not receive any compensation. Their political influence was, however, of greatest importance . . . " Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 571–72 (1953).

magistratus maiores (maj-a-stray-tas ma-jor-eze). [Latin "superior magistrates"] Roman law: Magistrates with superior powers, including the power to review their own judgments. Cf. magistratus minores.

"The magistratus minores were officials of minor importance, they had no imperium and were vested with a restricted jurisdiction and some functions in specific fields . . . . The tenure of a minor magistracy opened the way for the quaestorship, the first step in the career of magistratus maiores." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 572 (1953).

magna assisa eligenda (mag-na a-sta-zo el-a-jen-da). See de magna assisa eligenda.

Magna Carta (mag-na kahr-ta). [Latin "great charter"] The English charter that King John granted to the barons in 1215 and that Henry III and Edward I later confirmed. • It is generally regarded as one of the great common-law documents and as the foundation of constitutional liberties. The other three great charters of English liberty are the Petition of Right (3 Car. (1628)), the Habeas Corpus Act (31 Car. 2 (1679)), and the Bill of Rights (1 Will. & M. (1689)). — Also spelled Magna Charta.

"The history of Magna Carta is the history not only of a document but also of an argument. The history of the document is a history of repeated re-interpretation. But the history of the argument is a history of a continuous element of political thinking. In this light there is no inherent reason why an assertion of law originally conceived in aristocratic interests should not be applied on a wider scale." J.C. Holt, Magna Carta 16 (1965).

"Magna Carta came to be reckoned as the beginning of English statute law; it was printed as the first of the statutes of the realm. But to explain this we have first to remark that of Magna Carta there are several editions. We have four versions of the charter, that of 1215, that of 1216, that of 1217 and that of 1225, and between them there are important differences. Several clauses which were contained in the charter of 1215 were omitted in that of 1216 and were never again inserted. It seems to have been thought unadvisable to bind the young king to some of the more stringent conditions to which John had been subjected. The charter of 1217 again differs from that of 1216. Substantially it is in 1217 that the charter takes its final form; still it is the charter of 1225 which is the Magna Carta of all future times. That there were four versions is a fact to be carefully remembered; it is never enough to refer to Magna Carta without saying which edition you mean." F.W. Maitland, The Constitutional History of England 15 (1908, repr. 1955).

magna centum (mag-na sen-tu-m). n. [Law Latin] Six score, or 120.

magna culpa (mag-na kal-pa). [Latin "great fault"] Roman law: Gross fault. • This is sometimes equivalent to dolus. See dolus.

magna neglegentia. See gross negligence under negligence.

magnum cape. See cape magnum under cape.

Magnuson–Moss Warranty Act (mag-na-san-maws or –mos). A federal statute requiring that a written warranty of a consumer product fully and conspicuously disclose, in plain language, the terms and conditions of the warranty, including whether the warranty is full or limited, according to standards given in the statute. 15 USCA §§ 2301-2312. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation C-204].

magnus rotulus statutorum (mag-nas roch-d-las stach-tor-um). [Law Latin] "the great statute roll"

The first of the English statute rolls, beginning with Magna Carta and ending with Edward III.
mahr, n. Islamic law. A gift of money or property that must be made by a man to the woman he marries. • The parties agree to the mahr's amount and time of payment before marrying. If the time of payment is indefinite or if the mahr's outstanding balance is not paid sooner, the agreed amount or outstanding balance becomes due on divorce or the husband's death. Despite the religious basis for a mahr, secular courts may uphold the agreement if its secular terms are enforceable as a prenuptial contract. — Also termed sadaq. Cf. nikah.

maiden. (bef. 12c) 1. A young unmarried woman. 2. Scots law. An instrument used to bеhead criminals. • The Earl of Morton, who had introduced the instrument to Scotland, was the first to be executed by it, in 1581. It was the prototype of the guillotine. Hence, "to kiss the maiden was to be put to death." H. Percy Smith, Glossary of Terms and Phrases 307 (1883).

mail, n. (13c) 1. One or more items that have been properly addressed, stamped with postage, and deposited for delivery in the postal system. [Cases: Postal Service ĉ=13.] 2. An official system for delivering such items; the postal system. [Cases: Postal Service ĉ=3.] 3. One or more written or oral messages sent electronically (e.g., through e-mail or voicemail). [Cases: Telecommunications ĉ=1343.]

certified mail. Mail for which the sender requests proof of delivery in the form of a receipt signed by the addressee. • The receipt (a green card, which is usu. referred to as such) must be signed before the mail will be delivered. — Also termed certified mail, return receipt requested. [Cases: Postal Service ĉ=19, 22, 23.]

registered mail. Mail that the U.S. Postal Service records at the time of mailing and at each point on its route as to guarantee safe delivery. [Cases: Postal Service ĉ=19, 22, 23.]

mail, vb (1827) 1. To deposit (a letter, package, etc.) with the U.S. Postal Service; to ensure that a letter, package, etc. is properly addressed, stamped, and placed into a receptacle for mail pickup. [Cases: Postal Service ĉ=19.] 2. To deliver (a letter, package, etc.) to a private courier service that undertakes delivery to a third person, often within a specified time. mailable, adj. (Of a letter or package) lawful to send through a postal service. [Cases: Postal Service ĉ=13.]

mailbox rule. (1975) 1. Contracts. The principle that an acceptance becomes effective — and binds the offeror — once it has been properly mailed. • The mailbox rule does not apply, however, if the offer specifies that an acceptance is not effective until received. [Cases: Contracts ĉ=22(1).] 2. The principle that when a pleading or other document is filed or served by mail, filing or service is deemed to have occurred on the date of mailing. • The mailbox rule varies from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. It may apply only to certain types of filings, or it may apply to the use of an overnight courier instead of the U.S. mail. — Also termed dispatch rule. [Cases: Habeas Corpus ĉ=603; Pleading ĉ=40, 333; Process ĉ=82; Time ĉ=3.5.]

mail cover. (1959) A process by which the U.S. Postal Service provides a government agency with information on the face of an envelope or package (such as a postmark) for the agency's use in locating a fugitive, identifying a coconspirator, or obtaining other evidence necessary to solve a crime. [Cases: Postal Service ĉ=47.]

main, n. (14c) Archaic. The type of strength-diminishing injury required to support a charge of mayhem; esp., serious injury to a body part that is necessary for fighting. • Also termed maim; maihem. See mayhem. [Cases: Mayhem ĉ=1.] — main, vb.

"Maim or main is where by the wrongful act of another any member is hurt or taken away, whereby the party is made unperfect to fight: as if a bone be taken out of the hand . . . . And if the justices stand in doubt whether the hurt be a maihem or not, they use and will of their own discretion take the help and opinion of some skilful chirurgeon, to consider thereof, before they determine upon the cause." Termes de la Ley 283–84 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

"'Maim' is the modern equivalent of the old word 'mayhem,' and some have long been inclined to abandon the earlier word entirely. There is a tendency, on the other hand, to retain 'mayhem' for the offense and to use 'maim' for the type of injury originally required for such a crime. This usage has a distinct advantage because statutory enlargements have included another type of injury within the scope of this offense, and today mayhem (the offense) may involve something other than maim (the injury)." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 239 (3d ed. 1982).

majority. (16c) 1. The status of one who has attained the age (usu. 18) at which one is entitled to full civic rights and considered legally capable of handling one’s own affairs. See age of majority. Cf. minority (1). [Cases: Infants C 11.] 2. A number that is more than half of a total; a group of more than 50 percent <the candidate received 50.4 percent of the votes — barely a majority>. • A majority always refers to more than half of some defined or assumed set. In parliamentary law, that set may be all the members or some subset, such as all members present or all members voting on a particular question. A “majority” without further qualification usu. means a simple majority. See simple majority. Cf. plurality; minority (2); half plus one.

absolute majority. A majority of all those who are entitled to vote in a particular election, regardless of how many voters actually cast ballots. See quorum. [Cases: Elections C 126(6), 215.]

constitutional majority. See majority of all the members.

extraordinary majority. See supermajority.
majority of all the members. A majority of all the actual members, disregarding vacancies. — Also termed constitutional majority; majority of the entire membership; majority of the membership.

majority of all the memberships. A majority of all the possible memberships, including vacancies. — Also termed majority of the fixed membership.

majority of the entire membership. See majority of all the members.

majority of the fixed membership. See majority of all the memberships.

majority of the membership. See majority of all the members.

ordinary majority. See simple majority.

plural majority. See plurality.

simple majority. A numerical majority of those actually voting. • Absent members, members who are present but do not vote, blanks, and abstentions are not counted. — Also termed ordinary majority. [Cases: Elections ○= 126(6), 215.]

supermajority. A fixed proportion greater than half (often two-thirds or a percentage greater than 50%), required for a measure to pass. • Such a majority is needed for certain extraordinary actions, such as ratifying a constitutional amendment or approving a fundamental corporate change. — Also termed extraordinary majority.

veto-proof majority. A legislative majority large enough that it can override an executive veto.

majority-consent procedure. Corporations. A statutory provision allowing shareholders to avoid a shareholders’ meeting and to act instead by written consent of the holders of a majority of shares. • Delaware and a few other states have enacted such procedures. [Cases: Corporations ○= 191.]

majority-minority district. See district.

majority opinion. See opinion (1).

majority report. See report (1).

majority rule. (1848) 1. The principle that a majority of a group has the power to make decisions that bind the group; the principle that in the choice of alternatives, the one preferred by the greater number is selected. • It is governance by the majority of those who actually participate, regardless of the number entitled to participate. 2. The constitutional principle “that a majority of the people of a State...elect a majority of that State’s legislators.” Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 583–84, 84 S.Ct. 1362, 1393 (1964), from which it follows that each voter is entitled to a share of the franchise equal to that of each other voter. See one-person, one-vote rule. 3. Corporations. The common-law principle that a director or officer owes no fiduciary duty to a shareholder with respect to a stock transaction. • This rule has been restricted by both federal insider-trading rules and state-law doctrine. Cf. special-facts rule.

majority shareholder. See shareholder.

majority verdict. See verdict.

majority vote. See majority.

majority voting. See voting.

major life activity. (1979) A basic activity that an average person in the general population can perform with little or no difficulty, such as seeing, hearing, sleeping, eating, walking, traveling, or working. • A person who is substantially limited in a major life activity is protected from discrimination under a variety of disability laws, most significantly the Americans with Disabilities Act and the Rehabilitation Act. 42 USCA § 12102(2); 29 USCA § 705(9)(B). See Americans with Disabilities Act. [Cases: Civil Rights ○= 1019(2), 1218(2).]

major-minor fault rule. Maritime law. The principle that if the fault of one vessel in a collision is uncontradicted and sufficient to account for the accident, then the other vessel is presumed not to have been at fault and therefore not to have contributed to the accident. • The elimination of the divided-damages rule has made this rule obsolete. — Also termed major-and-minor fault rule. [Cases: Collision ○= 19, 122.]

major trend. See trend.

majus jus (may-jas jis). [Law Latin “a greater right”] Hist. A greater right. • This was a plea in a real action.

make, vb. (bef. 12c) 1. To cause (something) to exist <to make a record>. 2. To enact (something) <to make law>. 3. To acquire (something) <to make money on execution>. 4. To legally perform, as by executing, signing, or delivering (a document) <to make a contract>.

make default. 1. DEFAULT (1). 2. DEFAULT (2).

make law. 1. To legislate. 2. To issue a legal precedent, esp. a judicial decision, that establishes a new rule of law on a particular subject. 3. Hist. To deny a plaintiff’s charge under oath, in open court, with compurgators.

make purpart (par-pahrt), vb. To divide and apportion property formerly held in common. See purpart.

maker. (14c) 1. One who frames, promulgates, or ordains (as in lawmaker). 2. A person who signs a promissory note. See note (1). Cf. comaker. [Cases: Bills and Notes ○= 48, 118, 13, drawer.

accommodation maker. (1829) One who signs a note as a surety. See accommodation; accommodation indorser under indorser. [Cases: Bills and Notes ○= 49, 122.]

prime maker. (1792) The person who is primarily liable on a note or other negotiable instrument.

makeup gas. Oil & gas. Natural gas that has been paid for by the purchaser, usu. under a take-or-pay contract, but that is to be delivered in the years following payment. See take-or-pay contract under contract. [Cases: Gas ○= 13(1).]

make-whole doctrine. Insurance. The principle that, unless the insurance policy provides otherwise, an insurer will not receive any of the proceeds from the maladministration. Poor management or regulation by a public officer; specifically, an official's abuse of power. — Also termed misadministration; breach of trust.

malapportionment, n. (1959) The improper or unconstitutional apportionment of a legislative district. See apportionment (3); gerrymandering; legislative districting. [Cases: Elections 12(6).] — malapportion, vb.

"Injuries, affecting a man's health, are where by any unwholesome practices of another a man sustains any apparent damage in his vigor or constitution. As by selling him bad provisions or wine ... or by the neglect or unskilful management of his physician, surgeon, or apothecary. For it hath been solemnly resolved ... that mala praxis is a great misdemeanor and offence at common law, whether it be for curiosity and experiment, or by neglect, because it breaks the trust which the party had placed in his physician, and tends to the patient's destruction." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 122 (1768).

mala prohibita (mal-ə proh-hib-ə-ta). See malum prohibitum.

malconduct in office. See official misconduct under misconduct.

malediction (mal-ə dik-shən). Hist. A curse placed on property donated to a church to protect it against anyone attempting to violate the church’s rights.

malefacao (mal-ə-fak-shən), n. [Latin malefacerē “to do evil”] (15c) Archaic. An evil deed; a crime or offense. — Also termed maleficia. — malefactor, adj.

malefactor (mal-ə-fak-tər), n. [Latin] (15c) A wrongdoer; a criminal.

maleficium (mal-ə fish-ə-əm), n. [Latin “a misdeed”] Roman law. A delict. See malefacao.

malesworn (mayl-ə sworn), p.pl. Forsworn. — Also spelled malesworn.

malfeasance (mal-fee-zənts), n. (17c) A wrongful or unlawful act; esp. wrongdoing or misconduct by a public official; misfeasance in public office. Cf. misfeasance; nonfeasance. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees 12(11).] — malfeasant (mal-fee-zənt), adj. — malfeasor (mal-fee-zər), n.

malfunction theory. (1979) Products-liability law. A principle permitting a products-liability plaintiff to prove that a product was defective by proving that the product malfunctioned, instead of requiring the plaintiff to prove a specific defect. — A plaintiff relying on the malfunction theory usually must also prove that the product was not misused, and must disprove all reasonable explanations for the occurrence other than a defect. [Cases: Products Liability 12(358).]

mal gree (mal gree). [Law French “against the will”] Hist. Against the will; without consent.

malice, n. (14c) 1. The intent, without justification or excuse, to commit a wrongful act. 2. Reckless disregard of the law or of a person's legal rights. 3. Ill will; wickedness of heart. — This sense is most typical in nonlegal contexts.

"Malice means in law wrongful intention. It includes any intent which the law deems wrongful, and which therefore serves as a ground of liability. Any act done with such an intent is, in the language of the law, malicious, and this legal usage has etymology in its favour. The Latin malitia means badness, physical or moral — wickedness in disposition or in conduct — not specifically or exclusively ill-will or malevolence; hence the malice of English law, including all forms of evil purpose, design, intent, or motive. [But] intent is of two kinds, being either immediate or ultimate, the ulterior intent being commonly distinguished as the motive. The term malice is applied in law to both these forms of intent, and the result is a somewhat puzzling ambiguity which requires careful notice. When we say that an act is done maliciously, we mean one of two distinct things. We mean either that it is done intentionally, or that it is done with some wrongful motive." John Salmon, Jurisprudence 384 (Glanyville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"[M]alice in the legal sense imports (1) the absence of all elements of justification, excuse or recognized mitigation, and (2) the presence of either (a) an actual intent to cause the particular harm which is produced or harm of the same general nature, or (b) the wanton and willful doing of an act with awareness of a plain and strong likelihood that such harm may result. ... The Model Penal Code does not use 'malice' because those who formulated the Code had a blind prejudice against the word. This is very regrettable because it represents a useful concept despite some unfortunate language employed at times in the effort to express it." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Royce, Criminal Law 860 (3d ed. 1982).

actual malice. (18c) 1. The deliberate intent to commit an injury, as evidenced by external circumstances. — Also termed express malice; malice in fact. Cf. implied malice. 2. Defamation. Knowledge (by the person who utters or publishes a defamatory statement) that a statement is false, or reckless disregard about whether the statement is true. — To recover for defamation, a plaintiff who is a public official or public figure must overcome the defendant’s qualified privilege by... proving the defendant's actual malice. And for certain other types of claims, a plaintiff must prove actual malice to recover presumed or punitive damages. — Also termed New York Times malice; constitutional malice; common-law malice. [Cases: Libel and Slander 51.]

constructive malice. See implied malice.

express malice. (17c) 1. Criminal law. The intent to kill or seriously injure arising from a deliberate, rational mind. [Cases: Assault and Battery 49; Homicide 529.] 2. See actual malice (1). 3. Defamation. The bad-faith publication of defamatory material. [Cases: Libel and Slander 4, 51.]

general malice. (17c) Malice that is necessary for any criminal conduct; malice that is not directed at a specific person. Cf. particular malice. [Cases: Criminal Law 20.]

implied malice. (17c) Malice inferred from a person's conduct. — Also termed constructive malice; legal malice; malice in law. Cf. actual malice (1).

malice in fact. See actual malice (1).

particular malice. (16c) Malice that is directed at a particular person. — Also termed special malice.

transferred malice. (1961) Malice directed to one person or object but instead harming another in the way intended for the first. [Cases: Assault and Battery 49; Homicide 555.]

"If A shoots at B intending to kill him, but the shot actually kills C, this is held to be murder of C. So also if A throws a stone at one window and breaks another, it is held to be malicious damage to the window actually broken. This doctrine, which is known as the doctrine of transferred malice, applies only where the harm intended and the harm done are of the same kind. If A throws a stone at a human being and unintentionally breaks a window, he cannot be convicted of malicious damage to the window." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 382 (Glaville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

universal malice. (17c) The state of mind of a person who determines to take a life on slight provocation, without knowing or caring who may be the victim.

malice aforethought. (17c) The requisite mental state for common-law murder, encompassing any one of the following: (1) the intent to kill, (2) the intent to inflict grievous bodily harm, (3) extremely reckless indifference to the value of human life (the so-called "abandoned and malignant heart"), or (4) the intent to commit a dangerous felony (which leads to culpability under the felony-murder rule). — Also termed premeditated; preconceived malice; malice prepense; malitia praecogitata. [Cases: Homicide 529, 541, 546.]

"Malice aforethought is the term which came into use during medieval times to indicate the mental element necessary in the felony of murder. It has been the subject of voluminous jurisprudential enquiry . . . ." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 27 (16th ed. 1952).

"Every intentional killing is with malice aforethought unless under circumstances sufficient to constitute (1) justification, (2) excuse, or (3) mitigation." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 58 (3d ed. 1982).

malice exception. (1977) A limitation on a public official's qualified immunity, by which the official can face civil liability for willfully exercising discretion in a way that violates a known or well-established right. See qualified immunity under immunity (1). [Cases: Civil Rights 1376.]

malice in fact. See actual malice (1) under malice.

malice in law. See implied malice under malice.

malice prepense. See malice aforethought.

malicious, adj. (13c) 1. Substantially certain to cause injury. 2. Without just cause or excuse.

malicious execution. See execution.

malicious injury. See injury.

malicious institution of civil proceedings. See malicious prosecution.

malicious killing. (17c) An intentional killing without legal justification or excuse. — Also termed killing with malice. Cf. accidental killing. [Cases: Homicide 529, 546.]

maliciously damaging the property of another. See malicious mischief.

malicious mischief. (18c) The common-law misdemeanor of intentionally destroying or damaging another's property. — Although modern statutes predominantly make this offense a misdemeanor, a few make it a felony (depending on the nature of the property or its value). See Model Penal Code § 220.3. — Also termed malicious mischief and trespass; malicious injury; malicious trespass; malicious damage; maliciously damaging the property of another; (in the Model Penal Code) criminal mischief. [Cases: Malicious Mischief 1.]

"Such phrases as 'malicious mischief and trespass,' 'malicious injury,' and 'maliciously damaging the property of another,' are merely additional labels used at times to indicate the same offense. It was a misdemeanor according to the common law of England, although some confusion has resulted from Blackstone's statement that it was 'only a trespass at common law.' Before the word 'misdemeanor' became well established the old writers tended to use the word 'trespass' to indicate an offense below the grade of felony. And it was used at times by Blackstone for this malicious motive. See motive.

malicious prosecution. (17c) 1. The institution of a criminal or civil proceeding for an improper purpose and without probable cause. • The tort requires proof of four elements: (1) the initiation or continuation of a lawsuit; (2) lack of probable cause for the lawsuit’s initiation; (3) malice; and (4) favorable termination of the original lawsuit. Restatement (Second) of Torts §§ 674–81B (1977). 2. The tort claim resulting from the institution of such a proceeding. • Once a wrongful prosecution has ended in the defendant’s favor, he or she may sue for tort damages. — Also termed (in the context of civil proceedings) malicious use of process; (archaically) malicious institution of civil proceedings. Cf. abuse of process; vexatious suit; malicious defense. [Cases: Malicious Prosecution ☞ 0.5.]

malicious technology. Any electronic or mechanical means, esp. software, used to monitor or gain access to another’s computer system without authorization for the purpose of impairing or disabling the system. • Examples of malicious technology are Trojan horses, time-outs, keystroke logging, and data-scrambling devices. — Also termed malware.

malicious trespass. See malicious mischief.

malicious use of process. See malicious prosecution.

malign (mal-ag-nair-ee), vb. [Latin] Hist. 1. To malign; to slander. 2. To main.

maligner, vb. (1820) To feign illness or disability, esp. in an attempt to avoid an obligation or to continue receiving disability benefits.

malison (mal-a-zan or -san), [fr. Latin malum “evil” + sonus “a sound”] Hist. A curse. — Also spelled maledom.

malitia (mal-it-ee-uh), [Latin “malice”] Hist. An actual evil design; express malice. • Malitia originally signified general wrongdoing, and did not describe a wrongdoer’s state of mind; malitia praecogitata, for example, indicated only the seriousness of the offense, though it was eventually rendered malice aforethought.

malitia capitalis (mal-it-ee-kap-it-lis), [Latin] Hist. Deadly malice.

malitia excogitata (eks-koy-tay-ta), See malitia praecogitata.

malitia praecogitata (pree-koy-tay-ta). See malice aforethought. — Also termed malitia excogitata. "[T]he word felony is often coupled with what will in the future be another troublesome term of art, to wit, malice aforethought or malice prepense (malitia excogitata, praecogitata). . . When it first came into use, it hardly signified a state of mind; some qualifying adjective such as praemeditata or excogitata was needed if much note was to be taken of intention or of any other psychical fact. When we first meet with malice prepense it seems to mean little more than intentional wrong-doing, but the somewhat weighty adjectives which are coupled with malitia in its commonest context — adjectives such as excogitata — are, if we mistake not, traces of the time when forensic quarefolia, quarefolia, waylaying, the setting of ambush, was (what few crimes were) a specially reserved plea of the crown to be emended, if indeed it was emendable, by a heavy wite.” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 1468-69 (2d ed. 1899).

malleable, adj. (14c) 1. (Of an object) capable of extension by hammering <the metal was malleable>. 2. (Of a person) capable of being influenced <the young student was malleable>.

Malleus Maleficarum (mal-ee-uh-mal-fik-ar-um), [Latin “Hammer of Witches”] Hist. An encyclopedic work of demonology and witchcraft, prepared in 1486 by two Dominican friars (Heinrich Kraemer and Johann Sprenger) as part of their efforts to eradicate witchcraft in Germany. • The Malleus Maleficarum was based largely on folk beliefs, but it was relied on for several centuries as an authoritative source on how to detect, extract confessions from, and prosecute witches.

Mallory rule. See McNabb-Mallory rule.

mallum (mal-am), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A superior court among the Salian Franks, with criminal jurisdiction; a high court that handles important business. 2. A public national assembly. — Also termed mallus.

malus. See MALLUM.

malo animo (mal-oh an-uh-moh), adv. [Latin] With evil intent; with malice.

malpractice (mal-prak-tis), (17c) An instance of negligence or incompetence on the part of a professional. • To succeed in a malpractice claim, a plaintiff must also prove proximate cause and damages. — Also termed professional negligence. [Cases: Negligence ☞ 321.]

legal malpractice. A lawyer’s failure to render professional services with the skill, prudence, and diligence that an ordinary and reasonable lawyer would use under similar circumstances. — Also termed attorney malpractice. [Cases: Attorney and Client ☞ 107.]

medical malpractice. A doctor’s failure to exercise the degree of care and skill that a physician or surgeon of the same medical specialty would use under similar circumstances. — Often shortened to med. mal.
[Cases: Health ⊄ 600–835.]

malpractice insurance. See insurance.

malsworn. See malesworn.

maltreatment. (18c) Bad treatment (esp. improper treatment by a surgeon) resulting from ignorance, neglect, or willfulness. See malpractice.

malum (mal-əm also may-lam), n. [Latin] Something bad or evil. Pl. mala.

malum in se (mal-əm in say or see), n. [Latin “evil in itself”] (17c) A crime or an act that is inherently immoral, such as murder, arson, or rape. Also termed malum per se. Cf. malum prohibitum. Pl. mala in se, — malum in se, adj.

The basis for the distinction between mala in se and mala prohibitum, between what one might call a crime and an offence — or between what one might call a felony and a misdemeanour, if one could modernize those terms so that the latter was given its natural meaning — is that crime means to the ordinary man something that is sinful or immoral, and an offence at worst a piece of misbehaviour.”

“...the distinction between offenses mala in se and offenses mala prohibitum was recognized as early as the fifteenth century. It has been criticized repeatedly. About a century and a half ago the distinction was said to be one ‘not founded upon any sound principle’ which had ‘long since been exploded.’ ” [Quoting Bensley v. Bignold, 5 B. & A. 335, 341, 108 Eng. Rep. 1214, 1216 (1822); other citations omitted.] The Supreme Court, however, has shown that it is just as firmly entrenched today as it was in 1495.”

Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 880 (3d ed. 1982).

malum prohibitum (mal-əm proh-hib-i-tam), n. [Latin “prohibited evil”] (18c) An act that is a crime merely because it is prohibited by statute, although the act itself is not necessarily immoral. • Misdemeanors such as jaywalking and running a stoplight are malum prohibitum, as are many regulatory violations. Cf. malum in se. Pl. mala prohibitum. — malum prohibitum, adj.

“Much of the criminal law that is regulatory in character — the part of it that deals with malum prohibitum rather than malum in se — is based upon the... principle... that the choice of the individual must give way to the convenience of the many.”

“As customarily used these phrases are mutually exclusive. An offense malum prohibitum is not a wrong which is prohibited, but something which is wrong only in the sense that it is against the law. This is emphasized at times by such phrases as ‘malum prohibitum only’ or ‘but malum prohibitum,’ although it is understood without any such qualification. A failure to understand this usage of the terms has led some to assume that all statutory additions to the common law of crimes are malum prohibitum. One writer emphasized his confusion by speaking of embezzlement as malum prohibitum. This assumption is utterly without foundation. An act may be malum in se although no punishment is provided by law. If this defect is corrected by appropriate legislation, what previously was malum in se does not cease to be so by reason of having been defined and made punishable by law.”

malum regimen (mal-əm rej-a-men), [Law Latin] Scots law. Bad medical treatment. • A defendant in a homicide case may assert as a defense that the decedent actually died as a result of bad medical treatment, not the defendant’s actions.

malus animus (mal-as an-ə mas). [Latin] Scots law. Bad intention. • This intention, coupled with a prohibited act carrying it out, resulted in a crime. See DOLE; MENS REA.

malveilles (mal-vay also mal-vayls), n. [French “misdemeanors”] Hist. 1. Ill will. 2. Crimes; misdemeanors; malicious acts.

managium

mancipable (man-si-pa-bal), adj. Capable of mancipation.

mancipant (man-si-pa-bal), n. One who transfers property by mancipation.

mancipare (man-sa-pair-ee), vb. [fr. Latin manus “hand” + capere “to take”] Roman law. 1. To alienate (a thing) through mancipation. 2. To sell (esp. a person) fictitiously as part of the emancipation process. See MANCIPATION.

mancipatio (man-so-pay-shoo-oh), n. [Latin] See MANCIPATION.

mancipation (man-si-pay-shan), n. [fr. Latin mancipatio “hand-grasp”] 1. Roman law. A legal formality for transferring property by either an actual or a simulated purchase; a formal conveyance in the guise of a sale. • The formality required the presence of the thing being conveyed (res mancipi), and of five adult male citizens acting as witnesses. Another person (the libripens) held the bronze scales with which the purchase price had been weighed out. The buyer made an assertion of ownership, struck the scales with a piece of bronze or copper, then gave the metal piece to the seller as a symbolic price. In Roman classical law, either this procedure or cessio in jure was necessary to pass legal title. This form of sale was abolished by Justinian. 2. A similar form used for making a will, adoption, emancipation of children, etc. — Also termed mancipatio. See RES MANCIP. Cf. EMANCIPATION. — mancipate, vb. — mancipatory (man-si-pa-toh-ree), adj.

“Mancipatio is the solemn sale per aesc et librum. In the presence of five witnesses (cives Romani publici) a skilled weighmaster (libripens) weighs out to the vendor a certain amount of uncoined copper (aesc, radus, radusculum) which is the purchase-money, and the purchaser, with solemn words, takes possession with his hand — hence the description of the act as ‘hand-grasp’ — of the thing purchased as being his property.” Rudolph Sohm, The Institute: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 48 (James Crawford Leslie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

mancipatory will. See WILL.

mancipri res (man-so-pi-rez). See RES MANCIP.

mancipium (man-sip-ee-um), n. [Latin “a slave”] Roman law. 1. A slave, esp. by virtue of being captured by an enemy in war. 2. A temporary quasi-serf status necessarily occurring in an emancipation, and also when a master or father noxally surrendered a slave or son to an injured party to answer for an offense committed by the slave or son against that party. See EMANCIPATION; NOXAL ACTION (1).

“But if the patria potestas could be created, it could also be terminated, by an artificial process. . . . The father could not by a simple act of his own will release the son from his control. For this purpose he must sell him out of his own hands into that state of mancipium or qualified slavery of which we have spoken. Even then the father’s power was not destroyed; it was suspended during the existence of the mancipium, but if the mancipium ceased, if the son was set free by the person who held him in that condition, the father’s right revived. . . . It was not until he had sold him three times over, that he used up his right of control beyond the possibility of a revival. This, then, was the form by which the son was liberated from the patria potestas.” James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 126–27 (1881).

3. MANCIPATION (1).

M & A. abbr. Mergers and acquisitions. See MERGER.

mandamus (man-day-mas), n. [Latin “we command”] (16c) A writ issued by a court to compel performance of a particular act by a lower court or a governmental officer or body, usu. to correct a prior action or failure

mandator (man-day-tar or man-day-tar). (17c) 1. A person who delegates the performance of a mandate to another. 2. Civil law. The person who employs another (called a mandatary or mandatarius) in a gratuitous agency. See MANDATE (5). — Also termed mandant. 3. Bailor (1).

mandatory, adj. (15c) Of, relating to, or constituting a command; required; preemiptory.

“A provision in a statute is said to be mandatory when disobedience to it, or want of exact compliance with it, will make the act done under the statute absolutely void.” Henry Campbell Black, Handbook on the Construction and Interpretation of the Laws 334 (1896).

mandatory commitment. See COMMITMENT.

mandatory injunction. See INJUNCTION.

mandatory instruction. See JURY INSTRUCTION.

mandatory joinder. See compulsory joinder under JOINDER.

mandatory statute. See statute.

mandatory subject of bargaining. Labor law. A topic that is required by the National Labor Relations Act to be discussed in good faith by the parties during labor negotiations; an essential employment matter, including wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment, about which management and the union are required to negotiate in good faith, and that can lawfully form the basis of a collective bargaining impasse. 29 USCA § 158(d). — Often shortened to mandatory subject. Cf. permissive subject of bargaining. [Cases: Labor and Employment \( \equiv \) 1125.] mandatory trust. See TRUST.

mandatory waiver. The mandatory transfer, without judicial discretion, of a case from juvenile court to criminal court once the prosecutor has charged a juvenile with one of certain statutorily enumerated serious crimes. See TRANSFER STATUTE. Cf. STATUTORY EXCLUSION. [Cases: Infants \( \equiv \) 68.7.]

mandatum (man-day-tam). Roman & civil law. A bailment in which the bailee will, without recompense, perform some service relating to the goods; MANDATE mandavi ballivo (man-day-vi ba-lI-voh). [Law Latin "I have commanded the bailiff"] Hist. A sheriff's return stating that the sheriff ordered a bailiff to execute a writ.

man-endangering state of mind. See person-endangering state of mind.

manerium (ma-neer ee-am), n. [Law Latin, fr. Latin manere "to remain"] Hist. A manor.

The term manerium seems to have come in with the Conqueror, though other derivatives from the Latin verb manere, in particular mansa, mansio, monuncula has been freely employed by the scribes of the land-books. But these had as a rule been used as representatives of the English hide, and just for this reason they were incapable of expressing the notion that the Normans desired to express by the word manerium. In its origin that word is but one more name for a house. Throughout the Exeter Domesday the word mansio is used instead of the manerium of the Exchequer record, and even in the Exchequer record we may find these two terms used interchangeably . . . .

Frederic W. Maitland, Domesday Book and Beyond 108-09 (1921).

mangonare (mang-ga-nair-ee), vb. [fr. Latin mango "a dealer"] To buy in a market; to deal.

manhood. (13c) 1. A male person's majority. 2. Hist. A ceremony of a vassal paying homage to the vassal's lord. — Also termed homagium.

"Besides an oath of fealty, or profession of faith to the lord, which was the parent of our oath of allegiance, the vassal or tenant upon investiture did usually homage to his lord; openly and humbly kneeling, being ungirt, uncovered, and holding up his hands both together between those of the lord, who sate before him; and there professing that he did become his man, from that day forth, of life and limb and earthly honour;" and then he received a kiss from his lord. Which ceremony was denominated homagium, or manhood, by the feudists. 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 53 (1766).

man a po tut. See delirium tremens.

mania transitoria. Hist. Insanity of brief duration, experienced while committing a criminal act. • In a memorandum opinion, the Supreme Court used the term to mean emotional insanity. See Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 82 U.S. 580, 583-84 (1872). But other courts have applied the literal meaning (temporary insanity). See, e.g., Rush v. Megee, 36 Ind. 69 (1871). Cf. emotional insanity and temporary insanity under insanity.

manifest, n. (16c) A document listing the cargo or passengers carried on a ship, airplane, or other vehicle; esp., a shipping or warehousing document containing a list of the contents, value, origin, carrier, and destination of the goods. Cf. content.

manifestation of intention. (1826) Wills & estates. The external expression of the testator's intention, as distinguished from an undisclosed intention. — Also termed manifestation of intent.

manifestation theory. Insurance. The doctrine that coverage for an injury or disease falls to the policy in effect when the symptoms of the covered injury or disease first appear. Cf. exposure theory; actual-injury trigger; triple trigger. [Cases: Insurance C—2265.]

manifest-disregard doctrine. (1983) The principle that an arbitration award will be vacated if the arbitrator knows the applicable law and deliberately chooses to disregard it, but will not be vacated for a mere error or misunderstanding of the law. [Cases: Alternative Dispute Resolution C—329.]

manifest error. See error (2).

manifest-error-or-clearly-wrong rule. (1981) In some jurisdictions, the doctrine that an appellate court cannot set aside a trial court's finding of fact unless a review of the entire record reveals that the finding has no reasonable basis. [Cases: Appeal and Error C—999(1), 1008.1(5, 7).]

manifest injustice. A direct, obvious, and observable error in a trial court, such as a defendant's guilty plea that is involuntary or is based on a plea agreement that the prosecution has rescinded. [Cases: Criminal Law C—273.1(2), 274(3.1).] manifest intent. See intent (1).

manifest law. See lex manifesta.

manifest necessity. See necessity.

manifesto. (17c) A written statement publicly declaring the issuer's principles, policies, or intentions; esp., a formal document explaining why a state or nation declared war or took some other significant international action.

manifest thief. See fur manifestus.

manifest weight of the evidence. A deferential standard of review under which a verdict will be reversed or disregarded only if another outcome is obviously correct and the verdict is clearly unsupported by the evidence. Cf. weight of the evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law C—549; Evidence C—584.]

manipulation. Securities. (1888) The illegal practice of raising or lowering a security's price by creating the appearance of active trading. • Manipulation is prohibited by section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. 15 USC § 78j(b). — Also termed market manipulation; stock manipulation. [Cases: Securities Regulation C—60.25.]

mankind. See man (2).
Mann Act. A federal law, enacted originally in 1910, making it illegal to transport an individual in interstate or foreign commerce for prostitution or other criminal sexual activity. ● It is named its sponsor, Rep. James Robert Mann. 18 USCA § 2421-2424. — Also termed White Slave Traffic Act. [Cases: Prostitution C-15.]

manor and form. See modo et forma.

mannire (ma-ni-re), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To summon (an adverse party) to court; to prosecute (a case).

manor. (14c) 1. A feudal estate, usu. granted by the king to a lord or other high person and cultivated as a unit. ● In more ancient times, the lord’s manor included a village community, usu. composed of serfs. "To ask for a definition of a manor is to ask for what can not be given. We may however draw a picture of a typical manor, and, this done, we may discuss the deviations from this type .... "[W]e may regard the typical manor: (1) as being, quas vill, a unit of public law, of police and fiscal law, (2) as being a unit in the system of agriculture, (3) as being a unit in the management of property, (4) as being a jurisdictional unit. But we .... see that hardly one of these traits can be considered as absolutely essential. The most important is the connection between the manor and the vill .... " — 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 1596-97 (2d ed. 1898).

"The term [manor] applied, after the Norman conquest, to estates organized under knights, ecclesiastical corporations, or otherwise, and managed and cultivated as units. By the end of the 11th century, the main element was the feudal lord, and soon he came to be regarded as the owner of the manor, and to have authority over the tenants, and the right to hold a court for them .... In the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, a manor also implied a right of jurisdiction exercised through a court baron, attended by both freeholders and villein tenants .... In the eighteenth century the manorial court decayed rapidly, cases being generally brought in the King’s courts, the only surviving business being copyhold conveyancing." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 803 (1980).

reputed manor. A manor in which the lands not granted in tenancy but reserved for the lord’s own use (demesne lands) and services become absolutely separated. ● The manor is no longer a manor in actuality, only in reputation. — Also termed seigniory in gross.

2. A jurisdictional right over tenants of an estate, usu. exercised through a court baron. 3. Hist. In the United States, a tract of land occupied by tenants who pay rent to a proprietor. 4. A mansion on an estate.

manorial extent. Hist. A survey of a manor by a jury of tenants, giving the numbers and names of tenants, the size of their holdings, the kind of tenure, and the kind and amount of the tenants’ services.

manorial system. The medieval system of land ownership in which serfs and some freemen cultivated the soil of a manor in return for a lord’s protection. See MANOR (1).
is no suggestion that death, as contrasted with harm, was intended or foreseen. Though it is often confined to cases of assault and battery where death results, for example either from the withholding of food or from excessive chastisement of a child, some jurists say that it can be due to any unlawful and dangerous action causing death.” Alan R. White, Grounds of Liability 61–62 (1985).

manufacture, n. (16c) Patents. A thing that is made or built by a human being (or by a machine), as distinguished from something that is a product of nature; esp. any material form produced by a machine from an unshaped composition of matter. • Manufactures are one of the statutory categories of inventions that can be patented. Examples of manufactures are chairs and tires. 35 USCA § 101. — Also termed article of manufacture. Cf. MACHINE; PROCESS (3). [Cases: Patents = 13.

“Manufacture must have a definable structure that is claimed as its patentable characteristic. Manufactures are, after all, a category of product patents, and therefore must be ‘things,’ as opposed to ways or means. In summary, a patentable manufacture is any human-made structure that has inventive characteristics.” Arthur R. Miller & Michael H. Davis, Intellectual Property in a Nutshell 30 (2d ed. 1990).

manufactured diversity. See DIVERSITY OF CITIZENSHIP.

manufactured home. See HOME.

manufacturer. (17c) A person or entity engaged in producing or assembling new products. • A federal law has broadened the definition to include those who act for (or are controlled by) any such person or entity in... the distribution of new products, as well as those who import new products for resale. 42 USCA § 4902(6).

manufacturer’s liability. See PRODUCTS LIABILITY.

manu longa (man-yoo long-ga). See LONGA MANU.

manumission (man-yo-mish-an). n. [Latin manumissio “I send out of hand”] (15c) Roman law. The granting of freedom to a slave. • In the Republic and early Empire, there were three usual methods, all of which made the freed slave a citizen. These were (1) manumission vindicta (by the rod), a fictitious lawsuit in which a liberator touched the slave with a wand or rod in the presence of the praetor and alleged that he was free; (2) manumission censu, by which the slave’s name was enrolled in the census as a citizen; and (3) manumission testamento, by will. Under Justinian, a grant of freedom in any form (except in fraud of creditors) made the slave free and a citizen. — Also termed manumissio. [Cases: Slaves C–C22.]

manumission censu. The freeing of a slave by having the censor enter the slave’s name on the census roll, the slave professing to be a free man in the presence of the master. • Once the censor entered the slave’s name on the census roll, the slave became a free man and a citizen — by a simple stroke of the pen. — Also termed manumissio censu.

manumission sacrorum causa. The freeing of a slave by the master’s solemnly declaring that the slave was to be free while holding a limb of the slave and promising to pay a sum of money if the freedman later departs from the sacra (family rites). • The master then turned around and released the slave, who became free but was bound to perform the family rites. — Also termed manumissio sacrorum causa.

manumission testamento. The freeing of a slave by will in either of two ways: (1) the master’s granting the slave freedom outright in the will, or (2) the master’s imposing on an heir the obligation of freeing the slave, in which case the slave became the freedman of the heir. — Also termed manumissio testamento.

manumission vindicta. The ceremonial freeing of a slave whereby a third party, in the presence of the praetor, placed a rod (vindicta) on the slave while claiming that the slave was a freedman, whereupon the master admitted the slave’s freedom and the praetor then declared the slave to be free. • This ceremony was actually a fictitious action at law. — Also termed manumissio vindicta.

manumit (man-yo-mit), vb. To free (a slave). — manumitter, n.

manung (man-ung). Hist. An official’s jurisdictional district. — Also spelled monung. manuopus (man-yoo-oh-pas). See MAINOUR.

manupretium (man-yo-pree-sham). n. [Latin] Roman law. Wages for performed labor or services.

manu propria (man-yoo proh-pee-am). n. [Latin] Roman law. The granting of freedom to a slave by will. — Also termed manumissio.

manusable (ma-n-yoor-as-bal), adj. [Law French fr. Old French main “hand”] Hist. (Of a thing) capable of being held in hand; capable of being touched.

manure (ma-nyoor), vb. [Law French fr. Old French main “hand”] Hist. To use (something) manually; to perform manual labor on (something).

manus (may-nas), n. [Latin “hand”] 1. Roman law. The power exercised by the head of a family over all its members and slaves; esp. a husband’s power over his wife; marital subordination, which accompanied most marriages in early Rome. 2. Hist. A compurgator, or the oath taken. • This usage of manus may stem from the affiant’s placing a hand on the Bible while taking the oath. See COMPURGATOR.

manuscript. (16c) An unpublished writing; an author’s typescript or written work product that is proposed for publication.

manuscript policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

manus mortua (may-nas mor-choo-a). [Latin “dead hand”] See MORTMAIN.

Mapp hearing. (1971) Criminal procedure. A hearing held to determine whether evidence implicating the accused was obtained as the result of an illegal search and seizure, and should therefore be suppressed. Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S.Ct. 1684 (1961). [Cases: Criminal Law  1052.]

maquiladora (mah-kee-lah-doh-r-a), n. [fr. Spanish maquiladora “gristmill”] (1976) A Mexican corporation, esp. one that holds a permit to operate under a special customs regime that temporarily allows the corporation to import duty-free into Mexico various raw materials, equipment, machinery, replacement parts, and other items needed for the assembly or manufacture of finished goods for export. — Often shortened to maquila.

march-in rights. Patents. The government's right to step in and grant a new license or revoke an existing license if the owner of a federally funded invention (or the owner's licensee) has not adequately developed or applied the invention within a reasonable time. 35 USCA § 203. [Cases: Patents  1052.]

marchioness (mahr-sho-nis or mahr-sho-nes), n. [fr. Law Latin marchionissa, the feminine counterpart to marchio "marquess"] A female dignity, equivalent to a marquis, conferred by creation or by marriage with a marquis. See MARQUIS.

Marcus model. Labor law. A method for determining whether a union member's state-law claim against the employer is preempted by federal law, by focusing on whether the state-law claim can be maintained independently of an interpretation of the collective-bargaining agreement. In Lingle v. Norge Div. of Magic Chef, inc., 486 U.S. 399, 108 S.Ct. 1877 (1988), the Supreme Court held that a union member's state-law retaliatory-discharge claim was not preempted by the Labor-Management Relations Act because the claim could be resolved without interpreting the collective-bargaining agreement. There are at least two models for applying the Lingle test: the White model, which focuses on whether the claim is negotiable or nonnegotiable (that is, whether state law allows the claim to be waived by a private contract), and the Marcus model, which focuses on the independence of the claim in relation to the collective-bargaining agreement. Under the Marcus model, if the claim can be maintained separately from an interpretation of the collective-bargaining agreement, it is not preempted regardless of whether the claim is generally waivable in contract. The Marcus model is named for the author of the law-review note in which it was proposed. Stephanie R. Marcus, Note, The Need for a New Approach to Federal Preemption of Union Members' State Law Claims, 99 Yale L.J. 209 (1989). See LINGLE TEST. Cf. WHITE MODEL.

mare (mair-ee or mair-ee), n. Hist. [Latin] The sea. See SEA.

mariner. (14c) A person employed on a vessel in sea navigation; seaman. [Cases: Seamen 2.]
marine-rescue doctrine. The rule that when a person on a ship goes overboard, the ship must use all reasonable means to retrieve the person from the water if the person can be seen, and, if the person cannot be seen, must search for the person as long as it is reasonably possible that the person is still alive. [Cases: Seamen 29(1).]
maritime. See HYPOTHEC.

mariner's will. See soldier's will under will.

marine rule. The doctrine that if the cost of restoring damaged property would exceed one-half the value of the property before the damage, then the property is deemed to be totally destroyed. The marine rule developed in the context of applying marine insurance to damaged ships, but it has also been applied to other property, including buildings.

mariner's hypothec. See HYPOTHEC.

marine service. See MARITIME SERVICE.

maritagium (ma-ri-tay-je-am), n. [law Latin] Hist. 1. A lord's right to arrange a marriage for his infant ward; specif., the power of a feudal lord to give his infant ward or a vassal's heiress, minor heir, or widow in marriage, or to extract a fine from a vassal upon the vassal's marriage. 2. Hist. The income derived from fines paid by vassals for the lord's permission to marry. 3. Dower. 4. A marriage gift; dowry. See DOS. — Also termed (in sense 4) marriage.

"[While to the common lawyer does meant dower, in other systems it meant dowry; a gift to the wife, or to husband and wife, by the bride's parents or other relatives. In England this was called the 'marriage-gift' or maritagium. Marriage-gifts were commonly made either to establish a cadet branch of a family or to assist a daughter who was not an heiress to make a good match." — J. H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 310 (3d ed. 1990).

maritago(hubere (mar-a-tay-jee-am ha-beer-ee). [Law Latin] To have the right of arranging a woman's marriage. — This was a privilege granted by the Crown to favored subjects. See MARITAGIUM.

marital, adj. (17c) Of or relating to the marriage relationship <marital property>. [Cases: Divorce C=248; Husband and Wife C=1-354.]

marital agreement. (1866) An agreement between spouses or two people engaged to be married concerning the division and ownership of marital property during marriage or upon dissolution by death or divorce; esp. a premarital contract or separation agreement primarily concerned with dividing marital property in the event of divorce. — Also termed marriage settlement; property settlement. See PRENUP-TIAL AGREEMENT; POSTNUP-TIAL AGREEMENT. [Cases: Husband and Wife C=1-25(6).]

marital communications privilege. See marital privilege (1) under PRIVILEGE (3).

marital deduction. See deduction.

marital-deduction trust. See trust.

marital dissolution. See divorce.

marital estate. See marital property under property.

marital home. See FAMILY HOME.

marital immunity. See husband-wife immunity under IMMUNITY (2).

marital life-estate trust. See bypass trust under trust.

marital misconduct. Any of the various statutory grounds for a fault divorce, such as adultery or cruelty. See fault divorce under divorce. [Cases: Divorce C=12-38, 252.2.]

marital portion. 1. Civil law. The portion of a deceased spouse's estate to which the surviving spouse is entitled. 2. Louisiana law. The portion of a deceased spouse's estate to which the surviving spouse is entitled if the spouse died "rich in comparison with the surviving spouse." La. Civ. Code art. 2432. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C=52(1).]

marital-privacy doctrine. A principle that limits governmental intrusion into private family matters, such as those involving sexual relations between married persons. The marital-privacy doctrine was first recognized in Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 85 S.Ct. 1678 (1965). The doctrine formerly deterred state intervention into incidents involving domestic violence. Today, with the trend toward individual privacy rights, the doctrine does not discourage governmental protection from domestic violence. — Also termed doctrine of marital privacy. [Cases: Constitutional Law C=1247.] marital privilege. See PRIVILEGE (3).

marital property. See PROPERTY.

marital rape. See RAPE.

marital residence. See FAMILY HOME.

marital rights. (18c) Rights and incidents (such as property or cohabitation rights) arising from the marriage contract. [Cases: Husband and Wife C=1-25(6).]

marital settlement agreement. See divorce agreement.

marital status. The condition of being single, married, legally separated, divorced, or widowed.

marital tort. See TORT.

maritare (mar-<l-tair-ee), vb. Hist. To marry.

maritace (mar-a-tair-ece), vb. Hist. To marry.

maritima Angliae (ma-rit-a-mo ang-glee-ee). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. The seacoast. 2. The Crown's sea revenue, as from wreckage and from whales or sturgeons cast ashore. — The revenue was formerly collected by sheriffs and later by the Lord High Admiral.

maritime (mar-i-tim), adj. (16c) 1. Connected with or situated near the sea. 2. Of or relating to sea navigation or commerce.

"The word 'maritime' has in the Constitution its appropriate meaning, i.e., relating to the sea, and 'sea' is a word of wide extension and application . . . Its classical and scriptural equivalents are applied to all sorts of navigable waters. It is not restricted, even in common speech, to waters where the tide ebbs and flows, for the Baltic Sea, the Black Sea, the Sea of Azof, the Sea of Marmora, the Mediterranean Sea, the great scenes of early maritime enterprise, have no visible tide." 1 Steven F. Friedell, Benedict on Admiralty § 103, at 7-5 (7th ed. 1996).

Maritime Administration. A unit in the U.S. Department of Transportation responsible for subsidizing certain costs of operating ships under the U.S. flag; constructing or supervising the construction of merchant-type ships for the U.S. government; administering the War Risk Insurance Program; and operating the Merchant Marine Academy, which trains merchant-marine officers. — Abbr. MARAD. [Cases: Shipping C=3, 14.]

maritime belt. See territorial waters under water.

Maritime Commission. See federal maritime commission.

maritime-connection doctrine. See locality-plus test.

maritime contract. See contract.

maritime court. See admiralty (1).

maritime employment. Under the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, a job that is related to the loading, unloading, construction, or repair of a vessel. 33 USC § 902(3). [Cases: Workers' Compensation C=260, 262.]

maritime flavor. The relation of a given case to shipping concerns. • This is a factor used in determining federal admiralty jurisdiction over a particular matter by analyzing whether the matter sufficiently relates to marine and shipping concerns and whether there is need for a federal response. [Cases: Admiralty C=10(2), 18.]

"There is perhaps no more elusive concept in the law of admiralty than 'maritime flavor.'... While 'maritime flavor' is incapable of precise definition, certain observations may be helpful. Generally, courts find 'maritime flavor' in those events and transactions which are major concerns of the shipping industry. This is tempered by the realization that exercise of federal control will not necessarily promote maritime shipping with the same vigor as control by a coastal or predominantly maritime state. Since federal law will not necessarily be more favorable, courts may find 'maritime flavor' only when there is a perceived need for a uniform national rule, which can only be provided by the federal sovereign." Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 23 (2d ed. 1988).

maritime interest. Interest charged on a loan secured by a sea vessel or its cargo, or both. • Because of the lender's considerable risk, the interest rate may be extraordinarily high. — Also termed marine interest.

maritime jurisdiction. See admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.

maritime law. The body of law governing marine commerce and navigation, the carriage at sea of persons and property, and marine affairs in general; the rules governing contract, tort, and workers'-compensation claims or relating to commerce on or over water. — Also termed admiralty; admiralty law; sea law. Cf. general maritime law; law of the sea. [Cases: Admiralty C=1.5.] maritime lien. See lien.

maritime loan. See loan.

maritime peril. A danger or risk arising from navigating or being at sea. [Cases: Salvage C=5.]

maritime service. Maritime law. Work performed in connection with a ship or commerce on navigable waters, such as service to preserve a ship's crew, cargo, or equipment. — Also termed marine service. [Cases: Admiralty C=13.]

maritime state. Hist. The collective officers and mariners of the British navy.

maritime tort. See tort.

maritus (ma-ri-tas), n. [Latin] A husband; a married man.

mark, n. (bef. 12c) 1. A symbol, impression, or feature on something, usu. to identify it or distinguish it from something else. 2. trademark (1). 3. servemark.

benchmark. See benchmark.

certification mark. See certification trademark under trademark.

collective mark. See collective trademark under trade­mark.

markdown. A reduction in a selling price.

marked money. (1883) Money that bears a telltale mark so that the money can be traced, usu. to a perpetrator of a crime, as when marked money is given to a kidnapper as ransom.

market, n. (bef. 12c) 1. A place of commercial activity in which goods or services are bought and sold <the farmers’ market>. — Also termed mart. 2. A geographic area or demographic segment considered as a place of demand for particular goods or services; esp. prospective purchasers of goods, wherever they are <the foreign market for microchips>. 3. Hist. The privilege of having a public market. 4. The opportunity for buying and selling goods or services; the extent of economic demand . 5. A securities or commodities exchange <the stock market closed early because of the blizzard>. [Cases: Exchanges C=1-10.10.]. 6. The business of such an exchange; the enterprise of buying and selling securities or commodities <the stock market is approaching an all-time high>. [Cases: Exchanges C=1-13.10.]. 7. The price at which the buyer and seller of a security or commodity agree <the market for wheat is $8 per bushel>. [Cases: Exchanges C=13.] advancing market. See bull market.

aftermarket. See secondary market.

auction market. A market (such as the New York Stock Exchange) in which securities are bought and sold by competitive bidding through brokers. Cf. negotiated market.

bear market. A securities market characterized by falling prices over a prolonged period. — Also termed down market; receding market.
black market. An illegal market for goods that are controlled or prohibited by the government, such as the underground market for prescription drugs.
bull market. A securities market characterized by rising prices over a prolonged period. — Also termed advancing market; strong market.
buyer's market. A market in which supply significantly exceeds demand, resulting in lower prices. capital market. A securities market in which stocks and bonds with long-term maturities are traded. See financial market.
common market. An economic association formed by several nations to reduce or eliminate trade barriers among them, and to establish uniform trade barriers against nonmembers; esp. (usu. cap.), European Union. currency market. See foreign-exchange market. derivative market. A market for the exchange of derivative instruments. — Also termed paper market. See derivative.
discount market. The portion of the money market in which banks and other financial institutions trade commercial paper.
down market. See bear market.
financial market. A market for the exchange of capital and debt instruments. See capital market; money market. foreign-exchange market. A market where various currencies are traded internationally. ● Foreign-exchange markets take the form of spot, futures, and options markets. — Also termed currency market. See futures market; spot market.
forward market. See futures market.
free market. See open market.
Friday market. The normal tendency for stock prices to decline on Fridays. ● The tendency occurs because many investors balance their accounts before the weekend to avoid any adverse changes in market prices over the weekend.
futures market. A commodity exchange in which futures contracts are traded; a market for a trade (e.g., commodities futures contracts and stock options) that is negotiated at the current price but calls for delivery at a future time. — Also termed forward market. See Futures Contract. [Cases: Commodity Futures Trading Regulation § 6.]
geographic market. Antitrust. The part of a relevant market that identifies the regions in which a firm might compete. ● If a firm can raise prices or cut production without causing a quick influx of supply to the area from outside sources, that firm is operating in a distinct geographic market. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation § 558.]
  "For purposes of [the Sherman Act], the relevant geographic market comprises the area in which the defendant effectively competes with other individuals or businesses for distribution of the relevant product. Stated differently, the relevant geographic market consists of the area from which the sellers of a particular product derive their customers, and the area within which the purchasers of the product can practically seek the product." 54 Am. Jur. 2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 57, at 119-20 (1996).

gray market. A market in which the seller uses legal but sometimes unethical methods to avoid a manufacturer's distribution chain and thereby sell goods (esp. imported goods) at prices lower than those envisioned by the manufacturer. See parallel imports.
  "One of the most controversial areas of customs law concerns 'gray market goods,' goods produced abroad with authorization and payment but which are imported into unauthorized markets. Trade in gray market goods has increased dramatically in recent years, in part because fluctuating currency exchange rates create opportunities to import and sell such goods at a discount rate from local price levels." Ralph H. Folsom & Michael W. Gordon, International Business Transactions § 20.8 (1995).
institutional market. The demand among large investors and corporations for short-term funds and commercial paper. market overt. An open, legally regulated public market where buyers, with some exceptions, acquire good title to products regardless of any defects in the seller's title. Cf. fair. [Cases: Sales § 234(2).]
money market. The financial market for dealing in short-term negotiable instruments such as commercial paper, certificates of deposit, banker's acceptances, and U.S. Treasury securities. See financial market. negotiated market. A market (such as an over-the-counter securities market) in which buyers and sellers seek each other out and negotiate prices. Cf. auction market.
open market. A market in which any buyer or seller may trade and in which prices and product availability are determined by free competition. — Also termed free market.
original market. See primary market.
over-the-counter market. See over-the-counter market.
paper market. See derivative market.
primary market. The market for goods or services that are newly available for buying and selling; esp. the securities market in which new securities are issued by corporations to raise capital. — Also termed original market.
product market. Antitrust. The part of a relevant market that applies to a firm's particular product by identifying all reasonable substitutes for the product and by determining whether these substitutes limit the firm's ability to affect prices. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation § 557.]
  "For purposes of an antitrust claim under ... the Sherman Act, the relevant product market includes those services or commodities which are reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes. In order to establish marketable. adj. (16c) Of commercially acceptable quality; fit for sale and in demand by buyers. — Also termed merchantable. [Cases: Sales ☞ 272.]

marketable-product rule. Oil & gas. For royalty-calculation purposes, the doctrine that "production" occurs when oil or gas is pumped up, stored, and made marketable through processing. • Until producing a marketable product, the lessee bears all costs of capturing and handling oil and gas. Cf. CAPTURE-AND-HOLD RULE.

marketable security. See security.

marketable-title act. (1957) A state statute providing that a person can establish good title to land by searching the public records only back to a specified time (such as 40 years). See marketable title under title (2). [Cases: Limitation of Actions ☞ 19(1); Vendor and Purchaser ☞ 231(1).]

market activity. See MARKET VOLUME.

market approach. (1958) A method of appraising real property, by surveying the market and comparing the property to similar pieces of property that have been recently sold, and making appropriate adjustments for differences between the properties, including location, size of the property, and the dates of sale. — Also termed comparative-sales approach; market-comparison approach; market-data approach; market-comparables analysis; comparable-sales approach; comparables analysis. Cf. COST APPROACH; INCOME APPROACH.

market average. A price level for a specific group of stocks.

market-comparables analysis. See MARKET APPROACH.

market-comparison approach. See MARKET APPROACH.

market correction. See DOWN REVERSAL.

market-data approach. See MARKET APPROACH.

market equity. The percentage of the total market value that a particular company’s securities account for, represented by each class of security. Cf. BOOK EQUITY.

marketing, n. (16c) 1. The act or process of promoting and selling, leasing, or licensing products or services. 2. The part of a business concerned with meeting customers’ needs. 3. The area of study concerned with the promotion and selling of products or services.

marketing contract. See CONTRACT.

marketing covenant. Oil & gas. In a mineral lease, the implied promise that the lessee will market the production from the lease within a reasonable time and at a reasonable price. See REASONABLY-PRUDENT-OPERATOR STANDARD. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ☞ 78.1(8).]

marketing defect. See DEFECT.

market intermediary. Securities. A person whose business is to enter into transactions on both sides of the market. Investment Company Act, 15 USCA § 80a-3(c)(2)(B)(i).

market-maker. Securities. One who helps establish a market for securities by reporting bid-and-asked quotations. • A market-maker is typically a specialist permitted to act as a dealer, a dealer acting in the capacity of block positioner, or a dealer who, with respect to a security, routinely enters quotations in an interdealer communication system or otherwise and is willing to buy and sell securities for the dealer's own account. [Cases: Securities Regulation \(\bowtie 53.17(3)\).]

market-making, n. The practice of establishing prices for over-the-counter securities by reporting bid-and-asked quotations. • A broker-dealer engaged in this practice, which is regulated by both the NASD and the SEC, buys and sells securities as a principal for its own account, and thus accepts two-way bids (both to buy and to sell). See BID AND ASKED. [Cases: Securities Regulation \(\bowtie 53.17(3)\).]

market manipulation. See MANIPULATION.

market order. See ORDER (8).

market-out clause. Oil & gas. A contract provision permitting a pipeline-purchaser of natural gas to lower the purchase price if market conditions make it uneconomical to continue buying at the contract price, and permitting the well owner to respond by accepting the lower price or by rejecting it and canceling the contract. • Market-out clauses often refer to competing fuels such as fuel oil. — Also termed economic-out clause. [Cases: Gas \(\bowtie 13(1)\).]

market-participant doctrine. (1983) The principle that, under the Commerce Clause, a state does not discriminate against interstate commerce by acting as a buyer or seller in the market, by operating a proprietary enterprise, or by subsidizing private business. • Under the Dormant Commerce Clause principle, the Commerce Clause — art. I, § 8, cl. 3 of the U.S. Constitution — disallows most state regulation of, or discrimination against, interstate commerce. But if the state is participating in the market instead of regulating it, the Dormant Commerce Clause analysis does not apply, and the state activity will generally stand. See Dormant Commerce Clause under COMMERCE CLAUSE. [Cases: Commerce \(\bowtie 56\).]

marketplace of ideas. (1949) A forum in which expressions of opinion can freely compete for acceptance without governmental restraint. • Although Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes was the first jurist to discuss the concept as a metaphor for explaining freedom of speech, the phrase marketplace of ideas dates in American caselaw only from 1954.

market power. (1915) The ability to reduce output and raise prices above the competitive level — specific, above marginal cost — for a sustained period, and to make a profit by doing so. • In antitrust law, a large amount of market power may constitute monopoly power. See MONOPOLIZATION. Cf. MARKET SHARE.

"In economic terms, market power is the ability to raise prices without a total loss of sales, without market power, consumers shop around to find a rival offering a better deal." 54 Am. Jur. 2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 49, at 110 n.87 (1996).

market price. See PRICE.

market quotation. See QUOTATION.

market-recovery program. See JOB-TARGETING PROGRAM.

market share. (1954) The percentage of the market for a product that a firm supplies, usu. calculated by dividing the firm's output by the total market output. • In antitrust law, market share is used to measure a firm's market power, and if the share is high enough — generally 70% or more — then the firm may be guilty of monopolization. See MONOPOLIZATION. Cf. MARKET POWER. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation \(\bowtie 553\).]

market-share theory. Antitrust. 1. A method of determining damages for lost profits by calculating the impact of the defendant's violation on the plaintiff's output or market share. Cf. BEFORE-AND-AFTER THEORY; YARDSTICK THEORY. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation \(\bowtie 553\).] 2. Patents. A theory of lost-profits remedy offered when the patentee and the infringer share the market with a noninfringing competitor. • Using this method, the court assumes that the percentage of the market that the patentee holds is the same as the percentage of the infringer's market that the patentee would have captured but for the infringement.

market stand-off agreement. Securities. A provision in a stock-purchase contract in which the stockholder promises not to sell or otherwise transfer any securities during a specified period after the corporation makes a public stock offering. Cf. LOCKUP AGREEMENT.

market structure. The broad organizational characteristics of a particular market, including seller concentration, product differentiation, and barriers to entry.

market trend. See TREND.

market value. See fair market value under VALUE (2).

market value at the well. Oil & gas. The value of oil or gas at the place where it is sold, minus the reasonable cost of transporting it and processing it to make it marketable.

market volume. 1. The total number of shares traded on one day on a stock exchange. 2. The total number of shares of one stock traded on one day. — Also termed market activity.

Mark Hopkins doctrine. The principle that when an employee leaves a job because of a labor dispute, any later employment the employee has must be bona fide and intended as permanent for the employee to avoid a labor-dispute disqualification from unemployment benefits if the employee leaves the later job. Mark Hopkins, Inc. v. Employment Comm'n, 151 P.2d 229 (Cal. 1944). [Cases: Unemployment Compensation \(\bowtie 172\).]

marking estoppel. See ESTOPPEL.

Markman hearing. (1996) Patents. A hearing at which the court receives evidence and argument concerning the construction to be given to terms in a patent.
Markush. See MARKUSH GROUP. [Cases: Patents C-101(7).]

markmoot (mahrk-moot), n. Hist. An early English or Scottish court that held hearings on a territorial border (i.e., a march or mark) between counties, hundreds, or countries. — Also spelled markmote.

markon. An amount (usu. expressed as a percentage) initially added to a product's cost to obtain the list price.

• Further increases or decreases in price are called markups or markdowns, respectively.

marksman. 1. A person who signs documents with some kind of character or symbol instead of writing his or her name. [Cases: Signatures C-5] 2. A highly skilled shooter.

Marks rule. The doctrine that, when the U.S. Supreme Court issues a fractured, plurality opinion, the opinion of the justices concurring in the judgment on the narrowest grounds — that is, the legal standard with which a majority of the Court would agree — is considered the Court's holding. Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 97 S.Ct. 990 (1977). [Cases: Courts C-90(2).]

mark-to-market accounting method. See fair-value accounting method under ACCOUNTING METHOD.

mark up, vb. (1868) 1. To increase (the price of goods, etc.) 2. To revise or amend (a legislative bill, a rule, etc.). 3. To place (a case) on the trial calendar.

markup, n. (1916) 1. An amount added to an item's cost to determine its selling price. See PROFIT MARGIN. 2. A session of a congressional committee during which a bill is revised and put into final form before it is reported to the appropriate house. [Cases: United States C-23(3).]

Markush claim. See PATENT CLAIM.

Markush doctrine (mahr-kash). Patents. An exception to the policy against the use of alternative language in claims, by which in certain claims (esp. those involving chemical components) a claimant can use an alternative, subgeneric phrase when there is no applicable, commonly accepted generic expression. • Characterized by a phrase such as "selected from the group consisting of," the claim includes a group of substances any one of which could serve the same function in the process. The term Markush comes from Dr. Eugene A. Markush, who was granted a dye-preparation patent in 1923. Ex parte Markush, 1925 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 126. See MARKUSH GROUP. [Cases: Patents C-101(7).]

"The Patent Office early adopted a policy against use of alternative language in claims, thus, a claimant could not use the specific alternative phrase 'glass or plastic' but could use a generic phrase (such as 'impervious transparent material') that would cover effectively the desired alternatives. The Markush doctrine developed as an exception . . . With chemical compounds there may be no suitable phrase to cover the alternatives. Under limited circumstances a claimant could use an artificial or coined subgeneric group in the form of 'material selected from the group consisting of X, Y, and Z.'" 2 Donald S. Chisum, Patents § 8.06(2), at 8-119 to 8-120 (1992).

Markush group. Patents. A limited form of generic claim that recites an element, states the element is a member of a group, and names the other group members, any of which could substitute for the first recited element.

• All Markush group members must have at least one common property that is mainly responsible for their function in the claimed relationship. Although each material in the group is different, each must be able to serve the same function. See MARKUSH DOCTRINE. [Cases: Patents C-101(7).]

marque (mahrk). Archaic. Reprisal. See LETTERS OF MARQUE.

marque, law of. Archaic. A reprisal entitling one who has been wronged and is unable to receive ordinary justice to take the goods of the wrongdoer (if they can be found within one's own precinct) in satisfaction for the wrong. See LETTERS OF MARQUE.

marquis (mahr-kwis or mahr-kee). (14c) An English nobleman below and next in order to a duke. — Also termed marquess.

marquise (mahr-kwi-sit or -zit), n. [law latin] Hist. The seigniory of a marquis.

marriage, n. (13c) 1. The legal union of a couple as spouses. • The essentials of a valid marriage are (1) parties legally capable of contracting to marry, (2) mutual consent or agreement, and (3) an actual contracting in the form prescribed by law. Marriage has important consequences in many areas of the law, such as torts, criminal law, evidence, debtor-creditor relations, property, and contracts. — Also termed matri­mony; conjugal union. [Cases: Marriage C-1.12.]

"It has frequently been said by courts, and even by Legislatures, that marriage is a 'civil contract.' But to conclude from these statements that marriage . . . has all, or even many, of the incidents of an ordinary private contract, would be a grave error. In fact, these statements to the effect that marriage is a 'civil contract' will be found, upon examination, to have been used only for the purpose of expressing the idea that marriage, in the American states, is a civil, and not a religious institution, or that . . . in some states mutual consent alone without formal celebrate­tion is sufficient to constitute a valid marriage known as a common law marriage, or that, as is true in all states, the mutual consent of the parties is essential, even in the case of a ceremonial marriage." Joseph W. Madden, Handbook of the Law of Persons and Domestic Relations §§ 1-3, at 2-3 (1931).

attempted marriage. See void marriage.

clandestine marriage (klan-des-tin). 1. A marriage that rests merely on the agreement of the parties. 2. A marriage entered into in a secret way, as one solemnized by an unauthorized person or without all required formalities. See Fleet marriage. [Cases: Marriage C-20(1).]
common-law marriage. (17c) A marriage that takes legal effect, without license or ceremony, when two people capable of marrying live together as husband and wife, intend to be married, and hold themselves out to others as a married couple. ● The common-law marriage traces its roots to the English ecclesiastical courts, which until 1753 recognized a kind of informal marriage known as sponsalia per verba de praesenti, which was entered into without ceremony. Today a common-law marriage, which is the full equivalent of a ceremonial marriage, is authorized in 11 states and in the District of Columbia. If a common-law marriage is established in a state that recognizes such marriages, other states, even those that do not authorize common-law marriage, must give full faith and credit to the marriage. A common-law marriage can be dissolved only by annulment, divorce, or death. — Also termed consensual marriage; informal marriage. See common-law husband under husband; common-law wife under wife. See per verba de futuro cum copula; sponsalia per verba de praesenti. [Cases: Marriage <13, 22.]

confidential marriage. In some jurisdictions (such as California), a marriage between a man and a woman in which only the two parties and the officiant are present at the ceremony. ● Confidential marriages are neither witnessed nor recorded in public records. They are recorded in nonpublic records. Although rarely performed, they are generally legal. To obtain a confidential marriage, the parties must each be at least 18, must be of the opposite sex, and usu. must have lived together for an extended period. In ecclesiastical law, such a marriage is termed an occult marriage or, if performed in the strictest secrecy, a marriage of conscience.

“A few states provide for confidential marriages. This allows parties to go through all the formalities but have the records of the marriage, including the license, remain confidential. . . . A key practical effect of confidential marriage is to allow parties who have been living as husband and wife in a jurisdiction that does not recognize informal marriages to achieve marital status without publicity. However, it does not relate back to the time when the parties started holding themselves out as a married couple and thus it can have consequences in determining the extent of marital or community property or various other rights.” Walter Wadlington & Raymond C. O’Brien, Family Law in Perspective 26 (2001).

consensual marriage. Marriage by consent alone, without any formal process. See common-law marriage. [Cases: Marriage <18.]

consular marriage. A marriage solemnized in a foreign country by a consul or diplomatic official of the United States. ● Consular marriages are recognized in some jurisdictions. [Cases: Marriage <27.]

coovenant marriage. (1900) A special type of marriage in which the parties agree to more stringent requirements for marriage and divorce than are otherwise imposed by state law for ordinary marriages. ● In the late 1990s, several states (beginning with Louisiana: see Acts 1997, No. 1380, § 5) passed laws providing for covenant marriages. The requirements vary, but most of these laws require couples who opt for covenant marriage to undergo premarital counseling. A divorce will be granted only after the couple has undergone marital counseling and has been separated for a specified period (usu. at least 18 months). The divorce prerequisites typically can be waived with proof that a spouse has committed adultery, been convicted of a felony, abandoned the family for at least one year, or physically or sexually abused the other spouse or a child. — Also termed (in slang) high-test marriage.

cross-marriage. A marriage by a brother and sister to two people who are also brother and sister.

dead marriage. A marriage whose substance has disintegrated; a marriage that has irretrievably broken down. [Cases: Divorce <12.]

de facto marriage (di fak-toh). A marriage that, despite the parties’ living as husband and wife, is defective for some reason. [Cases: Marriage <12.]

defunct marriage. A marriage in which both parties, by their conduct, indicate their intent to no longer be married. [Cases: Divorce <12.]

Fleet marriage. Hist. 1. A clandestine ceremonial marriage performed in the 17th or 18th century in the Fleet prison in London by a chaplain who had been imprisoned for debt. 2. A clandestine ceremonial marriage performed by an unscrupulous itinerant clergyman in the area in London near the Fleet Prison. ● Parliament attempted to stop the practice, but it was not until the statute of 26 George 2, ch. 33, declaring marriages performed outside public chapels or churches to be void and punishable as a felony, that the practice ceased.

fraudulent marriage. A marriage based on a misrepresentation regarding some issue of fundamental importance to the innocent party, who relies on the misrepresentation in the decision to marry. ● The misrepresentation must concern something of fundamental importance to a marriage, such as religious beliefs, the ability to have sexual relations, or the ability or desire to have children. Cf. sham marriage. [Cases: Divorce <34.]

green-card marriage. Slang. A sham marriage in which a U.S. citizen marries a foreign citizen for the sole purpose of allowing the foreign citizen to become a permanent U.S. resident. ● The Marriage Fraud Amendments were enacted to regulate marriages entered into for the purpose of circumventing U.S. immigration laws. 8 USCA §§ 1154 (h), 1255(e). See sham marriage.

Gretna-Green marriage. A marriage entered into in a jurisdiction other than where the parties reside to avoid some legal impediment that exists where they live; a runaway marriage. ● Gretna Green, a Scottish village close to the English border, served as a convenient place for eloping English couples to wed since in Scots law parties over 16 did not need parental consent.
handfast marriage. 1. Hist. A marriage, often lacking only solemnization by clergy, characterized by the couple's joining of hands to conclude a marriage contract. 2. Hist. A betrothal with all the binding effects of a marriage, including conjugal rights and cohabitation, followed by a later formal ceremony. 3. A trial or probationary marriage wherein the couple agrees to cohabit and behave as spouses for a definite period, usu. one year, at the end of which they will mutually decide to separate or go through a permanently binding marriage. • The legal status of such a marriage is unsettled, as many such trial marriages are initiated with a ritual ceremony including an exchange of vows before a presiding officer legally empowered to perform marriages, yet the couple intends to remain free to end the relationship without legal proceedings. Cf. marriage in jest; common-law marriage. 4. A binding form of marriage practiced by some modern pagan religions. • Unlike in sense 3, such marriages are entered into with the expectation of permanent duration. — Also termed (in senses 3 and 4) handfasting.

high-test marriage. See covenant marriage.

homosexual marriage. See same-sex marriage.

informal marriage. See common-law marriage.

in-marriage. Marriage between relatives; in-breeding.

left-handed marriage. See morganatic marriage.

limited-purpose marriage. A marriage in which the parties agree to be married only for certain reasons. • An example is a marriage in which the parties agree to marry so that a child will not be born illegitimate but agree not to live together or to have any duties toward each other. Courts have usu. found these marriages to be binding for all purposes. Cf. sham marriage; green card-marriage.

marriage by habit and repute. Scots law. An irregular marriage created by cohabitation that implies a mutual agreement to be married. • This type of marriage is still recognized in Scotland. See Scotch marriage. [Cases: Marriage C:20(2).]

marriage per verba de futuro subsequeuente copula. Scots law. Hist. An irregular marriage created by a promise to marry in the future followed by an act of sexual intercourse. • Originally medieval canon law, this type of marriage was recognized in Scotland until 1940. See Scotch marriage. [Cases: Marriage C:20(2).]

marriage per verba praesenti. Scots law. An irregular marriage created at the time of a mutual agreement to be married. • Originally medieval canon law, this type of marriage was recognized in Scotland until 1940. See Scotch marriage. [Cases: Marriage C:20(2).]

mixed marriage. See miscegenation.

morganatic marriage (mor-ga-nat-ik). Hist. A marriage between a man of superior status to a woman of inferior status, with the stipulation that the wife and her children have no claims to the husband's title or possessions. • By extension, the term later referred to the marriage of a woman of superior status to a man of inferior status. The concept is now limited to royal marriages. — Also termed left-handed marriage; marriage of the left hand; salic marriage.

occult marriage. Eccles. law. See confidential marriage.

plural marriage. (1862) A marriage in which one spouse is already married to someone else; a bigamous or polygamous union; POLYGAMY. [Cases: Bigamy C:1; Marriage C:11.]

putative marriage (pyoo-ta-tiv). A marriage in which either the husband or the wife believes in good faith that the two are married, but for some technical reason they are not formally married (as when the ceremonial official was not authorized to perform a marriage). • A putative marriage is typically treated as valid to protect the innocent spouse. The concept of a putative marriage was adopted from the Napoleonic Code in those states having a civil-law tradition, such as California, Louisiana, and Texas. This type of marriage is also recognized in the Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act. The legal rule by which putative marriages exist is sometimes referred to as the putative-spouse doctrine. — Also termed putative matrimony. [Cases: Marriage C:54(1).]

same-sex marriage. The ceremonial union of two people of the same sex; a marriage or marriage-like relationship between two women or two men. • The United States government and most American states do not recognize same-sex marriages, even if legally contracted in other countries such as Canada, so couples usually do not acquire the legal status of spouses. But in some states same-sex couples have successfully challenged the laws against same-sex marriage on constitutional grounds. See Goodridge v. Dept. of Pub. Health, 798 N.E.2d 941 (Mass. 2003). Cf. Baehr v. Lewin, 852 P.2d 44 (Haw. 1993); Baehr v. Miike, 994 P.2d 566 (Haw. 1999); Baker v. State, 744 A.2d 864.
Scotch marriage. Scots law. A marriage by consensual contract, without the necessity of a formal ceremony. • Until 1940, Scots law retained the medieval canon-law forms of marriage per verba de praesenti and per verba de futuro subsequente copulâ. These promises constituted irregular but valid marriages. Scots law still retains the irregular marriage by cohabitation with habit and repute. No ceremony needs to be proved but, after the death of one spouse, the surviving spouse or any child can obtain a court’s confirmation that a marriage existed, based on the general belief of neighbors, friends, and family. [Cases: Marriage C=>20(1).] sham marriage. (18c) A purported marriage in which all the formal requirements are met or seemingly met, but in which the parties go through the ceremony with no intent of living together as husband and wife. Cf. green-card marriage; fraudulent marriage; limited-purpose marriage. [Cases: Aliens, Immigration, and Citizenship C=>264, 428.]

voidable marriage. (1845) A marriage that is initially invalid but that remains in effect unless terminated by court order. • For example, a marriage is voidable if either party is underage or otherwise legally incompetent, or if one party used fraud, duress, or force to induce the other party to enter the marriage. The legal imperfection in such a marriage can be inquired into only during the lives of both spouses, in a proceeding to obtain a judgment declaring it void. A voidable marriage can be ratified once the impediment to a legal marriage has been removed. [Cases: Marriage C=>37, 54(1), 56.]

void marriage. (17c) A marriage that is invalid from its inception, that cannot be made valid, and that can be terminated by either party without obtaining a divorce or annulment. • For example, a marriage is void if the parties are too closely related or if either party is already married. A void marriage does not exist, has never existed, and needs no formal act to be dissolved — although a judicial declaration may be obtained. — Also termed attempted marriage. See nullity of marriage (1). [Cases: Marriage C=>53–54.]

2. Roman law. A consensual agreement between a man and a woman to be married. • The consent of both parties and of any paterfamilias was necessary. Other requirements were the attainment of puberty and legal capacity (conubium). If either or both withdrew consent to be married, the marriage ended in divorce; no specific grounds were necessary. In the Christian empire, divorce without adequate grounds was penalized. 3. marriage ceremony. — marital, adj.

ceremonial marriage. (1876) A wedding that follows all the statutory requirements and that has been solemnized before a religious or civil official. [Cases: Marriage C=>23–32.]

civil marriage. (17c) A wedding ceremony conducted by an official, such as a judge, or by some other authorized person — as distinguished from one solemnized by a member of the clergy. [Cases: Marriage C=>27.]

double-proxy marriage. A wedding in which both parties to a marriage are absent but represented by stand-ins. • Only Montana allows this type of marriage.

proxy marriage. (1924) A wedding in which someone stands in for an absent bride or groom, as when one party is stationed overseas in the military. • Proxy marriages are prohibited in most states. [Cases: Marriage C=>23.]

marriage article. (1831) A premarital stipulation between spouses who intend to incorporate the stipulation in a postnuptial agreement. [Cases: Husband and Wife C=>29.]

marriage bonus. Tax. The difference between the reduced income-tax liability owed by a married couple filing a joint income-tax return and the greater amount they would have owed had they been single and filed individually. — Also termed singles' penalty. Cf. marriage penalty.

marriage broker. One who arranges a marriage in exchange for consideration. • A marriage broker may be subject to criminal liability.

marriage-brokerage contract. An agreement under which a person, acting for compensation, procures someone for a marriage. • Traditionally, these contracts have been void as being against public policy. [Cases: Contracts C=>111.]

marriage ceremony. (17c) The religious or civil proceeding that solemnizes a marriage. — Sometimes shortened to marriage. — Also termed wedding.

marriage certificate. (1821) A document that is executed by the religious or civil official presiding at a marriage ceremony and filed with a public authority (usu. the county clerk) as evidence of the marriage. • Also termed certificate of marriage. Cf. marriage license. [Cases: Marriage C=>31.]

marriage contract. See contract.

marriage license. (17c) A document, issued by a public authority, that grants a couple permission to marry. Cf. marriage certificate. [Cases: Marriage C=>25(2).]

marriage mill. A place that facilitates hasty, often secret, marriages by requiring few or no legal formalities. • Marriage-mill unions may be voidable but are rarely void in the absence of absolute impediments to marriage.

marriage penalty. Tax. The difference between the greater income-tax liability owed by a married couple filing a joint income-tax return and the lesser amount they would owe had they been single and filed individually. • A marriage penalty exists whenever a married couple is treated disadvantageously under a tax code in comparison with an unmarried couple. Cf. MARRIAGE BONUS.

marriage portion. See Dowry.

marriage promise. See promise.

marriage records. Government or church records containing information on prospective couples (such as a woman's maiden name and address) and on wedding services performed. [Cases: Marriage ⊆ 32.]

marriage settlement. 1. See Marital Agreement. 2. See prenuptial agreement.

married woman's separate estate in equity. Hist. At common law, a trust that a rich family could set up for a daughter so that she would not lose control of her own money and property to her husband. • The daughter could escape the severe limits of coverture by having her family establish a separate estate in equity, allowing her the benefit of income that was not controlled by her husband even if the husband was named as trustee. See coverture; married women's property acts. [Cases: Husband and Wife ⊆ 110.]

married women's property acts. (sometimes cap.) Statutes enacted to remove a married woman's legal disabilities; esp. statutes that abolished the common-law prohibitions against a married woman's contracting, suing and being sued, or acquiring, holding, and conveying property in her own right, free from any restrictions by her husband. • In addition, these acts abolished the spousal-unity doctrine. In actual usage, the term almost always appears in the plural form (acts, not act), except when referring to a particular statute. — Also termed married women's acts; married woman's property acts; married woman's acts; emancipation acts; married women's emancipation acts. See merger doctrine of husband and wife; legal-unities doctrine. [Cases: Husband and Wife ⊆ 111.]

"The women's rights movement existed throughout the nineteenth century. It succeeded in partially reducing the legal disabilities of married women during the second half of that century by bringing about the enactment in all states of Married Women's Property Acts. The purpose of these Acts was to place married women on an equal footing with their husbands with respect to contracts, earnings, the ownership of property and the right to sue or be sued, but as they were construed by the courts they frequently failed to accomplish the intended reforms." Homer H. Clark Jr. & Ann Laquer Estin, Domestic Relations: Cases and Problems 8 (6th ed. 2000).

martial law (mahr-shal). (1933) 1. The law by which during wartime the army, instead of civil authority, governs the country because of a perceived need for military security or public safety. • The military assumes control purportedly until civil authority can be restored. 2. A body of firm, strictly enforced rules that are imposed because of a perception by the country's rulers that civil government has failed, or might fail, to function. • Martial law is usu. imposed when the rulers foresee an invasion, insurrection, economic collapse, or other breakdown of the rulers' desired social order. [Cases: War and National Emergency ⊆ 31.]

"Martial law is the public law of necessity. Necessity calls it forth, necessity justifies its exercise, and neces­sity measures the extent and degree to which it may be employed. That necessity is no formal, artificial, legalistic concept but an actual and factual one: it is the necessity of taking action to safeguard the state against insurrection, riot, disorder, or public calamity. What constitutes necessity is a question of fact in each case." Frederick B. Wiener, A Practical Manual of Martial Law 16 (1940).

"Martial law is nothing more and nothing less than an application of the common law doctrine that force, to whatever degree necessary, may be used to repress illegal force. Martial law is the public right of self-defense against a danger threatening the order or the existence of the state. Where the ordinary civil authorities — the police — are unable to resist or subdue a disturbance, additional force, military in nature, may be applied. The extent of military force used depends in each instance upon the extent of the disturbance." Id. at 16-17.

absolute martial law. The carrying on of government functions entirely by military agencies, as a result of which the authority of civil agencies is superseded. [Cases: War and National Emergency \(\Rightarrow\) 31.]

qualified martial law. The carrying on of government functions partly by military agencies, as a result of which the authority of some civil agencies is superseded. [Cases: War and National Emergency \(\Rightarrow\) 31.]

Mary Carter agreement. (1972) A contract (usu. a secret one) by which one or more, but not all, codefendants settle with the plaintiff and obtain a release, along with a provision granting them a portion of any recovery from the nonparticipating codefendants. • In a Mary Carter agreement, the participating codefendants agree to remain parties to the lawsuit and, if no recovery is awarded against the nonparticipating codefendants, to pay the plaintiff a settled amount. Such an agreement is void as against public policy in some states but is valid in others if disclosed to the jury. Booth v. Mary Carter Paint Co., 202 So. 2d 8 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1967). Cf. Gallagher Agreement. [Cases: Compromise and Settlement \(\Rightarrow\) 100.]

mast. 1. Military law. A Navy disciplinary proceeding at which the commanding officer of a unit considers minor offenses charged against enlisted personnel. • The charges may be dismissed, the accused person may receive a punishment prescribed by military law, or the matter may be referred to a court-martial. The proceeding is not officially a trial, and no conviction or acquittal results. Traditionally, when a ship’s captain disciplines crew members at sea, the hearing is held and the discipline announced (and sometimes carried out) at the ship’s mainmast or at the mast. Depending on the rank of the presiding officer, it may be also termed a captain’s mast, admiral’s mast, or (for an admiral) flag mast. [Cases: Armed Services \(\Rightarrow\) 39.] 2. On board a ship, the usual place of assembly for a court hearing, public sale, etc. • On sailing ships, the place is the mainmast. On all other vessels, the captain designates a place as the “mast.” Cf. (in sense 2) MAST SELLING.

McCarran Act. A federal law requiring, among other things, members of the Communist party to register with the Attorney General and requiring Communist organizations to provide the government with a list of its members. • The Act was passed in 1950, during the Cold War. Over the years, the U.S. Supreme Court declared various portions of the Act unconstitutional, McCarran–Ferguson Act. Insurance. A federal law allowing a state to regulate insurance companies doing business in that state, and also to levy a tax on them. 15 USCA §§ 1011–1015. [Cases: Insurance ▼–> 1100.]

McClanahan presumption. The presumption that the states do not have jurisdiction to tax members of a Native American tribe who live or work on tribal land. • The presumption is not limited to tribal members who live or work on a formal reservation. Instead, it includes those who live or work on informal reservations, in dependent tribal communities, and on tribal allotments. McClanahan v. Arizona Tax Comm’n, 411 U.S. 164, 93 S.Ct. 1257 (1973). [Cases: Taxation ▼–> 2273, 3412, 3612.]

McDonnell Douglas test. Employment law. The principle for applying a shifting burden of proof in employment-discrimination cases, essentially requiring the plaintiff to come forward with evidence of discrimination and the defendant to come forward with evidence showing that the employment action complained of was taken for nondiscriminatory reasons. • Under this test, the plaintiff must first establish a prima facie case of discrimination, as by showing that the plaintiff is a member of a protected group and suffered an adverse employment action. If the plaintiff satisfies that burden, then the defendant must articulate a legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for the employment action complained of. If the defendant satisfies that burden, then the plaintiff must prove that the defendant's stated reason is a pretext for discrimination and that discrimination was the real reason for the employment action. McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792, 93 S.Ct. 1817 (1973). Cf. burden-shifting analysis. [Cases: Civil Rights ▼–> 1118, 1536.]

McNabb–Mallory rule. Criminal procedure. The doctrine that a confession is inadmissible if obtained during an unreasonably long detention period between arrest and a preliminary hearing. • Because of the broader protections afforded under the Miranda rule, the McNabb–Mallory rule is rarely applied in modern cases. McNabb v. United States, 318 U.S. 332, 63 S.Ct. 608 (1943); Mallory v. United States, 354 U.S. 449, 77 S.Ct. 1356 (1957). — Often shortened to Mallory rule. [Cases: Criminal Law ▼–> 519(8).]

McNaughten rules (mik–nawt–en). (1917) Criminal law. The doctrine that a person is not criminally responsible for an act when a mental disability prevented the person from knowing either (1) the nature and quality of the act or (2) whether the act was right or wrong. • The federal courts and most states have adopted this test in some form. McNaughten’s Case, 8 Eng. Rep. 718 (H.L. 1843). — Also spelled McNaughten rules; M’Naghten rules; M’Naughten rules. — Also termed right-and­wrong test; right­-wrong test. See INSANITY DEFENSE. [Cases: Criminal Law ▼–> 48; Homicide ▼–> 817.]

"Four points stand out and should be understood whenever reference to M’Naughten is made other than in regard to procedure. (1) It applies only in case of 'a defect of reason, from disease of the mind' and without this the following do not apply except that 'disease' as so used will be interpreted to include congenital defect or traumatic injury. (2) If, because of this 'defect of reason,' the defendant did not know what he was doing he is not guilty of crime. (3) Even if the defendant knew what he was doing he is not guilty of crime if, because of this 'defect of reason,' he did not know he was doing wrong. (4) If the defendant acted under an insane delusion, and was not otherwise insane, his accountability to the criminal law is the same as if the facts were as they seemed to him to be." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 959–60 (3d ed. 1982).

meeting, n. (14c) Parliamentary law. The gathering of people to discuss or act on matters in which they have a common interest; esp. the convening of a deliberative assembly to transact business. • A deliberative assembly’s meeting begins with a call to order and continues until the assembly adjourns. See call to order under CALL (1); ADJOURN (2). Cf. SESSION. — meet, vb.

“The distinction should be noted between the assembly (that is, the body of people who assemble) and the meeting (which is the event of their being assembled to transact business).” Henry M. Robert, Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised § 1, at 2 (10th ed. 2000).

adjourned meeting. 1. See continued meeting. 2. A meeting that has adjourned. • These two senses are opposite in meaning, so the term “continued meeting” is preferable for sense 1.

annual meeting. A yearly meeting to elect or install officers or directors and to conduct other routine organizational business. • An organization’s governing documents usu. specify the time and place of such a meeting. [Cases: Corporations C=>193.]

business meeting. A formal meeting called for considering business, as opposed to a purely educational or social event. • A business meeting may fall within a program that also includes social and informational events. See PROGRAM (1).

called meeting. See special meeting.

continued meeting. A meeting that will be or has been resumed after a recess (or a so-called adjournment, which may last for several days but is still technically a recess, since it does not end the meeting). • A continued meeting is technically not an “adjourned meeting,” and an “adjourned meeting” may also mean a meeting that has adjourned, so the term “continued meeting” is preferable. — Also loosely termed adjourned meeting. See RECESS (2).

creditors’ meeting. Bankruptcy. The first meeting of a debtor’s creditors and equity security holders, presided over by the U.S. Trustee and at which a bankruptcy trustee may be elected and the debtor may be examined under oath. 11 USCA § 341. — Also termed meeting of creditors; 341 meeting; first meeting of creditors. organizational meeting. 1. A mass meeting that establishes a permanent or ongoing organization. 2. A meeting that begins an ongoing organization’s proceedings under its regular order, such as adopting governing documents and electing officers, usu. following a mass meeting and an interval when the organization operates under provisional officers while its governing documents are drafted. • If the organizational meeting is for a corporation and the articles of incorporation name the initial directors, the directors hold the meeting. Otherwise, the incorporator holds the meeting. [Cases: Corporations C=>24.] 3. The first meeting after a dissolution, at which a newly reconstituted deliberative assembly — such as a legislative body or a convention whose members are assuming the seats to which they have been elected or re-elected for a new term — elects officers, adopts rules, and otherwise organizes for the new session.

regular meeting. A periodic meeting held at a time set in an organization’s governing documents or under a standing rule or schedule that the deliberative assembly has adopted. — Also termed stated meeting. Cf. special meeting.

special meeting. A meeting that is not a regular meeting; a meeting called for a particular purpose, usu. between regular meetings. — Also termed called meeting. Cf. regular meeting. [Cases: Corporations C=>194, 298(3).] stated meeting. See regular meeting.

341 meeting. See creditors’ meeting.

meeting-competition defense. Antitrust. A defense to a charge of price discrimination whereby the defendant shows that the lower price was a good-faith attempt to match what it believed to be a competitor’s equally low offer.

meeting of creditors. See creditors’ meeting under MEETING.

meeting of the minds. (1830) Contracts. Actual assent by both parties to the formation of a contract, meaning that they agree on the same terms, conditions, and subject matter. • This was required under the traditional subjective theory of assent, but modern contract doctrine requires only objective manifestations of assent. — Also termed mutuality of assent; aggregatio mentium; assensio mentium. See mutual assent, under assent. [Cases: Contracts 2-15.]

megapolis (meg-ə-lōp-ə-lis). A heavily populated, continuous urban area that is one vast city or composed of several cities and towns.

Megan's law (mēn or mān-ganz). (1994) A statute that requires sex offenders who are released from prison to register with a local board and that provides the means to disseminate information about the registrants to the community in which they dwell. • Although many of these statutes were enacted in the late 1980s, they took their popular name from Megan Kanka of New Jersey, a seven-year-old who in 1994 was raped and murdered by a twice-convicted sex offender who lived across the street from her house. All states have these laws, but only some require community notification (as by publishing offenders’ pictures in local newspapers); in others, people must call a state hotline or submit names of persons they suspect. The federal version of Megan's law may be found at 42 USCA § 14071. — Also termed registration and community-notification law; community-notification law. Cf. Jacob Wetterling Crimes Against Children and Sexually Violent Offender Registration Act. [Cases: Mental Health 2-5, 452, 469.]

melius inquirendum (mē-lee-as in-kwə-ren-dam), n. [Law Latin “to be better inquired into”] Hist. A writ ordering the escheator to investigate a matter further, as by inquiring who is the next heir of a party who died seised of lands.

Melson formula. Family law. A method of calculating a noncustodial parent’s child-support obligation to ensure that (1) neither parent falls below the poverty level in meeting child-support obligations, and (2) a child of a wealthier noncustodial parent shares in that parent’s higher standard of living. • Named for Judge Elwood F. Melson of Delaware Family Court, the formula has been adopted in several states, such as Delaware, Hawaii, Montana, and West Virginia. The formula works as follows. A self-support reserve is first deducted from the parent-obligor’s net income. Next, a primary support amount per child is calculated at an established subsistence level, added to actual work-related child-care expenses, and allocated between the parents. After deducting the support obligor's self-support reserve and pro rata share of the child’s adjusted primary support amount, a percentage of the obligor’s remaining income is allocated to additional child support as a cost-of-living adjustment. Total child support is determined by adding together the noncustodial parent’s share of primary support and the standard-of-living allowance. [Cases: Child Support 2-89, 90, 146.]

member. (14c) 1. Parliamentary law. “This clause was first introduced into the English marine-insurance policies about the year 1749. Before that time the insurer was liable for every injury, however small, that happened to the thing insured. . . . The memorandum clause . . . usually declares that the enumerated articles, and any other articles that are perishable in their own nature, shall be free from average under a given rate, unless general, or the ship be stranded. In consequence of this exception, all small partial losses, however inconsiderable, are to be borne by a general average, provided they were incurred in a case proper for such an average . . . .” 3 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law 294–95 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

memorandum decision. See memorandum opinion under opinion (1).

memorandum in error. A document alleging a factual error, usu. accompanied by an affidavit of proof.

memorandum of alteration. English law. A memo providing a written statement of facts presented to a legislature or an administrative body. — Also termed memorial; note. See memorandum in error. [Cases: Records C=17.] 2. A written statement of facts presented to a legislature or an administrative body. — Also termed memorial; note. See memorandum in error. [Cases: Records C=17.]

memorandum of association. English law. A legal document setting up a corporation — either with or without limited liability — and including the company’s name, purpose, and duration. See articles of incorporation.

memorandum of intent. See letter of intent.

memorandum opinion. See opinion (1).

memorial, n. (17c) 1. An abstract of a legal record, esp. a deed; memorandum (1). [Cases: Records C=1.] 2. A written statement of facts presented to a legislature or an administrative body — either with or without limited liability — and including the company’s name, purpose, and duration. See articles of incorporation.

menacing, adj. (14c) 1. 1. An attempt to commit common-law assault. • The term is used esp. in jurisdictions that have defined assault to include battery. See assault. [Cases: Assault and Battery C=61; Extortion and Threats C=251.] 2. A lie; falsehood. — mendacious (men-day-shus), adj.

mendacity (men-das-a-tee), n. (16c) 1. The quality of being untruthful. 2. A lie; falsehood. — mendacious (men-day-shus), adj.

mend-the-hold doctrine. The principle that a nonperforming party’s defense in a breach-of-contract action must be raised before the close of evidence. • A minority of courts limit a defendant to the first defense raised after litigation begins, unless the defendant can show a good-faith basis for a new defense. Most courts allow the defendant to raise several defenses as long as each defense is based on the reason given for nonper­formance when the breach occurred. The term comes from 19-century wrestling jargon, "mend the hold" meaning "get a better grip on your opponent." [Cases: Estoppel C — 68(2).]

men of straw. Hist. False witnesses who wandered around courts and were paid to give untrue testimony. • They stuffed straw into their shoes so that advocates could recognize them. See STRAW MAN (4).

mens (menz), n. [Latin] Mind; intention; will.

mensa. See MANAGIUM.

mensa et thoro (men-so et thor-oh). [Latin] Bed and board. See A MENSA ET THORO; divorce a mensa et thoro under DIVORCE.

mensalia (men-say-lee-a), n. [fr. Latin mensa “a table”] Parsonages; spiritual livings. — Also termed mensal benefices.

mensis (men-sis), n. [Latin] Roman law. A month.

mens legis (menz lee-iis), [Latin “the mind of the law”] The spirit or purpose of a law.

mens legatoris (menz le-i-is-la-tor-is), [Latin “the intention of the lawmaker”] Legislative intent.

mensor (men-sor), n. [fr. Latin metiri “to measure”] Roman law. A measurer of land; a surveyor.

mens rea (menz re-ee-a). [Law Latin “guilty mind”] (1861) The state of mind that the prosecution, to secure a conviction, must prove that a defendant had when committing a crime; criminal intent or recklessness <the mens rea for theft is the intent to deprive the rightful owner of the property>. • Mens rea is the second of two essential elements of every crime at common law, the other being the actus reus. — Also termed mental element; criminal intent; guilty mind. Pl. mentes reae (men-teez ree-e). Cf.actus reus. [Cases: Criminal Law C—20.]

“There are only two states of mind which constitute mens rea, and they are intention, and recklessness.” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny’s Outlines of Criminal Law 29-30 (16th ed. 1952).

“Most English lawyers would however now agree with Sir James Fitzjames Stephen that the expression mens rea is unfortunate, though too firmly established to be expelled, just because it misleadingly suggests that, in general, moral culpability is essential to a crime, and they would assent to the criticism expressed by a later judge that the true translation of mens rea is “an intention to do the act which is made made penal by statute or by the common law.” [Allard v. Selfridge, (1925) 1 K.B. at 137 (per Shearman, J.).] H.L.A. Hart, “Legal Responsibility and Excuses,” in Punishment and Responsibility 28, 36 (1968).

“Some years ago the mens-rea doctrine was criticized on the ground that the Latin phrase is ‘misleading.’ If the words ‘mens rea’ were to be regarded as self-explanatory they would be open to this objection, but they are to be considered merely as a convenient label which may be attached to any psychical fact sufficient for criminal guilt (in connection with socially harmful conduct). This includes a field too complex for any brief self-explanatory phrase, and since it is important to have some sort of dialectical shorthand to express the idea, this time honored label will do as well as any.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 826-27 (3d ed. 1982).

mensularius (men-sa-lair-ee-as), n. [fr. Latin mensa “a table”] Roman law. A dealer in money; a money-changer; a banker.

“Thus, under king Richard I, in his parliament holden at Westminster, A.D. 1197, it was ordained that there shall be only one weight and one measure throughout the kingdom, and that the custody of the assise or standard of weights and measures shall be committed to certain persons in every city and borough . . . . In king John’s time this ordinance of king Richard was frequently dispensed with for money which occasioned a provision to be made for enforcing it . . . . These original standards were called pondus regis, and mensura domini regis, and are directed by a variety of subsequent statutes to be kept in the exchequer, and all weights and measures to be made conformable thereto.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 265-66 (1765).

mercatum (mar-kay-tam), n. [Law Latin] A market; a contract of sale; a bargain.

mercedary (mar-sa-der-e), n. [Latin] An employer; one who hires.

mercenary (mar-sa-ner-e). (14c) Int'l law. A professional soldier hired by someone other than his or her own government to fight in a foreign country.

mercenlage (mar-san-law), [fr. Saxon myrcnalag] The law of the Mercians. • This was one of the three principal legal systems prevailing in England at the beginning of the 11th century. It was observed in many midland counties and those bordering on Wales. — Also spelled merchenlage (mar-shan-law). — Also termed lex merciorum (leks mar-she-er-or-am); Mercian law (mar-she-an or mar-shan). See DANELAW; WEST SAXON LAW.

merces (mar-seez), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. An agreed payment for a thing or services specifically contracted for; rent, hire.

"There must be consent, a thing let, and an agreed payment (merces) . . . . The merces must be certain and Justinian's texts say that, as in sale, it must be money. But there is not the same difficulty here, and Gaius does not state such a rule. It is possible that it did not exist in classical law and, even under Justinian, some cases cannot be reconciled with the rule. The rent of land might be in produce and even a fraction of the crop. This last conflicts with the rule of Gaius that it must be certain; it is held by some writers that the text is interpolated, by others that the relation was not really locatio conductio, but societas (partnership). The merces was not usually a lump sum: more often it was a series of periodical payments." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 289-90 (2d ed. 1939).

merchandise (mar-chan-diz. also -diz). (13c) 1. In general, a movable object involved in trade or traffic; that which is passed from one person to another by purchase and sale. 2. In particular, that which is dealt in by merchants; an article of trading or the class of objects in which trade is carried on by physical transfer; collectively, mercantile goods, wares or commodities, or any subjects of regular trade, animate as well as inanimate. • This definition generally excludes real estate, ships, intangibles such as software, and the like, and does not apply to money, stocks, bonds, notes, or other mere representatives or measures of actual commodities or values. — Also termed (in senses 1 and 2) article of merchandise. 3. Purchase and sale; trade; traffic, dealing, or advantage from dealing.

merchandise broker. See broker.

Merchandise Marks Acts. Hist. An 1887 statute (50 & 51 Vict., ch. 28) making it a misdemeanor to fraudulently mark merchandise for sale or to sell merchandise so marked. • This statute was repealed in 1968.

merchant. (13c) One whose business is buying and selling goods for profit; esp. a person or entity that holds itself out as having expertise peculiar to the goods in which it deals and is therefore held by the law to a higher standard of expertise than that of a nonmerchant. • Because the term relates solely to goods, a supplier of services is not considered a merchant. [Cases: Sales C2715.1]

"The definition of 'merchant' in [UCC] Section 2-104(1) identifies two separate but often interrelated criteria: Does the seller 'deal in goods' of that kind, or does the seller 'otherwise by his occupation' hold himself out as having special knowledge with respect to the goods? It should be emphasized that the drafters have placed these two criteria in the alternative by use of the word 'or.' Thus, the definition clearly catches all those who regularly sell inventory even though they may have no expertise regarding the particular product. This would include distributors, wholesalers, and retailers. Dealers who sell packaged goods containing a defect over which they have no control might be surprised to learn that they have given an implied warranty of merchantability with respect to the goods, but such is the law." Barkley Clark & Christopher Smith, The Law of Product Warranties § 5.02[1], at 5-25 (1984).

mercantile (mar-chant-a-bal), adj. (15c) Fit for sale in the usual course of trade at the usual selling prices; MARKETABLE. — Also termed salable. See implied warranty of merchantability under warranty (2). [Cases: Sales C272.] — merchantability, n.

mercantile title. See marketable title under TITLE (2).

merchant appraiser. An expert appointed by a customs officer to reexamine and revalue imported goods for customs purposes. • The appraiser is usu. an experienced merchant who deals in or has dealt in goods of the character and quality of those at issue. An appraiser is appointed only when an importer requests one. [Cases: Customs Duties \( \Box \equiv 59 \)].

merchant exception. (1973) Contracts. In a sale of goods, an exemption from the statute of frauds whereby a contract between merchants is enforceable if, within a reasonable time after they reach an oral agreement, a written confirmation of the terms is sent, to which the recipient does not object within ten days of receiving it. • The only effect of failing to object to the written confirmation is that the recipient will be precluded from relying on the statute of frauds — or the lack of a formal, written agreement — as a defense to a breach-of-contract claim. The party seeking to enforce an agreement must still prove that an agreement was reached. UCC § 2-201. [Cases: Frauds, Statute of \( \Box \equiv 127 \).]

merchantman. Archaic. A vessel employed in foreign or interstate commerce or in the merchant service.

merchant’s accounts. Current, mutual accounts between merchants showing debits and credits for merchandise.

merchant’s defense. (1972) The principle that a store owner will not be held liable for reasonably detaining a suspected shoplifter, to facilitate an investigation by a law-enforcement officer, if probable cause exists to suspect the detained person of wrongfully removing merchandise from the store. [Cases: False Imprisonment \( \Box \equiv 11, 13 \).]

merchant’s firm offer. See irrevocable offer under offer.

Merchant Shipping Acts. English statutes to improve shipping conditions by, among other things, vesting the supervision of merchant shipping in the board of trade.

merchet (mar-chet). See MARCHET.

merchantum. See MARCHET.

merciamment (mar-see-a-mant). Archaic. See AMEREMENT.

Mercian law. See MERCENLAGE.

Mercosur. A common market of South American nations created to facilitate free trade among members. • The entity was created by the Treaty of Asunción in 1991. The charter nations were Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay, and Uruguay. — Also termed Southern Common Market.

mercy. (13c) Compassionate treatment, as of criminal offenders or of those in distress; esp. imprisonment, rather than death, imposed as punishment for capital murder. See clemency.

mercy killing. See EUTHANASIA.

mercy rule. (1981) Evidence. The principle that a defendant is entitled to offer character evidence as a defense to a criminal charge. • This type of evidence is often offered by the defendant’s friends and relatives. Fed. R. Evid. 404(a)(1). [Cases: Criminal Law \( \Box \equiv 377 \).]

mere (mair or met). n. [Law French] Mother, as in the phrase en ventre sa mere (“in its mother’s womb”).

mere-continuation doctrine. A principle under which a successor corporation will be held liable for the acts of a predecessor corporation, if only one corporation remains after the transfer of assets, and both corporations share an identity of stock, shareholders, and directors. — Also termed continuity-of-entity doctrine. Cf. SUBSTANTIAL-CONTINUITY DOCTRINE. [Cases: Corporations \( \Box \equiv 445.1 \).]

mere-evidence rule. Criminal procedure. The former doctrine that a search warrant allows seizure of the instrumentalities of the crime (such as a murder weapon) or the fruits of the crime (such as stolen goods), but does not permit the seizure of items that have evidentiary value only (such as incriminating documents). • The Supreme Court has abolished this rule, and today warrants may be issued to search for and seize all evidence of a crime. Warden v. Hayden, 387 U.S. 294, 87 S.Ct. 1642 (1967); Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(b). [Cases: Searches and Seizures \( \Box \equiv 102 \).]

mere license. See bare license under LICENSE.

mere licensee. See bare licensee under LICENSE.

mere motu. See EX MERE MOTU.

mere right. An abstract right in property, without possession or even the right of possession. — Also termed jus merum; merum jus; meer dreit. “The mere right of property, the jus proprietatis, without either possession or even the right of possession. This is frequently spoken of in our books under the name of the mere right, jus merum; and the estate of the owner is in such cases said to be totally devested, and put to a right. A person in this situation may have the true ultimate property of the lands in himself, but by the intervention of certain circumstances, either by his own negligence, the solemn act of his ancestor, or the determination of a court of justice, the presumptive evidence of that right is strongly in favour of his antagonist, who has thereby obtained the absolute right of possession . . . . The heir therefore in this case has only a mere right, and must be strictly held to the proof of it, in order to recover the lands.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 197-98 (1766).

merestone (meer-stohn). Archaic. A stone that marks land boundaries. — Also spelled nearstone.

meretricious (mer-a-trish-as). adj. (17c) 1. Involving prostitution . 2. (Of a romantic relationship) involving either unlawful sexual connection or lack of capacity on the part of one party . 3. Superficially attractive but fake nonetheless; alluring by false show <meretricious advertising claims>. 4. (Of goods, etc.) cheap and unscrupulous in manufacture or quality <meretricious copy>. meretricious relationship. Archaic. A stable, marriage-like relationship in which the parties cohabit knowing that a lawful marriage between them does not exist. [Cases: Marriage 54(1).]

mergee (mar-jee). A participant in a corporate merger.

merger. (18c) 1. The act or an instance of combining or uniting. 2. Contracts. The substitution of a superior form of contract for an inferior form, as when a written contract supersedes all oral agreements and prior understandings. See integration (2). [Cases: Contracts 245.]

“Where two parties have made a simple contract for any purpose, and afterwards have entered into an identical engagement by deed, the simple contract is merged in the deed and becomes extinct. This extinction of a lesser in a higher security, like the extinction of a lesser in a greater interest in lands, is called merger.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 85 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

3. Contracts. The replacement of a contractual duty by a duty to compensate with a new duty between the same parties, based on different operative facts, for the same performance or for a performance differing only in liquidating a duty that was previously unliquidated. 4. Property. The absorption of a lesser estate into a greater estate when both become the same person’s property. Cf. surrender (3). [Cases: Estates in Property 10.]

“[It] would be absurd to allow a person to have two distinct estates, immediately expectant on each other, while one of them includes the time of both . . . . There would be an absolute incompatibility in a person filling, at the same time, the characters of tenant and reversioner in one and the same estate; and hence the reasonableness, and even necessity, of the doctrine of merger.” 3 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *99 (George Cornstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

5. Criminal law. The absorption of a lesser included offense into a more serious offense when a person is charged with both crimes, so that the person is not subject to double jeopardy. ● For example, a defendant cannot be convicted of both attempt (or solicitation) and the completed crime — though merger does not apply to conspiracy and the completed crime. — Also termed merger of offenses. [Cases: Criminal Law 30.]

6. Civil procedure. The effect of a judgment for the plaintiff, which absorbs any claim that was the subject of the lawsuit into the judgment, so that the plaintiff’s rights are confined to enforcing the judgment. Cf. bar (3). [Cases: Judgment 582.]

7. The joining of the procedural aspects of law and equity. 8. The absorption of one organization (esp. a corporation) that ceases to exist into another that retains its own name and identity and acquires the assets and liabilities of the former. ● Corporate mergers must conform to statutory formalities andusu. must be approved by a majority of the outstanding shares. — Also termed corporate merger. Cf. consolidation (4); buyout. [Cases: Corporations 581.]

cash merger. A merger in which shareholders of the target company must accept cash for their shares. — Also termed cash-out merger; freeze-out merger. [Cases: Corporations 584.]

conglomerate merger. A merger between unrelated businesses that are neither competitors nor customers or suppliers of each other. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation 769.]

“A merger which is neither vertical nor horizontal is a conglomerate merger. A pure conglomerate merger is one in which there are no economic relationships between the acquiring and the acquired firm. Mixed conglomerate mergers involve horizontal or vertical relationships, such as the acquisition of a firm producing the same product as the acquirer but selling it in a different geographical market, which is not a horizontal merger because the merging companies are not competitors . . . .” 54 Am. Jur. 2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 169, at 226 (1996).

de facto merger (di fak-toh). A transaction that has the economic effect of a statutory merger but that is cast in the form of an acquisition or sale of assets or voting stock. ● Although such a transaction does not meet the statutory requirements for a merger, a court will generally treat it as a statutory merger for purposes of the appraisal remedy. [Cases: Corporations 445.1.]

downstream merger. A merger of a parent corporation into its subsidiary.

forward triangular merger. See triangular merger.

freeze-out merger. See cash merger.

horizontal merger. A merger between two or more businesses that are on the same market level because they manufacture similar products in the same geographic region; a merger of direct competitors. — Also termed horizontal integration.

product-extension merger. A merger in which the products of the acquired company are complementary to those of the acquiring company and may be produced with similar facilities, marketed through the same channels, and advertised by the same media.

reverse triangular merger. A merger in which the acquiring corporation’s subsidiary is absorbed into the target corporation, which becomes a new subsidiary of the acquiring corporation. — Also termed reverse subsidiary merger.

short-form merger. A statutory merger that is less expensive and time-consuming than an ordinary statutory merger, usu. permitted when a subsidiary merges into a parent that already owns most of the subsidiary’s shares. ● Such a merger is generally accomplished when the parent adopts a merger resolution, mails a copy of the plan to the subsidiary’s record shareholders, and files the executed articles of merger with the secretary of state, who issues a certificate of merger. statutory merger. A merger provided by and conducted according to statutory requirements.

stock merger. A merger involving one company’s purchase of another company’s capital stock.

triangular merger. A merger in which the target corporation is absorbed into the acquiring corporation’s subsidiary, with the target’s shareholders receiving stock in the parent corporation. — Also termed subsidiary merger; forward triangular merger.

upstream merger. A merger of a subsidiary corporation into its parent.

vertical merger. A merger between businesses occupying different levels of operation for the same product, such as between a manufacturer and a retailer; a merger of buyer and seller.

merger of rights and duties in the same person, between the parties (often a marital agreement incident blending of the rights of a creditor and debtor, resulting in the extinguishment of the creditor’s right to collect the debt. • As originally developed in Roman law, a merger resulted from the marriage of a debtor and creditor, or when a debtor became the creditor’s heir. — Also termed confusion; confusion of debts; confusion of rights. Cf. confusion of titles. 10. The absorption of a contract into a court order, so that an agreement between the parties (often a marital agreement incident to a divorce or separation) loses its separate identity as an enforceable contract when it is incorporated into a court order.

merger clause. See integration clause.

merger doctrine. 1. Copyright. The principle that since an idea cannot be copyrighted, neither can an expression that must inevitably be used in order to express the idea. • When the idea and expression are very difficult to separate, they are said to merge. For example, courts have refused copyright protection for business-ledger forms (Baker v. Selden, 101 U.S. 99 (1879), and for contest rules that were copied almost verbatim (Morrissette v. Procter & Gamble, 379 F.2d 675 (1st Cir. 1967)). — Also termed Baker v. Selden doctrine. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property C≈4.5.] 2. Hist. Family law. The common-law principle that, upon marriage, the husband and wife combined to form one legal entity. — Often shortened to merger; merger doctrine. See spousal-unity doctrine; legal-unities doctrine.

merger of offenses. See merger (5).

metadata. Secondary data that organize, manage, and facilitate the use and understanding of primary data. • Metadata are evaluated when conducting and responding to electronic discovery. If privileged documents or final versions of computer files may contain metadata, they might be “scrubbed” before release. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2)(B). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C:=>1581.]

metalaw (met-a-law). (1956) A hypothetical set of legal principles based on the rules of existing legal systems and designed to provide a framework of agreement for these different systems.

"[T]he Constitution controls the deployment of governmental power and defines the rules for how such power may be structured and applied. The Constitution, therefore, is not a body of rules about ordinary private actions, but a collection of rules about the rules and uses of law: in a word, metalaw." Laurence H. Tribe, Constitutional Choices 246 (1985).

metallum (ma-tal-am), n. Roman law. 1. Metal; a mine. 2. Labor in the mines as punishment for a crime. • This was one of the most severe punishments short of death.

Midsummer Day. See migratory corporation. See CORPORATION. migration. (18c) Movement (of people or animals) from midway. See THALWEG.

Midshipman. (17c) A naval cadet; a student at the U.S. Naval Academy. [Cases: Armed Services C=16.]

Midsummer Day. See quarter day under day.

Midway. See thalweg.

Midwest Piping rule. Labor law. The doctrine that an employer may not recognize multiple unions during a period in which there are conflicting claims of representation. Midwest Piping & Supply Co., 63 NLRB Dec. (CCH) 1060 (1945).

migrant worker. 1. Int'l law. A person who works seasonally as an agricultural laborer in a foreign country, esp. in agricultural labor. [Cases: Labor and Employment C=2700.] 2. A person who works seasonally as a laborer in a different part of his or her own country.

migration. (17c) Movement (of people or animals) from one country or region to another.

migratory corporation. See corporation.

migratory divorce. See divorce.

Mike O'Connor rule. Labor law. The doctrine that unilateral changes that an employer makes after a union victory in an initial-representation election — but before the employer’s objections have been resolved — are automatic violations of the National Labor Relations Act if the employer’s objections are rejected. • If the employer’s objections are sustained, any failure-to-bargain charge will be dismissed because the employer had no duty to bargain. But if the employer’s objections are rejected, the employer is considered to have been under a duty to bargain as of the date of the election, which is why the unilateral changes are automatic violations of the Act. Mike O'Connor Chevrolet-Buick-GMC Co., 209 NLRB Dec. (CCH) 701 (1974).

mild exigency. (1984) A circumstance that justifies a law-enforcement officer’s departure from the knock-and-announce rule, such as the likelihood that the building’s occupants will try to escape, resist arrest, or destroy evidence. See KNOCK-AND-ANNOUNCE RULE.

mile. (bef. 12c) 1. A measure of distance equal to 5,280 feet. — Also termed statute mile. 2. NAUTICAL MILE.

military government. Int'l law. The control of all or most public functions within a country, or the assumption and exercise of governmental functions, by military forces or individual members of those forces; government exercised by a military commander under the direction of the executive or sovereign, either externally during a foreign war or internally during a civil war. • A military government's actions supersede all local law. See MARTIAL LAW.

military judge. See JUDGE.

military judge alone. Military law. A court-martial presided over by a single judge with no other court-martial members present. [Cases: Military Justice C=874.]

military jurisdiction. The three types of governmental power given the military by the U.S. Constitution — specif., jurisdiction under military law, jurisdiction under military government, and jurisdiction under martial law. [Cases: Armed Services ⇒ 1-5, 44; Military Justice ⇒ 514, 893.]

military justice. A structure of punitive measures designed to foster order, morale, and discipline within the military. See MILITARY LAW. [Cases: Armed Services ⇒ 42; Military Justice ⇒ 500–510.]

military law. The branch of public law governing military discipline and other rules regarding service in the armed forces. • It is exercised both in peacetime and in war, is recognized by civil courts, and includes rules far broader than for the punishment of offenders. — Also termed military justice. — Sometimes loosely termed martial law. Cf. MARTIAL LAW.

"Military Law . . . is largely, but not exclusively, statutory in character, and prescribes the rights of, and imposes duties and obligations upon, the several classes of persons composing its military establishment; it creates military tribunals, endows them with appropriate jurisdiction and regulates their procedure; it also defines military offenses and, by the imposition of adequate penalties, endeavors to prevent their occurrence." George B. Davis, A Treatise on the Military Law of the United States 1 (3d ed. 1915).

military leave. A policy contained in employment policies or collective-bargaining agreements allowing a long-term leave of absence without an accompanying loss of benefits for a person in active service in the U.S. armed forces.

military necessity. Int'l law. A principle of warfare allowing coercive force to achieve a desired end, as long as the force used is not more than is called for by the situation. • This principle dates from the Hague Convention on Laws and Customs of War on Land of October 18, 1907, which prohibits the destruction or seizure of enemy property "unless such destruction or seizure be imperatively demanded by the necessities of war." [Cases: War and National Emergency ⇒ 9.]

military objective. Int'l law. An object that by its nature, location, or use contributes to military action, and is thus susceptible to attack. • Under Geneva Convention Protocol 1 (1977), only military — rather than civilian — objects are proper targets.

military offense. An offense, such as desertion, that lies military objective. • Under Geneva Convention Protocol 1 (1977), only military — rather than civilian — objects are proper targets.

military officer. See officer (2).

military tenure. See tenure.

military testament. See soldier's will under will.

militate (mil·a-tayt), vb. (16c) To exert a strong influence <the evidence of military impropriety militates against a conviction>. Cf. MITIGATE.

militates (mil·a-tayz), n. 1. Roman law. Members of the military; soldiers. 2. Hist. Knights who are part of the royal army, by virtue of feudal tenure.

"[Knights] are also called in our law milites, because they formed a part of the royal army, in virtue of their feudal tenures; one condition of which was, that every one who held a knight's fee immediately under the crown . . . was obliged to be knighted and attend the king in his wars, or fine for his non-compliance." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 404 (1765).

3. Scots law. Freeholders holding estates from barons for military service.

militia (mol·ish·ə), n. (16c) A body of citizens armed and trained, esp. by a state, for military service apart from the regular armed forces. • The Constitution recognizes a state's right to form a "well-regulated militia" but also grants Congress the power to activate, organize, and govern a federal militia. U.S. Const. amend. II; U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15–16. See NATIONAL GUARD. [Cases: Militia ⇒ 1–3; Weapons ⇒ 1.]

reserve militia. All persons who are not exempt from military service and not actively serving in the armed forces or national guard.

2. Roman law. Military service.

Militia Clause. (118) One of two clauses of the U.S. Constitution giving Congress the power to call forth, arm, and maintain a military force to enforce compliance with its laws, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16. [Cases: Armed Services ⇒ 1–5; Militia ⇒ 1.]

mill. (bef. 12c) 1. A machine that grinds corn, grain, or other substances, esp. using a wheel and circular motion. • The substance ground in a mill is sometimes called grist, esp. when it is a grain. Courts sometimes refer to the grinding process as a metaphor for the judicial process <suits to collect on promissory notes are gist for the summary-judgment mill because the material facts in such cases are often undisputed>. [Cases: Manufactures ⇒ 2.] 2. The building in which the grinding is performed, along with the site, dam, or other items connected with the mill. 3. A monetary unit equal to one-tenth of a cent. • Mills are a money of account used in the United States and Canada, esp. to reckon tax rates.

millage rate. See MILL RATE.

Miller Act. A federal law requiring the posting of performance and payment bonds before an award is made for a contract for construction, alteration, or repair of a public work or building. 40 USCA §§ 270a–270d–1. [Cases: United States ⇒ 67.]

Miller trust. See TRUST.

Miller-Tydings Act. A federal law, enacted in 1937 as an amendment to the Sherman Act, exempting fair-trade laws from the application of the Sherman Act and legalizing resale-price-maintenance agreements between producers and retailers of products. • The Act was repealed by the Consumer Goods Pricing Act of 1975.

Miller v. Shugart agreement. A settlement in which an insured consents to a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, on the condition that the plaintiff will satisfy the judgment only out of proceeds from the insured's policy, and will not seek recovery against the insured personally. Although the phrase takes its name from a Minnesota case, it is used in other jurisdictions as well. Miller v. Shugart, 316 N.W.2d 729 (Minn. 1982). [Cases: Insurance C=3366.]

milling in transit. An arrangement in which a shipment is temporarily detained at an intermediate point, usu. for the application of some manufacturing process, with or without an increase of a freight charge by the carrier. [Cases: Carriers C=12(2), 13(2).]

mill power. A unit of water power used in defining quantities and weights of water available to a lessee. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses C=285.]

mill privilege. The right of a mill-site owner to construct a mill and to use power from a stream to operate it, with due regard to the rights of other owners along the stream's path. [Cases: Manufactures C=2.]

mill rate. A tax applied to real property whereby each mill represents $1 of tax assessment per $1,000 of the property's assessed value <the mill rate for taxes in this county is 10 mills, so for a home valued at $100,000, the owner will pay $1,000 in property taxes>. — Also termed millage rate. [Cases: Taxation C=2428.]

mill site. 1. A small tract of land on or contiguous to a watercourse, suitable for the erection and operation of a mill. [Cases: Manufactures C=2.]

mineral. (14c) 1. An underground excavation used to obtain minerals, ores, or other substances. 2. A mineral deposit; a place containing a mineral deposit.

mineral, n. (15c) 1. Any natural inorganic matter that has a definite chemical composition and specific physical properties that give it value <most minerals are crystalline solids>.

mineral acre. Oil & gas. The full mineral interest in one acre of land. [Cases: Mines and Minerals C=47.]

mineral deed. See deed.

mineral district. See district.

mineral easement. See easement.

mineral entry. (1882) The right of entry on public land to mine valuable mineral deposits. [Cases: Mines and Minerals C=9-38.]

mineral interest. Oil & gas. The right to search for, develop, and remove minerals from land or to receive a royalty based on the production of minerals. Mineral interests are granted by an oil-and-gas lease. — Also termed mineral right. See fee interest; subsurface interest; surface interest. [Cases: Mines and Minerals C=47, 62.1, 73.1.]

mineral land. See land.

mineral lease. See lease.

mineral lode. (1870) A mineral bed of rock with definite boundaries in a general mass of a mountain; any belt of mineralized rock lying within boundaries that clearly separate it from neighboring rock. — Also termed lode.

mineral right. See mineral interest.

mineral royalty. See royalty (2).

mineral servitude. See servitude (2).

Minerals Management Service. A unit in the U.S. Department of the Interior responsible for entering into and managing leases for the recovery of minerals on the outer continental shelf and for collecting and distributing royalty and other payments due the U.S. and Indian tribes from mineral production. [Cases: Mines and Minerals C=51(1).]

miner's inch. A measurement of water discharge, equaling nine-gallons per minute from a one-inch square pipe. The precise measurement of a miner's inch varies in different localities.

Mine Safety and Health Administration. A unit in the U.S. Department of Labor responsible for preventing mine accidents and occupational diseases in the nation's mining industry. It sets mandatory safety and health standards, assesses fines for their violation, and investigates mine accidents. Its programs are operated through regional administrators located in the nation's mining regions. — Abbr. MSHA. [Cases: Labor and Employment § 2634.] minimal participant. (1987) Criminal law. Under the federal sentencing guidelines, a defendant who is among the least culpable of a group of criminal actors, as when the defendant does not understand the scope or structure of the criminal enterprise or the actions of the other members of the group. The offense level for a crime of a minimal participant can be decreased by four levels. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 3Bl.2(a). Cf. MINOR PARTICIPANT. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment § 764.]

minimal scrutiny. See rational-basis test.

mini-maxi. n. An underwriting arrangement for a securities transaction, whereby a broker is required to sell the minimum number of securities on an all-or-none basis and the balance on a best-efforts basis. See UNDERWRITING (2).

miniment (min-a-m; mt). See ML'NIMENT.

minimalist retributivism. See RETRIBUTIVISM.

minimum contacts. (1945) A nonresident defendant's forum-state connections, such as business activity or actions foreseeably leading to business activity, that are substantial enough to bring the defendant within the forum-state court's personal jurisdiction without offending traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 66 S.Ct. 154 (1945). — Also termed minimal contacts. [Cases: Corporations § 665(1); Courts § 12(2.5); Federal Courts § 765, 79.]

minimum fee schedule. Hist. A list of the lowest fees that a lawyer may charge, set by a state bar association. The courts held that minimum-fee schedules, now defunct, violated antitrust laws.

minimum lot. See LOT (1).

minimum-royalty clause. Patents. A royalty-agreement provision that prescribes a fixed payment by the licensee to the patentee, regardless of whether the invention is actually used. [Cases: Patents § 218(1), (5).]

minimum sale. See exhibition value.

minimum scrutiny. See rational-basis test.

minimum sentence. See SENTENCE.

minimum tax. See minimum tax under TAX.

minimum wage. See WAGE.

mining. The process of extracting ore or minerals from the ground; the working of a mine. This term also encompasses oil and gas drilling.

mining claim. A parcel of land that contains precious metal in its soil or rock and that is appropriated by a person according to established rules and customs known as the process of location. See location (4), (5). [Cases: Mines and Minerals § 21, 13, 28.]

lode claim. A mining claim (on public land) to a well-defined vein embedded in rock; a mining claim to a mineral lode. [Cases: Mines and Minerals § 21, 16, 28.]

placer claim. A mining claim that is not a lode claim; a claim where the minerals are not located in veins or lodes within rock, but are usu. in softer ground near the earth's surface. [Cases: Mines and Minerals § 21, 16, 28.]

It has long been recognized that the distinction between lode and placer claims must be tempered by scientific findings as to the nature of the mineral deposits under consideration, and the practicalities of modern mining methods, which may permit the use of surface mining methods to remove certain lodes or veins of minerals previously only reached by underground methods. 53A Am. Jur. 2d Mines and Minerals § 21, at 273 (1996).

mining lease. See LEASE.

mining location. 1. See location (4). 2. See location (5).

mining partnership. An association of persons to jointly share a mining business, including the profits, expenses, and losses. The partnership has features of both a tenancy in common and an ordinary commercial partnership. [Cases: Mines and Minerals § 96.]

It has generally been held that the law governing ordinary commercial or trading partnerships applies, with a few exceptions, to mining partnerships. The principal exception and the main distinction between mining partnerships and commercial partnerships generally is based on the fact that the principle of delectus personae, meaning the right of a partner to exercise choice and preference as to the admission of any new members to the firm, and as to the persons to be so admitted, does not apply to mining partnerships . . . . 58 C.J.S. Mines and Minerals § 88, at 380 (1998).
mining rent. Consideration given for a mining lease, whether the lease creates a tenancy, conveys a fee, or grants a mere license or incorporeal right. [Cases: Mines and Minerals C=70, 79.]

minister, n. (14c) 1. A person acting under another's authority: an agent. 2. A prominent government officer appointed to manage an executive or administrative department. 3. A diplomatic representative, esp. one ranking below an ambassador. [Cases: Ambassadors and Consuls C=1-5.]

foreign minister. 1. A minister of foreign affairs, who in many countries is equivalent to the U.S. Secretary of State. 2. An ambassador, minister, or envoy from a foreign government. [Cases: Ambassadors and Consuls C=1-5.]

minister plenipotentiary (plen-o-ten-shee-er-ee). A minister ranking below an ambassador but possessing full power and authority as a governmental representative, esp. as an envoy of a sovereign ruler. • This officer is often regarded as the personal representative of a head of state.

public minister. A high diplomatic representative such as an ambassador, envoy, or resident, but not including a commercial representative such as a consul. [Cases: Ambassadors and Consuls C=4.]

4. A person authorized by a Christian church to perform religious functions. [Cases: Religious Societies C=27.]

ministerial, adj. (16c) Of or relating to an act that involves obedience to instructions or laws instead of discretion, judgment, or skill <the court clerk's ministerial duties include recording judgments on the docket>. [Cases: Judges C=33.]

ministerial act. See act.

ministerial duty. 1. See ministerial act under act. 2. See duty (2).

ministerial-function test. (1990) The principle that the First Amendment bars judicial resolution of a Title VII employment-discrimination claim based on a religious preference, if the employee's responsibilities are religious in nature, as in spreading faith, supervising a religious order, and the like. 42 USCA § 2000e-1(a). See title VII of the civil rights act of 1964. [Cases: Civil Rights C=1114, 1163.]

ministerial office. See office.

ministerial officer. See officer (1).

minister plenipotentiary. See minister.

ministri regis (mi-nis-trri-ee-jis). [Latin] Hist. Ministers of the king. • This term was applied to judges and ministerial officers.

minitrial. (1990) A private, voluntary, and informal form of dispute resolution in which each party's attorney presents an abbreviated version of its case to a neutral third party and to the opponent's representatives, who have settlement authority. • The third party may render an advisory opinion on the anticipated outcome of litigation. Cf. summary jury trial under trial.

"The idea behind the minitrial is that the parties can resolve a dispute on their own more efficiently if litigant representatives with settling authority are educated about the strengths and weaknesses of each side, giving summary presentations of their best cases under the eye of a jointly selected neutral advisor. After each case is presented, the parties meet privately to negotiate an agreement. The minitrial is confidential and nonbinding. Usually, no transcript is made of the proceeding. Minitials have had some success in saving both time and money." Alfred C. Aman Jr. & William T. Mayton, Administrative Law 291 (2d ed. 2001).

minor, n. (16c) 1. A person who has not reached full legal age; a child or juvenile. — Also termed infant. Cf. adult. [Cases: Infants C=1.] emancipated minor. (1817) A minor who is self-supporting and independent of parental control, usu. as a result of a court order. See emancipation. [Cases: Child Support C=389; Parent and Child C=16.]

minor in need of supervision. See child in need of supervision under child. — Abbr. MINS.

2. Roman law. A person who is past puberty but less than 25 years old. — Also termed minor quam 25 annis.

minor aetas regalia (mi-nor-a ri-gay-lee-ə). See regalia minora under regalia.

minor crime. See misdemeanor.

minor dispute. See dispute.

minor fact. See fact.

minority. (15c) 1. The state or condition of being under legal age. • In Scots law, legal minority begins at the end of puberty; until then, a person is a pupil. — Also termed infancy; nonage; immaturity. Cf. majority (1). [Cases: Infants C=1.]

2. A group having fewer than a controlling number of votes. Cf. majority (2). [Cases: Corporations C=182, 3.]

3. A group that is different in some respect (such as race or religious belief) from the majority and that is sometimes treated differently as a result; a member of such a group. • Some courts have held that the term minority, in this sense, is not limited to a group that is outnumbered. It may also be applied to a group that has been traditionally discriminated against or socially suppressed, even if its members are in the numerical majority in an area. [Cases: Civil Rights C=1007.]

Minority Business Development Agency. A unit in the U.S. Department of Commerce responsible for developing and coordinating a national program for minority business enterprise. — Abbr. MBDA.

minority discount. A reduction in the value of a closely held business's shares that are owned by someone who has only a minority interest in the business. • The concept underlying a minority discount is recognition that controlling shares — those owned by someone who can control the business — are worth more in the market than noncontrolling shares. But when dissenting shareholders object to a corporate act, such as a merger, and become entitled to have their shares appraised and bought by the corporation, many courts hold that incorporating a minority discount into the valuation of the dissenters’ shares is inequitable and is not permitted. See APPRAISAL REMEDY. [Cases: Corporations C=182.4(5), 584.] minority opinion. See dissenting opinion under OPINION (1).

minority report. See REPORT (1).

minority shareholder. See SHAREHOLDER.

minor participant. (1960) Criminal law. Under the federal sentencing guidelines, a defendant who is less culpable for a crime than the other members of the group committing the crime, but who has more culpability than a minimal participant. • A defendant who is a minor participant can have the offense level for the crime decreased by two levels. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 3B1.2(b). Cf. MINIMAL PARTICIPANT. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment C=764.]

minor quam 25 annis (mi-nar kwam 25 an-is). [Latin]. See MINOR (2).

minor’s estate. See ESTATE (1).

minor’s trust. See TRUST (1).

MINS. abbr. Minor in need of supervision. See child in need of supervision under CHILD.

mintage. (16c) 1. The mint’s charge for coining money. 2. The product of minting; money.

mint-mark. An authorized mark on a coin showing where it was minted.

minuend (min-yoo-end). (18c) In a mathematical equation, the number from which another number (the subtrahend) is subtracted to arrive at a remainder or balance. • The term is used in law in a variety of accounting and mathematical contexts. Cf. SUBTRAHEND.

minus (mi-nas). adj. & adv. [Latin] Roman law. Less; less than; not at all. • A debt remaining wholly unpaid was called minus solutum.

minus Latium. See LATIUM MINUS.

minute book. (16c) 1. A book in which a court clerk enters minutes of court proceedings. [Cases: Clerks of Courts C=67.] 2. A record of the subjects discussed and actions taken at a corporate directors’ or shareholders’ meeting. — Also termed minutes book.

minute entry. See minute order (1) under ORDER (2).

minute order. See ORDER (2).

minutes. (15c) 1. Memoranda or notes of a transaction, proceeding, or meeting. 2. Parliamentary law. The formal record of a deliberative assembly’s proceedings, approved (as corrected, if necessary) by the assembly. — Also termed journal; record; report. See DISPENSE WITH THE READING OF THE MINUTES; SPREAD UPON THE MINUTES.

The minutes of an organization include a record of all official actions taken, the presiding officer, the presence of a quorum, and information showing that the meeting was duly called and thus legal. The other contents of the minutes will depend upon the degree of detail desired. . . . The minutes should be an official record of actions taken by the organization, not a transcript of what individuals say in meetings.” Ray E. Keese, Modern Parliamentary Procedure 84 (1994).

The record of the proceedings of a deliberative assembly is usually called the minutes, or sometimes — particularly in legislative bodies — the journal. In an ordinary society, unless the minutes are to be published, they should contain mainly a record of what was done at the meeting, not what was said by the members. The minutes should never reflect the secretary’s opinion, favorable or otherwise, on anything said or done.” Henry M. Robert, Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised § 48, at 451 (10th ed. 2000).

’When it is necessary to preserve evidence of any incidental judicial act or statement, this is done in the Court of Session, and also in the inferior courts, by a minute. Thus, where the pursuer restricts his libel, or makes a reference to the defender’s oath . . . this is done by a minute. Strictly speaking, those minutes ought to be prepared by the clerk of court, as their form imports. They commence with the name of the counsel . . . and purport to be a statement made by him . . . .’ William Bell, Bell’s Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 721 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

minutio (mi-n-yoo-see-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. A lessening or reduction. See DEMINUTIO.

Miranda hearing (ma-ran da). (1966) A pretrial proceeding held to determine whether the Miranda rule has been followed and thus whether the prosecutor may introduce into evidence the defendant’s statements to the police made after arrest. See MIRANDA RULE. [Cases: Criminal Law C=414.]

Miranda rule. (1966) The doctrine that a criminal suspect in police custody must be informed of certain constitutional rights before being interrogated. • The suspect must be advised of the right to remain silent, the right to have an attorney present during questioning, and the right to have an attorney appointed if the suspect cannot afford one. If the suspect is not advised of these rights or does not validly waive them, any evidence obtained during the interrogation cannot be used against the suspect at trial (except for impeachment purposes). Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602 (1966). [Cases: Criminal Law C=412.2(3), 517.2(3), 518.]

Miranda warning. See MIRANDA RULE.

Mirandize (ma-ran diz), vb. (1971) Slang. To read or recite (to an arrestee) rights under the Miranda rule <the suspect was arrested, Mirandized, and mirror-image rule. (1972) Contracts. The doctrine that the acceptance of a contractual offer must be positive, unconditional, unequivocal, and unambiguous, and must not change, add to, or qualify the terms of the offer; the common-law principle that for a contract to be formed, the terms of an acceptance must correspond exactly with those of the offer. • In modern commercial contexts, the mirror-image rule has been replaced by a UCC provision that allows parties to enforce their agreement despite minor discrepancies between the offer and the acceptance. The rule still applies to international sales contracts governed by the UN Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods (article 19). — Also termed ribbon-matching rule. See BATTLE OF THE FORMS. [Cases: Contracts C-24.]

"If an offeree purports to accept an offer but in doing so adds various conditions and qualifications of his own, is the acceptance binding on the offeror, at least in part? Generally speaking, the answer is no: the common law rule, reflected in Restatement Section 59, is that a statement of acceptance is effective only if it is a mirror image of the offer and expresses unconditional assent to all of the terms and conditions imposed by the offeror." Marvin A. Chirelstein, Concepts and Case Analysis in the Law of Contracts 54 (1990).

mis (mi-za). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. The issue in a writ of right; a mise. 2. An agreement; a compromise.

misadministration. See MALADMINISTRATION.

misadventure. (13c) 1. A mishap or misfortune. 2. Homicide committed accidentally by a person doing a lawful act and having no intent to injure; ACCIDENTAL KILLING. [Cases: Homicide C-762.]

misallege, vb. To erroneously assert (a fact, a claim, etc.).

misapplication, n. (17c) The improper or illegal use of funds or property lawfully held. — misapply, vb.

misappropriation, n. (18c) 1. The application of another’s property or money dishonestly to one’s own use. See embezzlement. Cf. appropriation; expropriation (1). 2. Intellectual property. The common-law tort of using the noncopyrightable information or ideas that an organization collects and disseminates for a profit to compete unfairly against that organization, or copying a work whose creator has not yet claimed or been granted exclusive rights in the work. Int’l News Serv. v. Associated Press, 248 U.S. 215, 29 S.Ct. 68 (1918). • The elements of misappropriation are: (1) the plaintiff must have invested time, money, or effort to extract the information, (2) the defendant must have taken the information with no similar investment, and (3) the plaintiff must have suffered a competitive injury because of the taking. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property C-108.] 3. The doctrine giving rise to such a tort claim. — misappropriate, vb.

"The doctrine of ‘misappropriation,’ which is a distinct branch of unfair competition, . . . has been applied to a variety of situations in which the courts have sensed that one party was dealing ‘unfairly’ with another, but which were not covered by the three established statutory systems protecting intellectual property: copyright, patent, and trademark/.appropriation as to origin. U.S. Golf Ass’n v. St. Andrews Systems, Data-Max, Inc. 749 F.2d 1028, 1034-35 (3d Cir. 1984) (Becker, J.).

misappropriation theory. Securities. The doctrine that a person who wrongfully uses confidential information to buy or sell securities in violation of a duty owed to the one who is the information source is guilty of securities fraud. [Cases: Securities Regulation C-60.28(2.1).]

misbehavior in office. See official misconduct under MISCONDUCT.

misbranding, n. The act or an instance of labeling one’s product falsely or in a misleading way. • Misbrand is prohibited by federal and state law. [Cases: Food C-15; Health C-311; Products Liability C-225.] — misbrand, vb.

miscarriage. (16c) Spontaneous and involuntary premature expulsion of a nonviable fetus. — Also termed spontaneous abortion.

miscarriage of justice. (1862) A grossly unfair outcome in a judicial proceeding, as when a defendant is convicted despite a lack of evidence on an essential element of the crime. — Also termed failure of justice.

miscegenation (mi-se-a-nay-shan). (1863) A marriage between persons of different races, formerly considered illegal in some jurisdictions. • In 1967, the U.S. Supreme Court held that laws banning interracial marriages are unconstitutional. Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1817 (1967). But for years, such laws technically remained on the books in some states. The last remaining state-law ban on interracial marriages was a provision in the Alabama constitution. The Alabama legislature voted to repeal the ban, subject to a vote of the state’s citizens, in 1999; the repeal became effective in 2000. — Also termed mixed marriage; interracial marriage. [Cases: Criminal Law C-45.45.]

miscellaneous itemized deduction. See DEDUCTION.

mischarge. (1939) An erroneous jury instruction that may be grounds for reversing a verdict. — Also termed misdirection.

mischief (mis-chaf). (14c) 1. A condition in which a person suffers a wrong or is under some hardship, esp. one that a statute seeks to remove or for which equity provides a remedy <this legislature seeks to eliminate the mischief of racially restrictive deed covenants>. 2. Injury or damage caused by a specific person or thing <the vandals were convicted of criminal mischief>. 3. The act causing such injury or damage <their mischief damaged the abbey>.

mischief rule. (1974) In statutory construction, the doctrine that a statute should be interpreted by first identifying the problem (or "mischief") that the statute was designed to remedy and then adopting a construction that will suppress the problem and advance the remedy. — Also termed rule in Heydon’s Case; purpose approach. Cf. GOLDEN RULE; Plain-meaning rule; misconduct (mis-kon-dakt). (17c) 1. A dereliction of duty; unlawful or improper behavior.

affirmative misconduct. (1897) 1. An affirmative act of misrepresentation or concealment of a material fact; intentional wrongful behavior. 2. Some courts hold that there must be an ongoing pattern of misrepresentation or false promises, as opposed to an isolated act of providing misinformation. 2. With respect to a claim of estoppel against the federal government, a misrepresentation or concealment of a material fact by a government employee — beyond a merely innocent or negligent misrepresentation. [Cases: Estoppel <= 62.2(3, 4).

juror misconduct. (1954) A juror’s violation of the court’s charge or the law, committed either during trial or in deliberations after trial, such as (1) communicating about the case with outsiders, witnesses, attorneys, bailiffs, or judges, (2) bringing into the jury room information relating to the case but not in evidence, and (3) conducting experiments regarding theories of the case outside the court’s presence. [Cases: Criminal Law <= 855; Federal Courts <= 1974; Trial <= 304–311.

misconduct in office. See official misconduct.

official misconduct. (1830) A public officer’s corrupt violation of assigned duties by malfeasance, misfeasance, or nonfeasance. — Also termed misconduct in office; misbehavior in office; malconduct in office; misdemeanor in office; corruption in office; official corruption; political corruption. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees <= 121.

wanton misconduct. (1844) An act, or a failure to act when there is a duty to do so, in reckless disregard of another’s rights, coupled with the knowledge that injury will probably result. — Also termed wanton and reckless misconduct. [Cases: Negligence <= 275.

willful and wanton misconduct. (1866) Conduct committed with an intentional or reckless disregard for the safety of others, as by failing to exercise ordinary care to prevent a known danger or to discover a danger. — Also termed willful indifference to the safety of others. [Cases: Automobiles <= 181(1); Negligence <= 275.

willful misconduct. (1804) Misconduct committed voluntarily and intentionally. [Cases: Carriers <= 307(6.1); Negligence <= 275; Unemployment Compensation <= 65.

“This term of art [willful misconduct] has defied definition, but it is clear that it means something more than negligence. Two classic examples of misconduct which will defeat the seaman’s claim are intoxication and venereal disease.” Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 185–86 (3d ed. 1996).

willful misconduct of an employee. (1884) The deliberate disregard by an employee of the employer’s interests, including its work rules and standards of conduct, justifying a denial of unemployment compensation if the employee is terminated for the misconduct. [Cases: Unemployment Compensation <= 65.

2. An attorney’s dishonesty or attempt to persuade a court or jury by using deceptive or reprehensible methods. [Cases: Criminal Law <= 1980–2210; Federal Civil Procedure <= 1970; Trial <= 113.

miscontinuance. (16c) A continuance erroneously ordered by a court.

miscrant (mis-kree-ant). (14c) 1. A wrongdoer. 2. An apostate; an unbeliever.

misdate. (16c) To erroneously date (a document, etc.).

miscarriage of justice. (1804) An act or omission of a government official that results in a substantive injustice to the person charged, but is not necessarily of such a degree as to give rise to a claim of estoppel against the federal government, such as (1) providing misinformation; (2) bringing into the jury room information relating to the case but not in evidence; and (3) conducting experiments regarding theories of the case outside the court’s presence. [Cases: Criminal Law <= 855; Federal Courts <= 1974; Trial <= 304–311.

miscarriage of justice. (1804) An act or omission of a government official that results in a substantive injustice to the person charged, but is not necessarily of such a degree as to give rise to a claim of estoppel against the federal government, such as (1) providing misinformation; (2) bringing into the jury room information relating to the case but not in evidence; and (3) conducting experiments regarding theories of the case outside the court’s presence. [Cases: Criminal Law <= 855; Federal Courts <= 1974; Trial <= 304–311.

misdemeanor (mis-di-mee-nar). (16c) 1. A crime that is less serious than a felony and is usu. punishable by fine, penalty, forfeiture, or confinement (usu. for a brief term) in a place other than prison (such as a county jail). — Also termed minor crime; summary offense. Cf. felony (1). [Cases: Criminal Law <= 27.1.

“This term of art [misdemeanor] was the label ultimately adopted to apply to all offenses other than treason or felony. The term included a wide variety of wrongs and misprisions. Many of the substantive legal principles and procedures applicable to felonies were not applied in the case of misdemeanors. The difference in treatment between felonies and misdemeanors has carried over from common law to current practice, and today misdemeanors are often treated differently than felonies [in the procedures employed in trying such cases as well as [in the consequences of a conviction. The traditional distinction between felonies and misdemeanors has been abolished in England.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 15 (3d ed. 1982).

gross misdemeanor. (18c) A serious misdemeanor, though not a felony. — Also termed high misdemeanor.

high misdemeanor. 1. Hist. English law. A crime that ranked just below high treason in seriousness. — In English law, the term was essentially synonymous with crime. Examples of crimes called high misdemeanors are riot and conspiracy. In early American law, the term had the same meaning as in English law and was used in defining crimes such as sedition. 2. See gross misdemeanor. 3. See serious misdemeanor.

serious misdemeanor. (1893) One of a class of misdemeanors having more severe penalties than most other misdemeanors. — Conduct rising to the level of a serious misdemeanor can, in some jurisdictions, be charged as either a felony or a misdemeanor. — Also termed high misdemeanor; indictable misdemeanor; penitentiary misdemeanor; aggravated misdemeanor.
misdemeanor in office. See official misconduct under misconduct.

misdemeanor manslaughter. See manslaughter.

misdemeanor-manslaughter rule. (1967) The doctrine that a death occurring during the commission of a misdemeanor (or sometimes a nondangerous felony) is involuntary manslaughter. • Many states and the Model Penal Code have abolished this rule. Cf. FELONY-MURDER RULE. [Cases: Homicide 0-162-652.]

“Companion to the felony-murder rule is the so-called misdemeanor-manslaughter rule[]. . . Homicide resulting from the perpetration or attempted perpetration of an unlawful act, less than a dangerous felony, is manslaughter if the unlawful act is malum in se,” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 108 (3d ed. 1982).

misdescription. (1848) A contractual error or falsity that deceives, injures, or materially misleads one of the parties in a document of title, of goods received from the bailor. 3. An inaccurate description of land in a deed. [Cases: Deeds 0-200.]

misdirection. See mischarge.

mise (meez or mtz), n. [Law French] Hist. 1. Expenses incurred in litigation. 2. The general issue in a writ of right. • When a tenant pleads superior title to the plaintiff, the tenant is said to join the mise on the mere right. 3. A settlement; a compromise, as in the Mise of Lewes between Henry III and the rebelling barons.

mise money. Hist. Money paid by contract to purchase a privilege.

miserable depositum (miz-a-rab-0-lee di-poz-0-tom). [Law Latin “a pitiful deposit”] Civil law. A deposit or bailment made in an emergency, as in a shipwreck, fire, or insurrection.

miserere (miz-a-ree-re-ee). [Latin] Hist. Have mercy. • This is the first phrase of the 51st psalm, used to test a person claiming benefit of clergy. See NECK VERSE.

misfeasance in public office. (1880) The tort of excessive, malicious, or negligent exercise of statutory powers by a public officer. — Also termed malfeasance. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees 0-116.]

mishering. See miskering.

mishersing. See miskering.

misjoinder (mis-joyn-dar). (18c) 1. The improper union of parties in a civil case. See joinder. Cf. DISJOINDER; NONJOINDER. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 0-387; Parties 0-85, 89.] 2. The improper union of offenses in a criminal case. [Cases: Indictment and Information 0-126.]

“But every defeated plaintiff could be amerced ‘for a false claim.’ Incidentally too any falsehood . . . that is, any fraudulent misuse of the machinery of the law, would be punished by imprisonment. Then again every default in appearance brought an amercement on the defaulter and his pledges. Every mistake in pleading, every miskennning . . . brought an amercement on the pleader if the mistake was to be retrieved. A litigant who hoped to get to the end of his suit without an amercement must have been a sanguine man; for he was playing a game of forfeits.” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 519 (2d ed. 1899).

miskering (mis-kor-ing). Hist. Freedom or immunity from amercement. — Also termed abishing; abishersing; mishering; mishersing.

mislaid property. See property.

mislay, vb. (15c) To deposit (property, etc.) in a place not afterwards recollected; to lose (property, etc.) by forgetting where it was placed. See mislaid property under property.

misleading, adj. (16c) (Of an instruction, direction, etc.) delusive; calculated to be misunderstood. [Cases: Protection of Parties 0-94, 95(3).

misnomer (mis-noh-mar). (15c) A mistake in naming a person, place, or thing, esp. in a legal instrument. • In federal pleading — as well as in most states — misnomer of a party can be corrected by an amendment, which will relate back to the date of the original pleading. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(c)(3). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 0-382; Limitation of Actions 0-121(2); Parties 0-94, 95(3).]

misperformance. (17c) A faulty attempt to discharge an obligation (esp. a contractual one). Cf. performance; nonperformance.

misperformance. (16c) Pleading incorrectly. • A party who realizes that its pleading is incorrect can usu. amend the pleading, as a matter of right, within a certain period, and can thereafter amend with the court’s permission.

misprision (mis-prizh-an). (15c) Concealment or non-disclosure of a serious crime by one who did not par-participants in the crime. [Cases: Compounding Offenses C=1.]

clerical misprision. (18c) A court clerk's mistake or fraud that is apparent from the record.

misprision of felony. (16c) Concealment or nondisclosure of someone else's felony. See 18 USCA § 4. [Cases: Compounding Offenses C=1.1.]

"In fact, whatever the law may be, it is not the general custom to prosecute for misprison of felony, even where a person who knows of a felony is questioned by the police and refuses to make a statement. Indeed, Stephen, writing in the nineteenth century, regarded the offence as 'practically obsolete'; and American courts have refused to recognise it as subsisting. But there have been four successful prosecutions in England during the last quarter-century . . . ." Glanville Williams, Criminal Law 424 (2d ed. 1961).

misprision of treason. (16c) Concealment or nondisclosure of someone else's treason. [Cases: Treason C=8.]

negative misprision. (18c) The wrongful concealment of something that should be revealed <misprison of treason>.

positive misprision. (18c) The active commission of a wrongful act <seditious conduct against the government is positive misprison>.

2. Seditious conduct against the government. 3. An official's failure to perform the duties of public office. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees C=121.] 4. Misunderstanding; mistake.

"The word 'misprision' has been employed with different meanings. While Blackstone thought of it as referring to a grave misdemeanor, it seems to have been used earlier to indicate the entire field of crime below the grade of treason or felony before the word 'misdemeanor' became the generally accepted label for this purpose. More recently it has been said: 'Misprision is nothing more than a word used to describe a misdemeanor which does not possess a specific name.' United States v. Perlstein, 126 F.2d 789, 798 (3d Cir. 1942). It has been associated with two specific offenses, and only these, from the earliest times. They are misprison of treason and misprision of felony, which consist of the criminal default of one in regard to the crime of another." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 572 (3d ed. 1982).

misprisor (mis-pris-zar). One who commits misprision of felony.

misreading. An act of fraud in which a person incorrectly reads the contents of an instrument to an illiterate or blind person with the intent to deceitfully obtain that person's signature. [Cases: Fraud C=4.5.]

misrecital. (16c) An incorrect statement of a factual matter in a contract, deed, pleading, or other instrument.

misrepresentation, n. (17c) 1. The act of making a false or misleading assertion about something, usu. with the intent to deceive. The word denotes not just written or spoken words but also any other conduct that amounts to a false assertion. [Cases: Fraud C=9.] 2. The assertion so made; an assertion that does not accord with the facts. — Also termed false representation; (redundantly) false misrepresentation. Cf. representation (1). — misrepresent, vb.

"A misrepresentation, being a false assertion of fact, commonly takes the form of spoken or written words. Whether a statement is false depends on the meaning of the words in all the circumstances, including what may fairly be inferred from them. An assertion may also be inferred from conduct other than words. Concealment or even non-disclosure may have the effect of a misrepresentation. . . . An assertion need not be fraudulent to be a misrepresentation. Thus a statement intended to be truthful may be a misrepresentation because of ignorance or carelessness, as when the word 'not' is inadvertently omitted or when inaccurate language is used. But a misrepresentation that is not fraudulent has no consequences . . . unless it is material." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 159 cmt. a (1979).

fraudulent misrepresentation. (18c) A false statement that is known to be false or is made recklessly — without knowing or caring whether it is true or false — and that is intended to induce a party to detrimentally rely on it. — Also termed fraudulent representation; deceit. [Cases: Fraud C=8.]

"A misrepresentation is fraudulent if the maker intends his assertion to induce a party to manifest his assent and the maker (a) knows or believes that the assertion is not in accord with the facts, or (b) does not have the confidence that he states or implies in the truth of the assertion, or (c) knows that he does not have the basis that he states or implies for the assertion." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 162(1) (1979).

innocent misrepresentation. (1809) A false statement that the speaker or writer does not know is false; a misrepresentation that, though false, was not made fraudulently. [Cases: Fraud C=13(2).]

material misrepresentation. (18c) 1. Contracts. A false statement that is likely to induce a reasonable person to assent or that the maker knows is likely to induce the recipient to assent. [Cases: Contracts C=94.] 2. Torts. A false statement to which a reasonable person would attach importance in deciding how to act in the transaction in question or to which the maker knows or has reason to know that the recipient attaches some importance. See Restatement (Second) of Torts § 538 (1979). [Cases: Fraud C=18.]

"The materiality of a misrepresentation is determined from the viewpoint of the maker, while the justification of reliance is determined from the viewpoint of the recipient. . . . The requirement of materiality may be met in either of two ways. First, a misrepresentation is material if it would be likely to induce a reasonable person to manifest his assent. Second, it is material if the maker knows that for some special reason it is likely to induce the particular recipient to manifest his assent. There may be personal considerations that the recipient regards as important even though they would not be expected to affect others in his situation, and if the maker is aware of this the misrepresentation may be material even though it would not be expected to induce a reasonable person to make the proposed contract. One who preys upon another's known idiosyncrasies cannot complain if the contract is held voidable when he succeeds in what he is endeavoring to accomplish. . . . Although a nonfraudulent misrepresentation that is not material does not make the contract voidable under the rules stated in this Chapter, the recipient may have a claim to relief under other rules, such as those relating to breach of warranty." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 162 cmt. c (1979).
misrepresentation of source. See passing off.

negligent misrepresentation. (1888) A careless or inadvertent false statement in circumstances where care should have been taken. [Cases: Fraud ◁13(3).]

misrepresentee. A person to whom a fact has been mis-misrepresentor. A person who misrepresents a fact to another. — Also spelled misrepresentor.

Missile Defense Agency. A unit in the U.S. Department of Defense responsible for developing and deploying a missile-defense system capable of protecting the United States, its armed forces, and others from missile attack. — Abbr. MDA.

missilia (mi-st-lee-ə), n. pl. [fr. Latin mittere “to throw”] Roman law. Money that the praetors, consuls, or wealthy individuals throw as gifts to people on the street; largesse.

missing-evidence rule. (1981) The doctrine that, when a party fails at trial to present evidence that the party controls and that would have been proper to present, the jury is entitled to infer that the evidence would have been unfavorable to that party. [Cases: Evidence ◁74.]

missing person. 1. Someone whose whereabouts are unknown and, after a reasonable time, seem to be unascertainable. 2. Someone whose continuous and unexplained absence entitles the heirs to petition a court to declare the person dead and to divide up the person’s property. See seven-years’absence rule. Cf. disappeared person. [Cases: Death ◁2.]

missing ship. Maritime law. A vessel that has been gone for an unreasonably long time, leading to the presumption that it is lost at sea; esp. a vessel that has been gone longer than the average time it takes a vessel to make a similar voyage in the same season.

missing-witness rule. (1961) The doctrine that, when a party fails at trial to present a witness who is available only to that party and whose testimony would have been admissible, the jury is entitled to infer that the witness’s testimony would have been unfavorable to that party. [Cases: Criminal Law ◁317; Evidence ◁77; Trial ◁211.]

missio in bona (mis[h]-ee-oh in boh-na). [Latín] Roman law. 1. A praetor’s grant to a creditor of individual items of the judgment debtor’s property already in the creditor’s possession. 2. A praetor’s grant to a creditor in possession of the debtor’s whole estate, as a form of execution of judgment.

missio in possessionem (mis[h]-ee-oh in pa-zes[h]-ee-oh nam). [Latín] Roman law. A praetor’s grant to a creditor of the debtor’s entire estate as a form of execution of judgment.

mistake, n. (17c) 1. An error, misconception, or misunderstanding; an erroneous belief. See error. 2. Contracts. The situation in which either (1) the parties to a contract did not mean the same thing, or (2) at least one party had a belief that did not correspond to the facts or law. • As a result, the contract may be voidable. [Cases: Contracts ◁93.] • "In this Restatement the word ‘mistake’ is used to refer to an erroneous belief. A party’s erroneous belief is therefore said to be a ‘mistake’ of that party. The belief need not be an articulated one, and a party may have a belief as to a fact when he merely makes an assumption with respect to it, without being aware of alternatives. The word ‘mistake’ is not used here, as it is sometimes used in common speech, to refer to an improvised act, including the making of a contract, that is the result of such an erroneous belief. This usage is avoided here for the sake of clarity and consistency. Furthermore, the erroneous belief must relate to the facts as they exist at the time of the making of the contract. A party’s prediction or judgment as to events to occur in the future, even if erroneous, is not a ‘mistake’ as that word is defined here. An erroneous belief as to the contents or effect of a writing that expresses the agreement is, however, a mistake. Mistake alone, in the sense in which the word is used here, has no legal consequences. The legal consequences of mistake in connection with the creation of contractual liability are determined by [substantive rules]." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 151 cmt. a (1979). 2. "The word mistake is generally used in the law of contracts to refer to an erroneous belief — ‘a belief that is not in accord with the facts.’ To avoid confusion, it should not be used, as it sometimes is in common speech, to refer to an improvised act, such as the making of a contract, that results from such an erroneous belief. Nor should it be used, as it sometimes is by courts and writers, to refer to what is more properly called a misunderstanding, a situation in which two parties attach different meanings to their language.” E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 9.2, at 619 (3d ed. 1999) quoting Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 151 (3d ed. 1979).

basic mistake. A mistake of fact or of law constituting the basis on which a transaction rests.

bilateral mistake. See mutual mistake (1).

collateral mistake. See unessential mistake.

common mistake. See mutual mistake (2).

essential mistake. (1818) Contracts. A mistake serious enough that no real consent could have existed, so that there was no real agreement. [Cases: Contracts ◁93.]

inessential mistake. See unessential mistake.

mistake of fact. (1808) 1. A mistake about a fact that is material to a transaction; any mistake other than a mistake of law. — Also termed error in fact; error of fact. [Cases: Contracts ◁93.] 2. The defense asserting that a criminal defendant acted from an innocent misunderstanding of fact rather than from a criminal purpose.

mistake of law. (18c) 1. A mistake about the legal effect of a known fact or situation. — Also termed error in law; error of law. [Cases: Contracts ◁93(4).] 2. The defense asserting that a defendant did not understand the criminal consequences of certain conduct. • This defense is generally not as effective as a mistake of fact.

mutual mistake. (18c) 1. A mistake in which each party misunderstands the other’s intent. — Also termed bilateral mistake. [Cases: Contracts ◁93(5).] 2. A mistake that is shared and relied on by both parties. to a contract. • A court will often revise or nullify a contract based on a mutual mistake about a material term. — Also termed (in sense 2) common mistake. [Cases: Contracts C:= 93(5); Reformations of Instruments C:= 19.]

"The term 'common mistake' is more usually, but less grammatically, referred to as 'mutual mistake'. Cheshire and Fifoot on Contract have made a heroic effort to introduce and establish the more correct term, and it does seem to be gaining ground. However, the beginner is warned that the term 'mutual mistake' is nearly always used by the Courts to mean what we here call 'common mistake.'" P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 190 n.7 (3d ed. 1981).

nonessential mistake. See unessential mistake.

unessential mistake. (1928) Contracts. A mistake that does not relate to the nature of the contents of an agreement, but only to some external circumstance, so that the mistake has no effect on the validity of the agreement. — Also termed inessential mistake; nonessential mistake; collateral mistake. [Cases: Contracts C:= 93.]

unilateral mistake. (1885) A mistake by only one party to a contract. • A unilateral mistake is generally not as likely to be a ground for voiding the contract as is a mutual mistake. [Cases: Contracts C:= 93.]

mistakenly induced revocation. See dependent relative revocation.

mystery (mis·tor·ee). Hist. A business; a trade. Also spelled mystery.

mistrail. (17c) 1. A trial that the judge brings to an end, without a determination on the merits, because of a procedural error or serious misconduct occurring during the proceedings. [Cases: Criminal Law C:= 867; Federal Civil Procedure C:= 1951; Trial C:= 18, 133.1, 304.] 2. A trial that ends inconclusively because the jury cannot agree on a verdict. — Also termed abortive trial. [Cases: Criminal Law C:= 867.]

misunderstanding. (13c) 1. A flawed interpretation of meaning or significance. 2. A situation in which the words or acts of two people suggest assent, but one or both of them in fact intend something different from what the words or acts express. 3. A quarrel; an instance of usu. mild wrangling.

misuse, n. (14c) 1. Products liability. A defense alleging that the plaintiff used the product in an improper, unintended, or unforeseeable manner. [Cases: Products Liability C:= 182.] 2. Patents. The use of a patent either to improperly extend the granted monopoly to non-patented goods or to violate antitrust laws. [Cases: Patents C:= 283.1.] misuser. (17c) An abuse of a right or office, as a result of which the person having the right might lose it <it is an act of misuser to accept a bribe>. Cf. user. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees C:= 64.]

mitigate (mit-a-gayt), vb. (15c) To make less severe or intense <the fired employee mitigated her damages for wrongful termination by accepting a new job>. Cf. militate. — mitigation, n. — mitigatory (mit-a-ga·tor·ee), adj.

mitigating circumstance. See circumstance.

mitigation cost. See cost (1).

mitigation-of-damages doctrine. (1978) The principle requiring a plaintiff, after an injury or breach of contract, to make reasonable efforts to alleviate the effects of the injury or breach. • If the defendant can show that the plaintiff failed to mitigate damages, the plaintiff's recovery may be reduced. — Also termed avoidable-consequences doctrine. Cf. doctrine of constructive consequences (2). [Cases: Damages C:= 62.]

mitigation of punishment. (18c) Criminal law. A reduction in punishment due to mitigating circumstances that reduce the criminal's level of culpability, such as the existence of no prior convictions. See mitigating circumstance under circumstance.

mitigator. A factor tending to show that a criminal defendant, though guilty, is less culpable than the act alone would indicate <the fact that he was coerced into taking part in the robbery may have been a mitigator in the minds of the jurors>. Cf. aggravator. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment C:= 54.]

mitiori sensu. See in mitiori sensu.

mitter avant (mit-ar a-vant), vb. [Law French] Hist. To present or produce (evidence, etc.) to a court.

mittimus (mit-'<l-m<'ls). [Law Latin "we send") Hist. A court order or warrant directing a jailer to detain a person until ordered otherwise; commitment (4). [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment C:= 462, 463.] 2. A certified transcript of a prisoner's conviction or sentencing proceedings. 3. A writ directing the transfer of records from one court to another. Pl. mittimuses.

mixed-motive doctrine. Employment law. The principle that, when the evidence in an employment-discrimination case shows that the complained-of employment action was based in part on a nondiscriminatory reason and in part on a discriminatory reason, the plaintiff must show that discrimination was a motivating factor for the employment action and, if the plaintiff makes that showing, then the defendant must show that it would have taken the same action without regard to the discriminatory reason. [Cases: Civil Rights ¶ 1137.]

mixed question. (18c) 1. MIXED QUESTION OF LAW AND FACT. 2. An issue involving conflicts of foreign and domestic law.
mixed question of law and fact. (1805) An issue that is neither a pure question of fact nor a pure question of law. • Mixed questions of law and fact are typically resolved by juries. — Often shortened to mixed question. — Also termed mixed question of fact and law. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ¶ 781; Appeal and Error ¶ 142(9); Criminal Law ¶ 735; Federal Courts ¶ 754; Trial ¶ 137.]

"Many issues in a lawsuit involve elements of both law and fact. Whether these must be referred to as mixed questions of law and fact, or legal inferences from the facts, or the application of law to the facts, there is substantial authority that they are not protected by the 'clearly erroneous' rule and are freely reviewable. This principle has been applied to antitrust violations, bankruptcy, contracts, copyright, taxation, and to other areas of the law." 9A Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2589, at 608-11 (2d ed. 1995).

mobile goods. See GOODS.
Mobile-Sierra doctrine. The principle that the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission may not grant a rate increase to a natural-gas producer unless the producer's contract authorizes a rate increase, or unless the existing rate is so low that it may adversely affect the public interest (as by threatening the continued viability of the public utility to continue its service). United Gas Pipe Line Co. v. Mobile Gas Serv. Corp., 350 U.S. 332, 76 S.Ct. 373 (1956); Federal Power Comm'n v. Sierra Pac. Power Co., 350 U.S. 348, 76 S.Ct. 368 (1956). — Also termed Sierra-Mobile doctrine. [Cases: Gas ¶ 14.4(1)]. mobilia (moh-bil-ee-ah), n., pl. [Latin “movables”] Roman law. Movable things. • The term primarily refers to inanimate objects but sometimes also refers to slaves and animals.

mobilia sequuntur personam (moh-bil-ee-ah si-kwan-tar par-soh-nam). [Latin] Int’l law. Movables follow the person — i.e., the law of the person. • This is the general principle that rights of ownership and transfer of movable property are determined by the law of the owner’s domicile. [Cases: Property ¶ 8; Taxation ¶ 211.]

"The maxim mobilia sequuntur personam is the exception rather than the rule, and is probably to be confined to certain special classes of general assignments such as marriage settlements and devolutions on death and bankruptcy." Handel v. Stratford, 1953 Q.B. 248, 257 (Eng. C.A.).

"Under the influence of Savigny many Continental systems in the mid-nineteenth century led the way for Anglo-American law in limiting the operation of the doctrine of mobilia sequuntur personam to universal assignments of movables, adopting for particular assignments the single principle of the lex situs of the movable." R.H. Graveson, Conflict of Laws 457 (7th ed. 1974).
mock trial. (18c) 1. A fictitious trial organized to allow law students, or sometimes lawyers, to practice the techniques of trial advocacy. 2. A fictitious trial, arranged by a litigant’s attorney, to assess trial strategy, to estimate the case’s value or risk, and to evaluate the case’s strengths and weaknesses. • In this procedure, people from the relevant jury pool are hired to sit as mock jurors who, after a condensed presentation of both sides, deliberate and reach a verdict (often while being observed by the participants behind a one-way glass). The jurors may later be asked specific questions about various arguments, techniques, and other issues. Because the mock jurors usu. do not know which side has hired them, their candid views are thought to be helpful in formulating trial strategies. Cf. MOOT COURT.

modal legacy. See LEGACY.

mode. (17c) A manner of doing something <mode of proceeding> <mode of process>.

model act. (1931) A statute drafted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws and proposed as guideline legislation for the states to borrow from or adapt to suit their individual needs. • Examples of model acts include the Model Employment Termination Act and the Model Punitive Damages Act. Cf. UNIFORM LAw; UNIFORM ACT.

Model Code of Professional Responsibility. A set of guidelines for lawyers, organized in the form of canons, disciplinary rules, and ethical considerations. • Published by the ABA in 1969, this code has been replaced in most states by the Model Rules of Professional Conduct as the ethical standards by which lawyers are regulated and disciplined, although the Model Code continues to be used to interpret and apply the Model Rules. [Cases: Attorney and Client \( \textcircled{C} \approx 32(2) \).]

modification. (17c) 1. A change to something; an alteration . [Cases: Contracts \( \textcircled{C} \approx 236 \).] 2. A qualification or limitation of something . 3. Parliamentary law. A change in a motion that its mover initiates or accepts, usu. before the chair has stated the motion. • The mover controls a motion only until the chair states the question, after which the motion belongs to the assembly and the mover cannot modify it without the assembly’s permission. See request for permission to modify a motion under REQUEST.

modification order. Family law. A post-divorce order that changes the terms of child support, custody, visitation, or alimony. • A modification order may be agreed to by the parties or may be ordered by the court. The party wishing to modify an existing order must show a material change in circumstances from the time when the order sought to be modified was entered. See CHANGE IN CIRCUMSTANCES. [Cases: Child Custody \( \textcircled{C} \approx 661 \); Child Support \( \textcircled{C} \approx 342 \); Divorce \( \textcircled{C} \approx 245(3) \).]

modus vacandi (moh-das va-kan-di). [Law Latin] Hist. The manner of vacating. • This term was often used in determining the circumstances under which a vassal surrendered an estate to a lord.

modus vivendi (moh-dds vi-ven-di or -dee). [Latin] "means of living (together)." A temporary, provisional arrangement concluded between subjects of international law and giving rise to binding obligations on the parties.

"[Modus vivendi] is an instrument of toleration looking towards a settlement, by preparing for or laying down the basis of a method of living together with a problem or by bridging over some difficulty pending a permanent settlement. Normally it is used for provisional and interim arrangements which ultimately are to be replaced by a formal agreement of a more permanent and detailed character. There is no clear distinction of a modus vivendi from other treaties. The most distinguishing feature is its provisional character; nevertheless a modus vivendi may be exercised for an indefinite period of time if it is prolonged sine die or if a definitive solution to the problem cannot be reached by treaty. Some 'temporary' arrangements have actually turned out to be quite durable." Walter Rudolf, "Modus Vivendi," in A Encyclopedia of Public International Law 443 (1997).

moible (myoo-bal), adj. [Law French] Hist. Movable, as in the phrase biens moebeles ("movable goods").

moiety (moy-tee). (15c) 1. A half of something (such as an estate). — Also termed mediety. 2. A portion less than half; a small segment. 3. In federal customs law, as an estate). — Also termed mediety.

molestation. (15c) 1. The persecution or harassment of someone <molestation of a witness>. 2. The act of making unwanted and indecent advances to or on someone, esp. for sexual gratification <sexual molestation>. — molest, vb. — molester, n.

child molestation. (1951) Any indecent or sexual activity on, involving, or surrounding a child, usu. under the age of 14. See Fed. R. Evid. 414(d). [Cases: Infants C—13.]

Molineux rule. New York law. The principle that evidence of prior crimes is inadmissible when offered to prove the defendant's bad character and to show that the defendant is therefore more likely than not to have committed the crime charged. • The evidence is admissible if offered to prove something other than criminal propensity, such as motive, identity, absence of mistake or accident, intent, or the existence of a common scheme or plan. The rule was first handed down in People v. Molineux, 61 N.E. 286 (N.Y. 1901). [Cases: Criminal Law C—369, 371.]

moliturae (mol-i-t(y)ur-ee or -chuur-ee). [Law Latin] Scots law. Tolls for grinding grain; multures. See CUM ASTRICIS MULTURIS.

molliter manus imposuit (mol-a-tar man-as im-po-[y] a-wit). [Latin] Hist. He gently laid hands upon. • This phrase was used in actions of trespass and assault to justify a defendant's use of force as reasonable, as when it was necessary to keep the peace.

monarchy. (14c) A government in which a single person rules, with powers varying from absolute dictatorship to the merely ceremonial.

limited monarchy. A monarchial form of government in which the monarch's power is subject to constitutional or other restraints. — Also termed constitutional monarchy.

monopolist (mon-uh-puh-lis-t), n. 1. One who has a monopoly; specif., a seller or combination of sellers who can alter the price of a product in the market by changing the quantity sold. 2. By reducing output, a monopolist can raise the price above the cost of supplying the market. 2. A proponent of a monopoly.

monopolization, n. (18c) The act or process of obtaining a monopoly. • In federal antitrust law, monopolization is an offense with two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power — that is, the power to fix prices and exclude competitors — within the relevant market, and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power, as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident. United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 86 S.Ct. 1698 (1966). [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation \(\Rightarrow \) 619]. — monopolize, vb.

attempted monopolization. The effort to monopolize any part of interstate or foreign commerce, consisting in (1) a specific intent to control prices or destroy competition in the relevant market, (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct, and (3) a "dangerous probability" of success in achieving monopoly in the relevant market.

monopoly, n. (16c) 1. Control or advantage obtained by any one supplier or producer over the commercial market within a given region. Cf. oligopoly. 2. The market condition existing when only one economic entity produces a particular product or provides a particular service. • The term is now commonly applied also to situations that approach but do not strictly meet this definition. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation \(\Rightarrow \) 619]. — monopolistic, adj. — monopolist, n.

"[Ninety per cent] is enough to constitute a monopoly: it is doubtful whether sixty or sixty-four per cent is enough; and certainly thirty-three per cent is not." United States v. Aluminum Co. of Am., 148 F.2d 416, 424 (2d Cir. 1945) (Hand, J.).

"In the modern sense, a monopoly exists when all, or so nearly all, of an article of trade or commerce within a community or district, is brought within the hands of one person or set of persons, as practically to bring the handling or production of the commodity or thing within such single control to the exclusion of competition or free traffic therein. A monopoly is created when, as the result of efforts to that end, previously competing businesses are so concentrated in the hands of a single person or corporation, or a few persons or corporations acting together, that they have power, for all practical purposes, to control the prices of a commodity and thus to suppress competition. In brief, a monopoly is the practical suppression of effective business competition which thereby creates a power to control prices to the public harm." 54A Am. Jur. 2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 781, at 107 (1996).

bilateral monopoly. A hypothetical market condition in which there is only one buyer and one seller, resulting in transactional delays because either party can hold out for a better deal without fearing that the other party will turn to a third party.

legal monopoly. The exclusive right granted by government to business to provide utility services that are, in turn, regulated by the government. [Cases: Public Utilities \(\Rightarrow \) 113].

natural monopoly. A monopoly resulting from a circumstance over which the monopolist has no power, as when the market for a product is so limited that only one plant is needed to meet demand.

3. Patents. The exclusive right of a patentee to make, use, sell, offer for sale, or import an invention for a certain period of time, subject to the rights of the owners of other patents that would be infringed. [Cases: Patents \(\Rightarrow \) 185].

"The statute of monopolies, 21 Jac. I. c. 3, allows a royal patent of privilege to be granted for fourteen years to any inventor of a new manufacture, for the sole working or making of the same; by virtue whereof a temporary property becomes vested in the patentee." William Blackstone, 2 Commentaries on the Laws of England 407 (1766).

monopoly leveraging. A theory of liability holding that a party violates the antitrust laws when it exploits its monopoly power in one market to gain a competitive advantage in another market.

monopoly power. The power to control prices or to exclude competition. • The size of the market share is a primary determinant of whether monopoly power exists. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation \(\Rightarrow \) 641].

monopsony (mon-uh-pawn-see). n. (1933) A market situation in which one buyer controls the market. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation \(\Rightarrow \) 641]. — monopsonistic, adj.

"Monopsony is often thought of as the flip side of monopoly. A monopsonist is a seller with no rivals, a monopolist is a buyer with no rivals. A monopsonist has power over price exercised by limiting output. A monopolist also has power over price, but this power is exercised by limiting aggregate purchases. Monopsony injures efficient allocation because reducing the quantity of the input product or service below the efficient level." Lawrence A. Sullivan & Warren S. Grimes, The Law of Antitrust: An Integrated Handbook 137-38 (2000).

Monroe Doctrine. The principle that the United States will allow no intervention or domination in the Western Hemisphere by any non-American nation. • This principle, which has some recognition in international law (though not as a formal doctrine), was first announced by President James Monroe in 1823.

"The Monroe doctrine is a policy which the United States has followed in her own interest more or less consistently for more than a century, and in itself is not contrary to international law, though possible applications of it might easily be so. But it certainly is not a rule of international law. It is comparable to policies such as the 'balance of power' in Europe, or the British policies of maintaining the independence of Belgium or the security of our sea-routes to the East, or the former Japanese claim to something like a paramount influence over developments in the Far East. Apart from other objections, it is impossible to regard as a rule of law a doctrine which the United States claims the sole right to interpret, which she interprets in different senses at different times, and which she applies only as and when she chooses. Nor is the doctrine, as Article 21 of the Covenant described it, a 'regional understanding', for the other states of the region concerned, that is to say, the Continent of America, have never been parties to it.

monstrans de droit (mon-stranz da droyt). [Law French] Hist. A manifestation of right as a method of obtaining restitution from the Crown. It was replaced by the writ of right. Currently, restitution is obtained by an ordinary action against the government.

monstrans de faits (mon-stranz da fay[tis]). [Law French] Hist. A showing of deeds; a proof monstraverunt (mon-strav-ver-ant). [Latin "they have showed".] Hist. A writ of relief for tenants of ancient demesne who were distrained by their lord to do more than the tenure required. — Also termed writ of monstraverunt.

"The little writ serves the turn of a man who claims land according to the custom of the manor; but the tenants of whom we are speaking are protected, and protected collectively, against any increase of their services. This is very plain when the manor is in the hands of a mesne lord. If he attempts to increase the customary services, some of the tenants, acting on behalf of all, will go to the royal chancery and obtain a writ against him. Such a writ begins with the word monstraverunt. The king addresses the lord: — 'A, B and C, men of your manor of X, which is of the ancient demesne of the crown of England, have shown us that you exact from them other customs and services than those which they owe, and which their ancestors did in the time when that manor was in the hands of our predecessors, kings of England; therefore we command you to cease from such exactions, otherwise we shall order our sheriff to interfere.'" 1 Frederic Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 388 (2d ed. 1898).

Montevideo Treaty. Copyright. An 1889 copyright treaty among Western Hemisphere nations, based on the Berne Convention but affording less copyright protection.

month. (18c) (bef. 12c) 1. One of the twelve periods of time in which the calendar is divided <the month of March>. — Also termed calendar month; civil month. [Cases: Time ⇒5.] 2. Any time period approximating 30 days <due one month from today>. 3. At common law, a period of 28 days; the period of one revolution of the moon . — Also termed lunar month. 4. One-twelfth of a tropical year; the time it takes the sun to pass through one sign of the zodiac, usu. approximating 30 days . — Also termed solar month.

month-to-month lease. See lease.

month-to-month tenancy. See periodic tenancy under tenancy.

Montreal Agreement. A private agreement, signed by most international airlines, waiving both the Warsaw Convention's limitation on liability for death and personal-injury cases (currently about $20,000) and the airline's due-care defenses, raising the liability limit per passenger to $75,000, and providing for absolute liability on the part of the carrier (in the absence of passenger negligence) for all flights originating, stopping, or terminating in the United States. • The Montreal Agreement was the result of negotiations in 1965 and 1966 following the United States' denunciation of the Warsaw Convention, based primarily on its low liability limits. — Also termed Agreement Relating to Liability Limitation of the Warsaw Convention and the Hague Protocol. [Cases: Carriers ⇒307; Treaties ⇒8.]

monument, n. (15c) 1. A written document or record, esp. a legal one. 2. Any natural or artificial object that is fixed permanently in land and referred to in a legal description of the land. [Cases: Boundaries ⇒4, 5.] — monumental, adj.

mural monument. A monument set into or otherwise made part of a wall.

natural monument. A nonartificial permanent thing on land, such as a tree, river, or beach. — Also termed natural object. [Cases: Boundaries ⇒4.]

Moody's Investor's Service. An investment-analysis and advisory service. • Moody's rates the financial strength of businesses from Aaa (strongest) to Aa, A, Baa, and so on to C. The grade may also be modified with a 1, 2, or 3 according to the business's relative strength among similar companies. — Often shortened to Moody's.

moonlighting. (1957) The fact or practice of working at a second job after the hours of a regular job. — Also termed dual employment; multiple job-holding.

moonshine. (18c) Slang. A distilled alcoholic beverage, esp. whiskey, that is illegally manufactured. [Cases: Intoxicating Liquors ⇒137.]

moorage. 1. An act of mooring a vessel at a wharf. 2. A mooring charge. [Cases: Wharves ⇒15.]

moored in safety. Marine insurance. (Of a vessel) located in a usual place for landing or loading cargo, free from any imminent peril insured against. [Cases: Insurance ⇒2214.]

moot, adj. (16c) 1. Archaic. Open to argument; debatable. 2. Having no practical significance; hypothetical or academic <the question on appeal became moot once the parties settled their case>. — mootness, n.

moot, vb. (bef. 12c) 1. Archaic. To raise or bring forward (a point or question) for discussion. 2. To render (a question) moot or of no practical significance.

moot case. A matter in which a controversy no longer exists; a case that presents only an abstract question (a point or question) for discussion. 2. To render (a question) moot or of no practical significance.

moot court. (18c) 1. A fictitious court held usu. in law schools to argue moot or hypothetical cases, esp. at the appellate level. 2. A practice session for an appellate argument in which a lawyer presents the argument to other lawyers, who first act as judges by asking questions and who later provide criticism on the argument. — Also termed practice court. Cf. mock trial. moot man. Hist. A person who argued cases in the Inns of Court.

mootness doctrine. (1963) The principle that American courts will not decide moot cases — that is, cases in which there is no longer any actual controversy. Cf. ripeness. [Cases: Action ⇔ 6; Appeal and Error ⇔ 781; Federal Courts ⇔ 12.1.]

mop fair. See statute fair.

mora (mor-a), n. [Latin] Roman law. Willful delay or default in fulfilling a legal obligation. • A creditor or debtor in mora could be required to pay interest on any money owed.

"The word mora means delay or default. In its technical sense it means a culpable delay in making or accepting performance. ... The definition includes both mora debitoris and mora creditoris. In French law and other civil law systems mora debitoris seems (sometimes, if not always) to occur as a mean term between failure to perform a duty timeously and liability for breach. ... Moras usually attaches to a debtor, but it may also attach to a creditor who fails to accept performance duly tendered. ..." R.W. Lee, An Introduction to Roman-Dutch Law 445 (4th ed. 1946).

"Mora. This was wrongful failure to discharge a legal obligation on demand made at a fitting time and place. It must be wilful: failure to appear, by mistake, or in a bona fide belief that there was no obligation, or doubt about it, or by mishap, did not suffice to put a debtor in mora." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 338 (2d ed. 1939).

mora (mor-a), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A moor; unprofitable ground.

moral absolutism. The view that a person's action can always properly be seen as right or wrong, regardless of the situation or the consequences. — Also termed ethical absolutism; objective ethics. Cf. moral relativism.

moral certainty. (17c) Absolute certainty. • Moral certainty is not required to sustain a criminal conviction. See reasonable doubt; proof beyond a reasonable doubt under proof. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇔ 561(1).] moral coercion. See undue influence (1).

moral consideration. See good consideration (1) under consideration (1).

moral depravity. See moral turpitude (1).

moral duress. See duress.

moral duty. See duty (1).

moral evidence. See evidence.

moral fraud. See actual fraud under fraud.

moral hazard. See hazard (2).

morality. (14c) 1. Conformity with recognized rules of correct conduct. 2. The character of being virtuous, esp. in sexual matters.

"The terms 'morality' and 'immorality' ... are understood to have a sexual connotation. In fact, the terms 'ethics' and 'morals' are no longer interchangeable in everyday speech. A governmental official arraigned on a 'morals charge' will be accused of something quite different from one accused of an 'ethics violation.'" William P. Golding, Philosophy of Law 55 (1975).

3. A system of duties; ethics.

private morality. (18c) A person's ideals, character, and private conduct, which are not valid governmental concerns if the individual is to be considered sovereign over body and mind and if the need to protect the individual's physical or moral well-being is insufficient to justify governmental intrusion. • In his essay On Liberty (1859), John Stuart Mill distinguished between conduct or ideals that affect only the individual from conduct that may do harm to others. Mill argued that governmental intrusion is justified only to prevent harm to others, not to influence a person's private morality.

public morality. (18c) 1. The ideals or general moral beliefs of a society. 2. The ideals or actions of an individual to the extent that they affect others.

moral law. (15c) A collection of principles defining right and wrong conduct; a standard to which an action must conform to be right or virtuous.

"It quite often happens that the moral law disapproves of something which the secular permits as a concession to human frailty." Patrick Devlin, The Enforcement of Morals 78 (1968).

moral necessity. See necessity.

moral obligation. See obligation.

moral person. See artificial person under person (3).

moral relativism. The view that there are no absolute or constant standards of right and wrong. — Also termed ethical relativism; subjective ethics. Cf. moral absolutism.

moral right. (usu. pl.) Copyright. The right of an author or artist, based on natural-law principles, to guarantee the integrity of a creation despite any copyright or property-law right of its owner. • Moral rights include rights of (1) attribution (also termed "paternity"); the right to be given credit and to claim credit for a work, and to deny credit if the work is changed; (2) integrity: the right to ensure that the work is not changed without the artist's consent; (3) publication: the right not to reveal a work before its creator is satisfied with it; and (4) retraction: the right to renounce a work and withdraw it from sale or display. Moral rights are recognized by law in much of Europe. Limited moral rights are recognized in the United States in 17 USC § 106A. Cf. integrity right; attribution right. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇔ 101.]

"The recognition of moral rights is founded in the notion that works of art belong to their creators in a way that transcends the sale or transfer of the work to a new owner, because the artist has imbued the work with her personality." Eric M. Brooks, "Titled Justice: Site-Specific Art and Moral Rights After U.S. Adherence to the Berne Convention," 77 Cal. L. Rev. 1431, 1434 (1989).

"Moral rights protect an author's non-pecuniary or non-economic interests. The 1988 [Copyright] Act provides authors and directors with the right to be named when a work is copied or communicated (the right of attribution), the right not to be named as the author of a work which one did not create (the right to object against false attribution), and the right to control the form of the work (the right of integrity)." Lionel Bently & Brad Sherman, Intellectual Property Law 233 (2001). moral suasion. The act or effort of persuading by appeal to principles of morality.

moral turpitude. (17c) 1. Conduct that is contrary to justice, honesty, or morality. • In the area of legal ethics, offenses involving moral turpitude — such as fraud or breach of trust — traditionally make a person unfit to practice law. — Also termed moral depravity. 2. Military law. Any conduct for which the applicable punishment is a dishonorable discharge or confinement not less than one year.

"Moral turpitude means, in general, shameful wickedness — so extreme a departure from ordinary standards of honest, good morals, justice, or ethics as to be shocking to the moral sense of the community. It has also been defined as an act of baseness, vileness, or depravity in the private and social duties which one person owes to another, or to society in general, contrary to the accepted and customary rule of right and duty between people." 50 Am. Jur. 2d Libel and Slander § 165, at 454 (1995).

moral wrong. See wrong.

moral-wrong doctrine. (1962) The doctrine that if a wrongdoer acts on a mistaken understanding of the facts, the law will not exempt the wrongdoer from culpability when, if the facts had been as the actor believed them to be, his or her conduct would nevertheless be immoral. [Cases: Criminal Law C=33.]

moratorium (mor-a-tor-ee-am), (1875) 1. An authorized postponement, usu. a lengthy one, in the deadline for paying a debt or performing an obligation. 2. The period of this delay. 3. The suspension of a specific activity. Pl. moratoriums, moratoria.

moratory (mor-a-tor-ee), adj. (1891) Of or relating to a delay; esp. of or relating to a moratorium.

moratory damages. See DAMAGES.

moratory interest. See prejudgment interest under INTEREST (3).

more or less. (Of a quantity) larger or smaller. • This phrase often appears in deeds <the property contains 120 acres, more or less> and sometimes in contracts <seller's wheat field will produce 50 bushels per acre, more or less>. It qualifies a good-faith representation of quantity. By using the phrase, the parties mutually acknowledge that the true circumstances may differ from what the parties believe they are when the contract is made, and accept a risk that the true quantity will be slightly different. When the qualifying phrase is present, neither party can recover for a surplus or deficiency. [Cases: Deeds C=38(1); Sales C=71; Vendor and Purchaser C=65.]

morganatic marriage. See MARRIAGE (1).

morgangiva (mor-gan-ja-va), n. [Law Latin "morning gift" from Old Norse] Hist. A gift made to the bride on the morning after the wedding; a type of dowry. — Also spelled morgangina.

Morgan Nick Alert. See AMBER ALERT.

Morgan presumption. (1948) A presumption that shifts the burden of proof by requiring the person against whom it operates to produce sufficient evidence to outweigh the evidence that supports the presumed fact, as in requiring a criminal defendant who was arrested while in possession of an illegal substance — and is thereby presumed to have knowingly possessed it — to produce sufficient evidence to entitle the jury to find that the defendant's evidence outweighs the evidence of knowing possession. See Edmund M. Morgan, Instructing the Jury Upon Presumptions and Burdens of Proof, 47 Harv. L. Rev. 59, 82–83 (1933). Cf. THAYER PRESUMPTION. [Cases: Controlled Substances C=68; Criminal Law C=324; Evidence C=85.]

mors (morz), n. [Latin "death"] Roman law. 1. Death. 2. The punishment of death.

morsel of execration. See ordeal of the morsel under ORDEAL.

mors naturalis (morz nach-a-ray-lis). See natural death under DEATH.

mortality factor. Insurance. In life-insurance ratemaking, an estimate of the average number of deaths that will occur each year at each specific age, calculated by using an actuarial table. • The mortality factor is one element that a life insurer uses to calculate premium rates. See ACTUARIAL TABLE; PREMIUM RATE. Cf. INTEREST FACTOR; RISK FACTOR. [Cases: Insurance C=1542(1).]

mortality table. See ACTUARIAL TABLE.

"Another of the petty assizes was that of mort d'ancestor, founded on the Assize of Northampton 1176. The question in this assize was whether the plaintiff's father (or other close ancestor) had been seised in fee — that is, of an inheritable estate — on the day he died, and whether the plaintiff was his next heir. If both questions were answered in the affirmative, the plaintiff was entitled to be put in seizin." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 267–68 (3d ed. 1990).

mortgage (mor-gij), n. (15c) 1. A conveyance of title to property that is given as security for the payment of a debt or the performance of a duty and that will become void upon payment or performance according to the stipulated terms. — Also termed (archaically) dead pledge. [Cases: Mortgages C=1.] 2. A lien against property that is granted to secure an obligation (such as a debt) and that is extinguished upon payment or performance according to stipulated terms. [Cases: Mortgages C=145.] 3. An instrument (such as a deed or contract) specifying the terms of such a transaction. 4. Loosely, the loan on which such a transaction is based. 5. The mortgagor's rights conferred by such a transaction. 6. Loosely, any real-property security transaction, including a deed of trust. — Abbr. M. — mortgage, vb.

"The chief distinction between a mortgage and a pledge is that by a mortgage the general title is transferred to the mortgagor, subject to be revested by performance of the condition; while by a pledge the pledgor retains the general title in himself, and parts with the possession for a special purpose. By a mortgage the title is transferred; by a pledge, the possession." — Leonard A. Jones, A Treatise on the Law of Mortgages § 4, at 5–6 (5th ed. 1908).

adjustable-rate mortgage. A mortgage in which the lender can periodically adjust the mortgage's interest rate in accordance with fluctuations in some external market index. — Abbr. ARM. — Also termed variable-rate mortgage; flexible-rate mortgage. Cf. exploding adjustable-rate mortgage.

all-inclusive mortgage. See wraparound mortgage.

amortized mortgage. A mortgage in which the mortgagor pays the interest as well as a portion of the principal in the periodic payment. • At maturity, the periodic payments will have completely repaid the loan. — Also termed self-liquidating mortgage. See amortization (1). Cf. straight mortgage.

balloon-payment mortgage. A mortgage requiring periodic payments for a specified time and a lump-sum payment of the outstanding balance at maturity.

blanket mortgage. A mortgage covering two or more properties that are pledged to support a debt.

bulk mortgage. 1. A mortgage of personal property in bulk; a pledge of an aggregate of goods in one location. 2. A mortgage of more than one real-estate parcel.

chattel mortgage (chat-<). A mortgage on goods purchased on installment, whereby the seller transfers title to the buyer but retains a lien securing the unpaid balance. • Chattel mortgages have generally been replaced by security agreements, which are governed by Article 9 of the UCC. Cf. retail installment contract under contract. [Cases: Chattel Mortgages ☑ 1.]

closed-end mortgage. A mortgage that does not permit either prepayment or additional borrowing against the collateral. Cf. open-end mortgage. — Also termed closed mortgage.

closed mortgage. See closed-end mortgage.

collateral mortgage. Civil law. A mortgage securing a promissory note pledged as collateral security for a principal obligation.

common-law mortgage. See deed of trust under DEED.

consolidated mortgage. A mortgage created by combining two or more mortgages.

construction mortgage. A mortgage used to finance a construction project.

contingent-interest mortgage. A mortgage whose interest rate is directly related to the economic performance of the pledged property.

conventional mortgage. A mortgage, not backed by government insurance, by which the borrower transfers a lien or title to the lending bank or other financial institution. • These mortgages, which feature a fixed periodic payment of principal and interest throughout the mortgage term, are typically used for home financing. — Also termed conventional loan.

direct-reduction mortgage. An amortized mortgage in which the principal and interest payments are paid at the same time — usu. monthly in equal amounts — with interest being computed on the remaining balance. — Abbr. DRM.

dry mortgage. A mortgage that creates a lien on property but does not impose on the mortgagor any personal liability for any amount that exceeds the value of the premises.

equitable mortgage. A transaction that has the intent but not the form of a mortgage, and that a court of equity will treat as a mortgage. Cf. technical mortgage.

"Courts of equity are not governed by the same principles as courts of law in determining whether a mortgage has been created, and generally, whenever a transaction resolves itself into a security, or an offer or attempt to pledge land as security for a debtor liability, equity will treat it as a mortgage, without regard to the form it may assume, or the name the parties may choose to give it. The threshold issue in an action seeking imposition of an equitable mortgage is whether the plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law. In applying the doctrine of equitable mortgages doubts are resolved in favor of the transaction being a mortgage." — 59 C.J.S. Mortgages § 12, at 62 (1998).

exploding adjustable-rate mortgage. An adjustable-rate mortgage for which the lender resets the interest rate so high that the borrower can no longer make payments. — Sometimes shortened to exploding ARM. Cf. adjustable-rate mortgage.

extended first mortgage. See wraparound mortgage.

FHA mortgage. A mortgage that is insured fully or partially by the Federal Housing Administration.

first mortgage. A mortgage that is senior to all other mortgages on the same property. [Cases: Mortgages ☑ 151.]

fixed-rate mortgage. A mortgage with an interest rate that remains the same over the life of the mortgage regardless of market conditions. — Abbr. FRM.

flexible-rate mortgage. 1. See adjustable-rate mortgage. 2. See renegotiable-rate mortgage.

flip mortgage. A graduated-payment mortgage allowing the borrower to place all or some of the down payment in a savings account and to use the principal and interest to supplement lower mortgage payments in the loan’s early years.

future-advances mortgage. A mortgage in which part of the loan proceeds will not be paid until a future date. [Cases: Mortgages ☑ 16, 116.]

graduated mortgage. See graduated-payment mortgage.

graduated-payment adjustable-rate mortgage. A mortgage combining features of the graduated-payment mortgage and the adjustable-rate mortgage. — Abbr. GPARM. — Also termed graduated mortgage.

graduated-payment mortgage. A mortgage whose initial payments are lower than its later payments. The payments are intended to gradually increase, as the borrower's income increases over time.

growing-equity mortgage. A mortgage that is fully amortized over a significantly shorter term than the traditional 25- to 30-year mortgage, with increasing payments each year. — Abbr. GEM.

interest-only mortgage. A balloon-payment mortgage on which the borrower must at first make only interest payments, but must make a lump-sum payment of the full principal at maturity. — Abbr. IO mortgage. — Also termed standing mortgage; straight-term mortgage.

joint mortgage. A mortgage given to two or more mortgagees jointly.

judicial mortgage. Civil law. A judgment lien created by a recorded legal judgment. [Cases: Judgment ↔ 752–766.]

jumbo mortgage. A mortgage loan in a principal amount that exceeds the dollar limits for a government guarantee.

junior mortgage. A mortgage that is subordinate to another mortgage on the same property. — Also termed puisne mortgage. [Cases: Mortgages ↔ 151.]

leasehold mortgage. A mortgage secured by a lessee's leasehold interest.

legal mortgage. Civil law. A creditor's mortgage arising by operation of law on the debtor's property. — Also termed tacit mortgage.

open-end mortgage. A mortgage that allows the mortgagee to borrow additional funds against the same property. Cf. closed-end mortgage.

package mortgage. A mortgage that includes both real and incidental personal property, such as a refrigerator or stove.

participation mortgage. 1. A mortgage that permits the lender to receive profits of the venture in addition to the normal interest payments. 2. A mortgage held by more than one lender.

price-level-adjusted mortgage. A mortgage with a fixed interest rate but the principal balance of which is adjusted to reflect inflation. — Abbr. PLAM.

puisne mortgage. See junior mortgage.

purchase-money mortgage. A mortgage that a buyer gives the seller, when the property is conveyed, to secure the unpaid balance of the purchase price. — Abbr. PMM. See security agreement. [Cases: Mortgages ↔ 1, 115.]

renegotiable-rate mortgage. A government-sponsored mortgage that requires the mortgagor to renegotiate its terms every three to five years, based on market conditions. — Also termed flexible-rate mortgage; rollover mortgage.

reverse annuity mortgage. A mortgage in which the lender disburses money over a long period to provide regular income to the (usu. elderly) borrower, and in which the loan is repaid in a lump sum when the borrower dies or when the property is sold. — Abbr. RAM. — Also termed reverse mortgage.

rollover mortgage. See renegotiable-rate mortgage.

second mortgage. A mortgage that is junior to a first mortgage on the same property, but that is senior to any later mortgage. [Cases: Mortgages ↔ 151.]

self-liquidating mortgage. See amortized mortgage.

senior mortgage. A mortgage that has priority over another mortgage (a junior mortgage) on the same property. [Cases: Mortgages ↔ 151.]

shared-appreciation mortgage. A mortgage giving the lender the right to recover (as contingent interest) an agreed percentage of the property's appreciation in value when it is sold or at some other specified, future date. — Abbr. SAM.

shared-equity mortgage. A mortgage in which the lender shares in the profits from the property's resale. The lender must usu. first purchase a portion of the property's equity by providing a portion of the down payment.

standing mortgage. See interest-only mortgage.

straight mortgage. A mortgage in which the mortgagor is obligated to pay interest during the mortgage term along with a final payment of principal at the end of the term. Cf. amortized mortgage.

straight-term mortgage. See interest-only mortgage.

submortgage. A mortgage created when a person holding a mortgage as security for a loan procures another loan from a third party and pledges the mortgage as security; a loan to a mortgagee who puts up the mortgage as collateral or security for the loan.

tacit mortgage. See legal mortgage.

technical mortgage. A traditional, formal mortgage, as distinguished from an instrument having the character of an equitable mortgage. Cf. equitable mortgage.

VA mortgage. A veteran's mortgage that is guaranteed by the Veterans Administration.

variable-rate mortgage. See adjustable-rate mortgage.

Welsh mortgage. A type of mortgage, formerly common in Wales and Ireland, by which the mortgagor, without promising to pay the debt, transfers title and possession of the property to the mortgagee, who takes the rents and profits and applies them to the interest, often with a stipulation that any surplus will reduce the principal. • The mortgagee cannot compel the mortgagor to redeem, and cannot foreclose the right to redeem, because no time is fixed for payment. The mortgagor is never in default, but may redeem at any time.

wraparound mortgage. A second mortgage issued when a lender assumes the payments on the borrower’s low-interest first mortgage (usu. issued through a different lender) and lends additional funds. • Such a mortgage covers both the outstanding balance of the first mortgage and the additional funds loaned. 12 CFR § 226.17 cmt. 6. — Also termed extended first mortgage; all-inclusive mortgage.

zero-rate mortgage. A mortgage with a large down payment but no interest payments, with the balance paid in equal installments.

mortgage-backed security. See security.

mortgage banker. An individual or organization that originates real-estate loans for a fee, resells them to other parties, and services the monthly payments.

mortgage bond. See bond (3). mortgage broker. See broker.

mortgage certificate. (1843) A document evidencing part ownership of a mortgage.

mortgage clause. An insurance-policy provision that protects the rights of a mortgagor when the insured property is subject to a mortgage. • Such a clause usu. provides that any insurance proceeds must be allocated between the named insured and the mortgagor “as their interests may appear.” — Also termed mortgage clause. See loss-payable clause; atima. [Cases: Mortgages ☞ 201.]

open mortgage clause. A mortgage clause that does not protect the mortgagor if the insured mortgagor does something to invalidate the policy (such as committing fraud). • This type of clause has been largely superseded by the mortgage-loss clause, which affords the mortgagor more protection. — Also termed simple mortgage clause. Cf. mortgage-loss clause.

standard mortgage clause. A mortgage clause that protects the mortgagee's interest even if the insured mortgagor does something to invalidate the policy. • In effect, this clause creates a separate contract between the insurer and the mortgagee. — Also termed union mortgage clause.

mortgage commitment. (1939) A lender’s written agreement with a borrower stating the terms on which it will lend money for the purchase of specified real property, usu. with a time limitation. [Cases: Mortgages ☞ 211.]

mortgage company. A company that makes mortgage loans and then sells or assigns them to investors.

mortgage-contingency clause. (1965) A real-estate-sale provision that conditions the buyer's performance on obtaining a mortgage loan. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ☞ 79.]} mortgage deed. See deed.

mortgage discount. (1928) The difference between the mortgage principal and the amount the mortgagee actually sells for; the up-front charge by a lender at a real-estate closing for the costs of financing. • Although usu. paid by the buyer, the discount is sometimes paid by the seller when required by law, as with a VA mortgage. — Also termed point; mortgage point; loan-brokerage fee; new-loan fee.

mortgagee (mor-ga-je). (16c) One to whom property is mortgaged; the mortgage creditor, or lender. Also termed mortgage-holder. [Cases: Mortgages ☞ 23.]

mortgagee in possession. (18c) A mortgagee who takes control of mortgaged land by agreement with the mortgagor, usu. upon default of the loan secured by the mortgage. [Cases: Mortgages ☞ 187.]

mortgagee clause. See mortgage clause.

mortgagee policy. A title-insurance policy that covers only the mortgagee's title and not the owner's title. Cf. owner's policy. [Cases: Mortgages ☞ 201.]

mortgage foreclosure. See foreclosure.

mortgage-guarantee insurance. Insurance provided by the Mortgage Guarantee Insurance Company to mortgage lenders that grant mortgages to parties having less than a 20% down payment. • The cost of the insurance is included in the closing costs. [Cases: Mortgages ☞ 201.]

mortgage-holder. See mortgagee.

mortgage insurance. See insurance.

mortgage lien. See lien.

mortgage loan. See loan.

mortgage-loss clause. A mortgage clause providing that title insurance will not be invalidated by the mortgagor’s acts. • Thus, even if the mortgagor does an act that would otherwise make the policy void, the act merely voids the policy as against the mortgagor, but it remains in full force for the benefit of the mortgagee. — Also termed New York standard clause; union-loss clause. Cf.
open mortgage clause under mortgage clause. [Cases: Mortgages C® 201.]

mortgage market. The conditions that provide the demand for new mortgage loans and the later resale of those loans in the secondary mortgage market.

primary mortgage market. The national market in which mortgages are originated.

secondary mortgage market. The national market in which existing mortgages are bought and sold, usu. on a package basis.

mortgage note. See note (1).

mortgage point. 1. See point (3). 2. See mortgage discount.

mortgagor. See mortgagor.

mortgage servicing. The administration of a mortgage loan, including the collection of payments, release of liens, and payment of property insurance and taxes. Servicing is usu. performed by the lender or the lender’s agent, for a fee. [Cases: Mortgages C® 211.]

mortgage warehousing. An arrangement in which a mortgage company holds loans for later resale at a discount.

mortgaging out. The purchase of real property by financing 100% of the purchase price.

mortgagor (mor-ga-jor or mor-ga-jor). One who mortgages property; the mortgage-debtor, or borrower. Also spelled mortgagor; mortgagor. [Cases: Mortgages C® 23.]

mortification. (14c) The act of disposing of or contributing property for religious, charitable, or public purposes.

mortis causa (mor-tis kaw-za). See gift causa mortis under gift.

mortmain (mort-mayn). [French “deadhand”] (15c) The condition of lands or tenements held in perpetuity by an ecclesiastical or other corporation. Land alienated in mortmain is not inalienable, but it will never eschew or pass by inheritance (and thus no inheritance taxes will ever be paid) because a corporation does not die. See mortmain act; statute of mortmain. [Cases: Corporations C® 435; Religious Societies C® 15.]

mortmain statute. (1839) A law that limits gifts and other dispositions of land to corporations (esp. charitable ones) and that prohibits corporations from holding land in perpetuity. In England, laws such as the Provisions of Westminster and Magna Carta essentially required the Crown’s authorization before land could vest in a corporation. The object was to prevent lands from being held by religious corporations in perpetuity. Although this type of restriction was not generally part of the common law in the United States, it influenced the enactment of certain state laws restricting the amount of property that a corporation could hold for religious or charitable purposes. Also termed mortmain act; statute of mortmain. [Cases: Corporations C® 434.]

mortua manus. See deadhand control.

mortuary. (16c) 1. A place where cadavers are prepared for burial; a place where dead bodies are held before burial. [Cases: Dead Bodies C® 2.] 2. A burial place.

mortuary table. See actuarial table.

mortuum vadium (mor-choo-aym vay-dee-aym). See vadium mortuum under vadium.

mortuus (mor-choo-as). adj. [Latin] Hist. 1. Dead. A sheriff’s return that the named party is dead.

most favorable light. See light most favorable.

most favored nation. A treaty status granted to a nation, usu. in international trade, allowing it to enjoy the privileges that the other party accords to other nations under similar circumstances. The primary effect of most-favored-nation status is lower trade tariffs. Sometimes shortened to favored nation. Abbrev. MFN. Also termed most-favored-nation status. [Cases: Treaties C® 8.]

most-favored-nation act. 1. A clause in an agreement between two nations providing that each will treat the other as well as it treats any other nation that is given preferential treatment. [Cases: Treaties C® 8.] By extension, such a clause in any contract, but esp. an oil-and-gas contract. — Often shortened to favored-nation clause; MFN clause. Also termed most-favored-nations clause. Cf. preferential tariff under tariff (2).

most-favored-nation status. See most favored nation.

most favored nation treatment. Intellectual property. The practice or policy of automatically and unconditionally granting any intellectual-property protection, advantage, favor, privilege, or immunity that by treaty is extended to nationals of any member country to the nationals of all member countries. This treatment is incorporated into the TRIPs agreement. — Abbrev. MFN treatment.

most-favored-tenant clause. (1962) A commercial-lease provision ensuring that the tenant will be given the benefit of any negotiating concessions given to other tenants.

most-significant-contacts test. See most-significant-relationships test.

most-significant-relationship test. (1968) Conflict of laws. The doctrine that, to determine the state law to apply to a dispute, the court should determine which state has the most substantial connection to the occurrence and the parties. For example, in a tort case, the court should consider where the injury occurred, where the conduct that caused the injury occurred, the residence, place of business, or place of incorporation of the parties, and the place where the relationship between the parties, if any, is centered. Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § 145 (1971). In a case involving a contract, the court should consider where the contract was made, where the contract was negotiated, where the contract was to be performed, and the domicile, place of business, or place of incorporation of the parties. Id. § 188. Also termed most-significant-contacts test. [Cases: Action ⇔ 17.]

most suitable use. See highest and best use under USE (1).

most-suitable-use value. See optimal-use value under VALUE (2).

moteer (moh-teer). Hist. A customary payment or service made at the lord's court.

mother. (bef. 12c) A woman who has given birth to, provided the egg for, or legally adopted a child. • The term is sometimes interpreted as including a pregnant woman who has not yet given birth. [Cases: Parent and Child ⇔ 1.] adoptive mother. See adoptive parent under PARENT.

biological mother. (1965) The woman who provides the egg that develops into an embryo. • With today's genetic-engineering techniques, the biological mother may not be the birth mother, but she is usu. the legal mother. — Also termed genetic mother; natural mother. [Cases: Children Out-of-Wedlock ⇔ 1.]

birth mother. (1958) The woman who carries an embryo during the gestational period and who delivers the child. • When a child is conceived through artificial insemination, the birth mother may not be the genetic or biological mother. And she may not be the legal mother. — Also termed gestational mother. See surrogate mother; natural mother; biological mother. [Cases: Child Custody ⇔ 274.5; Child Support ⇔ 63; Children Out-of-Wedlock ⇔ 15; Parent and Child ⇔ 20.]

de facto mother. See de facto parent under PARENT.

foster mother. See foster parent under PARENT.

genetic mother. See biological mother.

gestational mother. See birth mother.

godmother. See godparent.

intentional mother. See intentional parent under PARENT.

natural mother. 1. See birth mother. 2. See biological mother.

psychological mother. See psychological parent under PARENT.

stepmother. (bef. 12c) The wife of one's father by a later marriage. [Cases: Child Custody ⇔ 272; Parent and Child ⇔ 14.]

surrogate mother. (1914) 1. A woman who carries out the gestational function and gives birth to a child for another; esp. a woman who agrees to provide her uterus to carry an embryo throughout pregnancy, typically on behalf of an infertile couple, and who relinquishes any parental rights she may have upon the birth of the child. • A surrogate mother may or may not be the genetic mother of a child. — Often shortened to surrogate. — Also termed surrogate parent; gestational surrogate; gestational carrier; surrogate carrier. [Cases: Child Custody ⇔ 274.5; Child Support ⇔ 63; Children Out-of-Wedlock ⇔ 15; Parent and Child ⇔ 20.] 2. A person who performs the role of a mother. [Cases: Parent and Child ⇔ 15.] mother country. A colonizing nation; a colonial power. See COLONY.

Mother Hubbard clause. (1939) 1. A clause stating that a mortgage secures all the debts that the mortgagor may at any time owe to the mortgagee. — Also termed anaconda clause; dragnet clause. [Cases: Mortgages ⇔ 14, 114, 121.] 2. Oil & gas. A provision in an oil-and-gas lease protecting the lessee against errors in the description of the property by providing that the lease covers all the land owned by the lessor in the area. • A Mother Hubbard clause is sometimes combined with an after-acquired-title clause. — Also termed cover-all clause. 3. A court's written declaration that any relief not expressly granted in a specific ruling or judgment is denied. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇔ 55, 73.1.] mother-in-law. (14c) The mother of a person's spouse.

motion. (18c) 1. A written or oral application requesting a court to make a specified ruling or order. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇔ 921–928; Motions ⇔ 1.]

calendar motion. (1930) A motion relating to the time of a court appearance • Examples include motions to continue, motions to advance, and motions to reset. [Cases: Trial ⇔ 9–16.]

contradictory motion. Civil law. A motion that is likely to be contested or that the nonmoving side should have an opportunity to contest. Cf. contradictory judgment under JUDGMENT.

cross-motion. A competing request for relief or orders similar to that requested by another party against the cross-moving party, such as a motion for summary judgment or for sanctions.

dilatory motion (dil-a-tor-ee). (18c) 1. A motion made solely for the purpose of delay or obstruction. 2. A motion that delays the proceedings.

enumerated motion. Archaic. A motion directly related to the proceeding or the merits of the case.

ex parte motion (eks par-te). (1831) A motion made to the court without notice to the adverse party; a motion that a court considers and rules on without hearing from all sides. — Also termed ex parte application. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇔ 921; Motions ⇔ 19.]

motion for reduction. Family law. A motion to lessen the amount of child-support payments. • This is a type of motion to modify. [Cases: Child Support ☐= 331, 331.]

motion for settlement. A request to clarify or correct the form of an order or judgment that does not correctly state the court's decision. • The motion cannot be used to request a substantial change to or amplification of the court's decision. [Cases: Motions ☐= 49.]

motion of course. A party's request that the court may grant as a matter of routine, without investigating or inquiring further. [Cases: Motions ☐= 5.]

motion to modify. A post-final-decree motion asking the court to change one of its earlier orders; esp. a request to change child support or visitation. — Also termed complaint for modification; motion for modification. [Cases: Child Custody ☐= 609; Child Support ☐= 331; Divorce ☐= 245; Federal Civil Procedure ☐= 921; Motions ☐= 58.]

omnibus motion. (1889) A motion that makes several requests or asks for multiple forms of relief. [Cases: Motions ☐= 36.]

posttrial motion. (1889) A motion made after judgment is entered, such as a motion for new trial. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ☐= 2368, 2605; New Trial ☐= 124.]

show-cause motion. A motion filed with the court requesting that a litigant be required to appear and explain why that litigant has failed to comply with a legal requirement. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ☐= 1834; Motions ☐= 1, 2.]

special motion. (16c) A motion specifically requiring the court's discretion upon hearing, as distinguished from one granted as a matter of course. [Cases:
Motions ☐= 36.]

2. Parliamentary law. A proposal made in a meeting, in a form suitable for its consideration and action, that the meeting (or the organization for which the meeting is acting) take a certain action or view. • A motion may be a main motion or a secondary motion. A motion technically becomes a "question" when the chair states it for the meeting's consideration. But for most purposes, the parliamentary terms "motion" and "question" are interchangeable. Cf. request.

coexisting motion. Parliamentary law. A main motion, such as one raising a question of privilege, that is pending at the same time as another main motion of lower precedence.

immediately pending motion. The pending motion directly under consideration; the pending motion last stated by the chair and next in line for a vote. See pending motion; precedence (4).

improper motion. A motion that is out of order. See out of order.

incidental main motion. A main motion that relates to a procedural rather than a substantive matter; an otherwise secondary motion, made when no main motion is pending.— Also termed procedural main motion; quasi-main motion; specific main motion. See main motion. Cf. original main motion.

incidental motion. A secondary motion that relates to the procedure under which other business is considered. See secondary motion.

main motion. A motion that brings business before a meeting. • A main motion may be an original main motion or an incidental main motion. — Also termed principal motion; proposition.

ordinary main motion. See original main motion.

original main motion. A main motion that relates to a substantive rather than a procedural matter; a main motion that is not an incidental main motion.—
Also termed ordinary main motion; substantive main motion; substantive motion. See main motion. Cf. incidental main motion.

parliamentary motion. 1. Any motion that is not an original main motion — that is, any motion that is either a secondary motion or an incidental main motion. 2. A motion under parliamentary law; motion (2).

pending motion. A motion under consideration, even though other pending motions of higher rank may have taken precedence over it. Cf. immediately pending motion.

principal motion. See main motion.

privileged motion. A secondary motion that does not relate to other business, but rather to the organization, the meeting, its members, and their rights and privileges, and is thus entitled to prompt attention in preference over other pending business. See secondary motion; privilege (6).

procedural main motion. See incidental main motion.

procedural motion. A motion that relates to the manner in which a meeting conducts its business, rather than to the business itself. • A procedural motion may be either an incidental motion (including an incidental main motion) or a privileged motion.

quasi-main motion. See incidental main motion.

restorative motion. A motion that renews consideration of a question already disposed of. — Also termed restoratory motion.

restoratory motion. See restorative motion.

secondary motion. A motion that does not itself bring business before the meeting, and is therefore in order when a main motion is pending. • A secondary motion may be either an incidental motion (although not an incidental main motion), a privileged motion, or a subsidiary motion. Cf. main motion.

specific main motion. See incidental main motion.

subsidiary motion. A secondary motion that directly affects the main motion's form or consideration. See secondary motion.
motion for a directed verdict. (1904) A party's request that the court enter judgment in its favor before submitting the case to the jury because there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis on which a reasonable jury could find for the other party. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a party may move for judgment as a matter of law anytime before the case has been submitted to the jury. This kind of motion replaces the court paper formerly known as a motion for directed verdict (and still is in many jurisdictions). If the motion is denied and the case is submitted to the jury, resulting in an unfavorable verdict, the motion may be renewed within ten days after entry of the judgment. This aspect of the motion replaces the former main motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

motion for j.n.o.v. See motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

motion for a new trial. (1822) A party's request that the court enter judgment in its favor before submitting the case to the jury because there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis on which a reasonable jury could find for the other party. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a party may move for judgment as a matter of law before the case has been submitted to the jury. This kind of motion was formerly known as a motion for directed verdict (and still is in many jurisdictions). If the motion is denied and the case is submitted to the jury, resulting in an unfavorable verdict, the motion may be renewed within ten days after entry of the judgment. This aspect of the motion replaces the court paper formerly known as a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Fed. R. Civ. P. 50. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C= 2121, 2605; Judgment C= 199; Trial C= 167.]

motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. (1822) A party's request that the court enter judgment in its favor despite the jury's contrary verdict because there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a jury to find for the other party. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, this procedure has been replaced by the provision for a motion for judgment as a matter of law, which must be presented before the case has been submitted to the jury but can be reasserted if it is denied and the jury returns an unfavorable verdict. Fed. R. Civ. P. 50. — Also termed motion for j.n.o.v. See motion for judgment as a matter of law. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C= 2605; Judgment C= 199.] motion for judgment of acquittal. (1923) A criminal defendant's request, at the close of the government's case or the close of all evidence, to be acquitted because there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis on which a reasonable jury could return a guilty verdict. • If the motion is granted, the government has no right of appeal. Fed. R. Crim. P. 29(a). — Abbr. MJA. [Cases: Criminal Law C= 1108, 299; Federal Civil Procedure C= 124(1).]

motion for judgment on the pleadings. (1923) A party's request that the court rule in favor on the pleadings on file, without accepting evidence, as to whether the outcome of the case rests on the court's interpretation of the law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C= 1052; Pleading C= 342.]

motion for protective order. (1948) A party's request that the court protect it from potentially abusive action by the other party, usu. relating to discovery, as when one party seeks discovery of the other party's trade secrets. • A court will sometimes craft a protective order to protect one party's trade secrets by ordering that any secret information exchanged in discovery be used only for purposes of the pending suit and not be publicized. — Also termed motion for a protective motion to dissolve interference order. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C→ 1271; Pretrial Procedure C→ 41.]

motion for reduction. See motion (i).

motion for relief from stay. See motion to lift the stay.

motion for relief from the judgment. (1867) A party's request that the court correct a clerical mistake in the judgment — that is, a mistake that results in the judgment's incorrectly reflecting the court's intentions — or relieve the party from the judgment because of such matters as (I) inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, (2) newly discovered evidence that could not have been discovered through diligence in time for a motion for new trial, (3) the judgment's being the result of fraud, misrepresentation, or misconduct by the other party, or (4) the judgment's being void or having been satisfied or released. Fed. R. Civ. P. 60. Cf. motion to alter or amend the judgment. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C→ 2659; Judgment C→ 336-402.]

motion for repleader. (18c) Common-law pleading. An unsuccessful party's posttrial motion asking that the pleadings begin anew because the issue was joined on an immaterial point. • The court never awards a repleader to the party who tendered the immaterial issue. Cf. repleader. [Cases: Pleading C→ 286.] motion for resettlement. See motion (i).

motion for summary judgment. (1842) A request that the court enter judgment without a trial because there is no genuine issue of material fact to be decided by a factfinder — that is, because the evidence is legally insufficient to support a verdict in the nonmovant's favor. • In federal court and in most state courts, the movant-defendant must point out in its motion the absence of evidence on an essential element of the plaintiff's claim, after which the burden shifts to the nonmovant-plaintiff to produce evidence raising a genuine fact issue. But if a party moves for summary judgment on its own claim or defense, then it must establish each element of the claim or defense as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. — Abbr. MSJ. — Also termed summary-judgment motion; motion for summary disposition. See SUMMARY JUDGMENT. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C→ 2533; Judgment C→ 181(2), 183.]

motion in arrest of judgment. (17c) 1. A defendant's motion claiming that a substantial error appearing on the face of the record vitiates the whole proceeding and the judgment. 2. A postjudgment motion in a criminal case claiming that the indictment is insufficient to sustain a judgment or that the verdict is somehow insufficient. [Cases: Criminal Law C→ 966-976.]

motion in limine (in lim··na). (18c) A pretrial request that certain inadmissible evidence not be referred to or offered at trial. • Typically, a party makes this motion when it believes that mere mention of the evidence during trial would be highly prejudicial and could not be remedied by an instruction to disregard. If, after the motion is granted, the opposing party mentions or attempts to offer the evidence in the jury's presence, a mistrial may be ordered. A ruling on a motion in limine does not always preserve evidentiary error for appellate purposes. To raise such an error on appeal, a party may be required to formally object when the evidence is actually admitted or excluded during trial. [Cases: Criminal Law C→ 632(4); Federal Civil Procedure C→ 927.5; Pretrial Procedure C→ 3.] motion of course. See motion (i).

motion to alter or amend the judgment. (1950) A party's request that the court correct a substantive error in the judgment, such as a manifest error of law or fact. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a motion to alter or amend the judgment must be filed within ten days after the judgment is entered. It should not ordinarily be used to correct clerical errors in a judgment. Those types of errors — that is, errors that result in the judgment not reflecting the court's intention — may be brought in a motion for relief from the judgment, which does not have the ten-day deadline. A motion to alter or amend the judgment is used directed to substantive issues regarding the judgment, such as an intervening change in the law or newly discovered evidence that was not available at trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e). Cf. motion for relief from the judgment. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C→ 2659; Judgment C→ 294-333.]

motion to compel discovery. (1960) A party's request that the court force the party's opponent to respond to the party's discovery request (as to answer interrogatories or produce documents). Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a). — Often shortened to motion to compel. — Also termed motion to enforce discovery. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C→ 1278; Pretrial Procedure C→ 44, 310, 434.]

motion to correct inventorship. Patents. A request in an interference proceeding to add one or more unnamed coinventors to the patent application. • The motion will be granted unless the unnamed coinventor acted with the intent to deceive. [Cases: Patents C→ 106(1).]

motion to dismiss. (18c) A request that the court dismiss the case because of settlement, voluntary withdrawal, or a procedural defect. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a plaintiff may voluntarily dismiss the case (under Rule 41(a)) or the defendant may ask the court to dismiss the case, usu. based on one of the defenses listed in Rule 12(b). These defenses include lack of personal or subject-matter jurisdiction, improper venue, insufficiency of process, the plaintiff's failure to state a claim on which relief can be granted, and the failure to join an indispensable party. A defendant will frequently file a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, which is governed by Rule 12(b)(6), claiming that even if all the plaintiff's allegations are true, they would not be legally sufficient to state a claim on which relief might be granted. — Abbr. MTD. See DEMURRER. [Cases: Criminal Law C→ 303.5-303.35; Federal Civil Procedure C→ 1707, 1825; Pretrial Procedure C→ 511, 675.] motion to dissolve interference. Patents. A request by the senior party to dismiss challenges to its priority as the first inventor. [Cases: Patents C→ 106(5).] motion to enforce discovery. See motion to compel discovery.

motion to lift the stay. (1969) Bankruptcy. A party's request that the bankruptcy court alter the automatic bankruptcy stay to allow the movant to move against the debtor or the debtor's property, as when a creditor seeks permission to foreclose on a lien because its security interest is not adequately protected. — Also termed motion for relief from stay; motion to modify the stay. [Cases: Bankruptcy C==2435.]

motion to modify. See motion (1).

motion to modify the stay. See motion to lift the stay.

motion to quash /kwaʃ/. (18c) A party's request that the court nullify process or an act instituted by the other party, as in seeking to nullify a subpoena. [Cases: Witnesses C==9, 16.]

motion to remand. (1816) In a case that has been removed from state court to federal court, a party's request that the federal court return the case to state court, usu. because the federal court lacks jurisdiction or because the procedures for removal were not properly followed. 28 USCA § 1447(c). [Cases: Removal of Cases C==107.]

motion to strike. (1806) 1. Civil procedure. A party's request that the court delete insufficient defenses or immaterial, redundant, impertinent, or scandalous statements from an opponent's pleading. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C==1144; Pleading C==351, 361.] 2. Evidence. A request that inadmissible evidence be deleted from the record and that the jury be instructed to disregard it. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C==2018; Trial C==88.]

motion to suppress. (18c) A request that the court prohibit the introduction of illegally obtained evidence at a criminal trial. [Cases: Criminal Law C==394.6.]

motion to transfer venue. (1934) A request that the court transfer the case to another district or county, usu. because the original venue is improper under the applicable venue rules or because of local prejudice. See venue; change of venue. [Cases: Criminal Law C==115–144; Federal Courts C==141; Venue C==58.]

motion to withdraw. 1. An attorney's request for a court's permission to cease representing a client in a lawsuit. 2. A defendant's formal request for a court's permission to change his plea or strike an admission. — Also termed (in sense 2) motion to withdraw a plea. [Cases: Attorney and Client C==76(1); Criminal Law C==1831.]

motion to withdraw a plea. See motion to withdraw (2).

motive. (14c) Something, esp. willful desire, that leads one to act. — Also termed interior intent. Cf. intent.

The term 'motive' is unfortunately ambiguous. That feeling which internally urges or pushes a person to do or refrain from doing an act is an emotion, and is of course evidential towards his doing or not doing the act. But when that evidential fact comes in turn to be evidenced, we must rely on two sorts of data, (a) the person's own expressions of that emotion, e.g., 'I hate M,' or 'I wish I owned that necklace', and (b) external circumstances likely in human experience to arouse the emotion, e.g., a slander on D may be evidence that D became angry; a purse of money left in sight of D may be evidence that D's desire to have it was aroused. Now this second sort of evidential circumstance (b) is loosely referred to as 'motive,' — though in reality it is only evidential of the emotion, which itself is evidential of the act. 'John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 76 (1935).

bad motive. (18c) A person's knowledge that an act is wrongful while the person commits the act.

malicious motive. (18c) A motive for bringing a prosecution, other than to do justice. [Cases: Malicious Prosecution C==30.]

Motor Carrier Act. A federal statute, originally enacted in 1935 (49 USCA §§ 502–507), subjecting commercial motor carriers of freight and passengers in interstate commerce to the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, now the U.S. Department of Transportation. • The Act was repealed in the 1980s. [Cases: Automobiles C==60.]

MOU. abbr. memorandum of understanding.

movable, n. (usu. pl.) (15c) 1. Property that can be moved or displaced, such as personal goods; a tangible or intangible thing in which an interest constitutes personal property; specif., anything that is not so attached to land as to be regarded as a part of it as determined by local law. — Also termed movable property; movable thing. [Cases: Property C==4.]

'Movables and immovables. The main distinction drawn in later Roman law and modern systems based thereon between kinds of things subject to ownership and possession. While basically the distinction corresponds to everyday conceptions, assigning animals and vehicles to the former and land and buildings to the latter category, particular things may be assigned to one category rather than the other for reasons of convenience. Thus, in French law, farm implements and animals are immovables. The distinction is also important in international private law, more so than that between real and personal. ... Thus, land held on lease is personal property by English law for historical reason, but in international private law it is a right in immovable property.' David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 858 (1980).

intangible movable. A physical thing that can be moved but that cannot be touched in the usual sense.

• Examples are light and electricity.

'Intangible movables' is a term of art in the common law which has been applied more widely than its meaning literally justifies, which is merely to those things that have physical existence and can be moved, though cannot be touched in the normal sense, such as light, electricity and radioactive waves. In English law the term has been generally applied to interests created by law which have only a legal, not a physical existence, and are accordingly capable only of legal, not physical, movement. It is convenient, however, to retain a term which is generally accepted and understood in this special legal meaning." R.H. Graveson, Conflict of Laws 470 (7th ed. 1974).

'Moveables are, in the phraseology of the law of Scotland, opposed to heritage; so that every species of property, and every right a person can hold, is by that law either heritable or moveable. Hence, moveables are not merely corporeal subjects capable of being moved, but every species of property, corporeal or incorporeal, which does not descend to the heir in heritage.” William Bell, Bell’s Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 662 (George Watson ed., 1882).

mulct (malkt), n. (16c) A fine or penalty.

mulct, vb. (17c) 1. To punish by a fine. 2. To deprive or divest of, esp. fraudulently.

mulct law. Hist. An Iowa law that allowed some saloons to pay the state a sum of money and continue to operate despite a statewide prohibition against alcohol sales. • While the money paid was called a mulct, it was effectively a licensing tax rather than a criminal penalty because continuing violations of the liquor law were not prosecuted.

mule, n. Slang. A person hired to smuggle contraband, esp. a controlled substance, and deliver it to the distributor at a destination point. • For example, a drug mule might carry cocaine through a security checkpoint by concealing it beneath a suitcase’s false bottom.

mulier (myoo-lee-ar), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. A woman. • This term at various times referred to a marriageable virgin, a woman not a virgin, a wife, or a mistress. 2. Hist. & Scots law. A legitimate son; the son of a mulier (“lawful wife”).

mulieratus filius (myoo-lee-ar-a-tas fil-ee-as), Hist. & Scots law. A legitimate son or daughter; the son of a mulier (“lawful wife”).

muliearty (myoo-lee-ar-te). Hist. The condition of a legitimate child, as distinguished from a bastard.
multa (mal-ta), n. [Latin "a fine"] Hist. Eccles. law. A fine the bishops paid to the king so that they could make and probate wills and administer estates. — Also termed multura episcopi (mal-t[yl]oor-a i-pis-kə-pi).

multicraft union. See union.

multidisciplinary practice. A fee-sharing association of lawyers and nonlawyers in a firm that delivers both legal and nonlegal services. • Rule 5.4 of the Model Rules of Professional Conduct effectively bars multidisciplinary practice. Under this rule, a lawyer cannot (1) share legal fees with nonlawyers, (2) form a partnership involving the practice of law with nonlawyers, (3) form a law firm in which a nonlawyer has an interest, or (4) allow a nonlawyer to direct the lawyer's professional judgment. — Abbr. MDP. — Sometimes termed multidisciplinary practice of law. [Cases: Attorney and Client C= 10.]

multidistrict litigation. (1966) Civil procedure. Federal-court litigation in which civil actions pending in different districts and involving common fact questions are transferred to a single district for coordinated pretrial proceedings, after which the actions are returned to their original districts for trial. • Multidistrict litigation is governed by the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation, which is composed of seven circuit and district judges appointed by the Chief Justice of the United States. 28 USCA § 1407. — Abbr. MDL. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=>9; Federal Courts C=> 151-157.]

Multiethnic Placement Act of 1994. A model statute intended to (1) decrease the length of time that a child awaits adoption, (2) identify and recruit adoptive and foster parents who can meet the needs of available children, and (3) eliminate adoption discrimination based on race, color, or national origin of the child or the adoptive parents. — Abbr. MEPa.

multifarious (mal-ta-fair-ee-as), adj. (16c) 1. (Of a single pleading) improperly joining distinct matters or causes of action, and thereby confounding them. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=676; Pleading C=50, 64.] 2. Improperly joining parties in a lawsuit. 3. Diverse; many and various. — multifariously, adv.

multifarious issue. See issue (1).

multilateral, adj. (1827) Involving more than two parties..

multiple-party account. See account.

multiple sentences. See sentence.

multiplicity (mal-ta-plis-i-tee), n. Criminal procedure. The improper charging of the same offense in more than one count of a single indictment or information. • Multiplicity violates the Fifth Amendment protection against double jeopardy. [Cases: Indictment and Information C=126.] — multiplicious (mal-ta-plis-i-tas), adj.

multiplicity of actions. (17c) The existence of two or more lawsuits litigating the same issue against the same defendant. — Also termed multiplicity of suits; multiplicity of proceedings. See piecemeal litigation. [Cases: Action C=53.]

multiplicity of claims. See aggregation of claims.

multiplied damages. See multiple damages under damages.

Multistate Bar Examination. See bar examination.

multistate corporation. See corporation.

multital (mal-ti-tal), adj. (1917) 1. Of or relating to legal relations that exist among three or more people, esp. a multitude of people. Cf. unital.

'Tort and breach of contract are alike breaches of duty, but in the case of tort the pre-existing duty of the wrong- doer was one that was shared by every other member of society; and the injured party whose right was violated had not merely one right, he had a multitude of rights. His rights and the correlative duties of others were 'multital.' The secondary right and duty, however, arising from the tort, are relations that exist between the two persons only. They are 'unital.' In the case of a breach of contract, both the primary right and duty and the secondary right and duty are 'unital.' "William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 11 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

2. Rare. See in rem.

multure. Hist. 1. A quantity of grain that was paid to a mill's owner or tenant in exchange for grinding the Munchausen syndrome by proxy (man-chow-zan). A condition in which a caregiver, usu. a parent, fabricates or induces a child’s medical condition and seeks medical treatment for the child on the basis of the fabrications or induced condition. This syndrome is a kind of child abuse, esp. when the victim is subjected to repeated medical examinations and treatment, often of an invasive nature, and sometimes even to physical injuries that induce symptoms consistent with the falsified medical condition. The parent is usu. emotionally deprived and fabricates or causes the child’s illness or medical condition as an attention-getting device. [Cases: Infants ☐= 156, 158.] munera (myoo-n-er-a), n. [Law Latin “graces”] Hist. Tenancies at will; tenancies made at the grantor’s pleasure.

munera publica (myoo-n-er-a psh-li-ka). [Latin] Roman law. Public duties, such as performing the offices of tutor and curator, and of index privatus. Sing. munus publicum.

Among the Romans there were certain offices regarded as public duties, which no citizen (unless he could plead certain specified excuses) could refuse to accept of and fulfil; and among these were included the offices of tutor and curator. These offices are voluntary by the law of Scotland, and their acceptance, as well as the performance of the attendant duties, cannot be imposed upon any one against his own will. But if the office has been once accepted and acted upon, the tutor or curator cannot resign it. He must perform the duties of his office until it expires through the death, attainment of minority or majority, as the case may be, or it may be through the marriage of the ward, and he will be liable for the consequences of his neglect, as well as the consequences of his acting and intromissions.’ John Trayner, Trayner’s Latin Maxims 364 (4th ed. 1894).

municipal, adj. (16c) 1. Of or relating to a city, town, or local governmental unit. 2. Of or relating to the internal government of a state or nation (as contrasted with international).

murder, n. (bef. 12c) The killing of a human being with malice aforethought. • At common law, the crime of murder was not subdivided, but many state statutes have adopted the degree structure outlined below, though the Model Penal Code has not. Model Penal Code § 210.2. See malice aforethought. Cf. manslaughter. [Cases: Homicide C=520.] — murder, vb. — murderous, adj.

"The word 'murder' has . . . had a devious history. Its original sense is the particularly heinous crime of secret slaying. After the conquest it was observed that Romans were frequently found dead under mysterious circumstances, and so William I enacted that if anyone were found slain and the slayer were not caught, then the hundred should pay a fine; this fine is a murdrum. The practice soon grew up to taking inquests and if it were presented that the dead man was English, then the fine was not due. In 1267 it was enacted that accidental deaths should not give rise to murdrum, and finally in 1340 presentment of Englishry and murdrum were abolished. Henceforth the word slowly tends to get linked up with 'malice aforethought' and so we get the classical formulae describing the crime of murder." Theodore F.T. Plucknett, A Concise History of the Common Law 445 (5th ed. 1956).

constructive murder. See felony murder. deprauded-indifference murder; unintentional murder. [Cases: Homicide C=533.] felony murder. (1926) Murder that occurs during the commission of a dangerous felony (often limited to rape, kidnapping, robbery, burglary, and arson). — Also termed unintentional murder; (in English law) constructive murder. See felony-murder rule. [Cases: Homicide C=580.]

first-degree murder. (1895) Murder that is willful, deliberate, or premeditated, or that is committed during the course of another dangerous felony. • All murder perpetrated by poisoning or by lying in wait is considered first-degree murder. All types of murder not involving willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing are usu. considered second-degree murder. — Also termed murder of the first degree; murder one. [Cases: Homicide C=539.]

mass murder. (1917) A murderous act or series of acts by which a criminal kills many victims at or near the same time, usu. as part of one act or plan. Cf. serial murder. murder by torture. (1901) A murder preceded by the intentional infliction of pain and suffering on the victim.

"In some jurisdictions, a murder by torture may constitute murder in the first degree. It occurs when a defendant intentionally inflicts pain and suffering upon his victim for the purpose of revenge, extortion, or persuasion." 2 Charles E. Torcia, Wharton's Criminal Law § 144, at 281 (15th ed. 1994).
murder of the first degree. See first-degree murder. murder of the second degree. See second-degree murder. murder of the third degree. See third-degree murder. murder one. See first-degree murder. murder three. See third-degree murder. murder two. See second-degree murder.

second-degree murder. (1909) Murder that is not aggravated by any of the circumstances of first-degree murder. — Also termed murder of the second degree; murder two. [Cases: Homicide C=544.]

serial murder. (1977) A murder in which a criminal kills one of many victims over time, often as part of a pattern in which the criminal targets victims who have some similar characteristics. Cf. mass murder.
third-degree murder. (1933) A wrong that did not constitute murder at common law. • Only a few states have added to their murder statutes a third degree of murder. The other states classify all murders in two degrees. Manslaughter is not a degree of the crime of murder, but instead is a distinct offense. — Also termed murder of the third degree; murder three. [Cases: Homicide C=548.]

unintentional murder. 1. A killing for which malice is implied because the person acted with intent to cause serious physical injury or knew that the conduct was substantially certain to cause death or serious physical injury. • In some jurisdictions, this term is applied generally to several grades of killings without express intent. 2. See depraved-heart murder. 3. See felony murder. 4. See voluntary manslaughter under MANSLAUGHTER.

willful murder. (16c) The unlawful and intentional killing of another without excuse or mitigating circumstances.

murder clause. A contract provision that imposes onerous — often unreasonable — obligations on one party. • Murder clauses are usu. found in construction contracts.

murdrum (mor-drum). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. The secret killing of someone. 2. A fine against the tithing where a tithingman was found to be guilty. It was probably due to its effectiveness in collecting the murdrum, the murder fine. In ordinary cases of homicide, the whole district — except the kin of the suspect — was compelled to pay a fine or to discover and surrender the murderer and to shield the murderer. The Norman rulers had recourse to the device of imposing a group responsibility. The tithing within which the murdered Norman was found was compelled to pay a fine or to discover and surrender the murderer and to shield the murderer. The word murdrum is a word of uncertain etymology, and has given us our term for willful homicide. Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 175-76 (1936).

3. Murder; specif., murder with malice aforesaid. See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT.

murorum operatio (myuur-or-am op-a-ray shee-oh). [Latin] Hist. Repair work to the fortifications of buildings, cities, or castles, performed by their inhabitants.

mutation of libel. Maritime law. An amendment to a complaint. See LIBEL (3).

mutatio nominis (myoo-tay shee-oh nom-a-nis). [Latin] Roman law. Change of name. • It was allowed provided that no prejudice was thereby caused to others. The related phrase mutato nomine (myoo-tay-toh nom-a-nee) means "the name having been changed." • mutatis mutandis (myoo-tay-tis myoo-tan-dis). [Latin] (16c) All necessary changes having been made; with the necessary changes <what was said regarding the first contract applies mutatis mutandis to all later ones>. [Cases: Contracts C=159.]

mute, n. (17c) 1. A person who cannot speak. [Cases: Witnesses C=229.] 2. A person (esp. a prisoner) who stands silent when required to answer or plead. • Formerly, if a prisoner stood mute, a jury was empaneled to determine whether the prisoner was intentionally mute or mute by an act of God. By the Criminal Law Act of 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, ch. 28), if a prisoner was mute by malice, the officer automatically entered a plea of not guilty and the trial proceeded. If adjudicated to be insane, the prisoner was kept in custody until the Crown determined what should be done. — Also termed (in sense 2) standing mute.

mutilation, n. (16c) 1. The act or an instance of rendering a document legally ineffective by subtracting or altering — but not completely destroying — an essential part through cutting, tearing, burning, or erasing [Cases: Alteration of Instruments C=2.] 2. Criminal law. The act of cutting off or permanently damaging a body part, esp. an essential one. [Cases: Mayhem C=1.] See MAYHEM. — mutilate, vb. — mutilator, n.

mutiny (myoo-to-nee), n. (16c) 1. An insubordination or insurrection of armed forces, esp. sailors, against the authority of their commanders; a forcible revolt by members of the military against constituted authority, usu. their commanding officers. [Cases: Armed Services C=37; Military Justice C=680, 790.]

"Both mutiny and failure to prevent, suppress, or report a mutiny are capital offenses .... The elements of mutiny are (1) creation of any violence or disturbance or acting in concert with others to refuse to obey orders (2) with the intent to usurp or override lawful military authority. One fails to prevent, suppress, or report mutiny when he does not take all reasonable means to overcome or report mutiny. Concert of action is not required for mutiny when he accused creates violence or disturbance." Charles A. Shanor & L. Lynn Hogue, Military Law in a Nutshell 197-98 (2d ed. 1996).

2. Loosely, any uprising against authority. — Also termed (in both senses) inciting revolt. — mutinous, adj.

Mutiny Act. Hist. An English statute enacted annually from 1689 to 1879 to provide for a standing army and to punish mutiny, desertion, and other military offenses. • It was merged into the Army Discipline and Regulation Act of 1879 (ch. 33).

mutual, adj. (16c) 1. Generally, directed by each toward the other or others; reciprocal. [Cases: Contracts C=55.] 2. mutuality of estoppel. (1852) The collateral-estoppel principle that a judgment is not conclusively in favor of someone unless the opposite decision would also be conclusively against that person. [Cases: Judgment C:=> 625, 666.]

mutuality of obligation. (1838) The agreement of both parties to a contract to be bound in some way. — Also termed mutuality of contract. See mutual assent under assent. [Cases: Contracts C:=> 10.]

"[T]he so-called doctrine of 'mutuality of obligation' in bilateral contracts ... unfortunately has been the cause of no little confusion. This confusion is evident from the fact that, while it is commonly admitted there is such a doctrine, there is a lack of unanimity, both in the statement of it and in regard to its application. The most common mode of statement is: 'In a bilateral agreement both promises must be binding or neither is binding.' This statement is obviously ambiguous, since it does not indicate in what sense the promises must be binding. The fact is that it has been variously interpreted and applied by the courts with results that have sometimes been inconsistent with other well-settled principles of the law of consideration. Usually it has been held to mean that a promise that is not legally obligatory cannot be consideration in spite of the fact that it may satisfy all the usual requirements of consideration. However, at times it has in effect been held to involve the requirement that the undertaking of the promise relied upon as consideration must be reasonably commensurate with, or equivalent to, the undertaking of the promise which it supports, before it can constitute consideration — a kind of doctrine of mutuality of undertaking." John Edward Murray Jr., Murray on Contracts § 90, at 190–91 (2d ed. 1974).

"The doctrine of mutuality of obligation is commonly expressed in the phrase that in a bilateral contract 'both parties must be bound or neither is bound.' But this phrase is over-generalization because the doctrine is not one of mutuality of obligation but rather one of mutuality of consideration. Phrasing the rule in terms of mutuality of obligation rather than in terms of consideration has led to so-called exceptions and judicial circumventions ... . It has been suggested that the term 'mutuality of obligation' should be abandoned and we must agree in the light of the confusion that this term has engendered." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 4-12, at 226 (3d ed. 1987).

mutuality of parties. See mutuality doctrine.

mutuality of remedy. (1819) The availability of a remedy, esp. equitable relief, to both parties to a transaction, sometimes required before either party can be granted specific performance. See specific performance. [Cases: Specific Performance C:=> 6-6.]

mutui dato (myoo-choo-i day-she-oh). [Latin] Roman law. The lending of objects that could be weighed, measured, or counted (such as bullion, corn, wine, oil, and coined money), on the understanding that the borrower would repay by restoring an equal amount of the object borrowed. See mutuum (2).

mutuum (myoo-choo-am), n. (15c) 1. A transaction (sometimes referred to as a bailment) in which goods are delivered but, instead of being returned, are replaced by other goods of the same kind. • At common law such a transaction is regarded as a sale or exchange, not as a bailment, because the particular goods are not returned. [Cases: Bailment C:=> 2, 7.]

2. Roman law. A real contract in which money or fungible goods were delivered from the lender to the borrower, who was strictly liable to return an equivalent amount.
Because the contract was gratuitous, any interest had to be demanded by stipulation. This was one of the real contracts, along with the loan for use (commodatum (kom-a-day-tom)) and deposit and pledge (pignoratio (pig-no-ray-shee-oh)). See mutui datio.

mysterious disappearance. A loss of property under unknown or baffling circumstances that are difficult to understand or explain. The term is used in insurance policies covering theft. [Cases: Insurance C–2152.]

"Under a policy insuring against loss of property by 'mysterious disappearance' recovery is generally allowed where the article disappears from the place the insured left it, while recovery is ordinarily disallowed where the insured has no recollection of when he last had possession of the article and cannot say when or from what place it disappeared. Thus the addition of the words 'mysterious disappearance' to a theft policy does not transform it to an 'all loss' policy covering lost or mislaid articles, but it remains a theft policy." 43 Am. Jur. 2d Insurance § 501, at 575–76 (1982).

corporate name. The registered name under which a corporation conducts legal affairs such as suing, being sued, and paying taxes; the name that a corporation files with a state authority (usu. the secretary of state) as the name under which the corporation will conduct its affairs. • A corporate name usu. includes, and in many states is required to include, the word “corporation,” “incorporated,” or “company,” or an abbreviation of one of those words. Cf. assumed name. [Cases: Corporations 1029.] distinctive name. A name, esp. a tradename, that clearly distinguishes one thing from another. • To maintain an action for tradename infringement, the plaintiff must prove, among other things, that it owns a distinctive name. [Trademarks 1029.]

fictitious name. 1. See ASSUMED NAME. 2. See ALIAS. 3. See JOHN DOE.

full name. An individual’s personal name, second or middle names or initials (if any), and surname arranged in a customary order. • In Western cultures, the traditional order is usu. personal name, middle names or initials, and surname. In many other cultures, the order is surname first, followed by one or more personal names. [Cases: Names 1.]

generic name. See GENERIC NAME.

generic name. A name that designates a geographic location or area. — Also termed geographical name.

given name. See PERSONAL NAME.

legal name. A person’s full name as recognized in law. • A legal name is usu. acquired at birth or through a court order. There are no rules governing a legal name’s length or constitution; it may be a single name (e.g., Prince) or include words not generally used in human names (e.g., Moon Unit). [Cases: Names 1.]

maiden name. A woman’s childhood surname (which may or may not remain her surname for life). • Normally the term is used only in reference to a woman who has married and changed her last name.

nickname. See NICKNAME.
personal name. narcotic, n. (14c) 1. An addictive drug, esp. an opiate, that dulls the senses and induces sleep. 2. (usu. pl.) A drug that is controlled or prohibited by law. [Cases: Controlled Substances ◄ 9. — narcotic, adj.
narr. abbr. NARRATIO.
narr-and-cognovit law (nahr-and-kahng-noh-vit). [Latin narratio “declaration” and cognovit “the person has conceded”] Hist. A law providing that a plaintiff will be granted judgment on a note through an attorney’s confession that the amount shown on the note, together with interest and costs, constitutes a legal and just claim. Cf. cognovit judgment under JUDGMENT; CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT. [Cases: Judgment ◄ 29, 54.]
narratio (na-ray-sh;ee-oh), n. [Latin “narrative”] Hist. A declaration, complaint, or petition in which the plaintiff sets out the facts of a case; an oral narrative by the plaintiff of the facts and legal arguments on which the claim is based. ● The term has also been called the “contes” or “tale.” — Abbr. narr.

“[T]he making of the count, in Latin the narratio, was the very centre of the legal process. We do not know how it came about that the litigant was allowed to speak through the mouth of another, though it has been suggested that it was not to prevent mistakes being made but to prevent them being fatal. Certainly the litigant could disavow what was said on his behalf, and perhaps it was only ‘said’ by him when he formally adopted it. If this is right, our modern barrister began as one who could harmlessly blunder.” S.F.C. Mills, Historical Foundations of the Common Law 28 (1969).
narrative recital. See recital.
narrator (na-ray-tor or na-ray-tor), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A pleader or counter; a person who prepares pleadings (i.e., nars). ● For example, a serjeant-at-law was also known as serviens narrator. Pl. narratores (na-ra-tor-ez).

“The Latin narrator and its French equivalent contour became technical terms. If an English term was in use, it was perhaps forspaker.” 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 215 n.1 (2d ed. 1898). narrow certiorari. See CERTIORARI.
narrow-channel rule. The navigational requirement that a vessel traveling down a slim fairway must keep as near to the fairway wall on the vessel’s starboard side as safe and practicable. 33 USCA § 2009(a)(i). [Cases: Collision Collision Collision] narrowly tailored, adj. (1972) (Of a content-neutral restriction on the time, place, or manner of speech in a designated public forum) being only as broad as is reasonably necessary to promote a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively without the restriction; no broader than absolutely necessary. See designated public forum under PUBLIC FORUM. [Cases: Constitutional Law Collision 1505, 1747.]

nationale (na-tay-lee), n. [Latin “of or belonging to birth”] Hist. The status a person acquires by birth. • For example, if one or both parents of a child were serfs, the child was generally regarded as a serf, and a child born free rarely became a serf. See NATIVUS.

nati et nascituri (nay-ti et nas-sa-t[y]oor-or or -t[y]ar-ar-or), n. pl. [Latin “born and to be born”] Hist. A person’s heirs, near and remote.

nation, n. (14c) 1. A large group of people having a common origin, language, and tradition and usu. constituting a political entity. • When a nation is coincident with a state, the term nation-state is often used. — Also termed nationality.

"The nearest we can get to a definition is to say that a nation is a group of people bound together by common history, common sentiment and traditions, and, usually (though not always, as, for example, Belgium or Switzerland) by common heritage. A state, on the other hand, is a society of men united under one government. These two forms of society are not necessarily coincident. A single nation may be divided into several states, and conversely a single state may comprise several nations or parts of nations." John Salmont, Jurisprudence 136 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

2. A community of people inhabiting a defined territory and organized under an independent government; a sovereign political state. Cf. STATE.

National Environmental Policy Act. A 1969 federal statute establishing U.S. environmental policy. — The statute requires federal agencies to submit an environmental-impact statement with every proposal for a program or law that would affect the environment. 42 USCA §§ 4321–4347 — Abbr. NEPA.
ENVIRONMENTAL-IMPACT STATEMENT. [Cases: Environmental Law 571–615.]

"One should not assume that NEPA’s emphasis upon procedural consideration of environmental consequences somehow diminishes its stature. To the contrary, NEPA is the key environmental statute to be reckoned with in lawsuits challenging agency action on NEPA grounds. As a result of the popularity of NEPA in court, federal agencies have become extremely sensitive to NEPA’s procedural commands. They have not only sought to articulate the environmental impacts of their decisions before-the-fact, they have also either abandoned projects or mitigated their adverse environmental consequences after performing NEPA studies." Jan G. Laitos, Natural Resources Law § 4.01, at 119 (2002).

National Environmental Satellite, Data, and Information Service. See NATIONAL OCEANIC AND ATMOSPHERIC ADMINISTRATION.

National Firearms Act. A 1934 federal statute that governs the manufacture, possession, and transfer of certain types of firearms and other weapons. • In its original form, the act banned gangster-type weapons, such as machine guns and sawn-off shotguns. It has been expanded by amendments to cover most rifles and handguns, and also "destructive devices" such as grenades and land mines. 26 USCA §§ 5801 et seq. [Cases: Explosives 4; Weapons 4.]

National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities. An independent federal foundation that encourages and supports progress in the humanities and the arts by supporting the National Endowment for the Humanities, and the Institute of Museum and Library Services. • The agency was created by act of Congress in 1965. See NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE ARTS; NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES; INSTITUTE OF MUSEUM AND LIBRARY SERVICES.

national government. The government of an entire country, as distinguished from that of a province, state, subdivision, or territory of the country and as distinguished from an international organization. See federal government (2) under GOVERNMENT.

National Guard. The U.S. militia, which is maintained as a reserve for the U.S. Army and Air Force. • Its members are volunteers, recruited and trained on a statewide basis and equipped by the federal government. A state may request the National Guard’s assistance in quelling disturbances, and the federal government may order the National Guard into active service in times of war or other national emergency. See MILITIA. [Cases: Armed Services 5; Militia 1–22.]

National Highway Traffic Safety Administration. A unit in the U.S. Department of Transportation responsible for regulating the safety of motor vehicles and their equipment. • The agency’s work focuses on matters such as theft prevention, speed limits, truthful odometer readings, and fuel consumption. It was established by the Highway Safety Act of 1970. 23 USCA §§ 101 et seq. — Abbr. NHTSA.

See BUREAU OF PRISONS.

National Institute of Standards and Technology. See TECHNOLOGY ADMINISTRATION.

nationality. (17c) 1. NATION (1). 2. The relationship between a citizen of a nation and the nation itself, customarily involving allegiance by the citizen and protection by the state; membership in a nation. • This term is often used synonymously with citizenship. See CITIZENSHIP. 3. The formal relationship between a ship and the nation under whose flag the ship sails. See flag state. [Cases: Shipping 2.]

"Nationality" is a term which has long been used to define the legal relationship between a state and a ship which is authorized by the state to fly its flag. . . . Discussions in the International Law Commission in 1951 reflected concern that the use of the term ‘nationality’ in reference to ships was misleading as it implied similarity to the term’s use in defining the legal relationship between a state and its citizen. Nonetheless, the term has continued to be the one most often employed in describing the relationship between a ship and its flag state. It is important to realize, however, that in spite of their common names, the legal relationship ascribed to the nationality of ships does differ from that arising from the nationality of natural or juridical persons." Louis B. Sohn & Kristen Gustafson, The Law of the Sea in a Nutsheil 1–2 (1984).

Nationality Act. See IMMIGRATION AND NATIONALITY ACT.

nationality theory. The jurisdical principle that citizens are subject to the laws of their country, no matter where the citizens are. [Cases: International Law 7.]

NTSB. [Cases: Aviation $= 31.]

national treatment. Intellectual property. The policy or practice of a country that accords the citizens of other countries the same intellectual-property protection as it gives its own citizens, with no formal treaty of reciprocity required. • The principle of national treatment underlay the first international intellectual-property treaties in the 19th century, the Paris and Berne Conventions, and is also embodied in the TRIPs Agreement. Cf. reciprocity; universality.

"The beauty of the principle of national treatment is that it allows countries the autonomy to develop and enforce their own laws, while meeting the demands for international protection. Effectively, national treatment is a mechanism of international protection without harmonization." Lionel Bently & Brad Sherman, Intellectual Property Law 5 (2001).

national-treatment clause. A provision contained in some treaties, usu. commercial ones, according foreigners the same rights, in certain respects, as those accorded to nationals. [Cases: Treaties $= 8.]

nautical, adj. (16c) Of or relating to ships or shipping, carriage by sea, or navigation.

nautical assessor. A person skilled in maritime matters who is summoned in an admiralty case to assist the judge on points requiring special expertise.

nautical mile. (1834) A measure of distance for air and sea navigation, equal to one minute of arc of a great circle of the earth. • Different measures have been used by different countries because the earth is not a perfect sphere. Since 1959, however, the United States has used an international measure for a nautical mile, set by the Hydrographic Bureau, equal to 6,076.11549 feet, or 1,852 meters.

nauticum fenus (naw-ti-kam fee-nus), n. [Greek nautiken “nautical” + Latin fenus “interest”] Roman & civil law. A loan to finance the transport of goods by sea; specifically, a loan on bottomry made to a transporter of merchandise by ship. • The loan is subject to an extremely high rate of interest because it does not have to be repaid unless the ship safely reaches its destination. The nauticum fenus is both a loan and marine insurance. The rate, originally unlimited because of the risks of sea travel, was eventually fixed at 12%. The money loaned is pecunia trajecticia (money conveyed overseas). • Also spelled nauticium foenus. — Also termed fenus nauticum; nautica pecunia; foenus nauticum.

NAV. abbr. net asset value.

navagium (na-vay-je-am), n. [Latin “ship; voyage”] Hist. A tenant’s duty to transport the lord’s goods by ship.

naval law. A system of regulations governing naval forces. See CODE OF MILITARY JUSTICE. [Cases: Armed Services C=2; Military Justice C=507.]

navarch (nay-vahrk), n. [fr. Greek naus “ship” + archos “chief”] Hist. A master of an armed ship. — Also termed navarchus. Cf. NAVICULARIUS.

navicularius (na-vik-ya-lair-ee-as), n. [Latin “shipowner”] Hist. A person engaged in the shipping business.

Navigable (nav-i-go-bol), adj. (15c) 1. Capable of allowing vessels or vehicles to pass, and thereby usable for travel or commerce <the channel was barely navigable because it was so narrow>. [Cases: Navigable Waters C=1.]

Navigable in fact, adj. Naturally usable for travel or commerce in the present condition. • A stream is navigable in fact if, in its natural and ordinary state, it can be used for travel or commerce. For admiralty jurisdiction, the water must be capable of being used as a route in interstate or international commerce in customary modes of travel. [Cases: Navigable Waters C=1.]

2. Capable of being steered <navigable aircraft>. — Also termed boatable. See NAVIGABLE WATER.

Navigable airspace. See AIRSPACE.

Navigable sea. Int’l law. The ocean waters divided into three zones of control among nations: (1) the inland waters, which are near a nation’s shores and over which a nation has complete sovereignty; (2) territorial waters, which are measured from the seaward edge of the inland waters, over which a nation has extensive control but over which innocent parties must be allowed to travel to other nations; and (3) the high seas, which are international waters not subject to the domain of any single nation. [Cases: International Law C=7.]

Navigable water. 1. At early common law, any body of water affected by the ebb and flow of the tide. • This test was first adopted in England because most of England’s in-fact navigable waters are influenced by the tide, unlike the large inland rivers that are capable of supporting commerce in the United States. — Also termed boatable water. [Cases: Navigable Waters C=1.]

In addition to its bearing on admiralty jurisdictional inquiries, the navigable waters issue comes up in cases involving the scope of Congress’s regulatory authority under the commerce clause; the validity and interpretation of a variety of statutes and regulations administered by the Coast Guard; the powers of the Corps of Engineers over waterways, dams, marinas, etc., under the Rivers & Harbors Act and other statutes; the Federal Power Commission’s authority to inspect and license electricity-generating dams; the existence and exercise of a servitude of navigation, which affects both public access to waterways on private land and governmental regulatory authority over such waters; and disputes over the ownership of stream beds. The foregoing is not an exhaustive listing. Well over a thousand federal statutes use the term ‘navigable waters.’” David W. Robertson, Steven F. Friedell & Michael F. Sturley, Admiralty and Maritime Law in the United States 53 n.1 (2001).

2. (usu. pl.) A body of water that is used, or typically can be used, as a highway for commerce with ordinary modes of trade and travel on water. • Under the Commerce Clause, Congress has broad jurisdiction over all navigable waters of the United States. [Cases: Navigable Waters C=1.]

Navigable water of the United States. Navigable water that alone — or in combination with other waters — forms a continuous highway for commerce with other states or foreign countries.

Navegate, vb. (16c) 1. To travel or sail in a vessel on water <to navigate from New York to Bermuda>. [Cases: Collision C=3, 90, 103.] 2. To steer <to navigate the plane>. 3. To make way through, on, or about something <the plaintiff was unable to navigate the stairs in the dark>.

necessaries. (14c) 1. Things that are indispensable to living <an infant's necessaries include food, shelter, and clothing>. • Necessaries include whatever food, medicine, clothing, shelter, and personal services are usu. considered reasonably essential for the preservation and enjoyment of life, to the extent that a person having a duty of protection must furnish them. — Also termed necessities; necessities of life. [Cases: Husband and Wife ⍺–19.] 2. Things that are essential to maintaining the lifestyle to which one is accustomed . • The term includes whatever is reasonably needed for subsistence, health, comfort, and education, considering the person's age, station in life, and medical condition, but it excludes (1) anything purely ornamental, (2) anything solely for pleasure, (3) what the person is already supplied with, (4) anything that concerns someone's estate or business as opposed to personal needs, and (5) borrowed money. Under the common law, a husband was required to pay debts incurred by his wife or children for necessaries. Beginning in the late 1960s, most states began to change their statutes regarding the obligation to provide necessities to include both husband and wife. See DOCTRINE OF NECESSARIES; FAMILY-EXPENSE STATUTE. [Cases: Husband and Wife ⍺–19.]

"Things may be of a useful character, but the quality or quantity supplied may take them out of the character of necessaries. Elementary textbooks might be a necessary to a student of law, but not a rare edition of 'Littleton's Tenures,' or eight or ten copies of 'Stephen's Commentaries.' Necessaries also vary according to the station in life of the infant or his peculiar circumstances at the time. The quality of clothing suitable to an Eton boy would be unnecessary for a telegraph clerk; the medical attendance necessitas (na-ses-i-tas), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. Necessity. 2. A force or influence that compels an unwilling person to act. • The term refers to a lack of free will to do a legal act, as opposed to libera voluntas ("free will").

necessitas culpabilis (na-ses-i-tas kaal-pay-ba-lis). [Latin "culpable necessity"] Hist. An unfortunate necessity that, while essentially excusing the act done under its compulsion, does not necessarily relieve the actor from blame.

"And as to the necessity which excuses a man who kills another se defendendo lord Bacon entitles it necessitas culpabilis . . . For the law intends that the quarrel or assault arose from some unknown wrong . . . and since in quarrels both parties may be, and usually are, in some fault; and it scarce can be tried who was originally in the wrong; the law will not hold the survivor entirely guiltless. But it is clear, in the other case, that where I kill a thief that breaks into my house, the original default can never be upon my side." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 186–87 (1769).

necessities. (14c) 1. Indispensable things of any kind. 2. necessaries (1). necessities of life. See necessaries (1). necessitous, adj. (17c) Living in a state of extreme want; hard up.

necessitous circumstances. (17c) The situation of one who is very poor; extreme want.

necessitudo (na-ses-i-tyoo-doh), n. [Latin "need"] Hist. 1. An obligation. 2. A close connection or relationship between persons, such as a family relationship.

necessity. 1. Criminal law. A justification defense for a person who acts in an emergency that he or she did not create and who commits a harm that is less severe than the harm that would have occurred but for the person's actions. • For example, a mountain climber lost in a blizzard can assert necessity as a defense to theft of food and blankets from another's cabin. — Also termed choice of evils; duress of circumstances; lesser-evils defense. See lesser-evils defense under defense (1). [Cases: Criminal Law C-38]. 2. Torts. A privilege that may relieve a person from liability for trespass or conversion if that person, having no alternative, harms another's property in an effort to protect life or health.

"In some cases even damage intentionally done may not involve the defendant in liability when he is acting under necessity to prevent a greater evil. The precise limits of the defence are not clear, for it has affinities with certain other defences, such as act of God, self-help, duress, or inevitable accident. It is distinguishable from self defence on the ground that this presupposes that the plaintiff is prima facie a wrongdoer: the defence of necessity contemplates the infliction of harm on an innocent plaintiff. The defence, if it exists, enables a defendant to escape liability for the intentional interference with the security of another's person or property on the ground that the acts complained of were necessary to prevent greater damage to the commonwealth or to another or to the defendant himself, or to their or his property. The use of the term necessity serves to conceal the fact that the defendant always has a choice between two evils. This is what distinguishes the defence of necessity from that of impossibility." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmon on the Law of Torts 493 (17th ed. 1977).
manifest necessity. (17c) A sudden and overwhelming emergency, beyond the court’s and parties’ control, that makes conducting a trial or reaching a fair result impossible and that therefore authorizes the granting of a mistrial. • The standard of manifest necessity must be met to preclude a defendant from successfully raising a plea of former jeopardy after a mistrial. [Cases: Double Jeopardy C=99.] military necessity. See military necessity.

moral necessity. (17c) A necessity arising from a duty incumbent on a person to act in a particular way.

physical necessity. (17c) A necessity involving an actual, tangible force that compels a person to act in a particular way.

private necessity. (16c) Torts. A necessity that involves only the defendant’s personal interest and thus provides only a limited privilege. • For example, if the defendant harms the plaintiff’s dock by keeping a boat moored to the dock during a hurricane, the defendant can assert private necessity but must compensate the plaintiff for the dock’s damage. [Cases: Negligence C=510(3).]

public necessity. (16c) Torts. A necessity that involves the public interest and thus completely excuses the defendant’s liability. • For example, if the defendant destroys the plaintiff’s house to stop the spread of a fire that threatens the town, the defendant can assert public necessity.

3. RULE OF NECESSITY.

necessity defense. See justification (2).

neck verse. Hist. A verse, usu. consisting of the opening verse of Psalm 51 (Miserere mei, Deus “Have mercy on me, O God”), which was used as a literacy test for an accused who claimed benefit of clergy. • An accused who read the passage satisfactorily would not receive the maximum sentence (the person’s neck would be fall on his knees and ‘pray the book’; he would then be tendered a passage from the psalter, known as the neck-verse, and if he could read or recite it satisfactorily his clergy was taken to be proved . . . . Strictly speaking, the decision whether the convict read ‘as a clerk’ was for the incumbent on a person to act in a particular way.

“During the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries the judges’ attitudes to benefit of clergy changed completely, and they came to see it as a regular means of escape from the mandatory death penalty. Physical appearance was disregarded, and reading became the sole test of clerical status. When a man was convicted of a felony, he would fall on his knees and ‘pray the book’; he would then be tendered a passage from the psalter, known as the neck-verse, and if he could read or recite it satisfactorily his clergy was taken to be proved . . . . Strictly speaking, the decision whether the convict read ‘as a clerk’ was for the ordinary; but he was subject to the control of the judges, and could be fined for refusing to accept someone. By the end of the sixteenth century as many as half of all men convicted of felony were recorded as having successfully claimed benefit of clergy.” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 587 (3d ed. 1990).

nec manifestum (nek man-i-fes-tam). [Latin] Civil law. Not manifest. • The phrase usu. referred to a theft in which the thief was not caught in the act.

ne conjuges mutuo amore se invicem spolient (nee kan-joou-jeec myoo-chooh oh a-mor-ee see in-vy-sam spoh-lee-ahnt). [Latin] Roman & civil law. Lest spouses through their mutual love should impoverish one another. • The phrase appeared in reference to the rationale for holding that donations between husband and wife were invalid. A similar phrase, ne mutuato amore invicem spoliarentur (“lest they should be impoverished by each other through their mutual affection”), was also used.

necropsy (nek-rop-see). See autopsy (1).

ne disturbas pas (na di-star-ba pah), n. [Law French “did not disturb”] Eccles. law. A defendant’s general denial (plea of the general issue) in a quare impedit action. See quare impedit.

ne dominia rerum sint incerta, nee lites sint perpetuas (nee do min-ee-ah reer-ahm sint in-sah-t, nee-vee li-teez sint par pech-oo ee). [Latin] Hist. Lest the ownership of things should remain uncertain or lawsuits never come to an end. • The phrase appeared in reference to the principle on which all actions prescribed after (usu.) 30 years. See prescription.

ne dona pas (na doh-na pah), n. [Law French “did not give”] Hist. A defendant’s general denial (plea of the general issue) in a formedon action, alleging that the plaintiff was given the right to land under a gift of tail. • Also termed non dedit. See formedon.

née (nay), adj. [French] (17c) (Of a woman) born. • This term is sometimes used after a married woman’s name to indicate her maiden name <Mrs. Robert Jones, née Thatcher>. The masculine form (not common in English) is né. • Also spelled nee.

need, n. (bef. 12c) 1. The lack of something important; a requirement. 2. Indigence. — need, vb.

needy, adj. (12c) 1. Needful; necessary. 2. Indigent; very poor. • Needy implies a more permanent and less urgent condition than necessities. See neceSSitous.

ne exeat (nee ek-see-at [or ek-see-at]). [Latin] “that he not depart”. 1. A writ restraining a person from leaving the republic; specif., an equitable writ ordering the person to whom it is addressed not to leave the jurisdiction of the court or the state. • Ne exeat writs are usu. issued to ensure the satisfaction of a claim against the defendant. The full phrase is ne exeat republica (nee ek-see-at [or ek-see-at] ri pah-lee-kah) [Latin “let him not go out of the republic”]. 2. Family law. An equitable writ restraining a person from leaving, or removing a child or property from, the jurisdiction. • A ne exeat is often issued to prohibit a person from removing a child or property from the jurisdiction — and sometimes from leaving the jurisdiction. — Also termed writ of ne exeat; ne exeat republica; ne exeat regno. [Cases: Ne Exeat C=1.]”

“The district courts of the United States . . . shall have such jurisdiction to make and issue in civil actions, writs and orders of injunction, and of ne exeat republica, orders appointing receivers, and such other orders and processes ... as may be necessary or appropriate for the enforcement of the internal revenue laws." IRC (26 USCA) § 7402(a).

"Such a writ [ne exeat] might be issued upon the commencement of the suit for equitable relief, during the pendency of the suit, or upon issuance of the final decree to secure its enforcement. But such writ related primarily to the person of the defendant and issued only upon satisfactory proof that he planned or intended to remove himself beyond the court’s jurisdiction so that he might escape obedience to such command as might be or had been laid upon him. The writ has been frequently termed an equitable bail. It involves taking and keeping the defendant in custody until he gives bail or bond in a designated amount, conditioned upon his keeping himself amenable to the effective processes of the court." William Q. de Funiak, Handbook of Modern Equity 21 (2d ed. 1956).

nefas (nee-fas), n. [Latin ne “not” + fas “right”] 1. Roman law. Something that the gods forbid. 2. Roman law. Something against the law or custom. 3. Hist. Something that is wicked. Cf. fas.

nefastus (ni-fas-tos), n. [Latin ne “not” + fastus “lawful for public business”] Roman law. A day when it is unlawful to open the courts, administer justice, or hold public assemblies. • The priests in charge of supervising the laws and religious observances established an official calendar, on which certain days, marked “nefasti,” were to be devoted to religious or public ceremonies. — Also termed dies nefasti. Cf. dies fasti under dies.

negate, vb. (17c) 1. To deny. 2. To nullify; to render ineffective.

negative, adj. (15c) 1. Of or relating to something bad; not positive . 2. Of or relating to refusal of consent; not affirmative .

negative, n. (16c) 1. A word or phrase of denial or refusal <“no” and “not” are negatives>. 2. A word expressing the opposite of the positive <two negatives and one positive>. 3. The original plate or film of a photograph, on which light and shadows are the opposite of the positive images later created and printed <not only the pictures, but also the negatives, were required to be returned>. 4. Archaic. The power of veto <the king’s negative has eroded>.

negative, vb. (18c) To negate; to deny, nullify, or render ineffective <the jury negatived fraud>.

negative easement. See easement.

negative equity. See equity (7).

negative evidence. See evidence.

negative externality. See externality.

negative limitation. Patents. In a patent application, a claim that describes what the element is not or does not, rather than what it is or does. • Although older caselaw held that a negative limitation rendered a claim indefinite, more recent decisions allow those that define a clear alternative as long as the claim is not overbroad. [Cases: Patents 0-101(3).]

negative misprision. See misprision.

negative plea. See plea (3).

negative-pledge clause. (1935) 1. A provision requiring a borrower, who borrows funds without giving security, to refrain from giving future lenders any security without the consent of the first lender. 2. A provision, usu. in a bond indenture, stating that the issuing entity will not pledge its assets if it will result in less security to the bondholders under the indenture agreement.

negative pregnant. (17c) A denial implying its affirmative opposite by seeming to deny only a qualification of the allegation and not the allegation itself. • An example is the statement, “I didn’t steal the money last Tuesday,” the implication being that the theft might have happened on another day. — Also termed negative pregnant with an affirmative. Cf. affirmative pregnant. [Cases: Pleading 0-126.] negative prescription. See prescription (4).

neglect, n. (16c) 1. The omission of proper attention to a person or thing, whether inadvertent, negligent, or willful; the act or condition of disregarding. 2. The failure to give proper attention, supervision, or necessities, esp. to a child, to such an extent that harm results or is likely to result. Cf. abuse. — neglect, vb. — neglectful, adj.

“Neglect” is not the same thing as ‘negligence’. In the present connection the word ‘neglect’ indicates, as a purely objective fact, that a person has not done that which it was his duty to do; it does not indicate the reason for this failure. ‘Negligence,’ on the other hand, is a subjective state of mind, and it indicates a particular reason why the man has failed to do his duty, namely because he has not kept the performance of the duty in his mind as he ought to have done. A man can 'neglect' his duty either intentionally or negligently. J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 108 n.1 (16th ed. 1952).

child neglect. (1930) The failure of a person responsible for a minor to care for the minor's emotional or physical needs. • Child neglect is a form of child abuse. Local child-welfare departments investigate reports of child neglect. In a severe case, criminal charges may be filed against a person suspected of child neglect. [Cases: Infants C: 156.]

culpable neglect. (1855) A failure which the law will excuse — to take some proper step at the proper time (esp. in neglecting to answer a lawsuit) not because of the party's own carelessness, inattention, or willful disregard of the court's process, but because of some unexpected or unavoidable hindrance or accident or because of reliance on the care and vigilance of the party. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C: 2448, 2656; Judgment C: 143, 362.]

inexcusable neglect. (18c) Unjustifiable neglect; neglect that implies more than unintentional inadvertence. • A finding of inexcusable neglect in, for example, failing to file an answer to a complaint will prevent the setting aside of a default judgment. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C: 2448, 2656; Judgment C: 143, 362.]

medical neglect. Failure to provide medical, dental, or psychiatric care that is necessary to prevent or to treat serious physical or emotional injury or illness. • In determining whether a parent's refusal to consent to medical treatment is neglectful, courts use any of three approaches: (1) an ad hoc test, (2) a best-interests-of-the-child test, or (3) a balancing test that weighs the interests of the parents, the child, and the state. Cf. FAITH-HEALING EXEMPTION. [Cases: Infants C: 159.]

physical neglect. Failure to provide necessaries, the lack of which has caused or could cause serious injury or illness. [Cases: Infants C: 156.]

willful neglect. (18c) Intentional or reckless failure to carry out a legal duty, esp. in caring for a child. [Cases: Infants C: 156.]

neglected child. See CHILD.

neglect hearing. See HEARING.

negligentia (neg-lij-en-she-a), n. [Latin] Roman law. Carelessness; inattentive omission. • Negligentia can be of varying degrees, which may or may not result in actionable liability. — Also spelled negligentia. See culpa. Cf. diligentia.

"In the sources negligentia is tantamount to culpa, and similarly graduated (magna, lata negligentia). Precision in terminology is no more to be found here than in the field of culpa. One text declares ... "gross negligence (magna negligentia) is culpa, magna culpa is dolus"; another says: 'gross negligence (disoluta negligentia) is near to dolus (prope dolum).' In the saying 'lata culpa is exorbitant (extreme) negligence, i.e., not to understand (intelligere) what all understand ... negligentia is identified with ignorance." Adolf Beigel, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 593 (1953).

lata negligentia (lay-ta neg-li-jen-she-a). Extreme negligence resulting from an unawareness of something that the actor should have known.

magna negligentia (mag-na neg-li-jen-she-a). See gross negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

negligence, n. (14c) 1. The failure to exercise the standard of care that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in a similar situation; any conduct that falls below the legal standard established to protect others against unreasonable risk of harm, except for conduct that is intentionally, wantonly, or willfully disregarding of others' rights. • The term denotes culpable carelessness. The Roman-law equivalents are culpa and negligentia, as contrasted with dolus (wrongful intention). — Also termed actionable negligence; ordinary negligence; simple negligence. [Cases: Negligence C: 201, 233, 250.] 2. A tort grounded in this failure, usu. expressed in terms of the following elements: duty, breach of duty, causation, and damages. [Cases: Negligence C: 202.]

"Negligence in law ranges from inadvertence that is hardly more than accidental to sinful disregard of the safety of others." Patrick Devlin, The Enforcement of Morals 36 (1968).

"During the first half of the nineteenth century, negligence began to gain recognition as a separate and independent basis of tort liability. Its rise coincided in a marked degree with the Industrial Revolution; and it very probably was stimulated by the rapid increase in the number of accidents caused by industrial machinery, and in particular by the invention of railways. It was greatly encouraged by the disintegration of the old forms of action, and the disappearance of the distinction between direct and indirect injuries, found in trespass and case . . . Intentional injuries, whether direct or indirect, began to be grouped as a distinct field of liability, and negligence remained as the main basis for unintended torts. Negligence thus developed into the dominant cause of action for accidental injury in this nation today." W. Page Keeton et al., The Law of Torts § 28, at 161 (W. Page Keeton ed., 5th ed. 1984).

"Negligence is a matter of risk — that is to say, of recognizable danger of injury . . . In most instances, it is caused by heedlessness or inadvertence, by which the negligent party is unaware of the results which may follow from his act. But it may also arise where the negligent party has considered the possible consequences carefully, and has exercised his own best judgment. The almost universal use of the phrase 'due care' to describe conduct which is not negligent should not obscure the fact that the essence of negligence is not necessarily the absence of solicitude for those who may be adversely affected by one's actions but is instead behavior which should be recognized as involving unreasonable danger to others." Id., at 169.

active negligence. (1875) Negligence resulting from an affirmative or positive act, such as driving through a barrier. Cf. passive negligence.

adventent negligence. (1909) Negligence in which the actor is aware of the unreasonable risk that he or she is creating; recklessness. — Also termed willful negligence; supine negligence.
casual negligence. A plaintiff's failure to (1) pay reasonable attention to his or her surroundings, so as to discover the danger created by the defendant's negligence, (2) exercise reasonable competence, care, diligence, and skill to avoid the danger once it is perceived, or (3) prepare as a reasonable person would to avoid future dangers.
collateral negligence. An independent contractor's negligence, for which the employer is generally not liable. See collateral-negligence doctrine.
comparative negligence. (1862) A plaintiff's own negligence that proportionally reduces the damages recoverable from a defendant. — Also termed comparative fault. See comparative-negligence doctrine. [Cases: Negligence \(\square\) 549.] current negligence. (1831) The negligence of two or more parties acting independently but causing the same damage. Cf. joint negligence.
contributory negligence. (1822) 1. A plaintiff's own negligence that played a part in causing the plaintiff's injury and that is significant enough (in a few jurisdictions) to bar the plaintiff from recovering damages. • In most jurisdictions, this defense has been superseded by comparative negligence. See contributory-negligence doctrine; distraction doctrine. [Cases: Negligence \(\square\) 547. 2. Rare. The negligence of a third party — neither the plaintiff nor the defendant — whose act or omission played a part in causing the plaintiff's injury. [Cases: Negligence \(\square\) 540.]

"The contributory negligence of a third party is no excuse for the negligence of the defendant." Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 154 (13th ed. 1924). criminal negligence. (1838) Gross negligence so extreme that it is punishable as a crime. • For example, involuntary manslaughter or other negligent homicide can be based on criminal negligence, as when an extremely careless automobile driver kills someone. — Also termed culpable negligence; gross negligence. [Cases: Criminal Law \(\square\) 23; Negligence \(\square\) 1800–1802.]

"Though the legislatures and the courts have often made it clear that criminal liability generally requires more fault than the ordinary negligence which will do for tort liability, they have not so often made it plain just what is required in addition to tort negligence — greater risk, subjective awareness of the risk, or both. Statutes are sometimes worded in terms of 'gross negligence' or 'culpable negligence' or 'criminal negligence, without any further definition of these terms. . . . The courts thus have had to do their best with little guidance from the legislature, with varying results." Wayne R. LaFave & Austin W. Scott Jr., Criminal Law § 3.7, at 235–37 (2d ed. 1986).

culpable negligence. (17c) 1. Negligent conduct that, while not intentional, involves a disregard of the consequences likely to result from one's actions. 2. See criminal negligence.

"Culpable negligence," while variously defined, has been held incapable of exact definition; it means something more than negligence . . . . In connection with negligence, the word 'culpable' is sometimes used in the sense of 'blameworthy,' and it has been regarded as expressing the thought of a breach of a duty or the commission of a fault; but culpable negligence has been held to amount to more than 'blameworthy' conduct . . . . It does not involve the element of intent . . . . On the other hand, it has been said to be intentional conduct which the actor may not intend to be harmful but which an ordinary and reasonably prudent man would recognize as involving a strong probability of injury to others." 65 C.J.S. Negligence § 1(13) (1956).
gross negligence. (16c) 1. A lack of slight diligence or care. [Cases: Negligence \(\square\) 273.] 2. A conscious, voluntary act or omission in reckless disregard of a legal duty and of the consequences to another party, who may typically recover exemplary damages. — Also termed reckless negligence; wanton negligence; willful negligence; willful and wanton negligence; hazardous negligence; magna neglegentia. [Cases: Damages \(\square\) 91.5(1); Negligence \(\square\) 273.] 3. See criminal negligence.

"Negligence is gross if the precautions to be taken against harm are very simple, such as persons who are but poorly endowed with physical and mental capacities can easily take." H.L.A. Hart, "Negligence, Mens Rea and Criminal Responsibility," in Punishment and Responsibility 136, 149 (1968).

"Gross Negligence. As it originally appeared, this was very great negligence, or the want of even slight or scant care. It has been described as a failure to exercise even that care which a careless person would use. Several courts, however, dissatisfied with a term so nebulous . . . . have construed gross negligence as requiring willful, wanton, or reckless misconduct, or such utter lack of all care as will be evidence thereof . . . . But it is still true that most courts consider that 'gross negligence' falls short of a reckless disregard of the consequences, and differs from ordinary negligence only in degree, and not in kind." Pressor and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 34, at 211–12 (W. Page Keeton ed., 5th ed. 1984).

criminal negligence. 1. Careless or reckless conduct that exposes one to extreme danger of injury or to imminent peril. 2. See gross negligence (2).

imputed negligence. (18c) Negligence of one person charged to another; negligence resulting from a party's special relationship with another party who is originally negligent — so that, for example, a parent might be held responsible for some acts of a child. [Cases: Negligence \(\square\) 483, 575; Parent and Child \(\square\) 13.5(2), 13.5(4).]

inadvertent negligence. (18c) Negligence in which the actor is not aware of the unreasonable risk that he or she is creating, but should have foreseen and avoided it. — Also termed simple negligence.
joint negligence. (18c) The negligence of two or more persons acting together to cause an accident. Cf. concurrent negligence.

legal negligence. See negligence per se.

negligence in law. Failure to observe a duty imposed by law. See negligence per se; legal negligence.

negligence per se. (1841) Negligence established as a matter of law, so that breach of the duty is not a jury question. • Negligence per se usu. arises from a statutory violation. — Also termed legal negligence. [Cases: Negligence ☞-259.]

ordinary negligence. (16c) 1. Lack of ordinary diligence; the failure to use ordinary care. • The term is most commonly used to differentiate between negligence and gross negligence. [Cases: Negligence ☞-232.] 2. NEGLIGENCE (1). passive negligence. (18c) Negligence resulting from a person’s failure or omission in acting, such as failing to remove hazardous conditions from public property. Cf. active negligence.

professional negligence. See malpractice.

reckless negligence. See gross negligence.

simple negligence. 1. See inadvertent negligence. 2. See NEGLIGENCE (1).

slight negligence. (18c) The failure to exercise the great care of an extraordinarily prudent person, resulting in liability in special circumstances (esp. those involving bailments or carriers) in which lack of ordinary care would not result in liability; lack of great diligence.

subsequent negligence. (1827) The negligence of the defendant when, after the defendant’s initial negligence and the plaintiff’s contributory negligence, the defendant discovers—or should have discovered—that the plaintiff was in a position of danger and fails to exercise due care in preventing the plaintiff’s injuries. — Also termed supervening negligence. See LAST-CLEAR-CHANCE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Negligence ☞-530.]

supine negligence. See advertent negligence.

tax negligence. Negligence arising out of the disregard of tax-payment laws, for which the Internal Revenue Service may impose a penalty — 5% of the amount underpaid. IRC (26 USCA) § 6651(a). [Cases: Internal Revenue ☞-5219.]

wanton negligence. See gross negligence.

willful and wanton negligence. See gross negligence.

willful negligence. 1. See advertent negligence. 2. See gross negligence.

negligence rule. (1914) Commercial law. The principle that if a party’s negligence contributes to an unauthorized signing or a material alteration in a negotiable instrument, that party is estopped from raising this issue against later parties who transfer or pay the instrument in good faith. • Examples of negligence include leaving blanks or spaces on the amount line of the instrument, erroneously mailing the instrument to a person with the same name as the payee, and failing to follow internal procedures designed to prevent forgeries. [Cases: Banks and Banking ☞-148(3); Bills and Notes ☞-279, 365(2)].

negligent, adj. (14c) Characterized by a person’s failure to exercise the degree of care that someone of ordinary prudence would have exercised in the same circumstance. <the negligent driver went through the stop sign> <negligent construction caused the bridge to collapse>. [Cases: Automobiles ☞-146; Negligence ☞-200, 232.] — negligently, adv.

negligent act. See act.

negligent conversion. See technical conversion under conversion (2).

negligent entitlement. (1944) The act of leaving a dangerous article (such as a gun or car) with a person who the lender knows, or should know, is likely to use it in an unreasonably risky manner. [Cases: Automobiles ☞-192(11); Negligence ☞-351–355; Weapons ☞-18.]

negligent escape. See escape (3).

negligent hiring. Torts. An employer’s lack of care in selecting an employee who the employer knew or should have known was unfit for the position, thereby creating an unreasonable risk that another person would be harmed.

negligent homicide. See homicide.

negligentia (neg-li-jen-shee-a), n. (Latin) Roman law. See negligentia.

negligent infliction of emotional distress. (1970) The tort of causing another severe emotional distress through one’s negligent conduct. • Most courts will allow a plaintiff to recover damages for emotional distress if the defendant’s conduct results in physical contact with the plaintiff or, when no contact occurs, if the plaintiff is in the zone of danger. See emotional distress; zone-of-danger rule. — Abbr. NIED. Cf. intentional infliction of emotional distress. [Cases: Damages ☞-57.13.]
negligent manslaughter. See involuntary manslaughter under MANSLAUGHTER. negligent misrepresentation. See misrepresentation. negligent offense. See offense (1). negligent tort. See TORT.
négoce (né-gohz), n. [French] Trade; business.

negotiability. (18c) The capability of commercial paper to have its title transferred by indorsement and delivery, or by delivery alone, so that the transferee has a rightful claim on it. • Negotiability (which pertains to commercial paper) differs from assignability (which pertains to contracts in general) because an assignee traditionally takes title subject to all equities, and an assignment is not complete without notice to the debtor, whereas an indorsee takes free of all equities and without any notice to the debtor. [Cases: Bills and Notes C=> 144–175.]

negotiable, adj. (18c) 1. (Of a written instrument) capable of being transferred by delivery or indorsement when the transferee takes the instrument for value, in good faith, and without notice of conflicting title claims or defenses. [Cases: Bills and Notes C=> 144.] 2. (Of a deal, agreement, etc.) capable of being accomplished. 3. (Of a price or deal) subject to further bargaining and possible change. Cf. NONNEGOTIABLE; ASSIGNABLE.

"The term 'negotiable,' in its enlarged signification, is used to describe any written security which may be transferred by indorsement and delivery, or by delivery merely, so as to vest in the indorsee the legal title, and thus enable him to bring a suit thereon in his own name. But in a strictly commercial classification, and as the term is technically used, it applies only to those instruments which, like bills of exchange, not only carry the legal title with them by indorsement, or delivery, but carry as well, when transferred before maturity, the right of the transferee to demand the full amounts which their faces call for. 'Assignable' is the more appropriate term to describe bonds, and ordinary notes, or notes of hand as they are most commonly called, as 'negotiable' is the more fitting term to describe the peculiar instruments of commerce." J. John W. Daniel, A Treatise on the Law of Negotiable Instruments § 2, at 3 (Thomas H. Calvert ed., 7th ed. 1933).

negotiable bill of lading. See BILL OF LADING. negotiable bond. See BOND (2). negotiable certificate of deposit. See CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT. negotiable document of title. See DOCUMENT OF TITLE. negotiable instrument. (18c) A written instrument that (1) is signed by the maker or drawer, (2) includes an unconditional promise or order to pay a specified sum of money, (3) is payable on demand or at a definite time, and (4) is payable to order or to bearer. UCC § 3-104(a). • Also termed negotiable paper; negotiable note. • Among the various types of negotiable instruments are bills of exchange, promissory notes, bank checks, certificates of deposit, and other negotiable securities. [Cases: Bills and Notes C=> 5, 144–175.]

"What are called 'negotiable instruments,' or 'paper to bearer,' such as bills of exchange, or promissory notes, do really pass from hand to hand, either by delivery or indorsement, giving to each successive recipient a right against the debtor, to which no notice to the debtor is essential, and which, if the paper is held bona fide and for value, is unaffected by flaws in the title of intermediate assignors.' Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 315–16 (13th ed. 1924).

"One must first understand that a negotiable instrument is a peculiar animal and that many animals calling for the payment of money and others loosely called 'commercial paper' are not negotiable instruments and not subject to the rules of Article 3." James J. White & Robert S. Summers, 2 Uniform Commercial Code § 16-1, at 70 (4th ed. 1995).

negotiable note. See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT.
negotiable order of withdrawal. A negotiable instrument (such as a check) payable on demand and issued against funds deposited with a financial institution. — Abbr. NOW. negotiable-order-of-withdrawal account. See NOW account under ACCOUNT. negotiable paper. See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT. negotiable words. (1819) The terms and phrases that make a document a negotiable instrument. — Also termed words of negotiability. See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT. [Cases: Bills and Notes C=> 147.]
negotiate, vb. (16c) 1. To communicate with another party for the purpose of reaching an understanding (they negotiated with their counterparts for weeks on end). 2. To bring about by discussion or bargaining (she negotiated a software license agreement). 3. To transfer (an instrument) by delivery or indorsement, whereby the transferee takes the instrument for value, in good faith, and without notice of conflicting title claims or defenses (Jones negotiated the check at the neighborhood bank). [Cases: Bills and Notes C=> 175, 208.] negotiated agreement. A settlement that disputes parties reach between themselves, usu. with the help of their attorneys, but without benefit of formal mediation. — Also termed negotiated settlement. [Cases: Compromise and Settlement C=> 2.] negotiated market. See MARKET. negotiated offering. See OFFERING. negotiated plea. See PLEA (1). negotiating bank. See BANK.
negotiation, n. (16c) 1. A consensual bargaining process in which the parties attempt to reach agreement on a disputed or potentially disputed matter. • Negotiation usu. involves complete autonomy for the parties involved, without the intervention of third parties. [Cases: Contracts C=> 25.]

"Negotiation, we may say, ought strictly to be viewed simply as a means to an end; it is the road the parties must travel to arrive at their goal of mutually satisfactory settlement. But like other means, negotiation is easily converted into an end in itself; it readily becomes a game played for its own sake and a game played with so little reserve by those taken up with it that they will sacrifice their own ultimate interests in order to win it." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 128 (1968).
2. (usu. pl.) Dealing conducted between two or more parties for the purpose of reaching an understanding.

3. The transfer of an instrument by delivery or indorsement whereby the transferee takes it for value, in good faith, and without notice of conflicting title claims or defenses. See HOLDER IN DUE COURSE. [Cases: Bills and Notes C 176, 208.] — negotiate, vb. — negotiable, adj. — negotiability, n.

due negotiation. The transfer of a negotiable document of title so that the transferee takes it free of certain claims enforceable against the transferor. • This is the good-faith-purchase exception to the doctrine of derivative title. UCC §§ 7-501(4); 7-502(1). [Cases: Warehousemen C 15.]

negotiation letter of credit. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

negotiorum gestio (ni-goh-shee-or-am jes-chee-oh), n. [Latin "management of another's affairs"] Roman & civil law. A quasi-contractual situation in which an actor (negotiorum gestor) manages or interferences in the business transaction of another person (dominus negotii) in that person's absence, without authority but out of concern or friendship. La. Civ. Code art. 2292. • By such conduct, the actor is bound to conduct the matter to a conclusion and to deliver the transaction's proceeds to the person, who likewise must reimburse the actor for any expenses incurred. Ia. Civ. Code art. 2297. A negotiorum gestio does not exist if the gestor acted self-interestedly or if the owner expressly forbade the gestor from acting on the owner's behalf. See actio negotiorum gestord under ACTIO. [Cases: Implied and Constructive Contracts C 21.1; Principal and Agent C 149(2).]

"The negotiorum gestio, according to the civilians, is a species of spontaneous agency, or an interference by one in the affairs of another, in his absence, from benevolence or friendship, and without authority. The negotiorum gestor acquires no right of property by means of the interference, and he is strictly bound not only to good faith, but to ordinary care and diligence, and in some cases he is held responsible for the slightest neglect." 2 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *616. (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866.)

negotiorum gestor (ni-goh-shee-or-am jes-tor), n. [Latin "a manager of another's affairs"] Roman & civil law. A person who acts without authority to protect another person's interests, in the reasonable belief that the owner would approve the action if made aware of the circumstances. La. Civ. Code art. 2292. • The actor has a claim to be compensated by the owner for the trouble taken, and the owner has a claim for any loss that results from the negotiorum gestor's fault. • Sometimes shortened to gestor. See NEGOTIORUM GESTIO. Pl. negotiorum gestores.

negotium (ni-goh-shee-om), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A matter; an affair, as in negotium absentis, a matter concerning an absent person. 2. A transaction; an agreement. 3. A trade; a business. 4. A civil or criminal trial. Pl. negotia.

NEH. abbr. NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES. neither party. A docket entry reflecting the parties' agreement not to continue to appear to prosecute and defend a lawsuit. • This entry is equivalent to a dismissal.

ne nepos (nee-pohs), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. A grandson. 2. Hist. A nephew. • The term nepos later became neveu and then “nephew.” See NEPHEW.

ne relessa pas (na re-ay-sa pah), n. [Law French “did not release”] A plaintiff’s reply to a defendant’s plea of release as a defense to liability in a case.

nerve-center test. A method courts sometimes use to determine the location of a company’s principal place of business by examining where the company’s central decision-making authority lies. • Factors include the locations where the corporate officers, directors, and (sometimes) shareholders reside, and where they direct and control the corporation’s activities. [Cases: Corporations C=52; Federal Courts C=300.]

NESDIS. abbr. National Environmental Satellite, Data, and Information Service. See NATIONAL OCEANIC AND ATMOSPHERIC ADMINISTRATION.

net, n. (15c) 1. An amount of money remaining after a sale, minus any deductions for expenses, commissions, and taxes. [Cases: Sales C=57.] 2. The gain or loss from a sale of stock. 3. See net weight under WEIGHT.

net assets. See net worth under worth.

net asset value. The market value of a share in a mutual fund, computed by deducting any liabilities of the fund from its total assets and dividing the difference by the number of outstanding fund shares. — Abbr. NAV. — Also termed asset value. See MUTUAL FUND.

neutral, adj. (15c) 1. Indifferent. 2. (Of a judge, mediator, arbitrator, or actor) refraining from taking sides in a dispute. 3. Impartial; unbiased. • The term frequently applies to statutes that regulate or restrict speech.

content-neutral. (Of a regulation or discrimination) applicable to all speech, regardless of viewpoint and subject matter. See time-place-manner restriction. Cf. subject-matter-neutral; viewpoint-neutral. [Cases: Constitutional Law ☞1511.]

subject-matter-neutral. (Of a regulation or discrimination) not based on the topic or subject of speech. See time-place-manner restriction. Cf. content-neutral; viewpoint-neutral. [Cases: Constitutional Law ☞1507.]

viewpoint-neutral. (Of a regulation or discrimination) not based on a point of view or an ideology. • Viewpoint neutrality was first addressed in Rosenberger v. Visitors of Univ. of Va., 515 U.S. 819, 115 S.Ct. 2510 (1999). See time-place-manner restriction. Cf. content-neutral; subject-matter-neutral. [Cases: Constitutional Law ☞1511.]

neutral, n. (15c) 1. A person or country taking no side in a dispute; esp., a country that is at peace and is committed to aid neither of two or more belligerents. Cf. belligerent.

"The rights of neutrals have grown up to be an important part of international law in modern times.... Now, when a war arises between two states, the interests of all neutrals are more affected than formerly; or, in other words, neutral power has increased more than war power, and the tendency is more and more towards such alterations of the code of war as will favor neutral commerce...." Theodore D. Woolsey, Introduction to the Study of International Law § 163, at 276 (5th ed. 1878).

2. A nonpartisan arbitrator typically selected by two other arbitrators — one of whom has been selected by each side in the dispute. [Cases: Alternative Dispute Resolution ☞240.]

neutrality, n. (15c) 1. The state or quality of being impartial or unbiased. 2. The condition of a nation that in time of war takes no part in the dispute but continues peaceful dealings with the belligerents. — neutral, adj.

armed neutrality. A condition of neutrality that the neutral state is willing to maintain by military force.

neutrality law. Int'l law. An act that prohibits a nation from militarily aiding either of two or more belligerent powers with which the nation is at peace; esp., a federal statute forbidding acts — such as the equipping of armed vessels or the enlisting of troops — designed to assist either of two belligerents that are at peace with the United States, 22 USCA §§ 441–457. [Cases: Neutrality Laws ☞1–5.]

neutrality proclamation. Int'l law. At the outbreak of a war between two nations, an announcement by the President that the United States is neutral and that its citizens may not violate the neutrality laws, as in the Neutrality Proclamation of 1793, issued during the war between France and Great Britain.

neutralization. (1817) 1. The act of making something ineffective. 2. Int'l law. The process by which a country's integrity has been permanently guaranteed by international treaty, conditionally on its maintaining a perpetual neutrality except in its own defense. • Switzerland is the only remaining example, having been neutralized by the Treaty of Vienna in 1815 — a provision reaffirmed by the Treaty of Versailles in 1919. 3. The act of declaring certain persons or property neutral and safe from capture. See neutral property. 4. Evidence. The cancellation of unexpected harmful testimony by showing, usu. by cross-examination, that the witness has made conflicting statements. • For example, a prosecutor may attempt to neutralize testimony of a state witness who offers unexpected adverse testimony. See impeachment (2).

neutral principles. (1959) Constitutional law. Rules grounded in law, as opposed to rules based on personal interests or beliefs. • In this context, the phrase was popularized by Herbert Wechsler. See Toward Neutral Principles of Constitutional Law, 73 Harv. L. Rev. 1 (1959).

neutral property. Things belonging to citizens of a country that is not a party to a war, as long as the things are properly used and labeled. • For example, harmless neutral property aboard a captured belligerent ship would not normally be subject to seizure. But the hiding of explosives in otherwise neutral property could allow the property to be seized as contraband.

neutron-activation analysis. (1951) A method of identifying and analyzing physical evidence by measuring gamma rays emitted by a sample of material after that material has been bombarded with neutrons in a nuclear reactor. • This technique can be used, for example, to detect gunshot residue on the hand of someone who recently fired a gun. The analysis is usu. expensive to perform, but most courts allow the results into evidence. — Abbr. NAA. [Cases: Criminal Law ☞388.2.]

Nevada trust. See asset-protection trust (1) under trust (3).

ne varietur (nee vair-ee-ee-tar), n. [Latin "it must not be altered"] A notation of identity that a person, usu. a notary, places on documents or translations of documents. • In Louisiana, this notation is typically placed on a collateral mortgage note to bind and identify the note with the collateral mortgage.

never indebted, plea of. (1880) A common-law traverse — or denial — by which the defendant in an action on a contract debt denies that an express or implied contract existed. — Also termed non debit. See traverse. [Cases: Bills and Notes ☞474; Contracts ☞339.]

new, adj. 1. (Of a person, animal or thing) recently come into being — the new car was shipped from the factory over construction projects, to order repairs to or demolition of unsafe buildings.

new born-kidnapping by cesarean section. See kidnapping by cesarean under kidnapping.

new business. See business.

new-business rule. The principle precluding an award of damages for lost profits to a business with no recent record of profitability, because the damages would be too speculative. [Cases: Damages 40(1), 190.]

new cause of action. See cause of action.

new-contract dispute. See major dispute under dispute.

new court commitment. See commitment.

new debtor. See debtor.

new-debtor syndrome. Conduct showing a debtor's bad faith in filing for bankruptcy, as a result of which the court may dismiss the bankruptcy petition. • An example is the debtor's formation of a corporation, immediately before the bankruptcy filing, solely to take advantage of the bankruptcy laws. [Cases: Bankruptcy 2252.1, 3503.]

new drug. See drug.

new-for-old. 1. Marine insurance. In adjusting a partial marine-insurance loss, the principle that old materials apply toward payment of the new, so that the old material's value is deducted from the total repair expenses, and then from that balance one-third of the cost of repairs (one-third of the new materials for the old on the balance) is deducted and charged against the insured shipowner. • Also termed deduction for new. [Cases: Insurance 2244.]

New Inn. Hist. English law. One of the Inns of Chancery (collegiate houses) in which law students were placed before entering the Inns of Court. • This practice continued until approximately 1650, when the buildings began to be used only by barristers and solicitors. See Inns of Chancery. Cf. Inns of Court.

new issue. See issue (2).

new-loan fee. See mortgage discount.

newly discovered evidence. See evidence.

new matter. 1. See matter. 2. Patents. Additional information in an amended patent application that adds to the original disclosure. • Since the new matter was reduced to practice after the application was filed, it cannot carry the same filing date. Rather, it must be included in a continuation-in-part application. — Also termed disconformity. [Cases: Patents 109.]

new-matter rejection. See rejection.

new promise. See promise.

new-rule principle. (1989) Criminal procedure. A doctrine barring federal courts from granting habeas corpus relief to a state prisoner because of a rule, not dictated by existing precedent, announced after the prisoner's conviction and sentence became final. — Also termed nonretroactivity principle. See habeas corpus. [Cases: Courts 100.]

new ruling. (1931) Criminal procedure. A Supreme Court ruling not dictated by precedent existing when the defendant's conviction became final and thus not applicable retroactively to habeas cases. • For example, when the Court in Ford v. Wainwright, 477 U.S. 399, 106 S.Ct. 2595 (1986), ruled that the Eighth Amendment prohibits execution of insane prisoners, this new ruling was nonretroactive because it departed so widely from prior doctrine. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 109 S.Ct. 1060 (1989). See habeas corpus. [Cases: Courts 100.] newspaper's privilege. See journalist's privilege (1) under privilege (3).

daily newspaper. (1838) A newspaper customarily published five to seven days every week. — Often shortened to daily.

legal newspaper. A newspaper containing matters of legal interest including summaries of cases, legal advertisements, legislative or regulatory changes, and local bankruptcy notices. [Cases: Newspapers 1–7.]

newspaper of general circulation. (17c) A publication for general circulation, usu. in sheet form, appearing at regular intervals, usu. daily or weekly, and containing matters of general public interest, such as current events.

ewspaper of general circulation. (1838) A newspaper that contains news and information of interest to the general public, rather than to a particular segment, and that is available to the public within a certain geographic area. • Legal notices (such as a class-action notice) are often required by law to be published in a newspaper of general circulation. [Cases: Newspapers 3(5).]

"The phrase 'newspaper of general circulation' is a term of art in most states and does not necessarily mean the newspaper best calculated to reach interested persons." Ann Taylor Scawing, Open Meeting Laws § 5:28, at 190–91 (2d ed. 2000).
official newspaper. A newspaper designated to contain all the public notices, resolves, acts, and advertisements of a state or municipal legislative body. [Cases: Newspapers ☀️ 1–7.]

newspaper prospectus. See PROSPECTUS.

new style. The modern system for ordering time according to the Gregorian method, introduced by Pope Gregory XIII in 1582 and adopted in England and the American colonies in 1752. • Because the Julian calendar year was slightly longer than the astronomical year, the vernal equinox over time had been displaced by ten days. Pope Gregory reformed the calendar by announcing that October 5, 1582 would be called October 15. And, while generally retaining a leap year for years divisible by 4, he skipped leap years in years divisible by 100 (such as 1800 and 1900), but retained leap years for years divisible by 400 (such as 2000). Thus, the years 2000, 2004, 2008, etc. are leap years, but 2100 is not. • Abbr. n.s. • Also termed Gregorian calendar. Cf. OLD STYLE.

new trial. See TRIAL.

new value. See VALUE (2).

new-value defense. See DEFENSE (1).

new work. See WORKS.

New York Stock Exchange. An association of member firms that handle the purchase and sale of securities both for themselves and for customers. • This exchange, the dominant one in the United States, trades in only large companies having at least one million outstanding shares. • Abbr. NYSE. [Cases: Exchanges ☐ 1–15; Securities Regulation ☐ 40.10–40.16.]

New York Supplement. A set of regional lawbooks, part of the West Group's National Reporter System, containing every published appellate decision from intermediate and lower courts of record in New York, from 1888 to date. • The first series ran from 1888 to 1937; the second series is the current one. • Abbr. N.Y.S.; N.Y.S. 2d.

New York Times malice. See actual malice (2) under MALICE.

New York Times rule. A commonsense rule of ethical conduct holding that one should not do anything arguably newsworthy — in public or in private — that one would mind having reported on the front page of a major newspaper. • In various communities, a local newspaper is substituted for the Times. • Also termed New York Times test; New York Times v. Sullivan rule. See actual malice (2) under MALICE.

nexi. n. pl. Latin. Roman law. Debtors given in bondage to creditors until their debts have been paid. See NEXUM.

next devisee. See DEVISEE.

next eventual estate. See ESTATE (1).

next friend. (16c) A person who appears in a lawsuit to act for the benefit of an incompetent or minor plaintiff, but who is not a party to the lawsuit and is not appointed as a guardian. • Also termed prochein ami. [Cases: Infants ☐ 76; Mental Health ☐ 485.]

next-in, first-out. A method of inventory valuation (but not a generally accepted accounting principle) whereby the cost of goods is based on their replacement cost rather than their actual cost. • Abbr. NIFO. Cf. FIRST-IN, FIRST-OUT; LAST-IN, FIRST-OUT.

next of kin. (18c) 1. The person or persons most closely related to a decedent by blood or affinity. Cf. RELATIVE. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ☐ 20–43; Wills ☐ 508.] 2. An intestate's heirs — that is, the person or persons entitled to inherit personal property from a decedent who has not left a will. See HEIR.

next presentation. See PRESENTATION.

nexum. n. Latin. Roman law. A transaction or practice of early Roman law under which a debtor, upon a failure to repay the debt, could be seized and held in bondage until the debt was repaid. • This practice was allowed in very early Roman law. "Nexum. This highly controversial matter will be briefly dealt with as nexum had long been obsolete in classical law. Little is really known of it: it has been doubted whether there ever was such an institution. No text tells us that there was a contract called nexum. • But we have texts which speak of nexum as creative of obligation ... and many literary texts dealing with debtors who were nexi, so that it may be taken as certain that there was such a transaction ... which in some way reduced debtors to a sort of slavery, that great hardships resulted and that a. • Poetelia ... practically ended this state of things, presum­ably by requiring an actual judgment before seizure. The effect was not to abolish nexum, but, by depriving it of its chief value, the power of seizure ... to leave it with no advantages to counterbalance its clumsiness, so that it went out of use." W.W. Buckland, A Text-Book of Roman Law from Augustus to Justinian 429–30 (Peter Stein ed., 3d ed. 1963).

nexus. n. (17c) 1. A connection or link, often a causal one <cigarette packages must inform consumers of the nexus between smoking and lung cancer>. Pl. nexuses; nexus. 2. Roman law. [ital.] In very early times, a debtor given in bondage to creditors until the debts have been paid. Pl. nexi. See nexum.

nexus realis. n. Latin. "A real fetter". Scots law. An encumbrance to property, such as a servitude.

nexus test. (1975) The standard by which a private person's action is considered state action — and may give rise to liability for violating someone's constitutional rights — if the conduct is so closely related to the government's conduct that the choice to undertake it may fairly be said to be that of the state. • While similar to the symbiotic-relationship test, the nexus test focuses on the particular act complained of, instead of on the overall relationship of the parties. Still, some courts use the terms and analyses interchangeably. — Also termed close-nexus test. Cf. SYMBIOTIC-RELATIONSHIP TEST. See JOINT PARTICIPATION; STATE-COMPULSION TEST. [Cases: Civil Rights C= 1326(4, 7).]

"The complaining party must . . . show that there is a sufficiently close nexus between the State and the challenged action of the regulated entity so that the action of the latter may be fairly treated as that of the State itself. The purpose of this requirement is to assure that constitutional standards are invoked only when it can be said that the State is responsible for the specific conduct of which the plaintiff complains. . . . [O]ur precedents indicate that a State normally can be held responsible for a private decision only when it has exercised coercive power or has provided such significant encouragement, either overt or covert, that the choice must in law be deemed to be that of the State." Blum v. Yaretsky, 457 U.S. 991, 1004, 102 S.Ct. 2777, 2786 (1982).

NGO. abbr. NONGOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATION.

NGRI. See not guilty by reason of insanity under NOT GUILTY.

NHTSA. abbr. NATIONAL HIGHWAY TRAFFIC SAFETY ADMINISTRATION.

nichil (nich-əl), n. [Old French nichil fr. Latin nihil "nothing"] Hist. English law. A debt owed to the Exchequer’s office but nihiled by sheriffs as nonleviable. • Once a year, an officer of the Clerk of Nichils enrolled these amounts and sent them to the treasurer’s remembrancer’s office from which process was issued for their recovery. Both offices were abolished in 1833. — Also spelled nihill; nihel.

nichil, vb. (Of a sheriff) to make return that a debt is worthless, because the debtor either cannot be found or is unable to pay.

Nickerson letter. In New York City, a document issued by the Board of Education offering to pay the tuition of a disabled child who has been admitted to a state-approved private school and whose educational needs cannot be met in a public school. • Nickerson letters are named for Judge Eugene P. Nickerson, who presided over the class-action suit that led to their creation. See Jose P. v. Ambach, 669 F.2d 865 (2d Cir. 1982); see also Jose P. v. Ambach, 557 F. Supp. 1230 (E.D.N.Y. 1983). [Cases: Schools C=148(2.1), 155.5(1.)] nickname, n. (15c) 1. A shortened version of a person’s name <“Bill” is William’s nickname>. [Cases: Names C=7.] 2. A descriptive or alternative name, in addition to or instead of the actual name <David Smith’s nickname is “Red”>.

niece. (14c) The daughter of a person’s brother or sister; sometimes understood to include the daughter of a person’s brother-in-law or sister-in-law. • This term is extended in some wills to include a grandniece. Cf. NEPHEW.

half niece. The daughter of one’s half brother or half sister.

NIED. abbr. NEGLIGENT INFLOCTION OF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS.

"When the prisoner hath thus pleaded not guilty, non culpabilis, or nient culpable; which was formerly used to be abbreviated upon the minutes, thus, 'non (or nient) cui:' the clerk of the assise, or clerk of the arraigns, on behalf of the crown replies, that the prisoner is guilty, and that he is ready to prove him so." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 333 (1769).

nient desiré (nee-ent da-deer), vb. [Law French] Hist. To deny nothing; to be subject to a default judgment.

nient le fait (nee-ent la fay). [Law French] Hist. Not the deed. • This term was the earlier version of non est factum. See NON EST FACTUM.

nient seisi (nee-ent see-zee), n. [Law French “not seized”] Hist. The general denial in a writ to recover an annuity.

NIFO (ni-foh), abbr. NEXT-IN, FIRST-OUT.

night. (bef. 12c) 1. The time from sunset to sunrise. 2. Darkness; the time when a person’s face is indiscernible. • This definition was used in the common-law definition of certain offenses, such as burglary. [Cases: Burglary C=8].

"The definition of a burglar, as given by Sir Edward Coke, is, "he that by night breaketh and entereth into a mansion-house, with intent to commit a felony." . . . The time must be by night, and not by day; for in the daytime there is no burglary . . . As to what is reckoned night, and what day, for this purpose anciently the day was accounted to begin only at sunrise, and to end immediately upon sunset; but the better opinion seems to be, that if there be daylight . . . enough, begun or left, to discern a man’s face withal, it is no burglary. But this does not extend to moonlight, for then many midnight burglaries would go unpunished: and besides, the malignity of the offence does not so properly arise from its being done in the dark, as at the dead of night when all the creation, except beasts of prey, are at rest; when sleep has disarmed the owner, and rendered his castle defenceless." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 224 (1769).

3. Thirty minutes after sunset and thirty minutes before sunrise, or a similar definition as set forth by statute, as in a statute requiring specific authorization for night searches. 4. Evening. — Also termed nighttime. Cf. DAY.

nightwalker. 1. Hist. A person who suspiciously wanders about at night and who might disturb the peace. • Nightwalking was an example of a “common” offense requiring no specific facts to be asserted in the indictment. 2. A prostitute who walks the streets at night; streetwalker. [Cases: Prostitution C=10.] 3. A sleep-walker.

nihil. See NIHIL EST.
nil capiat per breve (nī-hil kap-ē-at par bree-vec or breev), n. [Latin "Let him take nothing by his writ"] A judgment against the plaintiff in an action at bar in abatement. — Also termed nihil capiat per billiam ("let him take nothing by his bill").

nihil dicit (nī-hil dī-sit), n. [Latin "he says nothing"] 1. The failure of a defendant to answer a lawsuit. [Cases: Judgment C= 1061]. 2. See nihil dicit default judgment under DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

nihil dicit default judgment. See nihil dicit default judgment under DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

nihil est (nī-hil est). [Latin "there is nothing"] A form of return by a sheriff or constable who was unable to serve a writ because nothing was found to levy on. — Often shortened to nihil. Cf. nulla bona.

nihil habet (nī-hil hay-bat). [Latin "he has nothing"] A form of return by a sheriff or constable who was unable to serve a scire facias or other writ on the defendant. See scire facias.

nihilism (nī-līz-um or nēe-). (1812) 1. A doctrine maintaining that there is no rational justification for moral principles and that there is no objective truth. 2. The view that traditional beliefs are unfounded and that life is meaningless and useless. 3. A theory that the existing economic, social, or political institutions should be destroyed, regardless of the result, because of the basic undesirability of those institutions. • This theory, featured by Ivan Turgenev in his 1861 novel Fathers and Sons, was popular among Russian extremists until the collapse of the czarist government.

nihilist, n. A person who advocates nihilism. See NIHILISM.

"[A] defendant may swear that he knows nothing of the matters referred, and so obtain absolvitor; but such an answer would not avail any defender in regard to a factum proprium. In regard to such a matter, an answer of nihil novit would, in the general case, be regarded as simply an evasion, and be treated as an admission of the debt." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 387 (4th ed. 1894).

nikah. Islamic law. A prenuptial contract, witnessed by at least two men, recording the parties' mutual agreement to marry, the husband's promise to give his wife a certain sum of money or property, and possibly other terms about the parties' rights in and expectations from the marriage. • The contract may be enforceable under general contract-law principles. — Also termed nikah nama. Cf. mahr.

nil (nil). [Latin] (16c) Nothing. • This word is a contracted form of nihil. See NIHIL EST.

"The proper general issue in debt on simple contracts and statutes is 'nil debet,' which is a formal denial of the debt. It denies not only the existence of any contract, but under it any matters in excuse or in discharge may also be shown," Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 184, at 327 (Henry Writheoff Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

nil dicit default judgment. See default judgment.

nil habuit in tenementis (nīl hab-yoo-it in ten-a-men-tis), n. [Law Latin "he has nothing in the tenements"] Hist. In an action to recover rent on a lease, the defendant's plea that the landlord has no title or interest in the property at issue.

nil ligatum (nīl li-gay-tam). [Latin "nothing is bound"] No obligation has been incurred.

NIMA. abbr. national imaging and mapping agency.

Nineteenth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1920, providing that a citizen's right to vote cannot be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any state within it, on the basis of sex. — Also termed Women's Suffrage Amendment. [Cases: Elections C= 13.]

1933 Act. See SECURITIES ACT OF 1933.

1934 Act. See SECURITIES EXCHANGE ACT OF 1934.

ninety-day letter. (1933) Statutory notice of a tax deficiency sent by the IRS to a taxpayer. • During the 90 days after receiving the notice, the taxpayer must pay the taxes (and, if desired, seek a refund) or challenge the deficiency in tax court. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 6212, 6213. — Also written 90-day letter. — Also termed notice of deficiency; deficiency notice; tax-deficiency notice. Cf. THIRTY-DAY LETTER. [Cases: Internal Revenue C= 4542.]

NINJA loan. See LOAN.

Ninth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified with the Bill of Rights in 1791, providing that rights listed in the Constitution must not be construed in a way that denies or disparages unlisted rights, which are retained by the people. [Cases: Constitutional Law C= 1070.]

nisi (ni-si), adj. [Latin "unless"] (18c) (Of a court's ex parte ruling or grant of relief) having validity unless the adversely affected party appears and shows cause why it should be withdrawn . See decree nisi under DECREES. [Cases: Motions C= 24.]

nisi aliud convererit (ni-si ay-lee-ad kon-ven-or-it). [Latin] Hist. Unless it has been otherwise agreed; unless something else has been agreed to.

nisi decree. See decree nisi under decree.

nisi feceris (ni-si fee-so-ris), n. [Law Latin "unless you have done so"] Hist. A clause in a manorial writ providing that the king's court or officer will do justice if the lords fail. • This provision allowed royal courts to usurp the jurisdiction of manorial courts.

nisi malitia suppleat actatem (nt-sl ma-lish-e-a sap-lee-at ee-tay-tam). [Latin] Roman & Scots law. Unless malice supplies want of age. • A child under the age of puberty was presumed to lack the necessary intent to commit a crime unless an evil intent was specifically shown.

nisi prius (nt-sl prl-as). [Latin “unless before then”] (16c) A civil trial court in which, unlike in an appellate court, issues are tried before a jury. • The term is obsolete in the United States except in New York and Oklahoma. — Abbr. n.p. — Also termed nisi prius court.

nisi prius clause. An entry to the record authorizing a jury trial in the designated county. See nisi prius.

nisi prius court. See nisi prius.

nisi prius record. A civil-trial record. See record (4).

nisi prius roll. The transcript of a case at nisi prius. — Also termed nisi prius record.

NIST. abbr. National Institute of Standards and Technology. See technology administration.

nitroglycerine charge. See ALLEN CHARGE.

MN. abbr. No middle name.

NOA. abbr. Slang. 1. No oral argument. • This notation is used esp. in an appellate case in which oral argument is not granted <since the case was NOA, the court relied exclusively on the briefs>. 2. See NOTICE OF APPEARANCE.

NOAA. abbr. NATIONAL OCEANIC AND ATMOSPHERIC ADMINISTRATION.

no-action clause. An insurance-policy provision that bars suit against the insurer until the liability of the insured has been determined by a judgment. [Cases: Insurance <3549(4).]

no-action letter. (1959) A letter from the staff of a governmental agency stating that if the facts are as represented in a person's request for an agency ruling, the staff will advise the agency not to take action against the person. • Typically, a no-action letter is requested from the SEC on such matters as shareholder proposals, resales of stock, and marketing techniques. [Cases: Securities Regulation <81>.

no actus reus (noh ak-tas ree-ss). A plea in which a criminal defendant either denies involvement with a crime or asserts that the harm suffered is too remote from the criminal act to be imputable to the defendant.

no-answer default judgment. See DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

no arrival, no sale. A delivery term, included in some sales contracts, by which the seller assumes the duty to deliver the goods to a specified place, and assumes the risk of loss for the goods while they are in transit. • If the goods arrive damaged or late, the buyer can either avoid the contract or accept the goods at a discount. [Cases: Sales <201(2).]

no award. In an action to enforce an award, the defendant's plea denying that an award was made.

noble officium (noh-ba-lee-oh-fish-ee-am), n. [Latin “noble office or privilege”] Scots law. The power of a superior court, the Court of Session, or the High Court to give equitable relief when none is possible under law.

nobility. n. pl. (14c) 1. Persons of social or political pre-eminence, usu. derived by inheritance or from the sovereign. • In English law, there are various degrees of nobility, or peerage, such as dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons, and their female counterparts. Nobility is generally created either by a writ of summons to sit in Parliament or by a royal grant through letters patent, and was once usu. accompanied by a large land grant. Nobility by writ descended to a person's bodily heirs. The modern practice is to grant nobility by letters patent, which provide limitations as to future heirs. The U.S. Constitution prohibits granting a title of nobility.

no-billed three of the charges>. Cf. TRUE BILL. [Cases: Grand Jury <42>.] — no-bill, vb.

no-bonus clause. Landlord-tenant law. A lease provision that takes effect upon governmental condemnation, limiting the lessee's damages to the value of any

In England nobility is apt to be confounded with the peculiar institution of the British peerage. Yet nobility, in some shape or another, has existed in most places and times or the world's history, while the British peerage is an institution purely local, and one which has actually hindered the existence of a nobility in the sense which the word bears in most other countries. . . . Nobility, then, in the strict sense of the word, is the hereditary handing on from generation to generation of some acknowledged pre-eminence, a pre-eminence founded on hereditary succession, and on nothing else. . . . The pre-eminence so handed on may be of any kind, from substantial political power to mere social respect and precedence. 17 Encyclopaedia Britannica 538 (9th ed. 1907).

2. Persons of high or noble character. 3. The collective body of persons making up the noble class.

no bill. n. (18c) A grand jury's notation that insufficient evidence exists for an indictment on a criminal charge <the grand jury returned a no bill instead of the indictment the prosecutors expected>. <the grand jury no-billed three of the charges>. Cf. TRUE BILL. [Cases: Grand Jury <42>.] — no-bill, vb.

no-bonus clause. Landlord-tenant law. A lease provision that takes effect upon governmental condemnation, limiting the lessee's damages to the value of any improvements to the property and preventing the lessee from recovering the difference between the lease’s fixed rent and the property’s market rental value. See condemnation. [Cases: Eminent Domain ⊑ 147.]

no cause of action. See take-nothing judgment under judgment.

nocent (noh-sant), adj. [fr. Latin nocere “harm”] Archaic. 1. Injurious; harmful. 2. Guilty; criminal. • This word is the little-used antonym of innocent.

nocent (noh-sant), n. [fr. Latin nocere “harm”] Hist. A person who is guilty.

no-claim, n. The lack of a claim. • Legal philosophers devised this term to denote the opposite of a claim. As one jurisprudent has said apologetically, “there is no word in English which expresses the lack of a claim and therefore the rather barbarous ‘no-claim’ has been suggested.” George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 291 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

no-confidence vote. (1840) The formal legal method by which a legislative body, by a majority vote, forces the resignation of a cabinet or ministry. — Also termed vote of no confidence.

no-contact order. See stay-away order.

no contest. (1931) A criminal defendant’s plea that, while not admitting guilt, the defendant will not dispute the charge. • This plea is often preferable to a guilty plea, which can be used against the defendant in a later civil lawsuit. — Also termed no-contest plea; nolo contendere; non vult contendere. [Cases: Criminal Law ⊑ 275.]

no-contest clause. (1929) A provision designed to threaten one into action or inaction; esp., a testamentary provision that threatens to dispossess any beneficiary who challenges the terms of the will. — Also termed in terrorem clause; noncontest clause; terrorem clause; anticontest clause; forfeiture clause. [Cases: Wills ⊑ 651, 656.]

noctanter (nok-tan-tar), n. [Lat. “by night”] Hist. A chancery writ issued to a sheriff as a first step in the recovery of damages for destroying a ditch or hedge. • The neighboring villagers (vills) were held liable for the damages unless they indicted the offender.

noctem de firma (nok-tam dee far-ma), n. [Law Latin “night of duty (payable)”] Hist. The duty or custom of providing entertainment or provisions for a night. • At the time of the Norman Conquest, this was the duty or custom of entertaining the king for one night. — Also termed noctes; firma noctis.

nocumentum (nok-ya-men-tom). [fr. Latin nocere “to harm”] Hist. A nuisance. • There was no remedy at law for a nuisance causing only property damage, but there was a remedy for a nuisance causing injury.

no cure, no pay. Maritime law. The common-law principle that compensation for salvage must come from the material salvaged, and that if no material is salvaged there can be no compensation. • By contrast, civil-law tradition awards compensation even for a failed effort. Cf. assistance. [Cases: Salvage ⊑ 36.]

no-doc loan. See loan.

no-duty, n. Liberty not to do an act. — Also termed liberty not.

no-duty doctrine. (1966) Torts. 1. The rule that a defendant who owes no duty to the plaintiff is not liable for the plaintiff’s injury. 2. The rule that the owner or possessor of property has no duty to warn or protect an invitee from known or obvious hazards. [Cases: Negligence ⊑ 1037(4).]

Noerr–Pennington doctrine. (1967) The principle that the First Amendment shields from liability (esp. under antitrust laws) companies that join together to lobby the government. • The doctrine derives from a line of Supreme Court cases beginning with Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 81 S.Ct. 523 (1961), and United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S.Ct. 1585 (1965). [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ⊑ 905; Civil Rights ⊑ 1374; Constitutional Law ⊑ 1437.]

no evidence. (15c) 1. The lack of a legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a reasonable fact-finder to rule in favor of the party who bears the burden of proof. • There is no evidence in the record about his whereabouts at midnight. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a party can move for judgment as a matter of law to claim that the other party — who bears the burden of proof — has been fully heard and has not offered sufficient evidence to prove one or more essential elements of the suit or defense. Fed. R. Civ. P. 50. Though such a contention is usu. referred to as a no-evidence motion, the issue is not whether there was actually no evidence, but rather whether the evidence was sufficient for the fact-finder to be able to reasonably rule in favor of the other party. [Cases: Evidence ⊑ 597; Federal Civil Procedure ⊑ 2142.1.]

"Since judgment as a matter of law deprives the party opposing the motion of a determination of the facts by a jury, it should be granted cautiously and sparingly. Nevertheless, the federal courts do not follow the rule that a scintilla of evidence is enough to create an issue for the jury. The question is not whether there is literally no evidence upon which the jury properly could find a verdict for that party." 9A Charles Alan Wright & Arthur Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2524, at 252-54 (2d ed. 1995).

2. Evidence that has no value in an attempt to prove a matter in issue (that testimony is no evidence of an alibi).

no-eyewitness rule. (1956) Torts. The largely defunct principle that if no direct evidence shows what a dead person did to avoid an accident, the jury may infer that the person acted with ordinary care for his or her own safety. • In a jurisdiction where the rule persists, a plaintiff in a survival or wrongful death action can assert the rule to counter a defense of contributory negligence. [Cases: Death ⊑ 58(1).]

no-fault, adj. (1967) Of or relating to a claim that is adjudicated without any determination that a party is blameworthy <no-fault divorce>. [Cases: Divorce no-fault auto insurance. See insurance.

no-fault divorce. See Divorce.

no funds. An indorsement marked on a check when there are insufficient funds in the account to cover the check.

no-further-representation clause. A contractual provision, usu. in a settlement agreement, prohibiting the plaintiff's attorney from representing future clients who have the same or a similar claim against the defendant. • Such a clause is thought to be void as against public policy.

"If your standard settlement papers include a clause prohibiting opposing counsel from representing future clients with the same claim, you're violating ethics rules. Typically a defendant's tool, this provision — known as a no-further-representation clause — is popular in class action and mass product-liability settlements. But a little-known ethics rule prohibits lawyers from agreeing, or even offering to agree, to a restriction on an attorney's right to practice law." Leslie A. Gordon, Prohibited Provisions: No-Further-Representation Clauses May Be Advantageous, but They're Also Unethical 91 ABA J. 18, 18 (Apr. 2005).

nonacquiescence (non-ak-wei-es-onts). Administrative law. An agency’s policy of declining to be bound by lower-court precedent that is contrary to the agency’s interpretation of its organic statute, but only until the Supreme Court has ruled on the issue.

A notation indicating that such means are lacking <the bill was indorsed "no recourse">. See nonrecourse loan under loan; without recourse.

No Religious Test Clause. See religious test clause.

no-retreat rule. (1973) Criminal law. The doctrine that the victim of a murderous assault may use deadly force in self-defense if there is no reasonable alternative to avoid the assailant's threatened harm. • A majority of American jurisdictions have adopted this rule. Cf. retreat rule. [Cases: Homicide C<=798.]

no-right, n. (1913) The absence of right against another in some particular respect. • A no-right is the correlative of a privilege. — Also termed liability.

A says to B, 'If you will agree to pay me $100 for this horse you may have him and you may indicate your agreement by taking him.' This is a physical fact, called an offer, consisting of certain muscular acts of A having certain physical results in B. The legal relations immediately following are (in part) as follows: B now has the privilege of taking the horse and A has no-right that he shall not .... "William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 321 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"'No-right' is sometimes derided as being a purely negative concept. If a no-right is something that is not a right, the class of no-rights must, it is said, include elephants. The answer is that negative terms are often useful as alternative ways of stating propositions involving negatives. For instance, the terms 'alien,' 'cold,' and 'dark' are all negative or privative, because their meaning includes the idea of the absence of something else. The proposition that A is an alien means that A is not a British subject; in the one mode of statement the negative is incorporated in the noun, whereas in the other it is expressed as a separate word. Similarly the word 'liberty' is negative, and critics who attack the concept of no-right should logically attack the concept of liberty also. .... [L]iberty means 'no-duty not.' .... [F]or the sake of clear thinking it is necessary to say that 'right' sometimes means 'no-duty not.'" John Saimond, Jurisprudence 240–41 n(u) (Glaviney L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

norm. (1821) 1. A model or standard accepted (voluntarily or involuntarily) by society or other large group, against which society judges someone or something. • An example of a norm is the standard for right or wrong behavior. 2. An actual or set standard determined by the typical or most frequent behavior of a group.

basic norm. In the legal theory of Hans Kelsen, the law from which all the other laws in a society derive. ● Kelsen’s “pure theory of law” maintains that laws are norms. Therefore, a society’s legal system is made up of its norms, and each legal norm derives its validity from other legal norms. Ultimately, the validity of all laws is tested against the “basic norm,” which may be as simple as the concept that all pronouncements of the monarch are to be obeyed. Or it may be an elaborate system of lawmakering, such as a constitution. — Also termed grundnorm. See PURE THEORY.

normal, adj. (15c) 1. According to a regular pattern; natural <it is normal to be nervous in court>. ● The term describes not just forces that are constantly and habitually operating but also forces that operate periodically or with some degree of frequency. In this sense, its common antonyms are unusual and extraordinary. 2. According to an established rule or norm <it is not normal to deface statues>. 3. Setting a standard or norm .

normal school. A training school for public-school teachers. ● Normal schools first appeared in the United States in the 1800s and were two-year post-high-school training programs for elementary-school teachers. At the turn of the century, normal schools expanded into four-year teaching colleges. Most of these institutions have developed into liberal arts colleges offering a wider variety of education and teaching programs. — Also termed normal college. [Cases: Colleges and Universities 1-1.]

Norman French. A language that was spoken by the Normans and became the official language of English courts after the Norman Conquest in 1066. ● The language deteriorated into Law French and continued to be used until the late 17th century. English became the official language of the courts in 1731.

normative, adj. (1852) Establishing or conforming to a norm or standard <Rawls’s theory describes normative principles of justice>.

normative jurisprudence. See NATURAL LAW.

Norris-La Guardia Act (nor is la-gwahr-de-a). A 1932 federal law that forbids federal courts from ruling on labor policy and that severely limits their power to issue injunctions in labor disputes. ● The statute was passed to curb federal-court abuses of the injunctive process, to declare the government’s neutrality on labor policy, to curtail employers’ widespread use of injunctions to thwart union activity, and to promote the use of collective bargaining to resolve disputes. 29 USCA §§ 101–115. — Also termed Labor Disputes Act; Anti-Injunction Act.

Norroy (nor-oy). English law. The third of the three Kings at Arms (and the chief herald), whose province lies on the north side of the river Trent. ● The Norroy’s duties have included the supervision of weddings and funerals of nobility. See HERALD.

North American Free Trade Agreement. A 1994 agreement between the United States, Canada, and Mexico, designed to phase out all tariffs and eliminate many nontariff barriers (such as quotas) inhibiting the free trade of goods between the participating nations. ● Among other provisions, it set minimum standards for intellectual-property protection afforded other members’ citizens. Negotiated at the same time as the GATT talks that produced TRIPs, NAFTA borrowed from many TRIPs provisions on intellectual-property protection, as by as protecting computer software and databases by copyright. While NAFTA incorporates by reference the Berne Convention standards of intellectual-property rights, it exempts the U.S. from recognizing Berne’s moral rights. — Abbr. NAFTA. [Cases: Treaties 8–8.]

North Eastern Reporter. A set of regional lawbooks, part of the West Group’s National Reporter System, containing every published appellate decision from Illinois, Indiana, Massachusetts, New York, and Ohio, from 1885 to date. ● The first series ran from 1885 to 1936; the second series is the current one. — Abbr. notario publico. Mexican law. An attorney who has been licensed for at least three years and is empowered to issue judicial opinions, make binding judgments in minor cases, mediate disputes, and perform marriages. • There is no equivalent professional status in the American legal system, and no direct translation of the term. The status and duties of an American notary public are not comparable to those of a notario público. — Often shortened to notario. Cf. notary public.

notarius (noh-tair-ee-əs), n. [fr. Latin nota "a character or mark"] 1. Roman law. A writer (sometimes a slave) who takes dictation or records proceedings by shorthand. • A notarius was later also called a scriba. 2. Roman law. An officer of the court who takes a magistrate’s dictation by shorthand. Cf. scriba. 3. Hist. An officer who prepares deeds and other contracts. 4. A notary or a scribe.

notarize, vb. (Of a notary public) to attest to the authenticity of (a signature, mark, etc.). [Cases: Acknowledgment C=8; Notaries C=6.]

notary public (noh-tee-ree), n. (16c) A person authorized by a state to administer oaths, certify documents, attest to the authenticity of signatures, and perform official acts in commercial matters, such as protesting negotiable instruments. — Often shortened to notary. — Abbr. n.p. Cf. notario publico. [Cases: Notaries C=1.] Pl. notaries public. — notarize, vb. — notarist, adj.

"A notary public is an officer long known to the civil law, and designated as registrarius, actuarior, or scrivarius." John Proffitt, A Treatise on the Law Relating to the Office and Duties of Notaries Public § 1, at 1 (John F. Tyler & John J. Stephens eds., 2d ed. 1892).

"The notary public, or notary, is an official known in nearly all civilized countries. The office is of ancient origin. In Rome, during the republic, it existed, the title being tabelliones forenses, or personaee publicae; and there are records of the appointment of notaries by the Frankish kings and the Popes as early as the ninth century. They were chiefly employed in drawing up legal documents, as scribes or scriveners they took minutes and made short drafts of writings, either of a public or a private nature. In modern times their more characteristic duty is to attest the genuineness of any deeds or writings, in order to render the same available as evidence of the facts therein contained." Benjamin F. Rex, The Notaries’ Manual § 1, at 1-2 (J.H. McMillan ed., 6th ed. 1913).

"In jurisdictions where the civilian law prevails, such as in the countries of continental Europe, a notary public is a public official who serves as a public witness of facts transacted by private parties ... and also serves as impartial legal advisor for the parties involved. ... In colonial Louisiana, the notary public had the same rank and dignity as his continental civilian ancestor. ... Although notaries still constitute a protected profession in present-day Louisiana, holding office for life provided they renew their bonds periodically in compliance with the governing statute, the importance of their function has diminished over the years to the point that it has been said that a Louisiana notary is no longer a truly civilian notary. Indeed, the trained lawyer is nowadays the Louisiana, and American, counterpart of the continental civilian notary." Saul Litvinkoff, 5 Louisiana Civil Law Treatise: The Law of Obligations 296-97 (2d ed. 2001).

notary record book. See journal of notarial acts.

notary’s certificate. A notary’s signed and sealed or stamped statement attesting to the time and place that the specified acts and documents were authenticated. [Cases: Notaries C=9.]

notary seal. (18c) 1. The imprint or embossment made by a notary public’s seal. [Cases: Notaries C=8.] 2. A device, usu. a stamp or embosser, that makes an imprint on a notarized document. — Also termed notarial seal.

embossed seal. (1959) 1. A notary seal that is impressed onto a document, raising the impression above the surface. • An embossed seal clearly identifies the original document because the seal is only faintly reproducible. For this reason, this type of seal is required in some states and on some documents notarized for federal purposes. [Cases: Notaries C==8.] 2. The embossment made by this seal.

rubber-stamp seal. (1948) 1. In most states, a notary public's official seal, which is ink-stamped onto documents and is therefore photographically reproducible. • It typically includes the notary's name, the state seal, the words "Notary Public," the name of the county where the notary's bond is filed, and the expiration date of the notary's commission. [Cases: Notaries C==8.] 2. The imprint made by this seal.

floating-rate note. A note carrying a variable interest rate that is periodically adjusted within a predetermined range, usu. every six months, in relation to an index, such as Treasury bill rates. — Also termed floater. [Cases: Bills and Notes C==125; Interest C==32.]

hand note. A note that is secured by a collateral note.

installment note. A note payable at regular intervals. — Also termed serial note.

inverse-floating-rate note. A note structured in such a way that its interest rate moves in the opposite direction from the underlying index (such as the London Interbank Offer Rate). • Many such notes are risky investments because if interest rates rise, the securities lose their value and their coupon earnings fall. — Also termed inverse floater. [Cases: Interest C==32.]

joint and several note. A note for which multiple makers are jointly and severally liable for repayment, meaning that the payee may legally look to all the makers, or any one of them, for payment of the entire debt. See joint and several liability under LIABILITY. [Cases: Bills and Notes C==120.]

joint note. A note for which multiple makers are jointly, but not severally, liable for repayment, meaning that the payee must legally look to all the makers together for payment of the debt. See joint liability under LIABILITY. [Cases: Bills and Notes C==120.]

mortgage note. A note evidencing a loan for which real property has been offered as security. [Cases: Mortgages C==14.]

negotiable note. See negotiable instrument.

nonrecourse note. A note that may be satisfied upon default only by means of the collateral securing the note, not by the debtor's other assets. Cf. recourse note. [Cases: Bills and Notes C==44; Secured Transactions C==227, 240.]

note of hand. See promissory note.

post note. See time note.

premium note. A promissory note given by an insured to an insurance company for part or all of the premium.

note of protest. A notary's preliminary memo, to be formalized at a later time, stating that a negotiable instrument was neither paid nor accepted upon presentment. See protest. [Cases: Bills and Notes 408.]
3. Common-law pleading. A defendant's plea denying both an act of trespass alleged in a plaintiff's declaration and the plaintiff's right to possess the property at issue.

"In trespass, whether to person or property, the general issue is 'not guilty.' It operates in the first place as a denial that the defendant committed the act of trespass alleged, to wit, the application of force to the plaintiff's person, the entry on his land, or the taking or damages of his goods. It also denies the plaintiff's possession, title, or right of possession of the land or goods." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 170, at 307-08 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

not guilty by statute. Hist. Under certain acts of Parliament, the pleading form for a defendant's general denial in a civil action. This pleading form allowed a public officer to indicate action under a statute. The officer had to write the words "by statute" in the margin along with the year, chapter, and section of the applicable statute, and the defendant could not file any other defense without leave of court. The right to plead "not guilty by statute" was essentially removed by the Public Authorities Protection Act of 1893.

4. A general denial in an ejectment action. [Cases: Ejectment ☞ 68.]

"The general issue in ejectment is not guilty. This plea operates as follows: (1) As a denial of the unlawfulness of the withholding; i.e., of the plaintiff's title and right of possession. (2) All defenses in excuse or discharge, including the statute of limitations, are available under the general issue in ejectment." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 188, at 333 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

not-guilty plea. See plea (1).

nothous (noh-thas), adj. Archaic. Spurious; illegitimate.

nothus (noh-thas), n. [Latin fr. Greek nothos "false"] Roman law. An illegitimate child; one of base birth. *If the child's mother was a Roman citizen, the child was also a Roman citizen. — Also termed spurius.

notice, n. (16c) 1. Legal notification required by law or agreement, or imparted by operation of law as a result of some fact (such as the recording of an instrument); definite legal cognizance, actual or constructive, of an existing right or title <under the lease, the tenant must give the landlord written notice 30 days before vacating the premises>.

* A person has notice of a fact or condition if that person (1) has actual knowledge of it; (2) has received information about it; (3) has reason to know about it; (4) knows about a related fact; or (5) is considered as having been able to ascertain it by checking an official filing or recording. [Cases: Constitutional Law ☞ 251.6, 309; Notice ☞ 1.] 2. The condition of being so notified, whether or not actual awareness exists <all prospective buyers were on notice of the judgment lien>. Cf. knowledge. [Cases: Sales ☞ 235; Vendor and Purchaser ☞ 225.] 3. A written or printed announcement <the notice of sale was posted on the courthouse bulletin board>.

actual notice. (18c) 1. Notice given directly to, or received personally by, a party. — Also termed express notice. [Cases: Notice ☞ 1.5.] 2. Property. Notice given by open possession and occupancy of real property. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ☞ 232.]

commercial-law notice. Under the UCC, notice of a fact arising either as a result of actual knowledge or notification of the fact, or as a result of circumstances under which a person would have reason to know of the fact. UCC § 1-201(25). [Cases: Sales ☞ 235.]

constructive notice. (18c) Notice arising by presumption of law from the existence of facts and circumstances that a party had a duty to take notice of, such as a registered deed or a pending lawsuit; notice presumed by law to have been acquired by a person and thus imputed to that person. — Also termed legal notice. [Cases: Notice ☞ 4; Vendor and Purchaser ☞ 229.]

direct notice. (17c) Actual notice of a fact that is brought directly to a party's attention. — Also termed positive notice.

due notice. (17c) Sufficient and proper notice that is intended to and likely to reach a particular person or the public; notice that is legally adequate given the particular circumstance. — Also termed adequate notice; legal notice.

express notice. (18c) Actual knowledge or notice given to a party directly, not arising from any inference, duty, or inquiry. See actual notice. [Cases: Notice ☞ 2.]

fair notice. (17c) 1. Sufficient notice apprising a litigant of the opposing party's claim. 2. The requirement that a pleading adequately apprise the opposing party of a claim. *A pleading must be drafted so that an opposing attorney of reasonable competence would be able to ascertain the nature and basic issues of the controversy and the evidence probably relevant to those issues. 3. FAIR WARNING. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ☞ 673; Pleading ☞ 48.]

immediate notice. 1. Notice given as soon as possible. 2. More commonly, and esp. on notice of an insurance claim, notice that is reasonable under the circumstances. [Cases: Insurance ☞ 3154.]

implied notice. (18c) Notice that is inferred from facts that a person had a means of knowing and that is thus imputed to that person; actual notice of facts or circumstances that, if properly followed up, would have led to a knowledge of the particular fact in question. — Also termed indirect notice; presump­tive notice. [Cases: Notice ☞ 3.]

imputed notice. (1831) Information attributed to a person whose agent, having received actual notice of the information, has a duty to disclose it to that person. For example, notice of a hearing may be imputed to a witness because it was actually disclosed to that witness's attorney of record. [Cases: Principal and Agent ☞ 177(1)]

inquiry notice. (1945) Notice attributed to a person when the information would lead an ordinarily prudent person to investigate the matter further; esp., the time at which the victim of an alleged securities fraud became aware of facts that would have prompted a reasonable person to investigate. [Cases: Notice (1924) 6; Vendor and Purchaser (1924) 229.] judicial notice. See judicial notice.

legal notice. 1. See constructive notice. 2. See due notice.

notice by publication. See public notice.

personal notice. (17c) Oral or written notice, according to the circumstances, given directly to the affected person.

positive notice. See direct notice.

presumptive notice. See implied notice.

public notice. (16c) Notice given to the public or persons affected, usu. by publishing in a newspaper of general circulation. • This notice is usu. required, for example, in matters of public concern. — Also termed notice by publication. [Cases: Notice (1924) 11.]

reasonable notice. Notice that is fairly to be expected or required under the particular circumstances.

record notice. (1855) Constructive notice of the contents of an instrument, such as a deed or mortgage, that has been properly recorded. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser (1924) 231.]

short notice. Notice that is inadequate or not timely under the circumstances.

4. Intellectual property. A formal sign attached to items that embody or reproduce an intellectual property right. • Notice of patent is made by placing the word "patent" (or its abbreviation, "pat.") and the item's patent number on an item made by a patentee or licensee. There are three statutory notice forms for items that embody or reproduce an intellectual property right. • Notice of patent is made by placing the word "patent" or its abbreviation, "pat."

notice-of-alibi rule. (1969) The principle that, upon written demand from the government, a criminal defendant who intends to call an alibi witness at trial must give notice of who that witness is and where the defendant claims to have been at the time of the alleged offense. • The government is, in turn, obligated to give notice to the defendant of any witness it intends to call to rebut the alibi testimony. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 12.1. [Cases: Criminal Law (1987) 629(9).] notice of allowability. Patents. Notification from the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office to a patent applicant that the application has been terminated because the applicant failed to pursue prosecution. 4. Construction law. A builder's or contractor's notice that work on unfinished property is being discontinued. See abandonment.

notice of abandonment. 1. The formal notification that an action will no longer be pursued, such as notice from a plaintiff to a defendant that litigation will be nonsuited. 2. Property. A formal announcement, usu. in writing and recorded, that a person is relinquishing a claim to personal or real property. 3. Patents. A written declaration from the United States Patent Office to a patent applicant that the application has been allowed but the application is under a secrecy order.

notice act. See notice statute.

notice-and-comment period. Administrative law. The statutory time frame during which an administrative agency publishes a proposed regulation and receives public comment on the regulation. • The regulation cannot take effect until after this period expires. — Often shortened to comment period. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure (1977) 394, 395.]

notice-and-comment rulemaking. See informal rulemaking under rulemaking.

notice-based quorum. See quorum.

notice by publication. See public notice under notice.

notice doctrine. (1924) The equitable doctrine that when a new owner takes an estate with notice that someone else had a claim on it at the time of the transfer, that claim may still be asserted against the new owner even if it might have been disregarded at law. — Also termed doctrine of notice.

notice filing. The perfection of a security interest under Article 9 of the UCC by filing only a financing statement, as opposed to a copy or abstract of the security agreement. • The financing statement must contain (1) the debtor's signature, (2) the secured party's name and address, (3) the debtor's name and mailing address, and (4) a description of the types of, or items of, collateral. [Cases: Secured Transactions (1987) 92.]
It may include examiner's amendments incorporating some formal changes. [Cases: Patents C=:::> 104.]

notice of allowance. 1. Patents. The formal notification from the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office that a patent application has been approved and that a patent can be issued. • The patent itself is not issued until the applicant has paid the issue fee. [Cases: Patents C=:::> 104.]

2. Trademarks. The formal notification from the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office that a trademark may be placed on the Principal Register if it is actually used in commerce.

notice of appeal. (18c) A document filed with a court and served on the other parties, stating an intention to appeal a trial court's judgment or order. • In most jurisdictions, filing a notice of appeal is the act by which the appeal is perfected. For instance, the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure provide that an appeal is taken by filing a notice of appeal with the clerk of the district court from which the appeal is taken, and that the clerk is to send copies of the notice to all the other parties' attorneys, as well as the court of appeals. Fed. R. App. P. 3(a), (d). — Also termed claim of appeal. See APPEAL. [Cases: Appeal and Error C=:::> 396-430; Criminal Law C=:::> 1081; Federal Courts C=:::> 665.1.]

notice of appearance. (1844) 1. Procedure. A party's written notice filed with the court or oral announcement on the record informing the court and the other parties that the party wants to participate in the case. [Cases: Appearance C=:::> 6; Federal Civil Procedure C=:::> 561.] 2. Bankruptcy. A written notice filed with the court or oral announcement in open court by a person who wants to receive all pleadings in a particular case.

• This notice is usu. filed by an attorney for a creditor who wants to be added to the official service list. 3. A pleading filed by an attorney to notify the court and the other parties that he or she represents one or more parties in the lawsuit. — Abbr. NOA.

notice of completion. Construction law. A written and recorded announcement that a building project is finished, thereby limiting the time for filing mechanic's liens against the property. • The time for filing a lien begins to run when the notice of completion is filed. [Cases: Mechanics' Liens C=:::> 132(4).]

notice of copyright. See COPYRIGHT NOTICE.

notice of deficiency. See NINETY-DAY LETTER.

notice of dishonor. (1804) Notice to the indorser of an instrument that acceptance or payment has been refused. • This notice — along with presentment and actual dishonor — is a condition of an indorser's secondary liability. UCC § 3-503(a). — Also termed certificate of protest; certificate of dishonor. [Cases: Bills and Notes C=:::> 393, 411.]

notice of incomplete application. Patents. A notice sent to the applicant by the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office when a patent application lacks a required document or the filing fee. • The applicant generally has two months to complete the application, with an extension available upon payment of a surcharge. [Cases: Patents C=:::> 104.]

notice of motion. (18c) Written certification that a party to a lawsuit has filed a motion or that a motion will be heard or considered by the court at a particular time. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the requirement that a motion be made in writing is fulfilled if the motion is stated in a written notice of the hearing on the motion. Also, the courts in most jurisdictions require all motions to include a certificate, usu. referred to as a certificate of service, indicating that the other parties to the suit have been given notice of the motion's filing. Notice of any hearing or other submission of the motion must usu. be provided to all parties by the party requesting the hearing or submission. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(d), 7(b)(1); Fed. R. Civ. P. Form 19. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=:::> 921; Motions C=:::> 181.]

notice of nonresponsibility. Construction law. A written disclaimer that, if posted conspicuously and recorded, relieves a property owner from liability for work or materials used on the property without the owner's authorization. • It protects an owner against mechanic's liens that could arise when repairs or improvements are made by a tenant or other person in possession. [Cases: Mechanics' Liens C=:::> 78.]

notice of orders or judgments. (1854) Written notice of the entry of an order or judgment, provided by the court clerk or one of the parties. • Notice of a judgment is usu. provided by the clerk of the court in which the judgment was entered. If the court does not provide notice, a party is usu. required to provide it. Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the clerk is required to provide immediate notice of any order or judgment to any party to the case who is not in default. Fed. R. Civ. P. 77(d); Fed. R. Crim. P. 49(c). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=:::> 2628; Judgment C=:::> 276; Motions C=:::> 57.]

notice of pendency. See LIS PENDENS (3).

notice of prior-art references. Patents. Notification from a patent examiner of the previously issued patents used in rejecting one or more of the applicant's claims. [Cases: Patents C=:::> 108.]

notice of protest. 1. A statement, given usu. by a notary public to a drawer or indorser of a negotiable instrument, that the instrument was neither paid nor accepted; information provided to the drawer or indorser that protest was made for nonacceptance or nonpayment of a note or bill. See PROTEST (2). [Cases: Bills and Notes C=:::> 408.] 2. A shipowner's or crew's declaration under oath that damages to their vessel or cargo were the result of perils of the sea and that the shipowner is not liable for the damages. See PERIL OF THE SEA.

notice of removal. (1892) The pleading by which the defendant removes a case from state court to federal court. • A notice of removal is filed in the federal district court in the district and division in which the suit is pending. The notice must contain a short and plain statement of the grounds for removal and must include a copy of all process, pleadings, and orders that have been served on the removing party while the case has been pending. The removing party must also notify the state court and other parties to the suit that the notice of removal has been filed. A notice of removal must be filed, if at all, within 30 days after the defendant is served with process in the suit. 28 USCA § 1446; Murphy Bros., Inc. v. Michetti Pipe Stringing, Inc., 526 U.S. 344, 119 S.Ct. 1322 (1999). [Cases: Removal of Cases ⊃ 86, 87.]

notice of trial. (17c) A document issued by a court informing the parties of the date on which the lawsuit is set for trial. • While the court typically provides the notice to all parties, it may instead instruct one party to send the notice to all the others. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⊃ 1966; Trial ⊃ 6.]

notice pleading. See pleading (2).

notice-prejudice rule. A doctrine barring an insurer from using late notice as a reason to deny an insured's claim unless the insurer can show that it was prejudiced by the untimely notice. [Cases: Insurance ⊃ 3168.]

notice-race statute. See RACE-NOTICE STATUTE.

notice statute. (1864) A recording act providing that notice of trial has been filed. A notice of trial must be filed, or that an order for relief has been granted. [Cases: Removal of Cases ⊃ 86, 87.]

notice to creditors. Bankruptcy. A formal notice to creditors that a creditors' meeting will be held, that proofs of claim must be filed, or that an order for relief has been granted. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⊃ 2131.]

notice to pay rent or quit. See KOTICE TO QUIT.

notice to pay rent or quit. (18c) 1. A landlord's written notice demanding that a tenant surrender and vacate the leased property, thereby terminating the tenancy. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⊃ 94, 116(2), 116(5), 120(2).] 2. A landlord's notice to a tenant to pay any back rent within a specified period (often seven days) or else vacate the leased premises. — Also termed notice to pay rent or quit.

noticing. (15c) 1. Int'l law. A formal announcement of a legally relevant fact, action, or intent, such as notice of an intent to withdraw from a treaty. 2. NOTICE. • A person receives notification if someone else (1) informs the person of the fact or of other facts from which the person has reason to know or should know the fact, or (2) does an act that, under the rules applicable to the transaction, has the same effect on the legal relations of the parties as the acquisition of knowledge. Restatement of Agency § 9(2).

notify, vb. (14c) 1. To inform (a person or group) in writing or by any method that is understood <I notified the court of the change in address>. 2. Archaic. To give notice of; to make known <to notify the lawsuit to all the defendants>. See NOTICE.

noting protest. See PROTEST (2).

not in order. See OUT OF ORDER (1).

notitia (noh-tish-ee-ah), n. [Latin “knowledge”] 1. Roman law. Knowledge; information. • This term carried over for a time into English practice. 2. Roman law. A list; register; catalogue. • The Notitia Dignitatum (dig-nee-tay-tum) was a list of the high offices in the Eastern and Western parts of the empire, compiled in the late fourth or early fifth century a.d. 3. Hist. Notice. 4. A list of ecclesiastical sees.

not law. A judicial decision regarded as wrong by the legal profession.

"Even when it is not possible to point out any decision that affects the point in question in any one of the ways enumerated, it sometimes happens that the profession has grown to ignore the old decision as wrong or obsolete; and though this does not happen often, when it does happen, the old decision is very likely not to be followed in case the point is squarely raised again. This is one of the instances in which lawyers rather mystically, though soundly, say that a decision is 'not law.'" William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 329 (3d ed. 1914).

notoriety. (16c) 1. The state of being generally, and often unfavorably, known and spoken of <the company executive achieved notoriety when she fled the country to avoid paying taxes>. 2. A person in such a state <the notoriety gave a rare interview>. notorious, adj. (15c) 1. Generally known and spoken of, usu. unfavorably. 2. (Of the possession of property) so conspicuous as to impute notice to the true owner. — Also termed (in sense 2) open and notorious. See adverse possession. [Cases: Adverse Possession C-30.]

notorious cohabitation. See cohabitation.

notorious insolvency. Scots law. A bankruptcy; the stage of insolvency in which the debtor has publicly acknowledged insolvency under the statute. • This stage is usu. followed by sequestration, which is notorious insolvency coupled with the appointment of a trustee for creditors. — Also termed notour bankruptcy.

"Bankruptcy, according to the law of Scotland, is public or notorious insolvency. When a debtor in an obligation cannot fulfil his obligation as undertaken . . . a position which constitutes insolvency — and makes public acknowledgment, in manner determined by statute, of his inability, the status or condition of bankruptcy has arisen, and the insolvent debtor is, in the language of the statutes, a 'notour' bankrupt . . . . The law of notour bankruptcy is mainly statutory. Legislation has fixed the circumstances which constitute the status, and determined all the most important results." George Watson, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 78 (3d ed. 1882).

notorious possession. See possession.

not otherwise indexed by name. A phrase used in shipping and tariff construction, usu. to show a classification of something generally rather than specifically. • For example, a shipment of aircraft and boat engines merely labeled "other articles" is not otherwise indexed by name. — Abbr. NOIBN. [Cases: Carriers C-189.]

notour bankruptcy. See notorious insolvency.

not possessed. Common-law pleading. In an action in trover, the defendant's plea denying possession of the articles allegedly converted. See trover.

not proven. An archaic jury verdict — now used only in Scots criminal law — equivalent in result to not guilty, but carrying with it a strong suspicion of guilt not fully proved. — Also termed Scotch verdict.

not satisfied. A form of return by a sheriff or constable, on a writ of execution, indicating only that the amount due on a judgment was not paid. • A general return of this type is usu. viewed as technically deficient because it does not state why the writ was not satisfied. Cf. nulla bona. [Cases: Execution C-334.]

not sufficient funds. (1845) The notation of dishonor (of a check) indicating that the drawer's account does not contain enough money to cover payment. — Abbr. NSF. — Also termed insufficient funds.

notwithstanding, prep. (15c) Despite; in spite of <notwithstanding the conditions listed above, the landlord can terminate the lease if the tenant defaults.>

n.o.v. abbr. non obstante veredicto.

nova causa interventiens. See intervening cause under cause (1).

nova debita (noh-va deb-i-ta). [Latin] Scots law. New debts, as distinguished from preexisting ones. • "A security granted by a debtor within sixty days of his bankruptcy for a debt contracted before that period is reducible as a fraudulent preference. But security or payment granted in consideration of a novum debitum — a debt presently contracted — is not reducible although granted within the sixty days." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 402 (4th ed. 1894).

novae narrationes (noh-vee no-ray-shee-oh-nee), n. [Law Latin "new counts or tales"] Hist. A collection of pleading forms published during the reign of Edward III.

novalia (noh-vay-lee-o). [Law Latin "new lands" or "newly tilled land"] Scots law. Land newly cultivated. • Exemptions from paying teinds, or tithes, were sometimes granted for novalia.

nova statuta (noh-va sto-t[y]a-ta), n. pl. [Law Latin] Hist. New statutes. • This term refers to the statutes passed beginning with the reign of Edward III. Cf. vetera statuta.

novation (noh-vay-shon), n. (16c) 1. The act of substituting for an old obligation a new one that either replaces an existing obligation with a new obligation or replaces an original party with a new party. • A novation may substitute (1) a new obligation between the same parties, (2) a new debtor, or (3) a new creditor. 2. A contract that (1) immediately discharges either a previous contractual duty or a duty to make compensation, (2) creates a new contractual duty, and (3) includes as a party one who neither owed the previous duty nor was entitled to its performance. — Also termed substituted agreement; (Scots law) innovation; (Roman law) novatio (noh-vay-shee-oh). See stipulatio aquiliana; substituted contract under contract; accord (2). [Cases: Novation C-1.] — novate (noh-vayt) or noh-vayt, vb. — novatory (noh-va-tor-ee), adj.

"Novation is the emerging and transfer of a prior debt into another obligation either civil or natural, that is, the constitution of a new obligation in such a way as to destroy a prior one." Ulpian, D. 46.2.1 pr.

"The only way in which it is possible to transfer contractual duties to a third party is by the process of novation, which requires the consent of the other party to the contract. In fact novation really amounts to the extinction of the old obligation, and the creation of a new one, rather than to the transfer of the obligation from one person to another. Thus if B owes A £100, and C owes B the same amount, B cannot transfer to C the legal duty of paying his debt to A without A's consent. But if A agrees to accept C as a debtor in place of B, and if C agrees to accept A as his creditor in place of B, the three parties may make a tripartite agreement to this effect, known as novation. The effect of this is to extinguish B's liability to A and create a new liability on the part of C." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 283 (3d ed. 1981).

"The word 'novation' is used in a variety of senses. Courts frequently use it as synonymous with 'substituted contract.' Most academic writers and both contracts restatements, however, restrict its use to describe a substituted contract involving at least one obligor or obligee who was not a party to the original contract . . . . The development of a separate category under the rubric 'novation' is doubtless traceable to problems of consideration formerly thought to be present in such contracts because of the former common law rule that consideration must be supplied by the promisee. This rule has long been laid to rest almost everywhere." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 11-8, at 444–45 (3d ed. 1987).

objective novation. Civil law. A novation involving the substitution of a new obligation for an old one. [Cases: Novation ☐ 4.]

subjective novation. Civil law. A novation involving the substitution of a new obligor for a previous obligor who has been discharged by the obligee.

novel assignment. See new assignment under assignment (7).

novel disseisin (nov-al dis-see-zin), n. A recent dissei­sin. See disseisin; assize of novel disseisin under assize (8).

Novellae (no-vel ee). See novels.

Novellae Constitutiones. See novels.

Novellae Leonis (no-vel-ee lee-oh-nis), n. [Latin "novels of Leo"] A collection of 113 ordinances issued by Emperor Leo from A.D. 887–893.

Novels. A collection of 168 constitutions issued by the Roman emperor Justinian and his immediate successors. • Taken together, the Novels make up one of four component parts of the Corpus Juris Civilis. — Also termed Novellae; Novellae Constitutiones. See corpus juris civilis.

novelty. (14c) 1. Trade secrets. The newness of information that is generally unused or unknown and that gives its owner a competitive advantage in a business field. • In the law of trade secrets, novelty does not require independent conception or even originality. A rediscovered technique with marketable applications can qualify as a novelty and be protected as a trade secret. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ☐ 413. 2. Patents. Newness of an invention both in form and in function or performance; the strict statutory requirement that this originality be demonstrated before an invention is patentable. • Proving novelty is one purpose of the rigorous and expensive examination process. If the invention has been previously patented, described in a publication, known or used by others, or sold, it is not novel. 35 USCA § 102. Cf. nonobviousness. [Cases: Patents ☐ 37.]

"Although the statute uses the words 'not known,' these are not to be taken literally. Novelty consists primarily in the invention not having been used by others in the United States or patented or described in any printed publication in this or any foreign country," Roger Sherman Hoar, Patent Tactics and the Law 36–37 (3d ed. 1950).

absolute novelty. Patents. The rule in most countries, but not in the United States, that an inventor must always file a patent application before the invention is publicly used, placed on sale, or disclosed. • Under U.S. law, an inventor is given a one-year grace period — beginning on the date of any public use, sale, offer of sale, or publication by the inventor or the inventor's agent — in which to file a patent application. After that, the patent is barred. Canada and Mexico also give the first inventor or the inventor's assignees a one-year grace period for filing, but they bar a patent for the first inventor if the invention is independently developed and disclosed by someone else during that time. — Also termed absolute-novelty requirement. Cf. bar date.

noverint universi per praeentes (noh-va-ron-t yoo-no­var-see-pra-prim-ten-tsez), n. [Latin] Know all men by these presents. • This is a formal phrase once found at the beginning of deeds of release. In translation, the phrase still sometimes appears on various types of legal documents. See know all men by these presents; pateat universi per praeentes.

novigild (noh-va-gild), n. [fr. Latin novem "nine" + Anglo-Saxon gid or gild "a payment"] Hist. The money a person must pay for damaging another person's property, the amount equaling nine times the purchase price of the property damaged.

novi operis nuntiatio (noh-vee-ah-pear-shee-aynunt-tee-aw), n. [Latin "new work protest"] Roman law. A protest against an opus novum ("new work"). • A person whose rights were impaired by the building of a new structure could protest to the praetor. The praetor could order the builder to give the protestor a security against any loss caused by the construction (edictum de novi operis nuntiatio). If the builder refused, the praetor could prohibit further construction with a prohibitory interdict (interdictum de novi operis nuntiatione). — Also written operis novi nuntiatio. Cf. iactus lapilli.

noviter perventa (noh-vee-tar par-ven-to), n. pl. [Law Latin "newly known"] Eccles. law. Newly discovered facts, which are usu. allowed to be introduced in a case even after the pleadings are closed.

novodamus (noh-va-day-mas), n. [Latin novo damus "we grant anew"] Scots law. 1. A clause in a charter that progressively grants certain rights anew. • The phrase appeared in reference to any charter by which a superior renewed a previous land grant to a vassal. 2. A charter containing such a clause.

"This clause is subjoined to the dispositive clause; and by it the superior, whether the Crown or a subject, grants de novo the subjects, rights, or privileges therein described. Such a clause is usually inserted where the vassal is sensible of some defect or flaw in the former right . . . . This was also the correct form of proceeding . . . when the vassal wished to get free of burdens chargeable upon the subject for casualties due to the superior; for a charter of novodamus is accounted in law an original right, which imports a discharge of all prior burdens," William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 747 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

novus actus interveniens (noh-vee-ak-tas-in-tear-vee-neen-sanz). See intervening cause under cause (1).

novus homo (noh-vee-hoh-moh), n. [Latin "new man"] Hist. A man who has been pardoned for a crime.

NOW account. See ACCOUNT.

now comes. See COMES NOW.

noxal (nok-sal), adj. Archaic. Of or relating to a claim against a father or owner for damage done by a son, a slave, or an animal.

noxal action. [fr. Latin actio noxalis "injurious action"] 1. Roman law. The claim against an owner or father for a tort committed by a son, a slave, or an animal. • The father or owner generally had to pay damages or else surrender the tortfeasor offending person or animal to the injured party (noxal surrender). — Also termed noxal liability. See NOXAL ACTION. 3. An offense, generally. 4. The punishment for an offense. 5. Something that exerts a harmful effect on the body.

noxal liability. See NOXA (2).

noxal surrender. See NOXA (2).

noxious (nok-shas), adj. (15c) 1. Harmful to health; injurious. 2. Unwholesome; corruptive. 3. Archaic. Guilty.

nubilis (n[y]ool-ba-lis), n. [Latin "marriageable"] Civil law. A person, esp. a girl, who is old enough to be married.

nuclear-nonproliferation treaty. See nonproliferation treaty under TREATY (1).

Nuclear Regulatory Commission. An independent federal agency that licenses and regulates civilian use of nuclear energy. • The agency was created by the Energy Reorganization Act of 1974. Executive Order 11834 of 1975 gave it additional functions previously performed by the Atomic Energy Commission. — Abbr. NRC. [Cases: Environmental Law 481, 484, 485, 487, 492.]” nuda patientia (n[y]ool-da pash-ee-en-shee-oh). [Latin] Mere sufferance. • In a servitude, the servient estate owner's obligation is one of mere sufferance because, while the owner has to submit to the dominant estate, the owner does not have to take any positive steps (such as fixing a sidewalk) to enhance the exercise of the dominant servitude.

nude, adj. (15c) 1. Naked; unclothed. 2. Lacking in consideration or in some essential particular. See NUDUM PACTUM. 3. Mere; lacking in description or specification.

nude contract. See NUDUM PACTUM.

nude matter. A mere allegation.

"[N]ude matter is not of so high nature, as either a mater of Record or a specialty, otherwise there called mater in deed; which maketh mee to thinke, that nude mater is a naked allegation of a thing done, to be proved only by witnesses, and not either by Record, or other specialty in writing vnder seale." John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

nude pact. See NUDUM PACTUM.

nudum dominium (n[y]ool-dam da-min-ee-om). See DOMINIUM.

nudum pactum (n(y)oo-dam pak-tam). [Latin “bare agreement”] (17c) 1. Roman law. An informal agreement that is not legally enforceable, because it does not fall within the specific classes of agreements that can support a legal action. • But a pactum could create an exception to or modification of an existing obligation.

2. An agreement that is unenforceable as a contract because it is not “clothed” with consideration. — Also termed naked contract; nude contract; nude pact. [Cases: Contracts 118-47, 54(1).]

nugatory (n(y)oo-ga-tor-ee), adj. (17c) Of no force or effect; useless; invalid <the Supreme Court rendered the statute nugatory by declaring it unconstitutional.>

nuisance. (14c) 1. A condition, activity, or situation (such as a loud noise or foul odor) that interferes with the use or enjoyment of property; esp., a nontransitory condition or persistent activity that either injures the physical condition of adjacent land or interferes with its use or with the enjoyment of easements on the land or of public highways. • Liability might or might not arise from the condition or situation. — Formerly also termed annoyance. [Cases: Nuisance 11-4-4.]

“A nuisance may be merely a right thing in the wrong place, like a pig in the parlor instead of the barnyard.” Village of Euclid v. Amber Realty Co., 272 U.S. 365, 388, 47 S.Ct. 114, 118 (1926).

“A nuisance is a state of affairs. To conduct a nuisance is a tort. In torts, the word ‘nuisance’ has had an extremely elastic meaning; sometimes it is little more than a pejorative term, a weasel word used as a substitute for reason. ... The general distinction between a nuisance and a trespass is that the trespass flows from a physical invasion and the nuisance does not.” Roger A. Cunningham et al., The Law of Property § 7.2, at 417 (2d ed. 1993).

2. Loosely, an act or failure to act resulting in an interference with the use or enjoyment of property. • In this sense, the term denotes the action causing the interference, rather than the resulting condition <the Slocums’ playing electric guitars in their yard constituted a nuisance to their neighbors>. [Cases: Nuisance 11-3, 61.]

“There is perhaps no more impenetrable jungle in the entire law than that which surrounds the word ‘nuisance.’ It has meant all things to all people, and has been applied indiscriminately to everything from an alarming advertisement to a cockroach baked in a pie.” Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 86, at 616 (W. Page Keeton ed., 5th ed. 1984).

3. The class of torts arising from such conditions, acts, or failures to act when they occur unreasonably. — Also termed actionable nuisance. [Cases: Nuisance 11-3, 61.]

“Nuisance is really a field of tortious liability rather than a single type of tortious conduct: the feature which gives it unity is the interest invaded — that of the use and enjoyment of land. The tort emphasises the harm to the plaintiff rather than the conduct of the defendant.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 50-51 (17th ed. 1977).

abatable nuisance. (1871) 1. A nuisance so easily removable that the aggrieved party may lawfully cure the problem without notice to the liable party, such as overhanging tree branches. [Cases: Nuisance 11-19.]

2. A nuisance that reasonable persons would regard as being removable by reasonable means.

absolute nuisance. (18c) 1. Interference with a property right that a court considers fixed or irremovable, such as a riparian owner’s right to use a stream in its natural condition. [Cases: Nuisance 11-1-7.] 2. See nuisance per se.

anticipatory nuisance. A condition that, although not yet at the level of a nuisance, is very likely to become one, so that a party may obtain an injunction prohibiting the condition. — Also termed prospective nuisance. [Cases: Nuisance 11-1.]

attractive nuisance. (1901) A dangerous condition that may attract children onto land, thereby causing a risk to their safety. See attractive-nuisance doctrine. Cf. allurement; dangerous condition (2) under condition (4). [Cases: Negligence 11-72, 1175.]

 “[The doctrine acquired the unfortunate misnomer ‘attractive nuisance,’ a label which persists to this day. It cannot be taken literally, since the courts have now largely rejected the notion that the child must be attracted by that which injures him, and whether or not the condition is in fact a ‘nuisance’ has nothing at all to do with defendant’s liability to the child.” Edward J. Kionka, Torts in a Nutshell 89 (2d ed. 1992).

cognate nuisance. Rare. Interference with an easement.

“The term nuisance is applied to torts of two distinct groups, first, acts of wrongful use by an owner or possessor of land resulting in an unreasonable interference with the rights of enjoyment of the owner or possessor of neighboring land, and, second, wrongful interferences with easements or other incorporeal rights.” William F. Walsh, A Treatise on Equity 170 (1930).

“When an easement was interfered with, an action on the case lay as a matter of course. ... Such an interference is sometimes called ‘cognate nuisance’ to distinguish it from interferences with the personal enjoyment of the incidents of occupying the land.” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 486 (3d ed. 1990).

common nuisance. See public nuisance.

continuing nuisance. (1837) A nuisance that is either uninterrupted or frequently recurring. • It need not be constant or unceasing, but it must occur often enough that it is almost continuous. [Cases: Nuisance 11-4, 19.]

legalized nuisance. A nuisance sanctioned by legislative, executive, or other official action and therefore immune from liability, such as a city park.

mixed nuisance. (1894) A condition that is both a private nuisance and a public nuisance, so that it is dangerous to the community at large but also causes particular harm to private individuals. [Cases: Nuisance $\Rightarrow 72$.]

nuisance at law. See nuisance per se.

nuisance dependent on negligence. See qualified nuisance.

nuisance in fact. (1855) A nuisance existing because of the circumstances of the use or the particular location. • For example, a machine emitting high-frequency sound may be a nuisance only if a person’s dog lives near enough to the noise to be disturbed by it. — Also termed nuisance per accidents.

nuisance per se (por say). (186) Interference so severe that it would constitute a nuisance under any circumstances; a nuisance regardless of location or circumstances of use, such as a leaky nuclear-waste storage facility. — Also termed nuisance at law; absolute nuisance. [Cases: Nuisance $\Rightarrow 4$.]

permanent nuisance. (18c) A nuisance that cannot readily be abated at reasonable expense. Cf. temporary nuisance. [Cases: Nuisance $\Rightarrow 1, 4$.]

private nuisance. (18c) A condition that interferes with a person’s enjoyment of property; esp., a structure or other condition erected or put on nearby land, creating or continuing an invasion of the actor’s land and amounting to a trespass to it. • The condition constitutes a tort for which the adversely affected person may recover damages or obtain an injunction. [Cases: Nuisance $\Rightarrow 1$.]

“Trespass and private nuisance are alike in that each is a field of tort liability rather than a single type of tortious conduct. In each, liability may arise from an intentional or an unintentional invasion. For an intentional trespass, there is liability without harm; for a private nuisance, there is no liability without significant harm. ... In private nuisance an intentional interference with the plaintiff’s use or enjoyment is not of itself a tort, and unreasonableness of the interference is necessary for liability.” Restatement (Second) of Torts § 821D cmt. d (1979).

“The different ways and combinations of ways in which the interest in the use or enjoyment of land may be invaded are infinitely variable. A private nuisance may consist of an interference with the physical condition of the land itself, as by vibration or blasting which damages a house, the destruction of crops, flooding, raising the water table, or the pollution of a stream or of an underground water supply.” W. Page Keeton et al., Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 87, at 619 (W. Page Keeton ed., 5th ed. 1984).

prospective nuisance. See anticipatory nuisance.

public nuisance. (17c) An unreasonable interference with a right common to the general public, such as a condition dangerous to health, offensive to community moral standards, or unlawfully obstructing the public in the free use of public property. • Such a nuisance may lead to a civil injunction or criminal prosecution. — Also termed common nuisance. [Cases: Nuisance $\Rightarrow 59-96$.]

“Public and private nuisances are not in reality two species of the same genus at all. There is no generic conception which includes the crime of keeping a common gaming-house and the tort of allowing one’s trees to overhang the land of a neighbour. A public nuisance falls within the law of torts only in so far as it may in the particular case constitute some form of tort also. Thus the obstruction of a highway is a public nuisance; but if it causes any special and peculiar damage to an individual, it is also a tort actionable at his suit.” R.F.V. Heuson, Salmond on the Law of Torts 49-50 (17th ed. 1977).

“[Public nuisance ... is an amorphous and unsatisfactory area of the law covering an ill-assorted collection of wrongs, some of which have little or no association with tort and only appear to fill a gap in criminal law. Others cover what could be generally described as ‘noisome trade,’ which could be dealt with under some form of statutory nuisance. Yet a third group deals with what we would generally describe as ‘abuses of the highway’ ...” R.W.M. Dias & B.S. Markesinis, Tort Law 254 (1984).

qualified nuisance. (1944) A condition that, though lawful in itself, is so negligently permitted to exist that it creates an unreasonable risk of harm and, in due course, actually results in injury to another. • It involves neither an intentional act nor a hazardous activity. — Also termed nuisance dependent on negligence. Cf. absolute nuisance. [Cases: Nuisance $\Rightarrow 1, 6, 59$.]

recurrent nuisance. A nuisance that occurs from time to time with distinct intervals between occurrences, rather than being continuous or only briefly interrupted.

temporary nuisance. (1879) A nuisance that can be corrected by a reasonable expenditure of money or labor. Cf. permanent nuisance. [Cases: Nuisance $\Rightarrow 4, 19$.]

nuisance money. See nuisance settlement under settlement (2).

nuisance per accidents. See nuisance in fact under nuisance.

nuisance prior art. See art.

nuisance settlement. See settlement (2).

nuke. Slang. See denial-of-service attack.

null (nul). [Law French] No; none. • This negative particle begins many phrases, such as null tiet.

null agard (nul a-gahrd). n. [Law French “no award”] In an action to enforce an arbitration award on an arbitration bond, a plea denying the existence of the award. Cf. AGARD.

null disseisin (nol dis-see-zin). [Law French “no disseisin”] In a real action, a defendant’s plea that the plaintiff was not deprived of the possession of any land and tenements. See disseisin.

null fait agard (nol fay a-gahrd). [Law French] No award was made. Cf. AGARD.

null, adj. (16c) Having no legal effect; without binding force; void <the contract was declared null and void>. • The phrase null and void is a common redundancy. [Cases: Contracts $\Rightarrow 98, 135$.]

nulla bona (nol-oh boh-no). [Latin “no goods”] (18c) A form of return by a sheriff or constable upon an execution when the judgment debtor has no seizable property within the jurisdiction. Cf. NIHIL EST. [Cases: Execution $\Rightarrow 334$.]
nulla persona (nal-ə par-soh-na). [Latin] Hist. No person. • The phrase appeared in reference to the status of one who essentially has no legal rights usu. because of that person's actions, such as committing a crime, or that person's status, such as being a minor.

nulla poena sine lege (nal-ə pee-na si-nee lee-jee or sin-ə lay-gay). [Latin] No punishment without a law authorizing it.

nulla sasina, nulla terra (nal-ə say-si-na or say-zee-i-ə), nal-ə ter-ə). [Law Latin] Scots law. No seisin (or enfeoffment), no land. • The phrase appeared in reference to the principle that there could be no indefeasible right in land until an enfeoffment was taken.

nullification (nal-i-fi-kay-shon), n. (18c) 1. The act of making something void; specif., the act of a state in abrogating a federal law, on the basis of state sovereignty. [Cases: States C=} 4.1(1)]. 2. The state or condition of being void. See JURIS NULLIFICATION.

nullification doctrine. The theory — espoused by southern states before the Civil War — advocating a state's right to declare a federal law unconstitutional and therefore void.

nullify, vb. To make void; to render invalid.

nullity (nal-ə-tee). (16c) 1. Something that is legally void <the forged commercial transfer is a nullity>. [Cases: Contracts C=} 98, 135]. 2. The fact of being legally void <she filed a petition for nullity of marriage>.

absolute nullity. Civil law. 1. An act that is void because it is against public policy, law, or order. • The nullity is noncurable. It may be invoked by any party or by the court. See La. Civ. Code arts 7, 2030. 2. The state of such a nullity. See NULLITY OF MARRIAGE.

relative nullity. Civil law. 1. A legal nullity that can be cured by confirmation because the object of the nullity is valid. • The nullity may be invoked only by those parties for whose interest it was established. See La. Civ. Code art. 2031. 2. The state of such a nullity.

nullity of marriage. 1. The invalidity of a presumed or supposed marriage because it is void on its face or has been voided by court order. • A void marriage, such as an incestuous marriage, is invalid on its face and requires no formality to end. See void marriage under MARRIAGE (1). [Cases: Marriage C=} 11, 54(1), 58.]

"The declaration of nullity is appropriate if the marriage is relatively null or absolutely null yet one or both spouses were in good faith, if the marriage is relatively null, civil effects flow until the declaration of nullity. On the other hand, the marriage that is absolutely null generally produces civil effects only if one or both of the spouses were in good faith and so long as good faith lasts." 16 Katherine S. Spalth & W. Lee Hargrave, Louisiana Civil Law Treatise: Matrimonial Regimes § 7.6, at 348 (2d ed. 1997).

2. A suit brought to nullify a marriage. — Also termed nullity suit. See ANNULMENT. [Cases: Marriage C=} 56.]

nullity suit. See NULLITY OF MARRIAGE (2).

nullius filius (na-li-as fil-e-əs). n. [Latin "son of no one"] An illegitimate child. [Cases: Children Out-of-Wedlock C=} 1, 84–89.] nullius in bonis (na-li-as in boh-nis), adj. [Latin "among the property of no person"] Hist. Belonging to no one. • Wild animals were considered to be nullius in bonis. — Also termed in nullius bonis.

nullum arbitrium (nal-am ahribi-tree-am), n. [Law Latin "no decision"] Hist. In an action to enforce an arbitration bond, a plea denying the existence of an arbitration award.

nullum est erratum (nal-am est a-ray-tom), n. [Latin "there is no error in the record"] In response to an assignment of error, the common plea that there is no error in the record. • The effect of the plea is essentially to admit well-pleaded facts.

nullum Fecerunt arbitrium (nal-am fa-see-rant ahribi-tree-am). [Latin "they never submitted to arbitration"] Hist. In an action to enforce an arbitration award, the defendant's plea denying that there had been an arbitration.

Nullum Tempus Act (nal-am tem-pas akt), n. [Latin] Hist. English law. The Crown Suits Act of 1769 (amended in 1862) that limited the Crown's time to sue, in land and other specified matters, to 60 years. • The statute altered the common-law rule of nullum tempus aut locus occurrit regi ("no time or place affects the Crown"), which was based on the idea that the Crown was too busy with governmental affairs to timely attend to its legal affairs.

nullum tempus occurrit receptis publicae (nal-am tem-pas a-ka-rit ree-pab-la-sea), n. [Latin "no time runs against the state"] The principle that a statute of limitations does not apply to a commonwealth or state unless a statute specifically provides that it does. • The purpose of the rule is to fully protect public rights and property from injury. [Cases: Limitation of Actions C=} 11.]

nuliel (nal teel). [Law Latin] No such. • This phrase typically denotes a plea that denies the existence of something.

nuliel corporation, n. [Law French "no such corporation exists"] A plea denying the existence of an alleged corporation. • The defense of nuliel corporation must usu. be affirmatively pleaded by a defendant before a plaintiff is required to prove its corporate existence. [Cases: Corporations C=} 514.]

nuliel record, n. [Law French "no such record"] A plea denying the existence of the record on which the plaintiff bases a claim. • Evidence may generally be introduced to invalidate the record only, not the statements in the record. See trial by record under TRIAL. [Cases: Judgment C=} 914.]

"The proper general issue in debt on judgments is 'nuliel record,' which denies the existence of the record alleged. Nuliel record sets up: (1) the defense either that there is no record at all in existence; or (2) one different from that which the defendant has declared or, (3) that the judgment is void on the face of the record.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common Law Pleading § 186, at 330 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

null tort (nul tort), n. [Law French “no wrong”] Hist. A type of general denial in an action to recover lands and tenements, by which the defendant claims that no wrong was done. See null disseisin.

“The general issue, or general plea, is what traverses, thwart, and denies at once the whole declaration; without offering any special matter whereby to evade it . . . . . i] n real actions, null tort, no wrong done; null disseisin, no disseisin; and in a writ of right, that the tenant has more right to hold than the demandant has to demand. These pleas are called the general issue, because, by importing an absolute and general denial of what is alleged in the declaration, they amount at once to an issue; by which we mean a fact affirmed on one side and denied on the other.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 305 (1768).

null waste (nul wast), n. [Law French “no waste”] Hist. The defendant’s general denial in an action to recover damages for the destruction of lands and tenements. See null tort.

numbers game. A type of lottery in which a person bets that on a given day a certain series of numbers will appear from some arbitrarily chosen source, such as stock-market indexes or the U.S. Treasury balance. ● The game creates a fund from which the winner’s share is drawn and is subject to regulation as a lottery. Cf. numbers racket. [Cases: Lotteries CEl 3.]

numbers racket. An illegal lottery in which the players typically choose a series of numbers and win if their chosen numbers match a series of randomly drawn numbers. ● Numbers rackets have historically been operated in poor neighborhoods and have permitted players to bet small amounts or even to bet on credit. An additional element of their historical attraction was the players’ avoidance of paying income tax on winnings. Numbers rackets are often associated with organized crime, and because of their odds (about 1:1,000), they are noted for being rigged and making large profits for racketeers. Cf. numbers game. [Cases: Lotteries CEl 25.]

numerical lottery. See Genoese lottery under LOTTERY.

numerosity (n'yoo-ma-ahs-a-tee). (1958) The requirement in U.S. district courts that, for a case to be certified as a class action, the party applying for certification must show, among other things, that the class of potential plaintiffs is so large that the joinder of all of them into the suit is impracticable. See class action. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure CEl 163.]

nummata (na-may-ta), n. [Law Latin “money”] The monetary price of something.

nunciato (nan-she-ay-toh). See nuntiatio.

nuncio (nan-sho-oh), n. [Italian, fr. Latin nunciare “to announce”] 1. A papal ambassador to a foreign court or government; a representative of the Vatican in a country that maintains diplomatic relations with it. — Also termed nuncios; nuntio. Cf. legatus a latere under LEGATUS; internuncio (3); legate (3). 2. Archaic. A messenger.

nunc pro tunc (nangk proh tan-gk or nangk proh tuangk). [Latin ”now for then”] Having retroactive legal effect through a court’s inherent power <the court entered a nunc pro tunc order to correct a clerical error in the record>. [Cases: Judgment CEl 273, 326; Motions CEl 54.]

“When an order is signed ‘nunc pro tunc’ as of a specified date, it means that a thing is now done which should have been done on the specified date.” 35A c.J.S. Federal Civil Procedure § 370, at 556 (1960).

nunc pro tunc amendment. See amendment (2).

nuncupare (nang-kyu-pair-ee), vb. [Latin “call by name”] Hist. To name or pronounce orally. ● Nuncupare heredem means to name an heir before public witnesses.

nuncupate (n;ng-koo-p;l-tiv), vb. [fr. Latin nuncupare “call by name”] 1. Hist. To designate or name. 2. To vow or declare publicly and solemnly. 3. To declare orally, as a will. 4. To dedicate or inscribe (a work).

nuncupative (nang-kyoo-pay-tiv or nang-kyoo-pa-tiv), adj. [fr. Latin nuncupare “to name”] (15c) Stated by spoken word; declared orally.

nuncupative testament by public act. See nuncupative will by public act under will.

nuncupative will. See will.

nuncupative will by public act. See will.

nunc valent et quantum valuerunt tempore pactis (nangk vay-lent et kwon-ter-am val-yoo-er-ant tem-pa-rec pay-sis). [Latin] Scots law. The value (of the lands) now, and their value in time of peace. ● This was the object of an inquiry formerly made in an inquest to assess the value of lands for taxation purposes.

nundinae (noo-nay-ee), n. [Latin] “nine” + dies “day”] 1. Roman law. A fair or market. 2. Roman law. The period between two consecutive markets (usu. eight days), including the market days. ● This period was often fixed for the payment of debts.

nundination (noo-ni-day-shan), n. [fr. Latin nundinatio “the holding of a market or fair”] Hist. The act of buying or selling at a fair.

nunquam indebitus (nan[g]-kwam in-deb-i-tay-tas), n. [Latin “never indebted”] Hist. A defensive plea in a debt action, by which the defendant denies any indebtedness to the plaintiff. Cf. concessit solvere.

nunqua
nuntiatio (nan-shee-ay-shee-oh), n. [Latin "a declaration"] Hist. A formal declaration or protest. • A nuntiatio novi operis was an injunction placed on the construction of a new building by the person protesting the construction. — Also spelled nunciato.

nuntio. See nunciato.

nuntius (non-shee-as), n. [Latin "bearer of news"] 1. Roman law. A messenger. • Declarations through a messenger were usu. as valid as those by letter. 2. Hist. A messenger sent to make an excuse for a party's absence in court. 3. Hist. An officer of the court. — Also termed summoner; beadle. 4. Eccles. law. NUNCIO (1).

nuper obiit (nyoo-par oh-bee-it), n. [Latin "lately died"] Hist. A writ available to an heir to establish the equal division of land when, on the death of an ancestor who held the estate in fee simple, a coheir took the land and prevented the other heirs from possessing it. The writ was abolished in 1833. See coparcener.

nuptiae (nap-shee-ee). See matrimonium.

nuptiae secundae (nap-shee-ee s-kan-dee), n. [Latin] Eccles. law. A second or subsequent marriage. • In canon law, second or subsequent marriages were frowned upon, and priests would not officiate at those ceremonies.

nuptial (nap-shal), adj. (15c) Of or relating to marriage. [Cases: Marriage C=23, 26.]

nuptiales tabulae (nap-shee-ay-lee tab-yaa-lee). [Latin] Roman law. Marriage tablets — i.e., documents recording a marriage and the terms on which it was entered into. • These writings were not essential to the validity of a marriage.

Nuremberg defense (nyar-um-barg). The defense asserted by a member of the military who has been charged with the crime of failing to obey an order and who claims that the order was illegal, esp. that the order would result in a violation of international law. • The term is sometimes used more broadly to describe situations in which citizens accused of committing domestic crimes, such as degradation of government property, claim that their crimes were justified or mandated by international law. [Cases: Criminal Law C=58; Military Justice C=832.] nurture, vb. (14c) 1. To supply with nourishment. 2. To train, educate, or develop.

nurturing-parent doctrine. Family law. The principle that, although a court deciding on child support generally disregards a parent's motive in failing to maximize earning capacity, the court will not impute income to a custodial parent who remains at home or works less than full-time in order to provide a better environment for a child. • The doctrine is fact-specific; courts apply it case by case. [Cases: Child Support C=88, 90.]

NVOCC. abbr. See non-vessel-operating common carrier under carrier.

N.W. abbr. north western reporter.

NWS. abbr. National Weather Service. See national oceanic and atmospheric administration.

nychthemeron (nik-thee-mar-ahn), n. [Greek] An entire day and night; a 24-hour period.

NYS. abbr. new york supplement.

NYSE. abbr. new york stock exchange.

nystagmus (ni-stag-mas). A rapid, involuntary jerking or twitching of the eyes, sometimes caused by ingesting drugs or alcohol. See horizontal-gaze nystagmus test.
Oath. (bef. 12c) 1. A solemn declaration, accompanied by a swearing to God or a revered person or thing, that one's statement is true or that one will be bound to a promise. • The person making the oath implicitly invites punishment if the statement is untrue or the promise is broken. The legal effect of an oath is to formally make a declaration solemn without a swearing to God or a revered person or thing; AFFIRMATION. Cf. PLEDGE (1).

3. A form of words used for such a declaration. 4. A promise made under the sanction of such an appeal. "The word 'oath' (apart from its use to indicate a profane expression) has two very different meanings: (1) a solemn appeal to God in attestation of the truth of a statement or the binding character of such a promise; (2) a statement or promise made under the sanction of such an appeal." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 515 (3d ed. 1982).

assertory oath (a-sor-to-ree). (18c) An oath by which one attests to some factual matter, rather than making a promise about one's future conduct. • A courtroom witness typically takes such an oath.

corporal oath (kor-par-al). (16c) An oath made solemn by touching a sacred object, esp. the Bible. • Also termed solemn oath; corporale sacramentum.

"Oath (Juramentum) is a calling Almighty God to witness that the Testimony is true; therefore it is aptly termed Sacramentum, a Holy Band, a Sacred Yoke, or Godly Vow. And it is called a Corporal Oath, because the party when he swears, toucheth with his right hand the Holy Evangelists or Book of the New Testament." Thomas Blount, Nomolexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

decisive oath. Civil law. An oath by a party in a lawsuit, used to decide the case because the party's adversary, not being able to furnish adequate proof, offered to refer the decision of the case to the party. • Also termed decisory oath.

extrajudicial oath. (17c) An oath that, although formally sworn, is taken outside a legal proceeding or outside the authority of law. • Also termed nonjudicial oath.

false oath. See perjury.

judicial oath. (17c) An oath taken in the course of a judicial proceeding, esp. in open court. [Cases: Witnesses C-227.]

loyalty oath. See oath of allegiance.

nonjudicial oath. 1. An oath taken out of court, esp. before an officer ex parte. • Also termed voluntary oath. 2. See extrajudicial oath.

oath de calumnia. See oath of calumny.

oath ex officio (eks o-fish-ee-oh). Hist. At common law, an oath under which a person accused of a crime swore to answer questions before an ecclesiastical court.

oath in litem (l-tem or -tom). Civil law. An oath taken by a plaintiff in testifying to the value of the thing in dispute when there is no evidence of value or when the defendant has fraudulently suppressed evidence of value.

oath of allegiance. An oath by which one promises to maintain fidelity to a particular sovereign or government. • This oath is most often administered to a high public officer, to a soldier or sailor, or to an alien applying for naturalization. • Also termed loyalty oath; test oath.

oath of calumny (kal-am-nee). (17c) Hist. An oath that a plaintiff or defendant took to attest to that party's good faith and to the party's belief that there was a bona fide claim. • Also termed oath de calumnia. See calumny.

oath of office. (16c) An oath taken by a person about to enter into the duties of public office, by which the person promises to perform the duties of that office in good faith. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees C-36(1).]

oath of supremacy. Hist. English law. An oath required of those taking office, along with the oaths of allegiance and abjuration, declaring that the sovereign is superior to the church in ecclesiastical matters.

oath purgatory. See purgatory oath.

oath supplenary. See supplenary oath.

pauper's oath. (1844) An affidavit or verification of poverty by a person requesting public funds or services. See poverty affidavit under AFFIDAVIT; IN FORMA PAUPERIS. [Cases: Costs C-132(6); Federal Civil Procedure C-273A.]

promissory oath. (15c) An oath that binds the party to observe a specified course of conduct in the future.
Both the oath of office and the oath of allegiance are types of promissory oaths. [Cases: Oath C=>1.]

puratory oath. An oath taken to clear oneself of a charge or suspicion. — Also termed oath purgatory.

solemn oath. See corporal oath.

supplementary oath (sap-lay-tor-e). 1. Civil law. An oath administered to a party, rather than a witness, in a case in which a fact has been proved by only one witness. • In a civil-law case, two witnesses are needed to constitute full proof. See half-proof. 2. An oath administered to a party to authenticate or support some piece of documentary evidence offered by the party. — Also termed oath supplementary. [Cases: Evidence C=>354, 376.]

test oath. See oath of allegiance.

voluntary oath. See nonjudicial oath (1).

oath against an oath. See swearing match.

oath-helper. See compurgator.

oath of abjuration. See abjuration.

Oath or Affirmation Clause. (1974) The clause of the U.S. Constitution requiring members of Congress and the state legislatures, and all members of the executive or judicial branches — state or local — to pledge by oath or affirmation to support the Constitution. U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 3. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees C=>36(1).]

oath-rite. The form or ceremony used when taking an oath.

oathworthy, adj. Legally capable of making an oath.

ob continentiam delicti (ob kon-tay-nen-shee-ahm da-lik-tih). [Latin] On account of contingency to the offense; being contaminated by association with something illegal.

ob continentiam (ob kon-tay-nen-shee-ahm). [Latin] Hist. 1. On account of connection; by reason of similarity. • This phrase appeared when there was a close enough connection between two or more lawsuits to consolidate them. 2. In case of contingency.

obedience. Compliance with a law, command, or authority.

obediential obligation. See obligation.

ob favorem mercatorum (ob fa-vor-am mar-ka-tor-am). [Latin] In favor of merchants.

obit (oh-bee-it). [Latin] He died; she died.

obit. (14c) 1. Archaic. A memorial service on the anniversary of a person’s death. 2. A record or notice of a person’s death; an obituary.

obiter (oh-bit-ar), adv. [Latin “by the way”] (16c) Incidentally; in passing <the judge said, obiter, that a nominal sentence would be inappropriate>.

obiter, n. See obiter dictum.

obiter dictum (oh-bee-it dik-tom). [Latin “something said in passing”] (18c) A judicial comment made while delivering a judicial opinion, but one that is unnecessary to the decision in the case and therefore not precedent (although it may be considered persuasive). — Often shortened to dictum or, less commonly, obiter. Pl. obiter dicta. See dictum. Cf holding (1); ratio decidendi. [Cases: Courts C=>92.]

“Strictly speaking an ‘obiter dictum’ is a remark made or opinion expressed by a judge, in his decision upon a cause, ‘by the way’ — that is, incidentally or collaterally, and not directly upon the question before the court; or it is any statement of law enunciated by the judge or court merely by way of illustration, argument, analogy, or suggestion. . . . In the common speech of lawyers, all such extrajudicial expressions of legal opinion are referred to as ‘dicta,’ or ‘obiter dicta,’ these two terms being used interchangeably.” William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 304 (3d ed. 1914).

obiter ex post facto (oh-bee-it eks post fak-toh). A court’s holding that, according to a later court, was expressed in unnecessarily broad terms. • Some authorities suggest that this is not, properly speaking, a type of obiter dictum at all.

object (oh-beekt), n. (15c) 1. A person or thing to which thought, feeling, or action is directed <the natural object of one’s bounty>. See natural object.

object of a power. A person appointable by a donee. See power of appointment. [Cases: Powers C=>7.]

2. Something sought to be attained or accomplished; an end, goal, or purpose <the financial objects of the joint venture>.

object of an action. The legal relief that a plaintiff seeks; the remedy demanded or relief sought in a lawsuit. Cf subject of an action. [Cases: Action C=>1.]

object of a statute. The aim or purpose of legislation; the end or design that a statute is meant to accomplish. [Cases: Statutes C=>184.]

object (oh-beekt), vb. (15c) 1. To state in opposition; to put forward as an objection <the prosecution objected that the defendant’s discovery requests were untimely>. 2. To state or put forward an objection, esp. to something in a judicial proceeding <the defense objected to the testimony on the ground that it was privileged>. [Cases: Criminal Law C=>690–698; Federal Civil Procedure C=>2017; Trial C=>31, 77, 131] — objector, n.

object code. Copyright. The machine-readable language compiled from a computer programmer’s source code. • Object code is difficult to reverse-engineer, so publicly available software is always in this form. Object code is protected by copyright law and may also be protected by patent law. Because people cannot read or understand it, object code is deposited with the U.S. Copyright Office more often than source code. Cf. source objection, n. (1837) 1. A formal statement opposing something that has occurred, or is about to occur, in court and seeking the judge’s immediate ruling on the point. The party objecting must usually state the basis for the objection to preserve the right to appeal an adverse ruling. [Cases: Criminal Law ⊂=690−698, 1043; Federal Civil Procedure ⊂=2017; Trial ⊂=31, 77, 131.]

continuing objection. (1940) A single objection to all the questions in a given line of questioning. A judge may allow a lawyer to make a continuing objection when the judge has overruled an objection applicable to many questions, and the lawyer wants to preserve the objection for the appellate record. — Also termed running objection. [Cases: Criminal Law ⊂=694; Trial ⊂=79.]

general objection. (18c) An objection made without specifying any grounds in support of the objection. A general objection preserves only the issue of relevancy. Also termed broadside objection. [Cases: Pleading ⊂=232; Criminal Law ⊂=695(2), 1043(2); Federal Civil Procedure ⊂=2017.1; Trial ⊂=82.]

speaking objection. (1958) An objection that contains more information (often in the form of argument) than needed by the judge to sustain or overrule it. Many judges prohibit lawyers from using speaking objections, and sometimes even from stating the grounds for objections, because of the potential for influencing the jury.

specific objection. (1894) An objection that is accompanied by a statement of one or more grounds in support of the objection. [Cases: Criminal Law ⊂=695(2); Federal Civil Procedure ⊂=2017.1; Trial ⊂=82, 83.]

2. Parliamentary law. A motion that suppresses a main motion, esp. one that will or may inflame controversy, immediately and without debate. The motion, because it disposes of the main motion without any debate, usu. requires a supermajority. Also termed question of consideration; objection to consideration of a question. "Objection to the consideration of a question is used when an original main motion is of a delicate or personal nature, or is contentious or inflammatory (such as sectarian, political, racial, etc.), or is irrelevant, unprofitable, or otherwise objectionable to a majority of the committee. The motion can be avoided altogether by instantly objecting to the consideration of the question." George Demeter, Demeter’s Manual of Parliamentary Law and Procedure 141 (1969).

3. Parliamentary law. A negative vote, esp. one that defeats a request for general consent. 4. Patents. An examiner’s action identifying a defect in the form of a patent application, usu. in the specification or a drawing. An objection does not raise questions about the merit of the claims. An examiner might object, for instance, to a defective oath or to a trademark appearing on the drawings. Cf. rejection (4). [Cases: Patents ⊂=104.] objectionable, adj. (18c) Open to opposition, esp. adverse reason or contrary argument. Also termed exceptional.

objection in point of law. (17c) A defensive pleading by which the defendant admits the facts alleged by the plaintiff but objects that they do not make out a legal claim. [Cases: Pleading ⊂=341, 351.]

objection to consideration of a question. See objection (2).

objective, adj. (17c) 1. Of, relating to, or based on externally verifiable phenomena, as opposed to an individual’s perceptions, feelings, or intentions <the objective facts>. 2. Without bias or prejudice; disinterested <because her son was involved, she felt she could not be objective>. Cf. subjective.

objective but-for test. See but-for materiality.

objective entrapment. See entrapment.

objective ethics. See moral absolutism.

objective impossibility. See impossibility.

objective meaning. See meaning.

objective method. See hypothetical-person defense.

objective novation. See novation.

objective standard. See standard.

objective theory of contract. (1904) The doctrine that a contract is not an agreement in the sense of a subjective meeting of the minds but is instead a series of external acts giving the objective semblance of agreement. Often shortened to objective theory. Cf. subjective theory of contract; meeting of the minds. [Cases: Contracts ⊂=15, 147(1).] object of a power. See permissible appointee under appointee.

object of a right. (1880) The thing in respect of which a right exists; the subject matter of a right. Also termed subject of a right. See subject of a right.

object offense. See offense (1).

object of the power. See permissible appointee under appointee.

object of the power of appointment. See permissible appointee under appointee.

oblation (ah-blay-shan). (15c) An offering or sacrifice, esp. one in a religious or ritualistic ceremony. — oblatory, adj.

obligate, vb. (16c) 1. To bind by legal or moral duty. 2. To commit (funds, property, etc.) to meet or secure an obligation.

obligatio civilis (ah-bla-gay-shee-oh sə-və-liis). [Latin "civil obligation"] Roman law. 1. An obligation recognized under jus civile as opposed to one recognized only under jus honorarium. 2. A legally enforceable obligation, such as one by contract.

obligatio ex delicto (ah-bla-gay-shee-oh eks da-lik-toh). [Latin "tortious obligation"] Roman law. An obligation arising from a wrongdoing against the person or property of another; an obligation enforceable in tort. — Also termed obligatio ex maleficio (mal-a-fish-ee-oh).

obligatio honoraria (ah-bla-gay-shee-oh hən-ə-rər-ee-ə). Roman law. An obligation that the praeator or an aedile declare actionable.

obligatio naturalis (ah-bla-gay-shee-oh nach-ə-ray-lis). [Latin "natural obligation"] Roman law. An obligation that is not legally enforceable, although it may produce legal effects; an obligation deriving only from the law of nature.

obligatio quasi ex contractu (ah-bla-gay-shee-oh kway-st [or -zi] eks kon-trak-tlyoo). [Latin "obligation from quasi-contract"] Roman law. An obligation arising between two persons who have not contracted with each other but have formed a relationship similar to a contractual one, where a payment is made in error; a quasi-contractual obligation. See implied-in-law contract under contract.

obligatio quasi ex delicto (ah-bla-gay-shee-oh kway-st [or -zi] eks da-lik-toh). [Latin "obligation from something resembling a tort"] Roman law. An obligation arising from a wrong that is not covered by an obligatio ex delicto but that nonetheless creates liability. — Also termed obligatio quasi ex maleficio (mal-a-fish-ee-oh).

obligation, n. (18c) 1. A legal or moral duty to do or not do something. • The word has many wide and varied meanings. It may refer to anything that a person is bound to do or forbear from doing, whether the duty is imposed by law, contract, promise, social relations, courtesy, kindness, or morality. 2. A formal, binding agreement or acknowledgment of a liability to pay a certain amount or to do a certain thing for a particular person or set of persons; esp., a duty arising by contract. — Also termed (in sense 2) civil obligation. See duty (1); liability (1). [Cases: Contracts C-1-1.] 3. Civil law. A legal relationship in which one person, the obligor, is bound to render a performance in favor of another, the obligee. La. Civ. Code art. 1756.

"[In English-speaking countries an unfortunate habit has arisen of using 'obligation' in a lax manner as co-extensive with duties of every kind." Frederick Pollock. A First Book of Jurisprudence 82 (1896).

"Obligation in its popular sense is merely a synonym for duty. Its legal sense, derived from Roman law, differs from this in several respects, in the first place, obligations are merely one class of duties, namely, those which are the correlative of rights in personam. An obligation is the vinculum juris, or bond of legal necessity, which binds together two or more determinate individuals... Secondly, the term obligation is in law the name, not merely of the duty, but also of the correlative right. It denotes the legal relation or vinculum juris in its entirety, including the right of the one party, no less than the liability of the other. Looked at from the point of view of the person entitled, an obligation is a right; looked at from the point of view of the person bound, it is a duty... An obligation, therefore, may be defined as a proprietary right in personam or a duty which corresponds to such a right." John Salmond. Jurisprudence 460 (Clayville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"[In its more general acceptation, the word 'obligation' means something that the law or morals command a person to do, a command that is made effective by the imposition of a sanction if the person fails to obey or comply. When given that reference, the word 'obligation' is made synonymous with the word 'duty.' In that sense it is said, for example, that all citizens of a certain age are under an obligation to fulfill their military duties... In another sense, the word 'obligation' means an instrument in writing, however informal, whereby one party contracts with another for the payment of a sum of money. In commercial law, for example, the word 'obligation' may mean a negotiable instrument... In the technical terminology of the civil codes, however, the word 'obligation' means a legal bond that binds two persons in such a way that one of them, the creditor or obligee, is entitled to demand from the other, the debtor or obligor, a certain performance." Saul Litvinoff. 5 Louisiana Civil Law Treatise: The Law of Obligations 1-2 (2d ed. 2001).

absolute obligation. (17c) An obligation requiring strict fulfillment according to the terms of the engagement, without any alternatives to the obligor.

accessory obligation. (17c) 1. An obligation that is incidental to another obligation. • For example, a mortgage to secure payment of a bond is an accessory obligation. The primary obligation is to pay the bond itself. Cf. primary obligation (1). 2. See secondary obligation.

alternative obligation. (18c) An obligation that can be satisfied in at least two different ways, at the choice of the obligor. — Also termed disjunctive obligation.

bifactual obligation (bi-fak-tor-al). An obligation created by two parties.

civil obligation. 1. See conventional obligation. 2. Obligation (2). community obligation. A debt or other obligation incurred by either spouse after marriage in a community property state. • Such an obligation is presumed to be an obligation of the community and not of the individual spouse. [Cases: Husband and Wife 268.]

conditional obligation. (17c) An obligation that depends on an uncertain event. [Cases: Contracts 218.]

conjunctive obligation. An obligation composed of multiple performances that can be separately rendered or enforced; esp., an obligation in which several objects are connected by and (not or) or are in some other way clearly meant to be separately included in the contract. • For example, a loan agreement's conjunctive obligation may require payment of four loan installments and delivery of a deed of trust. Each loan installment and the deed's delivery is a separate, enforceable performance.

contractual obligation. An obligation arising from a contract or agreement. [Cases: Contracts 1.]

conventional obligation. (18c) An obligation that results from agreement of the parties; a contractual obligation. • Also termed express obligation; civil obligation. Cf. obediential obligation.

current obligation. (18c) An obligation that is presently enforceable, but not past due.

determinate obligation. An obligation that has a specific thing as its object. • For example, an obligation to deliver the 1491 Venice edition of Vocabularium Iuris that once belonged to H.L.A. Hart can be discharged only by delivering the specified book. Cf. indeterminate obligation.

dischjunctive obligation. See alternative obligation.

divisible obligation. An obligation that can be divided without the consent of the parties. • Either the performing party or the receiving party may unilaterally divide the obligation.

express obligation. See conventional obligation.

heritable obligation. (18c) An obligation that may be enforced by a successor of the creditor or against a successor of the debtor. • Also termed inheritable obligation. [Cases: Descent and Distribution 8.] imperfect obligation. See moral obligation.

implied obligation. See obediential obligation.

indeterminate obligation. 1. An obligation by which the obligor is bound to deliver one of a certain species of items. • For example, an obligation to deliver a pre-1509 edition of Vocabularium Iuris can be discharged by delivering any edition published before that date. 2. An obligation that is not specific in amount or form, or is subject to being changed by a third party. Cf. determinate obligation.

inheritable obligation. See heritable obligation.

joint obligation. (18c) 1. An obligation that binds two or more debtors to a single performance for one creditor. 2. An obligation that binds one debtor to a single performance for two or more creditors.

moral obligation. (18c) A duty that is based only on one's conscience and that is not legally enforceable; an obligation with a purely moral basis, as opposed to a legal one. • In contract law, moral obligation may support a promise in the absence of traditional consideration, but only if the promisor has previously received some actual benefit from the promisee. • Also termed imperfect obligation; natural obligation. [Cases: Contracts 76.]

natural obligation. 1. Civil law. A moral duty that is not enforceable by judicial action. • Natural obligations are recognized in civil-law jurisdictions. While they are not enforceable by judicial action, something that has been performed under a natural obligation may not be reclaimed. For example, if an indigent patient in a hospital has no legal obligation to pay for the treatment but does so anyway, that person cannot later reclaim the payments voluntarily made. • Also termed obligation naturalis. 2. See moral obligation.

obediential obligation (o-bee-deen-shal). (18c) An obligation imposed on a person because of a situation or relationship, such as an obligation of parents to care for their children. • Also termed implied obligation. Cf. conventional obligation.

perfect obligation. A legally enforceable obligation; one that is recognized and sanctioned by positive law.

personal obligation. 1. An obligation performable only by the obligor, not by the obligor's heirs or representatives. 2. An obligation in which the obligor is bound to perform without encumbering his or her property for its performance.

primary obligation. (17c) 1. An obligation that arises from the essential purpose of the transaction between the parties. Cf. accessory obligation (1). 2. A fundamental contractual term imposing a requirement on a contracting party from which other obligations may arise. • Also termed principal obligation.

principal obligation. The obligation designated as the first to be satisfied.

primary obligation. See principal obligation (2).

pure obligation. Scots law. An absolute obligation already due and immediately enforceable. • Also termed pure debt.

secondary obligation. (17c) A duty, promise, or undertaking that is incident to a primary obligation; esp., a duty to make reparation upon a breach of contract. • Also termed accessory obligation.
several obligation. 1. An obligation that binds two or more debtors to separate performances for one creditor. 2. An obligation that binds one debtor to separate performances for two or more creditors.

simple obligation. (17c) An obligation that does not depend on an outside event; an unconditional obligation.

single obligation. (17c) An obligation with no penalty attached for nonperformance, as when one party simply promises to pay 20 dollars to another.

solidary obligation (sol-<l-der-ee). Roman & civil law. An obligation that binds each of two or more debtors for the entire performance at the option of the creditor. • Solidary obligations are analogous to common-law joint and several obligations.

substitute obligation. Civil law. An obligation that takes the place of an extinguished obligation by novation. See novation. [Cases: Novation C-<l-4.]

unifactoral obligation (yoo-na-fak-tar-al). An obligation created by one party.

obligation, mutuality of. See mutuality of obligation.

obligational. See obligatory.

obligatio naturalis. See obligatio.

obligation bond. See general obligation bond under bond (3).

obligationes innominati. See innominate obligations.

Obligation of Contracts Clause. See contracts clause.

obligations, law of. See law of obligations.

obligatio quasi ex contractu. See obligatio.

obligatio quasi ex delicto. See obligatio.

obligatio quasi ex maleficio. See obligatio quasi ex delicto under obligatio.

obligatory (ob-<l-bigh-a-tor-ee), adj. (14c) 1. Legally or morally binding <an obligatory promise>. 2. Required; mandatory <attendance is not obligatory>. 3. Creating or recording an obligation . — Also termed (rarely) obligatory.

oblige (ob-ligh). vb. (14c) 1. To bind by legal or moral duty; obligate. 2. To bind by doing a favor or service.

oblige (ob-la-jee). (16c) 1. One to whom an obligation is owed; a promisee, creditor, or donor beneficiary. 2. Under the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act, any person to whom a duty of support is owed. 3. Archaic. One who is obliged to do something; obligor (1).

"Several dictionaries, such as The Random House College Dictionary (rev. ed. 1988) and Webster's New World Dictionary (1979), define oblige in its etymological sense ['obliged'], as if it were synonymous with obligor. Random House, for example, defines obligee as 'a person who is under obligation,' but that meaning ought to be reserved for obligor. An obligee, in modern usage, is one to whom an obligation is owed." Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 609 (2d ed. 1995).

obligor (ob-la-gor or ob-la-gor). (16c) 1. One who has undertaken an obligation; a promisor or debtor. UCC § 9-102(a)(59). 2. Under the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act, any person who owes a duty of support. 3. Archaic. One who obliges another to do something; obligee (1).

principal obligor. A person who is under a duty of indemnity.

oblique (ob-bleek or a-bleek), adj. (15c) 1. Not direct in descent; collateral <an oblique heir>. 2. Indirect; circumstantial <oblique evidence>.

oblique evidence. See circumstantial evidence (1) under evidence.

obliterate, vb. (16c) 1. To wipe out, rub off, or erase (a writing or other markings). 2. To remove from existence; to destroy all traces of. — obliteration, n.

obliterated corner. See corner.

oblivion. (14c) 1. The act or fact of forgetting or having forgotten <the oblivion of sleep>. 2. The state of being completely forgotten or unknown . 3. An official disregard of an offense; pardon; amnesty <an act of oblivion by Parliament>.

obloquy (ob-lo-kwee). (15c) 1. Abusive or defamatory language; calumny. 2. The state or condition of being ill spoken of; disgrace or bad repute.

ob non solutum canonem (ob non sa-loo-tam ka-noh-nam). [Law Latin] Scots law. On account of unpaid canon or feu duty. • A vassal could forfeit land if the vassal failed to pay the feu duty for two (later five) years. See feu.

obnoxious, adj. (16c) 1. Offensive; objectionable <obnoxious behavior>. 2. Contrary; opposed . 3. Archaic. Exposed to harm; liable to something undesirable <actions obnoxious to criticism>.
ob pias causas (ob pi-as kaw-zas). [Latin] Hist. On account of religious or charitable reasons; for dutiful considerations.

"Provisions made by a son to his father ob pias causas are those which proceed from the affectionate regard and natural duty which the son is bound morally to render to his father." John Trayer, Trayer's Latin Maxims 412 (4th ed. 1894).

obscene libel. See libel.

obscene, adj. (16c) 1. Extremely offensive under contemporary community standards of morality and decency; grossly repugnant to the generally accepted notions of what is appropriate. • Under the Supreme Court’s three-part test, material is legally obscene — and therefore not protected under the First Amendment — if, taken as a whole, the material (1) appeals to the prurient interest in sex, as determined by the average person applying contemporary community standards; (2) portrays sexual conduct, as specifically defined by the applicable state law, in a patently offensive way; and (3) lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value. Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 93 S.Ct. 2607 (1973). [Cases: Constitutional Law C−1174, 2189; Obscenity C−1.]

"If there be no abstract definition, . . . should not the word 'obscene' be allowed to indicate the present critical point in the compromise between candor and shame at which the community may have arrived here and now?" United States v. Kehrer, 209 F. 119, 121 (S.D.N.Y. 1913) (per Hand, J.).

obscene libel. See libel.

obscene, adj. (16c) 1. The characteristic or state of being morally abhorrent or socially taboo, esp. as a result of referring to or depicting sexual or excretory functions. [Cases: Constitutional Law C−82(10), 90:4; Obscenity C−1.] 2. Something (such as an expression or act) that has this characteristic. See CONTEMPORARY COMMUNITY STANDARDS. Cf. indecency.

commercialized obscenity. (1956) Obscenity produced and marketed for sale to the public.

observe, vb. (14c) To adhere to or abide by (a law, rule, or custom) .

observer. Int'l law. (1925) A representative of a country or international organization who attends meetings of an international body (such as the United Nations) to which the observer’s country does not belong. • Observers do not vote or sign documents, but they are sometimes allowed to participate in discussions. [Cases: International Law C−10.45.]

obsignare (ob-sig-nair-ee), vb. [Latin] Civil law. To seal up, as with money that has been tendered and refused.

obsignatory (ob-sig-na-tor-ee), adj.

obsignator (ahb-sig-nay-tor or -tor), n. [Latin] Roman law. One who affixes a seal, esp. as a witness, to a will or other document. Pl. obsignatores (ahb-sig-na-tor-ee).

obsolescence (ob-sa-les-ants). (1832) 1. The process or state of falling into disuse or becoming obsolete. 2. A diminution in the value or usefulness of property, esp. as a result of technological advances. • For tax purposes, obsolescence is usu. distinguished from physical deterioration. Cf. depreciation. [Cases: Taxation C−2516.]

economic obsolescence. Obsolescence that results from external economic factors, such as decreased demand or changed governmental regulations. — Also termed external obsolescence. Cf. functional obsolescence.

external obsolescence. See economic obsolescence.

functional obsolescence. Obsolescence that results either from inherent deficiencies in the property, such as inadequate equipment or design, or from technological improvements available after the use began. Cf. economic obsolescence.

planned obsolescence. A system or policy of deliberately producing consumer goods that will wear out or become outdated after limited use, thus inducing consumers to buy new items more frequently. — Also termed built-in obsolescence.

obsolescent, adj. (18c) Going out of use; becoming obsolete. obsolete, adj. (17c) No longer in general use; out-of-date.

obstacle preemption. See preemption.

obsta principis (ob-sta prin-sip-ce-is). [Latin] Withstand beginnings; resist the first approaches or encroachments.

obstruction of justice. (1854) Interference with the obstruction. (16c) 1. Something that impedes or hinders, obstruction. 2. The act of impeding or hindering something; interference. 3. Oil & gas. A common-law doctrine that suspends the running of time under an oil-and-gas lease or extends the lease for a reasonable period of time if rights granted under the lease are interfered with by the lessor or someone claiming through the lessor. [Cases: Mines and Minerals p.78.1(10)].

obstructing process. See obstruction of process.

obstruction. (16c) 1. Something that impedes or hinders, as in a street, river, or design; an obstacle. 2. The act of impeding or hindering something; interference. 3. Oil & gas. A common-law doctrine that suspends the running of time under an oil-and-gas lease or extends the lease for a reasonable period of time if rights granted under the lease are interfered with by the lessor or someone claiming through the lessor. [Cases: Mines and Minerals p.78.1(10)].

obstruction of justice. (1854) Interference with the orderly administration of law and justice, as by giving false information or withholding evidence from a police officer or prosecutor, or by harming or intimidating a witness or juror. • Obstruction of justice is a crime in most jurisdictions. — Also termed obstructing justice; obstructing public justice. [Cases: Obstructing Justice p.771; Sentencing and Punishment p.761].

"The element of coercion or obstrictiveness. The contrast here is between voluntary and obstructed (or coerced) conduct. The coercion need not be actual (objective), but may be merely potential (subjective) by fear of the possible force; as, when the faithful canine, Towser, susceptible to the sight of a feline enemy, is tempted to pursue, but upon his owner's stern voice and a shake of the stick, Towser turns humbly back and crushes his impulse." John Henry Wigmore, Problems of Law 7-8 (1920).

obstructing process. See obstruction of process.

obstructing process. (16c) 1. Something that impedes or hinders, as in a street, river, or design; an obstacle. 2. The act of impeding or hindering something; interference. 3. Oil & gas. A common-law doctrine that suspends the running of time under an oil-and-gas lease or extends the lease for a reasonable period of time if rights granted under the lease are interfered with by the lessor or someone claiming through the lessor. [Cases: Mines and Minerals p.78.1(10)].

obstruction of justice. (1854) Interference with the orderly administration of law and justice, as by giving false information to or withholding evidence from a police officer or prosecutor, or by harming or intimidating a witness or juror. • Obstruction of justice is a crime in most jurisdictions. — Also termed obstructing justice; obstructing public justice. [Cases: Obstructing Justice p.771; Sentencing and Punishment p.761].

"The goal, — to proscribe every wilful act of corruption, intimidation or force which tends in any way to disturb or impede the administration of law either civil or criminal — has been very largely attained, partly by aid of legislation. And any punishable misdeed of such a nature which is not recognized as a distinct crime, is usually called 'obstruction of justice,' or 'obstructing justice,' — a common-law misdemeanor." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 552 (3d ed. 1982).

obstruction of process. Interference of any kind with the lawful service or execution of a writ, warrant, or other process. • Most jurisdictions make this offense a crime. — Also termed obstructing process; resisting process. [Cases: Obstructing Justice p.771; Sentencing and Punishment p.761].

obtain the floor. Parliamentary law. To receive recognition from the chair after claiming the floor.

obtest (ob- or ab-test), vb. (16c) 1. To call to or invoke as a witness. 2. To ask for earnestly; beseech; implore. 3. To protest.

obtorto collo (ob-tor-toh-kah-loh). [Latin] Roman law. Dragged by the neck. • Because a plaintiff could not sue an absent defendant, the plaintiff was sometimes said to have to drag a defendant obtorto collo to court.

obtulit se (ob-t[y]a-lit see). [Latin] Offered himself. • In old English practice, these words were entered on the record when one party appeared ("offered himself") in court against an opposing party who did not appear.

obturpem causam (ob tar-pam [or -pem] kaw-zam). [Latin] For an immoral consideration; on account of disgraceful consideration. • An obligation ob turpem causam (i.e., founded on what was termed turpis causa) could not be enforced.

obvention (ob- or ab-ven-shan). Eccles. law. An incoming fee or revenue, esp. one that comes occasionally or incidentally.

obviate (ob-vee-ayt), vb. (16c) 1. To dispose of or do away with (a thing); to anticipate and prevent from arising <they obviated the growing problem through legislation>. 2. To make unnecessary <the movant obviated the all-night drafting session by getting the opponent to agree to an extension>. — obviation, n. — obviator, n.

obvious error. A standard of review that applies to unobjectionable actions and omissions at trial that are so seriously prejudicial as to result in manifest injustice. [Cases: Appeal and Error p.181; Criminal Law p.1030(1); Federal Courts p.611].

obviousness, n. (1921) Patents. The quality or state of being easily apparent to a person with ordinary skill in a given art, considering the scope and content of the prior art, so that the person could reasonably believe that, at the time it was conceived, the invention was to be expected. • An invention that is determined to be obvious cannot be patented. Although an obviousness inquiry is rife with questions of fact, the ultimate conclusion is a question of law. See 35 USCA 103. Cf. nonobviousness. [Cases: Patents p.16]. — obvious, adj.

obviousness double patenting. See double patenting.

obviousness-type double patenting. 1. Double patenting. 2. See judicially created double patenting under double patenting (2).

2. The possession, control, or use of real property.

occupancy. 3. The seizure and control of a territory by military force; the condition of territory that has been placed under the authority of a hostile army.

4. The period during which territory seized by military force is held.

occupational crime. See crime.

occupational-disability insurance. See insurance.

occupational disease. (1901) A disease that is contracted as a result of exposure to debilitating conditions or substances in the course of employment.

- Employees who suffer from occupational diseases are eligible for workers' compensation. Courts have construed the term to include a variety of ailments, including lung conditions (such as asbestosis or black lung), hearing loss, and carpal tunnel syndrome. Also termed industrial disease. [Cases: Workers' Compensation § 547-551.]

- Certain diseases and infirmities which develop gradually and imperceptibly as a result of engaging in particular employments and which are generally known and understood to be usual incidents or hazards thereof, are distinguished from those having a traumatic origin, or otherwise developing suddenly and unexpectedly, by the terms 'occupational,' and 'industrial.' 82 Am. Jur. 2d Workers' Compensation § 326 (1992).

occupational hazard. See hazard (1).

Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970. A federal statute that requires employers to (1) keep the workplace free from recognized hazards that cause or are likely to cause death or serious physical harm to employees, and (2) comply with standards promulgated by the Secretary of Labor. 29 USC § 651 - 678. — Abbr. OSHA (oh-sha). [Cases: Labor and Employment § 2553.] — Although OSHA has been one of the most controversial pieces of protective legislation ever enacted, Congress has not passed any substantive amendments to the Act. There have been, however, some limitations on OSHA enforcement activity attached to appropriations bills. In addition, OSHA has been affected by newer laws such as the Criminal Fine Enforcement Act, the Equal Access to Justice Act, and the Surface Transportation Assistance Act. The Act covers employment in every state, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and all American territories, an estimated 5 million workplaces and 75 million employees. Mark A. Rothstein, Occupational Safety and Health Law 7 (1990).

Occupational Safety and Health Administration. A unit in the U.S. Department of Labor responsible for setting and enforcing workplace safety and health standards and for helping employers comply with them.

- It was created under the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970. There are ten regional offices. — Abbr. OSHA. [Cases: Labor Relations § 9.6, 27.1.]
Occupational Safety and Health Review Commission. An independent, quasi-judicial commission that resolves allegations of unsafe or unhealthy working conditions. ● It was established by the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970. — Abbr. OSHRC. [Cases: Labor and Employment C−2571.]

occupying claimant. (1801) A person who claims the right under a statute to recover for the cost of improvements done to land that is later found not to belong to the person. [Cases: Improvements C−4.] occupying-claimant act. See betterment act.

occurrence. (1978) Something that happens or takes place; specific, an accident, event, or continuing condition that results in personal injury or property damage that is neither expected nor intended from the standpoint of an insured party. ● This specific sense is the standard definition of the term under most liability policies. [Cases: Insurance C−2101, 2275.]

occurrence-based liability insurance. See insurance.

occurrence policy. See insurance policy.

occurrence rule. Civil procedure. The rule that a limitations period begins to run when the alleged wrongful act or omission occurs, rather than when the plaintiff discovers the injury. ● This rule applies, for example, to most breach-of-contract claims. See statute of limitations. Cf. discovery rule. [Cases: Limitation of Actions C−43.]

ocean. (14c) 1. The continuous body of salt water that covers more than 70% of the earth’s surface; the high seas; the open sea. Cf. sea. 2. Any of the principal geographic divisions of this body. ● There are generally considered to be five oceans: Atlantic, Pacific, Indian, Arctic, and Antarctic.

ocean bill of lading. See bill of lading.

ocean marine insurance. See insurance.

OCHAMPUS. abbr. office of civilian health and medical programs of the uniformed services.

ochlocracy (ah-klah-kroh-see). See government by the lowest classes; mob-rule.

octo tales (ok toh tay-leez or taylts). [Latin “eight such”] 1. A supply of eight additional jurors for a trial. 2. A writ commanding a sheriff to summon eight more jurors for a trial. See tales. [Cases: Jury C−72.]

odal (oh-dal), n. Hist. Land not subject to feudal duties or burdens; alodial. — Also termed odal; odhal; odhall. — odal, adj. <an odal right>.

odd lot. See lot (3).

odd-lot, adj. Of, relating to, or designating a worker who is so substantially disabled as to be unable to find stable employment in the ordinary labor market, and thus is considered totally disabled and entitled to workers’ compensation benefits under the odd-lot doctrine <an odd-lot worker who could find only sporadic employment>. [Cases: Workers’ Compensation C−847.]

odd-lot doctrine. Workers’ compensation. The doctrine that permits a finding of total disability for an injured claimant who, though able to work sporadically, cannot obtain regular employment and steady income and is thus considered an “odd lot” in the labor market. [Cases: Workers’ Compensation C−847.]

odel. See odal.

offender. (15c) A person who has committed a crime.

adult offender. (1831) 1. A person who has committed a crime after reaching the age of majority. 2. A person who, having committed a crime while a minor, has been convicted after reaching the age of majority. 3.
A juvenile who has committed a crime and is tried as an adult rather than as a juvenile. [Cases: Infants \(\leq 68.5\).]

career offender. (1965) Under the federal-sentencing guidelines, an adult who, after being convicted of two violent felonies or controlled-substance felonies, commits another such felony. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual $ 4B1.1. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment \(\leq 1200-1426\).]

first offender. (1884) A person who authorities believe has committed a crime but who has never before been convicted of a crime. * First offenders are often treated leniently at sentencing or in plea negotiations.
[Cases: Criminal Law \(\leq 273.1(2)\); Sentencing and Punishment \(\leq 102, 868, 1871, 2066\).]

habitual offender. 1. A person who commits the same or a similar offense a certain number of times in a certain period, as set by statute, and is therefore eligible for an enhanced sentence. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment \(\leq 1200-1426\).] 2. recidivist.

prior and persistent offender. Missouri law. See recidivist.

repeat offender. (1956) A person who has been conicted of a crime more than once; recidivist. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment \(\leq 1202\).] situational offender. (1945) A first-time offender who is unlikely to commit future crimes.

status offender. (1967) A youth who engages in conduct that — though not criminal by adult standards — is considered inappropriate enough to bring a charge against the youth in juvenile court; a juvenile who commits a status offense. Cf. youthful offender; juvenile delinquent. [Cases: Infants \(\leq 153\).] youthful offender. (1885) 1. A person in late adolescence or early adulthood who has been convicted of a crime. * A youthful offender is often eligible for special programs not available to older offenders, including community supervision, the successful completion of which may lead to erasing the conviction from the offender’s record. [Cases: Criminal Law \(\leq 69(3)\).] 2. juvenile delinquent. — Also termed young offender; youth offender. Cf. status offender.

offense (a-fents). (18c) 1. A violation of the law; a crime, often a minor one. See crime. — Also termed criminal offense. [Cases: Criminal Law \(\leq 1\).]

"The terms 'crime,' 'offense,' and 'criminal offense' are all said to be synonymous, and ordinarily used interchangeable. 'Offense' may comprehend every crime and misdemeanor, or may be used in a specific sense as synonymous with 'felony' or with 'misdemeanor,' as the case may be, or as signifying a crime of lesser grade, or an act not indictable, but punishable summarily or by the forfeiture of a acquisitive offense. (1981) An offense characterized by the unlawful appropriation of another's property. * This is a generic term that refers to a variety of crimes (such as larceny) rather than a particular one.

allied offense. (1896) A crime with elements so similar to those of another that the commission of one is automatically the commission of the other. [Cases: Criminal Law \(\leq 29\).]

anticipatory offense. See inchoate offense.

arrestable offense. English law. An offense for which the punishment is fixed by law or for which a statute authorizes imprisonment for five years, or an attempt to commit such an offense. * This statutory category, created in 1967, abolished the traditional distinction between felonies and misdemeanors. — Also spelled .esp. in BrE) arrestable offense.

bailable offense. (18c) A criminal charge for which a defendant may be released from custody after providing proper security <misdemeanor theft is a bailable offense>. [Cases: Bail \(\leq 43\).]

capital offense. (16c) A crime for which the death penalty may be imposed. — Also termed capital crime.
[Cases: Sentencing and Punishment \(\leq 1666\).]

civil offense. See public tort under tort.

cognate offense. (1866) A lesser offense that is related to the greater offense because it shares several of the elements of the greater offense and is of the same class or category. * For example, shoplifting is a cognate offense of larceny because both crimes require the element of taking property with the intent to deprive the rightful owner of that property. Cf. lesser included offense. [Cases: Criminal Law \(\leq 150\).]

compound offense. An offense composed of one or more separate offenses. * For example, robbery is a compound offense composed of larceny and assault.

continuing offense. (18c) A crime (such as a conspiracy) that is committed over a period of time, so that the last act of the crime controls when the statute of limitations begins to run. [Cases: Criminal Law \(\leq 28\).] cumulative offense. (1833) An offense committed by repeating the same act at different times.

divisible offense. (1847) A crime that includes one or more crimes of lesser grade. * For example, murder is a divisible offense comprising assault, battery, and assault with intent to kill.

extraneous offense. (1881) An offense beyond or unrelated to the offense for which a defendant is on trial.
[Cases: Criminal Law \(\leq 369-374\).]

graded offense. (1891) A crime that is divided into various degrees of severity with corresponding levels of punishment, such as murder (first-degree and second-degree) or assault (simple and aggravated). See degree (2). [Cases: Criminal Law \(\leq 28\).]

impeachable offense. See impeachable offense.

inchoate offense. (1809) A step toward the commission of another crime, the step in itself being serious enough to merit punishment. * The three inchoate offenses are attempt, conspiracy, and solicitation. The term is sometimes criticized (see quot. below). — Also termed anticipatory offense; inchoate crime; preliminary crime. [Cases: Conspiracy ☞ 23.1; Criminal Law ☞ 44, 45.]

“These preliminary crimes have sometimes been erroneously described as ‘inchoate’ offenses. This is misleading because the word ‘inchoate’ connotes something which is not yet completed, and it is therefore not accurately used to denote something which is itself complete, even though it be a link in a chain of events leading to some object which is not yet attained. The offense of incitement is fully performed even though the person incited immediately repudiates the suggested deed, a conspiracy is committed although the conspirators have not yet moved to execute their purposed crime, and the performance of a criminal attempt must always have been reached before the end is gained. In all these instances it is the ultimate crime which is inchoate and not the preliminary crime, the position indeed being just the same as in the example imagined above of a man who stole a revolver and committed other crimes in order to effect his purpose of murder. There the murder was inchoate, but the larceny and other crimes (including the attempt) were completed.” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny’s Outlines of Criminal Law 77 (16th ed. 1952).

included offense. See lesser included offense.

index offense. (1980) One of eight classes of crimes reported annually by the FBI in the Uniform Crime Report. • The eight classes are murder (and nonnegligent homicide), rape, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, larceny-theft, arson, and auto theft. — Also termed index crime.

indicatable offense. (18c) A crime that can be prosecuted only by indictment. • In federal court, such an offense is one punishable by death or by imprisonment for more than one year or at hard labor. Fed. R. Crim. P. 7(a). See INDICTMENT. [Cases: Indictment and Information ☞ 3.]

joint offense. (18c) An offense (such as conspiracy) committed by the participation of two or more persons.

lesser included offense. (1908) A crime that is composed of some, but not all, of the elements of a more serious crime and that is necessarily committed in carrying out the greater crime.〈battery is a lesser included offense of murder〉. • For double-jeopardy purposes, a lesser included offense is considered the “same offense” as the greater offense, so that acquittal or conviction of either offense precludes a separate trial for the other. — Also termed included offense; necessarily included offense; predicate offense; predicate act. Cf. cognate offense. [Cases: Indictment and Information ☞ 189, 191.]

liquor offense. Any crime involving the inappropriate use or sale of intoxicating liquor. See DRAM SHOP LIABILITY; DRIVING WHILE INTOXICATED. [Cases: Intoxicating Liquors ☞ 131–176.]

major offense. An offense the commission of which involves one or more lesser included offenses, as murder may include assault and battery. [Cases: Indictment and Information ☞ 191.]

military offense. See MILITARY OFFENSE.

multiple offense. (1908) An offense that violates more than one law but that may require different proof so that an acquittal or conviction under one statute does not exempt the defendant from prosecution under another. [Cases: Double Jeopardy ☞ 134.]

necessarily included offense. See lesser included offense.

negligent offense. A violation of law arising from a defective discharge of duty or from criminal negligence. See CRIMINAL NEGLIGENCE. See CRIMINAL NEGLIGENCE.

object offense. The crime that is the object of the defendant’s attempt, solicitation, conspiracy, or complicity. • For example, murder is the object offense in a charge of attempted murder. — Also termed target offense.

offense against property. (1837) A crime against another’s personal property. • The common-law offenses against property were larceny, embezzlement, cheating, cheating by false pretenses, robbery, receiving stolen goods, malicious mischief, forgery, and uttering forged instruments. Although the term crimes against property, a common term in modern usage, includes crimes against real property, the term offense against property is traditionally restricted to personal property. Cf. CRIMES AGAINST PROPERTY.

offense against public justice and authority. A crime that impairs the administration of justice. • The common-law offenses of this type were obstruction of justice, barratry, maintenance, chancery, embracery, escape, prison breach, rescue, misprision of felony, compounding a crime, subornation of perjury, bribery, and misconduct in office.

offense against the habitation. (1849) A crime against another’s house — traditionally either arson or burglary.

offense against the person. (1854) A crime against the body of another human being. • The common-law offenses against the person were murder, manslaughter, mayhem, rape, assault, battery, robbery, false imprisonment, abduction, seduction, kidnapping, and abduction. Cf. CRIMES AGAINST PERSONS.

offense against the public health, safety, comfort, and morals. A crime traditionally viewed as endangering the whole of society. • The common-law offenses of this type were nuisance, bigamy, adultery, fornication, lewdness, illicit cohabitation, incest, miscegenation, sodomy, bestiality, burglary, seduction, and prostitution.

offense against the public peace. (18c) A crime that tends to disturb the peace. • The common-law offenses of this type were riot, unlawful assembly, dueling, rout, affray, forcible entry and detainer, and libel on a private person. [Cases: Criminal Law ☞ 45.15; Disorderly Conduct ☞ 105, 128; Riot ☞ 1; Unlawful Assembly ☞ 1.

petty offense. (17c) A minor or insignificant crime. 18 USCA § 19. Cf. serious offense. political offense. See political offense.

predicate offense. 1. An earlier offense that can be used to enhance a sentence levied for a later conviction. • Predicate offences are defined by statute and are not uniform from state to state. 2. See lesser included offense. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment C=::> 1286-1309.]

public offense. (16c) An act or omission forbidden by law.

public-welfare offense. (1933) A minor offense that does not involve moral delinquency and is prohibited only to secure the effective regulation of conduct in the interest of the community. • An example is driving a car with one brake-light missing. — Also termed regulatory offense; contravention.

regulatory offense. 1. A statutory crime, as opposed to a common-law crime. 2. See public-welfare offense.

same offense. 1. For double-jeopardy purposes, the same criminal act, omission, or transaction for which the person has already stood trial. See double jeopardy. [Cases: Double Jeopardy C=::>132.1.] 2. For sentencing and enhancement-of-punishment purposes, an offense that is quite similar to a previous one.

second offense. An offense committed after conviction for a first offense. • The previous conviction, not the indictment, forms the basis of the charge of a second offense.

separate offense. (18c) 1. An offense arising out of the same event as another offense but containing some differences in elements of proof. • A person may be tried, convicted, and sentenced for each separate offense. 2. An offense arising out of a different event entirely from another offense under consideration.

serious offense. (18c) An offense not classified as a petty offense and usu. carrying at least a six-month sentence. — Also termed serious crime. Cf. petty offense.

sexual offense. (1885) An offense involving unlawful sexual conduct, such as prostitution, indecent exposure, incest, pederasty, and bestiality.

status offense. (1960) 1. See status crime under crime. 2. A minor's violation of the juvenile code by doing some act that would not be considered illegal if an adult did it, but that indicates that the minor is beyond parental control. • Examples include running away from home, truancy, and incorrigibility. See juvenile delinquency.

strict-liability offense. An offense for which the action alone is enough to warrant a conviction, with no need to prove a mental state. • For example, illegal parking is a strict-liability offense. [Cases: Criminal Law C=::> 21.]

substantive offense (sub-stan-tiv). (18c) A crime that is complete in itself and is not dependent on another crime for one of its elements. — Also termed substantive crime; substantive felony.

summary offense. (1928) An offense (such as a petty misdemeanor) that can be prosecuted without an indictment. Cf. indictable offense.

offensive-use waiver. (1993) An exemption from the attorney-client privilege, whereby a litigant is considered to have waived the privilege by seeking affirmative relief, if the claim relies on privileged information that would be outcome-determinative and that the opposing party has no other way to obtain. Cf. at-issue waiver. [Cases: Privileged Communications and Confidentiality C=::> 111, 168.]
offer, n. (15c) 1. The act or an instance of presenting something for acceptance <the prosecutor's offer of immunity>. 2. A promise to do or refrain from doing some specified thing in the future, conditioned on an act, forbearance, or return promise being given in exchange for the promise or its performance; a display of willingness to enter into a contract on specified terms, made in a way that would lead a reasonable person to understand that an acceptance, having been sought, will result in a binding contract <she accepted the $750 offer on the Victorian armoire>. Cf. acceptance. [Cases: Contracts § 16; Sales § 22.5, 23.5; Vendor and Purchaser § 16(1), 17.]

"An offer is, in effect, a promise by the offeror to do or abstain from doing something, provided that the offeree will accept the offer and pay or promise to pay the 'price' of the offer. The price, of course, need not be a monetary one. In fact, in bilateral contracts, as we explained earlier, the mere promise of payment of the price suffices to conclude the contract, while in a unilateral contract it is the actual payment of the price which is required." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 44 (3d ed. 1981).

irrevocable offer (ir-re-vok-ə-bal), (1885) An offer that includes a promise to keep it open for a specified period, during which the offer cannot be withdrawn without the offeror's becoming subject to liability for breach of contract. • Traditionally, this type of promise must be supported by consideration to be enforceable, but under UCC § 2-205, a merchant's signed, written offer giving assurances that it will be held open — but lacking consideration — is nonetheless irrevocable for the stated period (or, if not stated, for a reasonable time not exceeding three months). — Also termed (in the UCC) firm offer; (specific) merchant's firm offer. [Cases: Contracts § 16; Sales § 22; Vendor and Purchaser § 18(5).]

"It has sometimes been asserted that an irrevocable offer is 'a legal impossibility.' See Langdell, Summary of the Law of Contracts, § 178, also § 4; Warmter, 'The True Conception of Unilateral Contracts,' 26 Yale Law Journal 137, note: Lee, Title Contracts, in Jenks' Dig. of Eng. Civ. Law, § 195; Ashley, Contracts, § 13. A close analysis shows that there is nothing impossible either in the conception itself or in its application. If we define 'offer' as an act on the part of the offeror, then no offer can ever be revoked, for it is of yesterday — it is indeed factum. But if we mean by 'offer' the legal relation that results from the offeror's act, the power then given to the offeree of creating contractual relations by doing certain voluntary acts on his part, then the offer may be either revocable or irrevocable according to the circumstances. The idea of an irrevocable power is not at all an unfamiliar one." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 53-54 n.3 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

offer to all the world, (1861) An offer, by way of advertisement, of a reward for the rendering of specified services, addressed to the public at large. • As soon as someone renders the services, a contract is made. — Also termed public offer.

offer to chauffer. See invitation to negotiate.

standing offer. (1842) An offer that is in effect a whole series of offers, each of which is capable of being converted into a contract by a distinct acceptance.

tender offer. See tender offer.

two-tier offer. See two-tier offer.

3. A price at which one is ready to buy or sell; bid <she lowered her offer to $200>. 4. attempt (2) <an offer to commit battery>. — offer, vb. — offeror, n.

"Where criminal assault has been given this dual scope, a definition in terms of 'an attempt or offer' to commit a battery is assumed to represent both grounds. The word 'offer,' it is said, signifies a threat that places the other in reasonable apprehension of receiving an immediate battery. It would be a mistake, however, to assume that the word carried any such significance when it first appeared in the definition of this offense. In one of its meanings, 'offer' is a synonym of 'attempt.'" Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 163 (3d ed. 1982).

offeree (ah-far-ee), (1882) One to whom an offer is made.

offer for sale by tender. See Dutch auction (4) under auction.

offer in compromise. See offer of compromise.

offering, n. (15c) 1. The act of making an offer; something offered for sale. 2. The sale of an issue of securities. — Also termed (in BrE) flotation. See issue (2). [Cases: Securities Regulation § 11.11.]

all-or-none offering. An offering that allows the issuer to terminate the distribution if the entire block of offered securities is not sold.

initial public offering. A company's first public sale of stock; the first offering of an issuer's equity securities to the public through a registration statement. — Abbr. IPO. [Cases: Securities Regulation § 25.17.]

negotiated offering. A securities offering in which the terms (including the underwriters' compensation) have been negotiated between the issuer and the underwriters.

primary offering. An offering of newly issued securities.

private offering. An offering made only to a small group of interested buyers. — Also termed private placement. [Cases: Securities Regulation § 18.11.]

public offering. An offering made to the general public.

registered offering. A public offering of securities registered with the SEC and with appropriate state securities commissions. — Also termed registered public offering. [Cases: Securities Regulation § 25.17.]

rights offering. An issue of stock-purchase rights allowing shareholders to buy newly issued stock at a fixed price, usu. below market value, and in proportion to the number of shares they already own. — Also termed privileged subscription. Cf. preemptive right.
secondary offering. 1. Any offering by an issuer of securities after its initial public offering. 2. An offering of previously issued securities by persons other than the issuer. See secondary distribution (1) under distribution.

special offering. An offering of a large block of stock that, because of its size and the market in the particular issue, is specially handled on the floor of the stock exchange.

undigested offering. A public offering of securities that remain unsold because there is insufficient demand at the offered price.

offering circular. A document, similar to a prospectus, that provides information about a private securities offering. — Also termed offering statement. [Cases: Securities Regulation 25.50–25.75.]

offering price. See asking price under price.

offering statement. See offering circular.

offer of compromise. (18c) An offer by one party to settle a dispute amicably (usu. by paying money) to avoid or end a lawsuit or other legal action. • An offer of compromise is usu. not admissible at trial as evidence of the offering party's liability but may be admissible for other purposes. — Also termed offer in compromise; offer of settlement. [Cases: Evidence 212.]

offer of judgment. (1971) A settlement offer by one party to allow a specified judgment to be taken against the party. • In federal procedure (and in many states), if the adverse party rejects the offer, and if a judgment finally obtained by that party is not more favorable than the offer, then that party must pay the costs incurred after the offer was made. Fed. R. Civ. P. 68. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 2396.5, 2725; Judgment 74.]

offer of performance. (18c) Contracts. One party's reasonable assurance to the other, through words or conduct, of a present ability to fulfill contractual obligations. • When performances are to be exchanged simultaneously, each party is entitled to refuse to proceed with the exchange until the other party makes an appropriate offer of performance. Cf. tender (1). [Cases: Contracts 279; Sales 153, 185.]

“The requirement of an offer of performance is to be applied in the light of what is reasonably to be expected by the parties in view of the practical difficulties of absolute simultaneity and is subject to the agreement of the parties, as supplemented or qualified by usage and course of dealing.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 238 cmt. b (1979).

offer of proof. (17c) Procedure. A presentation of evidence for the record (but outside the jury's presence) usu. made after the judge has sustained an objection to the admissibility of that evidence, so that the evidence can be preserved on the record for an appeal of the judge's ruling. • An offer of proof, which may also be used to persuade the court to admit the evidence, consists of three parts: (1) the evidence itself, (2) an explanation of the purpose for which it is offered (its relevance), and (3) an argument supporting admissibility. Such an offer may include tangible evidence or testimony (through questions and answers, a lawyer's narrative description, or an affidavit). Fed. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). — Also termed avowal. [Cases: Criminal Law 670; Federal Civil Procedure 133; Trial 44.]

offeror (ah-far-or). (1882) One who makes an offer.

offer to all the world. See offer.

offer to chaffer. See invitation to negotiate.

office. (13c) 1. A position of duty, trust, or authority, esp. one conferred by a governmental authority for a public purpose <the office of attorney general>. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees 1. 2. (often cap.) A division of the U.S. government ranking immediately below a department <the Patent and Trademark Office>. [Cases: United States 29. 3. offset, n. (18c) Something (such as an amount or claim) that balances or compensates for something else; SETOFF.

"Both setoff and recoupment existed at common law, but their scope has been modified, expanded, and ultimately merged by subsequent statutory and decisional law. The final equitable concept of 'offset' recognizes that the debtor may satisfy a creditor's claim by acquiring a claim that serves to counterbalance or to compensate for the creditor's claim.... [C]ourts use the terms 'offset' and 'setoff' interchangeably, often switching between them from sentence to sentence, supporting the conclusion that there is no substantive difference between them." 4 Ann Taylor Schwing, California Affirmative Defenses 2d § 44:1, at 4-5 (1996).

old style. The system of ordering time according to the Julian method, introduced by Julius Caesar in 46 B.C., by which all years have 365 days except the years divisible by 4, which have 366 days. • This differs from the modern calendar in that it assumes that there are exactly 365.25 days in a year. But there are actually slightly less than 365.25 days in a solar year, so the old-style calendar adds too many days over time. The Julian calendar was reformed by Pope Gregory XIII in 1582. — Abbr. o.s. — Also termed Julian calendar. Cf. new style.

oligarchy (ol-a-gahr-kee), n. (16c) A government in which a small group of persons exercises control; the persons who constitute such a government. — oligarchic, oligarchical, adj.

oligopolistic price coordination. See conscious parallelism.

oligopoly (ol-a-gop-oh-lee), n. (1895) Control or domination of a market by a few large sellers, creating high prices and low output similar to those found in a monopoly. Cf. MONOPOLY. — oligopolistic, adj. — oligopolist, n.

"One reason for the difficulty in describing and delimiting oligopoly power is the large number of variables that confront any theorist building an oligopoly model. Pure monopoly is akin to a single player game, such as solitaire, high prices and low output similar to those found in a monopoly [p. 38]. Unlike poker, where for any hand one player will win all of the money bet, the players in an oligopolistic market can actually increase the returns that all of them receive through disciplined pricing." Lawrence A. Sullivan & Warren S. Grimes, The Law of Antitrust: An Integrated Handbook 38-39 (2000).

onerando prorata portione. See de onerando pro rata portione.

onerare (on-ə-rar-ee), vb. [Latin] Hist. To burden or load.

“Onera realia . . . are burdens or encumbrances affecting land, and exigible from it. They are distinguished from personal burdens, which only affect and are exigible from the person upon whom they lie. A single example may illustrate the nature of both. It is a common enough practice, when lands are sold, for the seller not to insist on payment of the full price at the time of the sale, but to allow a part of the price to remain on the lands as a burden. If the balance so left be declared . . . to be a real lien . . . it is a burden for which the lands may be attached and sold, into whose possession soever they may come. But if the burden of payment of the remainder of the price be laid upon the purchaser alone, and not upon the lands, then the burden is personal, and a subsequent purchaser from him incurs no liability therefor, the lands not being affected. John Trayner, Trayner’s Latin Maxims: 423 (4th ed. 1894).

onerari non (on-ə-rah-ri). [Law Latin] Hist. Ought not to be charged. • In pleading, these words were used by a defendant to begin a plea in a debt action. Cf. actio non.

extrajudicial opinion. 1. An opinion that is beyond the court's authority to render. • Such opinions are void. 2. A judge's personal or scholarly opinion expressed in a medium other than a judicial opinion.

majority opinion. (1882) An opinion joined in by more than half the judges considering a given case. — Also termed main opinion.

memorandum opinion. (1912) A unanimous appellate opinion that succinctly states the decision of the court; an opinion that briefly reports the court's conclusion, usu. without elaboration because the decision follows a well-established legal principle or does not relate to any point of law. — Also termed memorandum decision; memorandum disposition; (slang) memdispo. [Cases: Courts C⇒ 103, 107.]

minority opinion. See dissenting opinion.

per curiam opinion (par kyoor-ee-um). (1860) An opinion handed down by an appellate court without identifying the individual judge who wrote the opinion. — Sometimes shortened to per curiam. [Cases: Courts C⇒ 103, 107.]

"The most controversial form of summary disposition is a per curiam opinion that simultaneously grants certiorari and disposés of the merits at some length, discussing both the facts and the issues involved. The result is usually a reversal of the judgment below . . . . The parties are given no opportunity to file briefs on the merits or to argue orally before the Court. Indeed, they are given no formal notice whatever of the Court's intention to dispose of the certiorari papers in this manner . . . ." Robert L. Stern et al., Supreme Court Practice 320 (8th ed. 2002).

plurality opinion. (1908) An opinion lacking enough judges' votes to constitute a majority, but receiving more votes than any other opinion. [Cases: Courts C⇒ 90(2), 102.]

qualified opinion. See QUALIFIED OPINION. opinion evidence

seriatim opinions (seer-ee-ay-tim). (1832) A series of opinions written individually by each judge on the bench, as opposed to a single opinion speaking for the court as a whole.

slip opinion. 1. A court opinion that is published individually after being rendered and then collectively in advance sheets before being released for publication in a reporter. • Unlike an unpublished opinion, a slip opinion can usu. be cited as authority. — Also termed slipsheet. Cf. ADVANCE SHEETS. [Cases: Courts C—107.] 2. Archaic. A preliminary draft of a court opinion not yet ready for publication. — Also termed slip decision. Cf. unpublished opinion.

unpublished opinion. (1849) An opinion that the court has specifically designated as not for publication. • Court rules usu. prohibit citing an unpublished opinion as authority. Such an opinion is considered binding only on the parties to the particular case in which it is issued. Cf. slip opinion. [Cases: Courts C—107.]

adverse opinion. An outside auditor's opinion that a company's financial statements do not conform with generally accepted accounting principles or do not accurately reflect the company's financial position.

audit opinion. A certified public accountant's opinion regarding the audited financial statements of an entity.

comfort opinion. Securities. An attorney's written opinion that there is no reason to believe that the registration statement contains any material misrepresentations or omissions that would violate section 11 of the Securities Act of 1933. • The attorney usu. participates in the registration statement's preparation and confers with the securities issuer's representatives, underwriters, and public accountants before writing the opinion. The comfort opinion's purpose is to reassure the parties that the registration statement complies with securities laws; it is not part of the statement and is usu. not included.

coverage opinion. A lawyer's opinion on whether a particular event is covered by a given insurance policy.

infringement opinion. Patents. A patent attorney's opinion about the probable outcome of an infringement hearing or trial on whether a particular product or process infringes one or more claims of another's patent. [Cases: Patents C—227.]

legal opinion. (18c) A written document in which an attorney provides his or her understanding of the law as applied to assumed facts. • The attorney may be a private attorney or attorney representing the state or other governmental entity. Private attorneys frequently render legal opinions on the ownership of real estate or minerals, insurance coverage, and corporate transactions. A party may be entitled to rely on a legal opinion, depending on factors such as the identity of the parties to whom the opinion was addressed, the nature of the opinion, and the law governing the opinion. See coverage opinion.

patentability opinion. Patents. A patent attorney's or patent agent's opinion on the patent office's probable holding about the allowability of a patent application's claims. • The opinion is almost a mini-examination report because it is based on consideration of the invention's subject matter, prior art, etc.

title opinion. (1927) A lawyer's or title company's opinion on the state of title for a given piece of real property, usu. describing whether the title is clear and marketable or whether it is encumbered. See TITLE SEARCH.

unqualified opinion. An audit opinion given by an accountant who is satisfied that the financial statements reviewed were fairly presented and consistent with the previous year, and that the audit was performed in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards.

validity opinion. Patents. A patent attorney's opinion about the likelihood that a patent or patent claim will be invalidated in light of evidence suggesting obviousness, lack of invention, unenforceability, etc.

3. A person's thought, belief, or inference, esp. a witness's view about a facts in dispute, as opposed to personal knowledge of the facts themselves. — Also termed (in sense 3) conclusion. See opinion evidence under EVIDENCE.

expert opinion. An opinion offered by a witness whose knowledge, skill, experience, training, and education qualify the witness to help a fact-finder understand the evidence or decide a factual dispute. See expert witness under WITNESS.

fixed opinion. (1807) A bias or prejudice that disqualifies a potential juror. [Cases: Jury C—99.4.] opinion evidence. See EVIDENCE.

opinion letter. See OPINION (2).

opinion rule. (1896) Evidence. The principle that a witness should testify to facts, not opinions, and that a nonexpert witness's opinions are often excludable from evidence. • Traditionally, this principle is regarded as one of the important exclusionary rules in evidence law. It is based on the idea that a witness who has observed data should provide the most factual evidence possible, leaving the jury to draw inferences and conclusions from the evidence. Under this system, the witness's opinion is unnecessary. Today, opinions are admissible if rationally based on a witness's perceptions and helpful to the fact-finder. [Cases: Criminal Law C=448; Evidence C=471, 505.]

"This rule [the opinion rule] is an historical blunder, for the early cases excluding 'opinion' meant a belief by a person who had personally seen and known nothing, and was therefore not qualified to speak; whereas the modern rule applies it to witnesses who have had personal observation as a basis for their inference. Moreover, it is a senseless rule, for not once in a thousand times can the observed data be exactly and fully reproduced in words. Still further, no harm could be done by letting the witness offer his inference, except perhaps the waste of a moment's time, whereas the application of the rule wastes vastly more time. And finally the rule is so pedantically applied by most courts that it excludes the most valuable testimony, such as would be used in all affairs of life outside a court room." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 156 (1935).

"The [opinion] rule in its stark simplicity might be interpreted as excluding all value judgments, that is to say all statements not being factual propositions susceptible of some sort of empirical proof or disproof. The rule, if it is to be given any purely logical meaning at all, must be interpreted as excluding at least all inferences drawn from perceived data. Even if value judgments are saved by construing the rule as having application only to factual propositions, the rule would seem to purport to exclude all such propositions in the formulation of which inference by the witness has played some part." Zeiman Cowen, Essays on the Law of Evidence 162 (1956).

opinion work product. See work product.

OPM. abbr. OFFICE OF PERSONNEL MANAGEMENT.

oppignorate (a-pig-na-rayt), vb. Archaic. To pawn or pledge. — Also spelled oppignorate. Cf. PIGNORATE.

opponent. (16c) 1. An adverse party in a contested matter. 2. A party that is challenging the admissibility of evidence. • In this sense, the word is an antonym of proponent. 3. Parliamentary law. A member who speaks against a pending motion. Cf. PROponent (3).

opportunity. The fact that the alleged doer of an act was present at the time and place of the act.

opportunity cost. See cost (1).

opportunity to be heard. (17c) The chance to appear in a court or other tribunal and present evidence and argument before being deprived of a right by governmental authority. • The opportunity to be heard is a fundamental requirement of procedural due process. It ordinarily includes the right to receive fair notice of the hearing, to secure the assistance of counsel, and to cross-examine adverse witnesses. See procedural due process under DUE PROCESS. [Cases: Constitutional Law C=3879.] opposer. 1. Intellectual property. One who formally seeks to prevent the grant of a patent or the registration of a trademark. [Cases: Patents C=104; Trademarks C=1294.] 2. Hist. APposer.

opposition. 1. Patents. An action or procedure by which a third party can request a patent application's refusal or an issued patent's annulment. • Most countries allow opposition in some form. [Cases: Patents C=104.] 2.

Trademarks. A procedure by which a third party can contest a trademark after it has been approved but before it has been placed on the Principal Register. Cf. CANCELLATION. [Cases: Trademarks C=1290.]

oppression. (14c) 1. The act or an instance of unjustly exercising authority or power. 2. An offense consisting in the abuse of discretionary authority by a public officer who has an improper motive, as a result of which a person is injured. • This offense does not include extortion, which is typically a more serious crime. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees C=121.] 3. Contracts. Coercion to enter into an illegal contract.

• Oppression is grounds for the recovery of money paid or property transferred under an illegal contract. See duress; unconscionability. [Cases: Contracts C=1283, 139.] 4. Corporations. Unfair treatment of minority shareholders (esp. in a close corporation) by the directors or those in control of the corporation. — Also termed (in sense 4) shareholder oppression. See freeze-out. [Cases: Corporations C=1823, 5972 — oppress, vb. — oppressive, adj.

oppressive child labor. See child labor.

oppressor. (14c) A public official who unlawfully or wrongfully exercises power under color of authority in a way that causes a person harm; one who commits oppression. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees C=121.]

OPRA. abbr. options price reporting authority.

optimal-use value. See value (2).

opt in, vb. (1966) To choose to participate in (something) <when the choice of settling or not settling came, the Joneses opted in, hoping to avoid a lengthy trial>.

option, n. (17c) 1. The right or power to choose; something that may be chosen <the lawyer was running out of options for settlement>. 2. An offer that is included in a formal or informal contract; esp., a contractual obligation to keep an offer open for a specified period, so that the offeror cannot revoke the offer during that period <the option is valid because it is supported by consideration>. — Also termed option contract; (redundantly) time option. See irrevocable offer under offer; option agreement. [Cases: Contracts C=165; Vendor and Purchaser C=18.] 3. The right conveyed by a third party to contest a trademark after it has been approved but before it has been placed on the Principal Register. Cf. FUTURES CONTRACT. [Cases: Commodity Futures Trading Regulation C=10; Corporations C=116; Securities Regulation C=5.25(3).]

American option. An option that can be exercised on any day, including its expiration date. — Also termed American-style option. Cf. European option.
call option. An option to buy something (esp. securities) at a fixed price even if the market declines; the right to require another to sell. — Often shortened to call. [Cases: Commodity Futures Trading Regulation C> 10; Securities Regulation C> 5.25(3).]

cash-value option. The right of a life-insurance policyholder to surrender the policy for its cash value at a specified time or at any time. [Cases: Insurance C> 1950, 2037.]

commodity option. An option to buy or sell a commodity. [Cases: Commodity Futures Trading Regulation C> 10.]

European option. An option that can be exercised only on its expiration date. — Also termed European-style option. Cf. American option.

futures option. An option to buy or sell a futures contract. [Cases: Commodity Futures Trading Regulation C> 10.]

lease option. In a contract for rental property, a clause that gives the renter the right to buy the property at a fixed price, usu. at or after a fixed time. — Also termed lease with an option to purchase. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant C> 92.]

naked option. A call option that grants another the right to buy stock even though the option-giver does not own the stock to back up that commitment. — Also termed uncovered option.

nonforfeiture option. A policyholder’s option, upon the lapse of premium payments, to continue an insurance policy for a shorter period than the original term, to surrender the policy for its cash value, to continue the policy for a reduced amount, or to take some other action rather than forfeit the policy. [Cases: Insurance C> 2037.]

option to purchase real property. A contract by which an owner of realty enters an agreement with another allowing the latter to buy the property at a specified price within a specified time, or within a reasonable time in the future, but without imposing an obligation to purchase upon the person to whom it is given. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser C> 18.]

put option. An option to sell something (esp. securities) at a fixed price even if the market declines; the right to require another to buy. — Often shortened to put. [Cases: Commodity Futures Trading Regulation C> 10; Corporations C> 116; Securities Regulation C> 5.25(3).] Cf. put bond under bond (3).

seller's option. A special stock-exchange transaction that gives the seller the right to deliver the security within a specified period, usu. 5 to 60 days.

settlement option. Insurance. A life-insurance-policy clause providing choices in the method of paying benefits to a beneficiary, as by lump-sum payment or periodic installments. [Cases: Insurance C> 2443, 3402.]

oratrix (or a-trikhs). Hist. A female orator.

oration (or-bay-shun). Hist. Bereavement or deprivation of one's parents or children.

ordeal. (bef. 12c) Hist. A primitive form of trial in which an accused person was subjected to a usu. dangerous or painful physical test, the result being considered a divine revelation of the person's guilt or innocence.

- The participants believed that God would reveal a person's culpability by protecting an innocent person from some or all consequences of the ordeal. The ordeal was commonly used in Europe until the 13th century, but only sporadically after 1215, when the Fourth Lateran Council forbade the clergy from participating in ordeals. — Also termed trial by ordeal; judicium Divi ("judgment of God"); vulgaris purgatio. Cf. canbara.

"Oredeals involved an appeal to God to reveal the truth in human disputes, and they required priestly participation to achieve this rapport with the Deity. Several forms of ordeal were recognized by the early Christian Church, but in England they usually took the form of fire or water. In the former, a piece of iron was put into a fire and then in the party's hand; the hand was bound, and inspected a few days later: if the burn had festered, God was taken to have decided against the party. The ordeal of cold water required the party to be trussed and lowered into a pond; if he sank, the water was deemed to have "received him" with God's blessing, and so he was quickly fished out....

In 1215, the Lateran Council took the decisive step of forbidding clergy to participate anymore in ordeals. This led in England to the introduction of the criminal trial jury." J.M. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 5-6 (3d ed. 1990).

bread-and-cheese ordeal. See ordeal of the morsel.

ordeal by fire. An ordeal in which the accused person was forced to hold a piece of hot metal or to walk barefoot across a hot surface, the judgment of guilt or innocence depending on how quickly and cleanly the person's hands or feet healed. • Typically the person's hand was bound and, upon the bandage's removal three days later, was examined for festers (indicating guilt). — Also termed fire ordeal; ordeal by hot iron; ordeal of fire.

"Such evidence as we have seems to show that the ordeal of hot iron was so arranged as to give the accused a considerable chance of escape." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 599 (2d ed. 1899).

ordeal by hot iron. See ordeal by fire.

ordeal by water. 1. An ordeal in which guilt or innocence depended on whether the accused person floated or sank after being submerged in cold water. • A priest would first consecrate the pool of water, adjuring it to receive the innocent but reject the guilty. An accused who sank was declared innocent; one who floated was adjudged guilty because floating revealed the water's (and therefore God's) rejection of the person. This type of ordeal was used esp. in witchcraft trials. — Also termed ordeal by cold water; cold-water ordeal; ordeal of cold water; (in ecclesiastical law) aquae frigidae judicium. 2. An ordeal in which guilt or innocence was determined by how quickly the accused person's arm healed after being placed in boiling water. • Often the person was forced to retrieve a stone from the bottom of a pot of boiling water. The person's hand and arm were then bandaged and, upon the bandage's removal three days later, were examined for festers (indicating guilt). — Also termed (in sense 2) ordeal by hot water; hot-water ordeal; ordeal of hot water; (in both senses) water ordeal; ordeal of water; (in ecclesiastical law) aquae ferventis judiciun; aenun.

"The ordeal of water was a very singular institution. Sinking was the sign of innocence, floating the sign of guilt. As any one would sink unless he understood how to float, and intentionally did so, it is difficult to see how any one could ever be convicted by this means. Is it possible that this ordeal may have been an honourable form of suicide, like the Japanese happy despatch? In nearly every case the accused would sink. This would prove his innocence, indeed, but there would be no need to take him out. He would thus die honourably. If by any accident he floated, he would be put to death disgracefully." 1 James Fitzjames Stephen, A History of the Criminal Law of England 73 (1883).

ordeal of the morsel. An ordeal in which the person who was to make the proof was given a one-ounce piece of bread or cheese that a priest had solemnly charged to stick in the throat of the guilty. • A person who choked was declared guilty; a person who did not was declared innocent. — Also termed corsnaed; corsned; trial by corsnaed; judicial morsel; morsel of execution.

single ordeal. An ordeal prescribed for someone accused of a less serious crime and involving less risk or torture than a triple ordeal. • For example, a single ordeal by fire required the accused to pick up a red-hot piece of iron weighing one pound, while a triple ordeal involved a piece of iron weighing three pounds.

triple ordeal. An ordeal prescribed for someone accused of a more serious crime and involving more risk or torture than a single ordeal. • For example, a triple ordeal by water required the accused to submerge an arm into boiling water up to the elbow, while a single ordeal required the arm to be submerged only to the wrist. — Also termed threefold ordeal.

ordef (or-deelf). See ORDELF.

ordels (or-deels). Hist. English law. The right to conduct trials by ordeal within a given jurisdiction.

order, n. (16c) 1. A command, direction, or instruction. See MANDATE (1). 2. A written direction or command delivered by a court or judge. • The word generally embraces final decrees as well as interlocutory directions or commands. — Also termed court order; judicial order. See MANDAMUS. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=928: Motions C=46.]

"An order is the mandate or determination of the court upon some subsidiary or collateral matter arising in an action, not disposing of the merits, but adjudicating a preliminary point or directing some step in the proceedings." 1 Henry Campbell Black, A Treatise on the Law of Judgments § 1, at § 5 (2d ed. 1902).

"While an order may under some circumstances amount to a judgment, they must be distinguished, owing to the different consequences flowing from them, not only in the matter of enforcement and appeal but in other respects, as, for instance, the time within which proceedings to annul them must be taken. Rulings on motions are ordinarily orders rather than judgments. The class of judgments and of decrees formerly called interlocutory is included in the definition given in [modern codes] of the word 'order.'" 1 A.C. Freeman, A Treatise of the Law of Judgments § 19, at 28 (Edward W. Tuttle ed., 5th ed. 1925).

administrative order. 1. An order issued by a government agency after an adjudicatory hearing. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure C=489.] 2. An agency regulation that interprets or applies a statutory provision. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure C=381.]

affiliation order. See filiation order.

alternative order. An order commanding the person to whom it is directed either to do a specific thing or to show cause why the court should not order it to be done.

antiharassment order. A type of restraining order available to victims of harassment or stalking, usu. forbidding a person to contact, surveil, or approach the victim.

blanket order. See BLANKET ORDER (1).

common order. See conditional judgment under JUDGMENT.

decretal order (di-kree-tal). A court of chancery’s interlocutory order that is issued on motion of a party and has the effect of a final decree. See decree nisi under DECREE. [Cases: Equity C=421–430.]

dismissal order. A court order ending a lawsuit without a decision on the merits. — Also termed order of dismissal.

docket order. A court order memorialized only as an entry on the docket sheet.

ex parte order (eks pahr-tee). (18c) An order made by the court upon the application of one party to an action without notice to the other.

filiation order. Family law. A court’s determination of paternity, usu. including a direction to pay child support. • Governments usu. seek filiation orders so that some or all of the public funds spent on the child’s welfare can be recovered from a nonmarital child’s father. Until the early 20th century, municipalities, not the state, had the legal duty to support the poor, including unwed mothers and their children. In some states, two judges had to determine who an unacknowledged child’s father was before the municipality could recover its expenditures. — Also termed affiliation order; order of filiation. [Cases: Children Out-of-Wedlock C=–63.]

final order. (16c) An order that is dispositive of the entire case. See final judgment under JUDGMENT. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=928; Motions C=51.] foreign support order. See SUPPORT ORDER.

health-insurance order. See HEALTH-INSURANCE ORDER.

income-withholding order. See INCOME-WITHHOLDING ORDER.

interim order. 1. A temporary court decree that remains in effect for a specified time or until a specified event interlocutory order (in-tor-lok ya-tor-ee). (17c) An order that relates to some intermediate matter in the case; any order other than a final order. • Most interlocutory orders are not appealable until the case is fully resolved. But by rule or statute, most jurisdictions allow some types of interlocutory orders (such as preliminary injunctions and class-certification orders) to be immediately appealed. — Also termed interlocutory decision; interim order; intermediate order. See appealable decision under decision; collateral-order doctrine. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure 928; Motions 51.] 2. See interlocutory order.

standing order. A forward-looking order that applies to all cases pending before a court. • Some individual judges issue a standing order on a subject when there is no local rule bearing on it, often because a rule would not be acceptable to other judges on the court. Standing orders are frequently criticized because they undermine uniformity of procedural rules, esp. at the local level. Cf. standing rule under rule (3).

ordinance (or-da-nants). (14c) An authoritative law or decree; esp., a municipal regulation. • Municipal governments can pass ordinances on matters that the state government allows to be regulated at the local level. A municipal ordinance carries the state’s authority and has the same effect within the municipality’s limits as a state statute. — Also termed bylaw; municipal ordinance. [Cases: Municipal Corporations C= 105.]

“An ordinance . . . may be purely administrative in nature, establishing offices, prescribing duties, or setting salaries; it may have to do with the routine or procedure of the governing body. Or it may be a governmental exercise of the power to control the conduct of the public — establishing rules which must be complied with, or prohibiting certain actions or conduct. In any event it is the determination of the sovereign power of the state as delegated to the municipality. It is a legislative enactment, within its sphere, as much as an act of the state legislature.” 1 Judith O’Gallagher, Municipal Ordinances § 1A.01, at 3 (2d ed. 1998).
