African Government, Politics, Policy

Africa since Decolonization
The History and Politics of a Diverse Continent
Martin Webb | Hamburger Institut für Sozialforschung

Thematically structured for increased accessibility to students at all levels and general readers, this is an introduction and overview to African history and politics since decolonization which emphasizes the political, economic and socio-economic diversity of the continent and its role in the world.

- Provides an overview of African history and politics after decolonization with particular emphasis on the political, economic and social diversity of the continent
- Thematically structured to offer increased accessibility to students, carefully balancing contextual information, analysis, case studies and examples with theoretical debates in development, politics and global policy
- Focuses on African-agency by exploring what role African actors have played in influencing international affairs beyond the continent

Constraining Dictatorship
From Personalized Rule to Institutionalized Regimes
Anne Meng | University of Virginia
By examining the emergence of constitutional rules and power-sharing in Africa, Meng explains how some dictatorships become institutionalized, rule-based systems. This book is of interest to scholars of African and comparative politics studying political economy, formal theory, democratization, comparative constitutions, and presidential power.

- Introduces an original dataset that offers readers new measures of regime institutionalization
- Offers a clear, thorough application of case studies to the theoretical scholarship on authoritarian regimes
- Adopts a mixed-methods approach that presents technical material in accessible language

Coasts, Rivals, and the Modern State
Why Rural Coalitions Matter in Sub-Saharan Africa
Beth S. Rabinowitz | Rutgers University, New Jersey
In states with weak institutions and strong ethno-regional challenges, consolidating politically by developing a strategic rural coalition is the necessary first step towards state building, economic development, and democratization. Through demonstrating this, Rabinowitz upends the long-held assumption that African leaders must only cater to urban constituents to secure their rule.

- An extensive resource offering a quantitative and qualitative analysis of state development across forty-four African states
- Proposes new typology of neo-patrimonial strategies
- Presents engaging historical narratives of specific leaders and their attempts to hold power

Coastal Sierra Leone
Materiality and the Unseen in Maritime West Africa
Jennifer Diggins | Oxford Brooks University
This vivid ethnography, describing the precarious lives of fisher folk in post-war Sierra Leone, offers fresh perspectives on themes of gender, youth, gift exchange, and secrecy. Everyday life in this fragile frontier economy is shaped both by a global ecological crisis and a local history of war, slavery, and extractive practice.

- A contemporary ethnographic study of everyday life in coastal Sierra Leone, accessible to a non-specialist audience
- Offers a fresh, richly illustrated perspective on many key themes, such as gender, kinship, material culture, war, and poverty
- Provides a comprehensive complement to an older regional literature exploring the roles of ‘secrecy’ and ‘the invisible’ in everyday material life

Democracy in Ghana
Everyday Politics in Urban Africa
Jeffrey W. Paller | University of San Francisco
With a majority urban population, Ghana has one of the most successful and consolidated democracies in Africa. Based on fifteen months of fieldwork, Jeffrey W. Paller explains the meaning and practice of accountability across different types of urban neighborhoods and shows how they shape both political participation and urban development.

- Proposes a new view of democracy and development in urban Africa
- Sheds light on the everyday politics that are so important to African societies
- Develops a comparative research design and a model of urbanization that offers new insight into the patterns of political development in Africa's growing cities

Development, (Dual) Citizenship and Its Discontents in Africa

The Political Economy of Belonging to Liberia: Robina Council Policy | London School of Economics and Political Science

Based on rich oral histories from over two hundred interviews in West Africa, Europe, and North America, this engaging study of dual citizenship and its development implications seeks to understand the origins of contemporary struggles over citizenship in Liberia, Africa's first black republic.

- An in-depth case study on citizenship construction and practice in Liberia, Africa's first black republic
- Draws on rich oral histories from over two hundred in-depth interviews in West Africa, Europe, and North America
- Examines how contemporary struggles over citizenship are impacted by historical policy changes on citizenship and ongoing public discourse on dual citizenship

Electoral Politics and Africa's Urban Transition

Class and Ethnicity in Ghana

Noah L. North | University of Michigan, Ann Arbor

Despite the rapid urbanization of African societies, the socio-economic changes associated with urbanization are not having the political effects that many expected. This book contributes to understanding African urbanization, political behavior, and the ability of developing societies to transition away from clientelism.

- Examines how urban contexts shape political behavior in the transitioning world
- Provides one of the first systematic empirical evidence on the political effects of the growth of the African middle class
- Challenges widespread conventional wisdom in journalist and policy-making circles, showing that modernization narratives about urbanization are insufficient

East Africa after Liberation

Conflict, Security and the State since the 1980s

Jonathan Fisher | University of Birmingham

From 1986 to 1994, East Africa's postcolonial political order was profoundly challenged when four revolutions 'liberate' movements seized power. This novel, far-reaching analysis focuses on the conflict of East Africa's postcolonial political order, and the attempts by the revolutionary movements to disrupt, transform, and reconstitute it.

- Telling the story of a region, rather than a single state, this introduces an engaging conceptual framework for understanding inter-connected revolutionary movements
- Grounded in rich, empirical analysis based on interviews with over 130 key players from across the region undertaken over the course of a decade
- Provides a novel and far-reaching comparative analysis of the contemporary history and politics of East Africa

How Autocrats Compete

Parties, Patrons, and Unfair Elections in Africa

Yonatan L. Morse | University of Connecticut

This book is for students, researchers, and policymakers interested in unfair elections and African politics. It argues that how autocrats compete depends on the kinds of relationships they foster with supporters and external actors. How Autocrats Compete helps us understand the current state of democracy, and how modern authoritarianism operates.

- Proposes a new theory of electoral authoritarianism competition
- Provides new insights into unfair elections in Africa
- Uses in-depth case-based methods along with cross-national comparisons and within-case statistics

Economies after Colonialism

Ghana and the Struggle for Power

Lindsay Whitfield | Roskilde University, Denmark

Unpacking the puzzle of Ghana’s struggle for economic development, Whitfield shows how the political legacies of colonialism cast a long and dark shadow over Ghana that also had implications for other African countries. This original interpretation is useful for researchers or students interested in the political economy of development in Africa.

- A unique study of Ghana that addresses both the economy and politics from early colonialism to the present day
- Tackles the topic of economic development from the experience of a single country, thereby outlining the multifaceted nature of the economic challenges that African countries face
- Focuses on the existing Ghanaian economy above any economic theory

Innovating Development Strategies in Africa

The Role of International, Regional and National Actors

Landry Signe | Stanford University, California

This book examines postcolonial strategies for economic development in Africa, and the role of international, regional and national actors in the development of these strategies. It is for scholars and practitioners of international/global development studies, political science, economics, sociology, public policy and African studies.

- Proposes one of the most systematic studies of African economic development strategies since the 1960s, ideal for those seeking to understand the modern climate of economic development in Africa
- Offers numerous case studies on the often neglected and unexplored Francophone Africa, which will appeal to those seeking a better understanding of the region
- Renews discussion of the relatively unexplored topic of political innovation, and offers a systematic framework to study it

Jihadists of North Africa and the Sahel
Local Politics and Rebel Groups
Alexander Thurston | University of Cincinnati
Looking at jihadist movements from the inside, examining their internal disagreements and how they relate to the communities around them, this study draws on case studies from North Africa and the Sahel to shed new light on the phenomenon of mass-based jihadist movements and proto-states.

- Looks at jihadist movements from the inside, uncovering their activities and internal politics over the past three decades in North Africa and the Sahel
- Demystifies and contextualizes jihadist propaganda using in-depth, critical analysis of Arabic-language jihadist statements
- Offers policymakers new ways of thinking about the causes of insecurity by engaging with widespread assumptions about what motivates jihadists

Political Leadership in Africa
Leadership and Development South of the Sahara
Giovanni Chabone | Universita degli Studi di Milano
Do political leaders matter for development in Africa? This innovative analysis of political leadership in Africa draws on an entirely new dataset to understand how leaders and their contributions led to the developmental failures and successes of African countries between independence in the 1960s and 2018.

- An innovative and systematic analysis of all African leaders who held office between 1960 and 2018
- Draws on an entirely original dataset called the Africa Leadership Change (ALC) dataset
- Brings to light the connection between leadership dynamics and development processes that is often only implicitly assumed in existing literature on African politics

Roadblock Politics
The Origins of Violence in Central Africa
Peter Schouten
Using the roadblock as an entry point, Schouten delves into the turbulent history and ongoing conflicts in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) and the Central African Republic (CAR), offering a unique approach to what drives state formation and conflict in the region—one revolving around control over movement instead of territory or people.
- Focuses on a crucial element of what drives conflict and governance in Central Africa
- Maps more than a thousand roadblocks in the region to show how rebels and state security forces exercise control and have power over these narrow points of passage
- Offers a radical alternative to explanations that foreground control over minerals, territory, or population as key drivers of Central Africa’s violent history

The Political Life of an Epidemic
Cholera, Crisis and Citizenship in Zimbabwe
Simukai Chigudu | University of Oxford
Challenging the view of epidemics as purely biological events, this study focuses on the political life of Zimbabwe’s cholera epidemic of 2008–9, revealing how the crisis, caused by this preventable disease, had profound implications for political institutions and citizenship in the country.
- Shows how cholera, a preventable disease, became a national crisis in 2008 with implications for political institutions and citizenship in Zimbabwe
- Offers a new theory of epidemics by applying concepts from medical philosophy to a specific historical event
- Challenges the view of epidemics as purely biological events revealing their complexity in an accessible way to a non-specialist audience

The Lord’s Resistance Army
Violence and Peacemaking in Africa
Marenike Schomerus
Based on exclusive interviews with the LRA, one of the most notorious armed rebel groups in Africa, and their leader Joseph Kony, this study explores why current approaches to ending armed violence not only fail, but how they actively contribute to their own failure, calling for a new approach to contemporary peacemaking.
- Based on exclusive interviews with LRA fighters and their notorious leader Joseph Kony, remembered by one of the most successful viral videos of all time: Kony2012
- Provides a detailed account of the Juba Peace Talks from the perspective of LRA members
- Unpacks why contemporary peacemaking efforts so often fail and calls for a new approach to peace negotiations

The Security Arena in Africa
Local Order-Making in the Central African Republic, Somaliland, and South Sudan
Tim Gloppen
Based on in-depth fieldwork, this critical analysis of the realities of security on a local level within ‘fragile states’ provides a bottom-up perspective on discussions surrounding peace and security in Central and East Africa, with first-hand insights and vivid real-world examples from some of the hardest to reach places in the region.
- Provides first-hand insights into some of the most difficult to reach places within Central and East Africa
- Based on extensive field-research in Somaliland, South Sudan and the Central African Republic during turbulent periods of civil war
- Presents a bottom-up perspective on discussions of peace and security which makes theoretical insights translatable to real-world experience

Why Mugabe Won
The 2013 Elections in Zimbabwe and their Aftermath
Stephen Chan | School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London
An account of the 2013 elections in Zimbabwe, examining the events, personalities and the wider socio-political context that led to President Mugabe’s re-election. It is for students and scholars studying African politics, comparative studies and development studies, and for those exploring the political context and history of the region.
- Provides an accessible, comprehensive, and nuanced view of the landmark 2013 elections in Zimbabwe, allowing the reader to break down and understand the events that shape Zimbabwe’s present and its future
- Based on extensive fieldwork and research, offering the perspective of the political elite, grassroots activists, and the ordinary Zimbabwean voter
- Examines the effects of the election in a wider context, showing the reader how domestic and international politics interact, both in Africa and on the international stage

A Century of Votes for Women
American Elections Since Suffrage
Christina Wolbrecht | University of Notre Dame, Indiana

A Century of Votes for Women examines how women voted in the first 100 years of suffrage. Challenging the idea of 'the woman voter', the authors trace how the press, politicians, and scholars have described women voters and how different groups of women actually voted across a momentous century.

- Offers the first comprehensive analysis of women’s voting behavior over the last 100 years.
- Places women’s electoral behavior within changing political, economic, and social contexts to show how both women were shaped by their times and how popular understandings of women shaped campaigns and contemporary analysis.
- Debunks popular and scholarly myths about women voters to show that there is no such thing as 'the woman voter'.

A Political Science Manifesto for the Age of Populism
Challenging Growth, Markets, Inequality and Resentment
David M. Ricks | Hebrew University of Jerusalem

Modern capitalism, via creative destruction, produces economic winners and losers. The US needs political thought focused not only on efficiency, but also community. If creativity continues - as with driverless cars and 3-D printing - its social effects must be mitigated to avoid electoral backlashs into the undemocratic politics of populism. This title is also available as Open Access on Cambridge Core.

- Starts to answer many of the questions people have about populism, investigating the roots of the resentment that generates political populism by unravelling the downsides of creative destruction and criticizing mainstream economic thinking.
- Provides a focus for scholars who want to make specific, tangible, useful, and repeated contributions to the public conversation rather than to speculate more broadly and abstractly about what has brought President Trump and populist leaders in other countries to power in recent years.

America’s Voucher Politics
How Elites Learned to Hide the State
Ursula Hackett | Royal Holloway, University of London

Drawing upon original datasets and candid interviews, Hackett explains how elites insulate their programs from legal challenge amid deep-seated religious, racial, and civic controversies in American politics. With education policy as a revealing case study, this book will interest scholars across political science, law, and public policy.

- Articulates a new theoretical framework, deepening our understanding of the ‘submerged state’ by showing how deep-seated religious, racial, and civic controversies structure American politics.
- Provides the most extensive analysis of voucher politics to date, including 101 interviews with policymakers across the United States.
- Integrates analyses of public law and public policy.

A New Framework for State Rights in the United States
Allan Colburn | Arizona State University
This book is for scholars, policy makers, advocacy groups, and concerned citizens who are interested in immigration politics and law, citizenship rights and civil rights, American political development, and federalism and state politics.
- Establishes a precise right-based framework for multidimensional citizenship, drawing insights from comparative politics and mapping indicators for future empirical work
- Provides a novel formulation of rights, including the right to develop human capital, right to free movement, and the right to identify and belong
- Traces the intersection between citizenship and federalism throughout US history, explaining how social movements, parties, and courts have interacted within the context of federalism to shape the contours of citizenship rights over time
- Offers a vision for progressive state citizenship that will interest policy makers and activists and is relevant to understand immigrant rights as well as other group rights

Comparative Public Budgeting
Global Perspectives on Taxing and Spending
Second Edition
George M. Guess | George Mason University, Virginia
This book compares budgetary systems around the world by examining how politics, culture, and economics influence public finance. The second edition has been updated with new data and case studies and is for undergraduates and graduate students interested in political science, comparative politics, public policy, economics, sociology, and history.
- This edition considers global changes in public budgeting and financial management that have occurred since the first edition’s publication in 2010
- Introduces eight ‘cultural clusters’ that enable readers to compare the history, development, and modern practices of public budgeting and financial management across different countries
- Allows readers without specialized training in public finance to understand the core functions of public budgeting

Curbing the Court
Why the Public Constrains Judicial Independence
Brandon L. Bartels | George Washington University, Washington DC
This book explains why citizens often support curbing attacks on the Supreme Court, and how this subsequently constrains the Court’s political independence and power. The authors shed light on why contemporary debates over the Supreme Court are so contentious, particularly during times of increased partisan polarization.
- Will appeal to anyone interested in public opinion, polarization, and judicial politics
- Challenges the conventional wisdom with a fresh perspective - a “policy-based” theoretical framework for understanding how the public relates to the Court
- An ‘all-stop-shop’ for anyone wishing to review the literature on public opinion and judicial politics

How Race and Class Shape Winning and Losing in American Politics
Zoltan L. Hajnal | University of California, San Diego
Dangerously Divided is for scholars, lay readers, journalists, and policy makers who are interested in American politics, race and ethnicity, class and inequality, US elections, representation, partisanship, and polarization. It is essential reading for understanding the underlying contours of contemporary American politics.
- Rigorously compares the effects of race, class, and other demographic factors on partisanship and representation in American democracy, tracking trends over time
- Measures representation across both electoral and policy outcomes, drawing on data collected over many decades at federal and local levels
- Suggests practical changes to make democracy more even and to reduce racial inequality

Hometown Inequality
Race, Class, and Representation in American Local Politics
Brian F. Schaffner | Tufts University, Massachusetts
Americans express great confidence in local government. But is this confidence warranted? Using big data, this book examines racial and class inequalities in representation across US municipalities. We find that non-white and less-affluent residents are consistent losers in local democracy. We suggest revisions to reforms to enhance political equality.
• Provides an unprecedented ‘big data’ look at racial and economic inequality in representation in local government
• Uses a nationally-representative sample of US communities, tracking patterns across large cities, mid-size communities, and small towns
• Challenges claims that local politics are characterized by ideological moderation and limited conflict, instead revealing considerable differences in group preferences
• Demonstrates that institutional reform has minimal impact on improving equality

Ignored Racism
White Animus Toward Latinos
Mark D. Rumber | Arizona State University
This book is for readers who want to understand how whites’ reactions to Latinos shape American politics. Grounded in the legacy of Latinos’ experiences, it demonstrates that how whites think about Latinos is a powerful force in American politics. Without recognizing this, it is impossible to grasp fully the fundamental debates in politics.
• Develops and validates a new measure of white animus toward Latinos, showing that this animus is distinct from other forms of out-group hostility and from ideology and partisanship
• Places the development of white animus toward Latinos in a broader historical and cultural context
• Shows how white animus toward Latinos shapes public opinion and political choices in elections and across a number of important policy areas, from voting rights to criminal punishment

Immigration and the American Ethos
Morris Levy | University of Southern California
What do Americans want from immigration policy and why? The conventional wisdom emphasizes the influence of prejudice and ethnonationalism. This book challenges that view, arguing that, for the most part, commitment to the American creed guides public opinion on immigration and explains seemingly ambivalent views across different controversies.
• Develops and rigorously tests a new theory of American public opinion on immigration, explaining why so many Americans hold a mixture of pro- and anti-immigrant positions
• Demonstrates the relevance and force of the theory across issue domains, over time, and using a combination of observational and experimental evidence
• Challenges conventional views about the relationship between prejudice and core values, the role and meaning of ‘identity’ in structuring political choice, and the influence of political culture on public opinion
• Yields insights for political strategy and framing

Learning from Loss
The Democrats, 2016–2020
Seth Mosk | University of Denver
An essential guide to American politics, the Democratic Party, and the US party system at a time of turmoil and uncertainty. Mosk offers a unique, real-time examination of how the Democratic Party interpreted its 2016 defeat and why a focus on electability led to Joe Biden’s nomination in 2020.
• Offers a unique insight into a key period in the history of the Democratic Party and a time of transition and uncertainty for the broader American party system from one of the country’s leading analysts
• Draws on deep research conducted from 2017–2020, including extensive interviews and follow-ups with Democratic activists and analysis of fundraising, endorsements, public opinion, and media coverage
• Evaluates the salience and consequences of the narratives that Hillary Clinton lost in 2016 because of ‘identity politics’ and/or because she was a woman
• Draws lessons from American history and political science research

Making Young Voters
Converting Civic Attitudes into Civic Action
John B. Holbein | University of Virginia
This timely paradigm-shifting book uses an interdisciplinary perspective to challenge existing theories of voter turnout, focusing on solutions geared towards civic education and electoral reform to increase dismal rates of youth turnout. The authors investigate reasons and remedies for the gap between youth turnout intentions and behaviors.
• Guided by multiple disciplines, this comprehensive study on the youth voting crisis provides insights on how to help young people overcome personal and structural barriers to participation
• Formulated at the intersection of various disciplines, not only political science, but other fields just as relevant to voter turnout, such as economics, psychology, and education
• Documents how civic education has fallen short but can be improved to develop young people into active participants in American democracy

Outsiders at Home
The Politics of American Islamophobia
Nafta Lajevardi | Michigan State University

How do Muslim Americans fare in US democracy? This book provides evidence that Muslim Americans are grossly marginalized, evaluating discrimination from a variety of perspectives to present a multi-faceted account. Lajevardi shows that the current state of affairs developed rapidly, is getting worse, and has yielded devastating political consequences.

- Assesses the status of Muslim Americans in US democracy from a variety of perspectives - considering political elites, mass attitudes, and media - to provide a comprehensive picture that is empirically grounded
- Tracks trends over time, providing a pre-9/11 baseline to show that the current situation developed rapidly and continues to deteriorate
- Shows the extent to which the media is responsible for negative public attitudes
- Opens a new course of study, bringing to bear insights from the racial and politics literature

Progressive Challenges to the American Constitution
A New Republic
Bradley C. S. Watson

This book details the origins and implications of American progressivism, the movement that has thoroughly rejected the Founders' Constitution of limited government. The arguments of the book are vital for understanding central problems of American politics in the twenty-first century - including the reasons behind the incredible expansion of government powers.

- A major contribution to the scholarly literature on progressivism, and will have an enduring impact on the conversation about America's constitutional origins and direction
- Extraordinarily integrated and cohesive, so it can be read as a unified book rather than a collection of essays
- Designed to be a 'go-to' volume of the leading scholars in the field, incorporating a vast range of discussions on the topic

Race, Class, and Social Welfare
American Populism Since the New Deal
Erik J. Engstrom | University of California, Davis

What factors have made it so difficult to enact and sustain comprehensive social welfare policy in the United States? Engstrom and Hukfeld argue that racial animosity has disrupted the potential for a unified, progressive populist movement. This book will interest scholars and students of political science, sociology, and history.

- Provides readers with a conceptual framework to understand populist movements in American politics
- Illustrates how racial politics can disrupt class-based movements
- Offers a new understanding of how critical historical events have shaped contemporary political dynamics

How the Conservative Revolution Stalled in the States
Matt Grossman | Michigan State University

Despite winning control of twenty-four new state governments since 1992, Republicans have failed to enact policies that substantially advance conservative goals. This book offers the first systematic assessment of the geography and consequences of Republican ascendency in the states and yields important lessons for both liberals and conservatives.

- Assesses the policy and socio-economic consequences of unprecedented Republican gains in state governments over the last twenty-five years
- Leverages sweeping data on policies and policy outcomes across all fifty states, as well as interviews with state insiders and analyses of specific states and policy areas from taxes to healthcare
- Sheds light on inherent governing challenges for Republicans at all levels of government and for conservative parties worldwide

Rejecting Compromise
Legislators’ Fear of Primary Voters
Sarah E. Anderson | University of California, Santa Barbara

This investigation of national, state, and local legislators tackles a pressing problem: the gridlock arising from politicians rejecting compromise for fear of punishment from voters in primary elections. Examining legislative behavior and possible negotiation reforms, this book will interest scholars and students studying polarization, Congress, American politics, and public policy.

- Presents experimental, survey, and observational evidence from elected legislators to understand how they view compromise and their voters
- Examplifies problem-oriented research with investigations of legislators, their voters, and policy reforms
- Focuses on rejection of compromises that move policy toward what legislators prefer

Republican Party Politics and the American South, 1865–1968
Brets Henrickson | Fordham University, New York

Traces the transformation of the Republican Party in the South after Reconstruction from a biracial organization to a mostly all-white one. This shift, combined with laws passed to disenfranchise blacks during the Jim Crow era, helps explain how the GOP emerged as a competitive and ultimately dominant electoral party in the late-twentieth century South.

- Little is known about the GOP in the South after Reconstruction and before the 1960s - this book helps fill that knowledge gap
- Analyzes how the composition of the GOP in each state changed over time, and how the Southern GOP changed from a biracial party to an almost-exclusively white one
- Helps explain how the Republican Party became a competitive, and eventually dominant, electoral party in the late-twentieth century South

The Acceptance and Expression of Prejudice During the Trump Era
Brian F. Schaffner
What are the consequences when politicians make prejudiced statements? Schaffner shows, with a series of experiments, that exposure to Trump’s prejudiced rhetoric causes people to express more prejudice themselves. This may lead to increasingly heightened inter-group tensions which could pose a threat to political and social stability in the US.

How Race Shapes Emotion in Politics
Davin L. Phoenix | University of California, Irvine
This book uncovers a racial anger gap that exacerbates political inequality by mobilizing black and white Americans differentially to affect turnout and other forms of participation. It is a must-read for those interested in campaigns and elections, black politics, political psychology and behavior, and Democratic strategy and coalition building.
- Develops and tests a new theory of racial gaps in political participation
- Shows how race and lived experience powerfully mediate the emergence of emotions and the effects of emotions on political behavior, challenging assumptions that underpin many existing approaches to political psychology
- Leverages rich mixed-methods evidence, drawing on survey data from the last forty years, experiments, and rhetoric analysis
- Offers practical insights for political strategy and framing

The Disinformation Age
Politics, Technology, and Disruptive Communication in the United States
W. Lance Bennett | University of Washington
Understanding the post-fact era requires going beyond foreign influence or the rise of social media. This examination of the origins and workings of the US disinformation system shows how political strategies and communication practices have undermined authoritative democratic institutions. This title is available as Open Access on Cambridge Core.
- Brings together perspectives from history, communication studies, data science, political science, and sociology to offer a richer, more sophisticated view of disinformation than is available through any one discipline alone
- Examines the political and historical origins of today’s ‘post-fact era’, connecting current challenges to a longer-term constellation of actors and changes that have undermined public trust in the institutions that citizens once turned to for authoritative information
- Proposes solutions that are focused on addressing root causes rather than treating symptoms

The Judicial Tug of War
How Lawyers, Politicians, and Ideological Incentives Shape the American Judiciary
Adam Bonica | Stanford University, California
Develops a novel theory about how and why politicians and legal elites politicise courts, situating this within the context of the wider American political landscape. Analyzing the ideological composition of the nation’s courts, this text demonstrates to policy makers and lay political observers the processes and consequences of judicial reforms.
- Provides a clear and comprehensive framework for thinking about how courts become politicised institutions
- Delivers a descriptive theory about how, when, and why we can expect attempts at judicial reform - both from the left and the right
- Explains why lawyers have enjoyed such tremendous political influence in the US, and why this matters

The Power of Global Performance Indicators
Judith G. Kelley | Duke University, North Carolina
This book demonstrates the ways global performance indicators (GPIs), such as ratings and rankings, influence policy and governance. Kelley and Simmons discuss how, why, and when ratings work, launching a fresh debate about power in the modern age.

- This book can help us gain insights for how to design a better rating or ranking and how to make it work better
- Moves debate beyond the validity of particular ratings and rankings to actually demonstrate causal relationships and why we should care
- Examines the influence of ratings and rankings across multiple issues, demonstrating that GPIs apply broadly

Roderick P. Hart | University of Texas, Austin
Trump and Us offers a fresh perspective on how Donald Trump became president and maintains his popularity, taking seriously the breadth and depth of his support. Through a rhetorical analysis of the 2016 campaign and early presidency, the book identifies four emotions central to Trump’s hold on his supporters.

- Pays attention to the emotional dimensions of politics, above and beyond politics’ cognitive and ideological aspects
- Presents a vast array of data pertaining to the 2016 election and the resulting Trump presidency, using human and computerized text analysis of Trump’s words, voters’ remarks, and media commentary, as well as text archives of past presidential campaigns for historical comparison
- Lists carefully to those who support Donald Trump, a constituency that is often ignored, misunderstood, or reviled

A Loud but Noisy Signal?
Public Opinion and Education Reform in Western Europe
Marius R. Busmeyer | Universität Konstanz, Germany
This book explores how public opinion influences the politics of education reform. It features a comprehensive analysis of public opinion on education policy in eight Western European countries, as well as detailed case studies on reform processes in these countries.

- This accessible yet thorough analysis breaks new empirical ground in the field of education policy by providing new data from a representative survey in eight Western European countries
- The multi-method research conducted shows how both quantitative and qualitative perspectives can be fruitfully combined
- Develops a broader argument about the role of public opinion, party politics and interest groups in policy-making that can be applied to other policy fields.

Advising Governments in the Westminster Tradition
Policy Advisory Systems in Australia, Britain, Canada and New Zealand
Jonathan Craft | University of Toronto

This book is for engaged citizens, students and researchers seeking an original and rigorous account of who advises government and how. It provides an accessible but comprehensive review of the practices of advising governments including the role of prime ministers and ministers’ private offices, senior public servants and consultants.

- Features comparative analysis to improve understanding of both the adoption and evolution of Westminster principles and looks at how similar pressures have been experienced in the four advisory systems with different responses
- Focuses on key sets of advisors (public servants, political advisers, consultants, think tanks) and how they contribute to advisory systems
- Examines the dynamics of how change of governments is evolving and how the systems of advice are adjusting to turbulent environments

China’s Gilded Age
The Paradox of Economic Boom and Vast Corruption
Yuen Yuen Ang | University of Michigan, Ann Arbor

By unbundling corruption into four distinct categories, Ang shows that the type of corruption that dominates in China — ‘access money’ (elite exchanges of power and profit) — perversely stimulates investment and growth while producing serious risks for the economy and political system.

- Provides the most data-rich study of Chinese corruption to date
- Explains the enduring puzzle of economic boom and vast corruption in China by highlighting the differential effects of different types of corruption
- Proposes a typology that unbinds corruption into four distinct varieties, paired with a new Unbundled Corruption Index (UCI) that covers fifteen countries, including China
- Through a comparative-historical lens, it shows that the rise of capitalism was not accompanied by the eradication of corruption, but rather by its evolution from thuggery and theft to access money

Government Statistical Agencies and the Politics of Credibility
Cosmo Wynham Howard | Griffith University, Queensland
Who decides how official statistics are produced? Do politicians have control or are decisions left to independent statistical agencies? Interviews with statisticians in Australia, Canada, Sweden, the UK and the USA reveal that the power over statistics is distributed differently across countries, and this book explains why:
- Features in-depth interviews with senior government statisticians and provides inside accounts of the challenges a key group of government experts face in managing their organisations and interacting with elected politicians.
- Includes a comparison of five countries’ statistical systems, giving an international perspective on the challenges facing statisticians, and explains why different countries organise their statistical systems differently.
- Offers an innovative theoretical framework centred on the politics of credibility and shows that the quest for authority in government is an ongoing struggle for credibility.

Rebel Group Formation in Uganda and Beyond
Janet L. Long | George Washington University, Washington DC
How and why do armed rebellions start? This study offers a rare look into the incipient stages of rebellion, arguing that only rebel groups controlling local rumor networks survive and become viable challengers to governments. It is a valuable resource for both scholars and policymakers of political science.
- Presents a largely qualitative approach that engages with and complements quantitative studies on conflict onset.
- Introduces a novel theory using language and examples that are accessible to readers without specialized training in political science.
- Offers key contributors to the current literature on civil war and political violence.

Based on interviews and focus groups with immigrants in Japan, South Korea, and Taiwan, this book examines how past struggles for democracy shape current movements for immigrant rights and recognition. Students, researchers, and practitioners will gain insight into the gaps between immigration policies and practices in East Asia and beyond.
- Provides an in-depth comparison of immigration policies in three East Asian industrial democracies to explain different trajectories.
- Connects regional trends in East Asia with key theoretical debates in the social sciences.
- Documents the voices of immigrants to better understand the political choices they make when becoming permanent members of their receiving societies.

Money for Votes
The Causes and Consequences of Electoral Clientelism in Africa
Eric Kramon | George Washington University, Washington DC
Vote buying is common in low-income democracies, but its causes and consequences are not well understood. Drawing on evidence from Africa, this book explains why many politicians hand out money during elections, and examines the consequences of this strategy for voter behavior, ethnic politics, public goods provision, and democratic accountability.
- Examines the role of money in electoral politics, explaining why many politicians hand out money and gifts to voters in low-income democracies.
- Presents a new way of thinking about the role of monetary handouts in electoral politics.
- Uses multiple research methods, presenting evidence from in-depth interviews, experiments, and surveys in an accessible way.

Population and Politics

The Impact of Scale
John Genov | University of Texas, Austin

While population affects nearly every aspect of politics, its impact has been strikingly under-researched. This book rectifies this omission by examining scale effects across a great variety of political dimensions, encompassing all levels of politics. The authors provide generalizable findings alongside detailed analyses of specific cases.

- The authors place scale effects, which have so far been under-studied, front and center.
- Examines the impact of scale on a range of political dimensions and outcomes that will be of interest to academics across fields, as well as policymakers.
- Extends the scope of existing studies, which mostly focus on only one level of politics.

Property without Rights

Origins and Consequences of the Property Rights Gap
Michael Albertus | University of Chicago

Incomplete rural property rights are endemic throughout most of the developing world. This book explores the political origins of this lack of rights and how it impacts rural autonomy and development outcomes such as economic growth, inequality, urbanization, education, and the links between political parties and voters.

- Provides a new theory of why governments generate, maintain, and close property rights gaps.
- Illustrates the economic, social, and political consequences of a lack of property rights that affects millions of people.
- Presents data on countries throughout the world since 1900, spanning Latin America to parts of Europe and China.

Regimes of Inequality

The Political Economy of Health and Wealth
Julia Lynch | University of Pennsylvania

Aimed at scholars and students of political science and public health, this book explores why policy remedies proposed by center-left governments have failed to reduce inequality. Its focus is a forensic examination of the largely unsuccessful efforts of governments in England, France, and Finland to reduce socio-economic inequalities in health.

- Assesses the functioning of welfare regimes in a post-neoliberal era.
- Brings together theories and approaches from political science and public health.
- Draws on in-depth interviews and archival research about health policy decisions.

Resilient Communities

Non-Violence and Civilian Agency in Communal War
Jana Kruse | Universiteit van Amsterdam

Resilient Communities focuses on civilian agency and mobilization "from below" and explains violence and non-violence in communal wars. Kruse draws on extensive field research on ethno-religious conflict in Indonesia and Nigeria and offers a comparative analysis of (un)succesful local peace and resilience building in vulnerable mixed communities.

- Offers an in-depth analysis of non-violent communities and resilience building during communal conflict in Indonesia and Nigeria.
- Develops a concept of communal war and offers a typology for analyzing its patterns of violence and its social processes of escalation.
- Will inform scholars and students in comparative politics and conflict studies working on communal conflict, civil war, and peacebuilding, and practitioners who work on atrocity prevention and civilian protection, about civilian coping strategies and social resilience.

Resisting Redevelopment

Protest in Aspiring Global Cities
Eleonora Pesotti | University of California, Santa Cruz

This study of twenty-nine protest cases in ten global cities shows how residents facing displacement - in the forms of urban redevelopment and gentrification - mobilize their neighborhoods and change policies. Hereinbefore understudied, creative residents emerge as the key to mobilization, as they craft hip and transformative protest experiences.

- Presents in ordinary language theoretical findings and protest experiences with unprecedented geographical scope and methodological rigor.
- Shows scholars in political science, sociology, urban studies, and geography how insights from all of these disciplines are necessary to develop a comparative explanation for when and how residents can mobilize and actually impact policy change.
- Offers a widely accessible theoretical analysis of experiential tools: a powerful, ubiquitous, and understudied approach to mobilization and resistance.
- Responds to the growing call for more explicitly cross-regional urban comparative research designs.

The Chain of Representation
Preferences, Institutions, and Policy across Presidential Systems
Brian S. Crisp | Washington University, St Louis

This comparative analysis of eighteen Latin American countries shows how formal institutions affect the extent to which democracies adopt policies that reflect the policy preferences of their citizens. An excellent resource for scholars of comparative politics, political behavior, and institutional design, this book offers a basis for graduate-level courses.

- Provides a thorough yet accessible empirical analysis.
- Presents a step-by-step construction of a theory beginning with explicit assumptions about what voters and politicians want.
- Readers will see why rules guaranteeing the existence of open societies can also introduce disequilibrium between voter preferences and policy.

The Political Economy of Pension Policy Reversal in Post-Communist Countries
Sarah Wilson Sokhey | University of Colorado Boulder

Why do governments backtrack on major policy reforms? Reversals of pension privatization provide insight into why governments abandon potentially path-dependent policy changes. Academics and policymakers alike will find this work relevant in understanding market-oriented reform, authoritarian and post-communist politics, social security, and the politics of aging populations around the world.

- Will appeal to a methodologically diverse audience, as rigorous statistical analysis combined with original survey research and country cases studies are described in a non-technical, accessible manner.
- Offers an explanation of social security reform, an increasingly urgent issue around the world given aging populations.
- Argument and findings are widely accessible to academics and policymakers alike, with non-technical explanations.

Social Contracts and Public Goods Provision in China and India
Selina Hu | National University of Singapore

The experiences of the two rising powers of Asia, China and India, in providing drinking water highlight an important puzzle - why do some countries provide more public goods than others? The book argues that public goods vary according to the social contract between a government and its people.

- Compares public goods provided by China and India and argues that regime types do not determine public goods outcomes.
- Proposes a new conceptual framework for understanding public goods provision through a detailed study of drinking water in Chinese and Indian cities.
- Explores important policy issues for developing countries and gives insights into real-life policy implications for governments.

Energy and Climate Policies in China and India
A Two-Level Comparative Study
Fuzhan Wu | Aalborg University, Denmark
The book argues that China and India’s policy measures to address energy insecurity and climate change have been shaped at two levels. Domestically, both countries pursued fast economic growth for wealth maximization. At the international level, both countries shirked their great power status through global energy and climate governance.
- Creates a two-level pressure analytical framework by expanding the vision of Putnam’s two-level games and Neoclassical realism
- Systematically compares China and India’s energy and climate change policies at two levels - domestic and international
- Draws on rich primary and secondary sources in both Chinese and English to provide a nuanced perspective to readers

The Belt Road and Beyond
State-Mobilized Globalization in China
Min Ye | Boston University

Over the last two decades, China has thrice undergone political-economic crises and bureaucratic paralysis. Nonetheless, China’s autocratic leadership launched initiatives that expedited globalization and revived economic growth. This book acts as an analytical tool to study China’s policies and understand its emergence as a global power.

- A uniquely impartial investigation of the tactics attributed to China’s recently acquired status as a formidable global power
- A transferrable analytical tool to study policies in China, taking into account China’s state system, how it intervenes in the economy, and with what effects
- Introduces and evaluates different methods in studying authoritarian China, arguing for the integration of different levels of analysis and disciplinary divides

The Cultural Logic of Politics in Mainland China and Taiwan
Tianjian Shi | Duke University, North Carolina

This book explains why and how cultural norms affect political attitudes and behavior, as well as how this ”normative reality”-centered framework connects the findings of scholars of Asian politics with the mainstream literature in comparative politics. Using multiple surveys from mainland China and Taiwan, the book shows how cultural norms, independent of structural and institutional factors, significantly shape political trust, participation, and understanding of democracy.

- Offers a new and original perspective on the dynamics of Asian politics, particularly Chinese politics
- Presents a new theory on how culture affects public opinion and political behavior
- Results are determined through rigorous empirical examination with unique representative sampling data and sophisticated psychometric and statistical models
- Addresses new research avenues for integrating regional studies with a coherent but more nuanced theoretical framework in comparative politics

Local Ties and Voting Radical Right in Europe
Jennifer Fitzgerald | University of Colorado Boulder

This book explores the minds and lives of regular people to explain why far-right parties are increasingly popular in democracies. While other titles focus on macro trends, like immigration and globalization, this book investigates people's day-to-day experiences and institutional contexts that connect their local ties to their electoral decisions.

- Offers a locally-oriented explanation of electoral shifts in advanced democracies, particularly the rise of radical right parties in Europe
- Develops the concept of localism as a motivation for voting for people's electoral choice
- Points out that devotion of authority can motivate radical right support

Confounding Powers
Anarchy and International Society from the Assassins to Al Qaeda
William J. Brenner

The study of international politics has not addressed some of the most pressing issues raised after 9/11, most notably the relationships between Al Qaeda’s international terrorist origins and societal effects. Confounding Powers advances the study of international politics into new historical settings while providing insights into pressing policy challenges.

- Addresses key unanswered theoretical questions raised by the 9/11 attacks
- Provides an analytically eclectic and theoretically progressive model to address vexing theoretical and policy challenges
- Advances the study of international politics into largely uncharted historical contexts

Constitutionalizing World Politics
The Logic of Democratic Power and the Unintended Consequences of International Treaty Making
Karolina M. Milewicz | University of Oxford

Constitutionalization of world politics is emerging as an unintended consequence of international treaty making driven by the logic of democratic power. The analysis will appeal to scholars of International Relations and International Law interested in international cooperation, as well as institutional and constitutional theory and practice.

- Proposes a novel theory addressing central issues of cooperation and institutions in international affairs
- Provides an interdisciplinary approach, bringing together rigorous scientific analysis with legal debates and concepts
- Develops a causal analysis of the important legal concept of constitutionalization through an international relations lens, drawing on comparative constitutional history and quantitative method

Contestation and Constitution of Norms in Global International Relations

Antje Wiener | Universität Hamburg

Examines the involvement of local actors in conflicts over global norms such as fundamental rights and the prohibition of torture and sexual violence. Detailing local interventions made on behalf of those affected by breaches of norms, Wiener identifies the constraints and opportunities for stakeholder participation in a fragmented global society.

- Proposes a clear framework to operationalize research on contested norms
- Illustrates the framework through three up-to-date case scenarios (fundamental rights, torture prohibition and sexual violence prohibition)
- Will appeal to an interdisciplinary research community including the fields of international relations, international law, global constitutionalism, international political sociology and critical international studies.

Culture and Order in World Politics

Andrew Phillips | University of Queensland

Offers a new framework for understanding the relationship between cultural diversity and international order. Drawing from critical contributions within international relations (IR) and other re-conceptualizations of cultures from across the social sciences, it includes contributions from IR scholars, historians, anthropologists, political theorists and sociologists.

- Develops Phillips’ and Reus-Smith’s groundbreaking research on the nature and transformation of cultural diversity
- Brings together an inter-disciplinary team of world-class scholars
- Explores the relationship between the organization of cultural diversity and the legitimation of political authority in historical and contemporary international relations

Europe’s Migration Crisis

Border Deaths and Human Dignity

Wolfgang Squire | University of Warwick

By situating the perceived ‘migration crisis’ within a modern European tradition of humanism, Squire provides a distinctive analysis of the EU’s response to migration. She also illustrates how migration activist interventions that provide openings for a renewed humanism based on a rejection of longer histories of violence and dispossession.

- Provides a detailed and broad-ranging analysis of the EU’s response to the ‘migration crisis’
- Situates migration policies in relation to a longer-standing modern European tradition of humanism
- Unpacks alternative responses to migration on the part of pro-migration solidarity activists

Max Weber and International Relations
Richard N. Lebow | King's College London

This book offers new readings of Max Weber's politics, approach to knowledge, rationality, countergustoms, ideal types, power, bureaucracy, the state, history, and the non-Western world. Weber's epistemological successes and failures highlight unresolved tensions that are just as pronounced today and from which we have much to learn.

- Examines Max Weber’s politics against his epistemology, encouraging readers to think more about the relationship between social science and politics.
- Examines Weber’s Eurocentricity and the way it influenced his analysis of the West and the non-Western world, increasing the reader’s sensitivity to the consequences of a Western-dominated discipline.
- Identifies key tensions in Weber’s epistemology and the ways his successors have addressed and fine-tuned them, demonstrating the importance for readers as these tensions still characterize the study of international relations.

Mobilising International Law for ‘Global Justice’
Jeff Handmaker | Erasmus University Rotterdam

This book aims to teach scholars and undergraduate students interested in the theme of global justice and the dynamics of international law-making and enforcement. Practicing lawyers and public officials will also appreciate its grounded studies on the challenges of applying international law in response to complex social and political problems.

- Critically engages with the political dimensions of international law, drawing on the influential scholarship of Martti Koskenniemi.
- The book cuts across various dimensions of international law (e.g. on human rights, conflict, peace and security, corruption) and a variety of concrete case examples are included.
- Locates international law within broader processes of globalisation.
- Shows how law can be mobilised in a variety of strategic ways.

Political Survival and Sovereignty in International Relations
Jesse Dillon Savage | Trinity College Dublin

Exploring why political actors willingly give up sovereignty to another state or why they choose to resist, this book is aimed at those interested in international politics and international relations theory, international hierarchy, informal empire and politics and foreign policy of Russia and former Soviet States.

- Along with new theory, the work provides a rich, empirical exploration of international hierarchy.
- Moves beyond the state and elites to individual level explanations of society and its preferences.
- Demonstrates how non-state actors can bargain with dominant states in the establishment of hierarchy and order, another novel theoretical and empirical contribution which shows how subnational actors influence international order and hierarchy.

Poverty Narratives and Power Paradoxes in International Trade Negotiations and Beyond
Amita Narlikar

Challenging readers of all political persuasions to rethink assumptions about powerlessness, this book shows how poverty has become a political tool and unprecedented source of empowerment. Narlikar’s theory of agency, focus on the life-cycles of narratives, and policy-relevant insights make this work a valuable resource for scholars, diplomats, and leaders.

- Offers detailed case studies on multilateral negotiations that feature organizations such as the IFIs, GATT, and WTO.
- sheds light on how governments and other actors can build winning and sustainable narratives.
- Empirically explores ways in which the powerless and poor can bargain under conditions of asymmetrical power.

Power Sharing and Democracy in Post-Civil War States
The Art of the Possible
Camille A. Hartnell | Gettysburg College, Pennsylvania

This book examines the challenges of promoting post-civil war democracy, identifying minimalist democracy as the most realistic form of democracy to which post-civil war countries can aspire and analyzing the role that power-sharing institutions play in facilitating a transition to this form of governance.

- Cultivates hope in the face of growing sense of pessimism regarding the current state of democracy.
- Provides an empirical focus on post-civil war democracy democratization, and instead of a narrower focus on post-civil war elections.
- Allows readers to see that the relationship between power-sharing measures used to end civil wars and post-civil war democracy is not necessarily antithetical.

Practice Theory and International Relations
Silvia Lehter | King’s College London
Lehter and Frost provide a new philosophical analysis of social practices in order to illuminate major issues in international relations. Following in the footsteps of Oakeshott, Wittgenstein and Hegel, this book forms an important contribution to international relations, philosophy and the social sciences.
- Departs from the convention of Pierre Bourdieu’s “practice turn”, forming a truly original approach to international relations
- Proposes a new theoretical understanding of social practices, incorporating the insights of the philosophers Michael Oakeshott, Ludwig Wittgenstein, and G. W. F. Hegel
- Makes an important interdisciplinary contribution to the fields of international relations, philosophy and the social sciences

Secrets in Global Governance
Disclosure Dilemmas and the Challenge of International Cooperation
Allison Carnegie | Columbia University, New York
What makes international rules effective?
Transparency provided by international organizations has been a common answer. This book offers multi-method evidence that equipping international organizations with secrecy, rather than transparency, can enhance cooperation in domains ranging from nuclear proliferation to trade to human rights.
- This book examines in a wide range of issue areas, including economics, human rights, and international security
- Challenges the existing literature by offering a re-assessment of the role of secrecy in diplomacy and global governance, both its benefits and trade-offs
- Provides scholars and practitioners with new insights into how global governance works with non-specialized terminology

Regulating Sustainability in a Global Economy
Sven Reinker | University of Toronto
In discussing private rulemaking, public policy, corporate sustainability, and EU policymaking, Rencker targets students and scholars in political science, international relations, political economy, EU politics, business, law, and environmental studies, as well as policymakers, interest groups and practitioners dealing with sustainable business.
- Provides a new theory of public interventions in private governance
- Opens up a new research agenda on lobbying and interest representation by private governance schemes
- Shows empirically that public policymakers in a diverse set of issue areas have been monitoring private governance ever since its early development, with an eye on possibly intervening

Selling War and Peace
Syria and the Anglophone
Jack Hollard | University of Leeds
By analysing Anglophone foreign policy debates during the Syrian Civil War from 2011 to 2019, this book is a significant contribution to the literatures on the Syrian Civil War, Anglophone foreign policy (the US-UK-Australian military alliance), and constructivism and discourse analytic approaches.
- Offers an accessible, yet intellectually rigorous, original analysis of Anglophone foreign policy in Syria
- Develops an innovative, interdisciplinary theoretical framework for the analysis of Anglophone foreign policy discourses as they compete in a transnational war of position
- Promotes an understanding of the Anglophone in foreign policy studies (in a challenge to orthodox approaches), by tracing its historical development and conceptualizing its role as the world’s foremost military coalition

Quagmire in Civil War
Joseph Schollhofer-Wohl
A pervasive “folk” notion holds that quagmire is intrinsic to certain countries or civil wars. Schollhofer-Wohl shows that this view is a fundamental misdiagnosis of the problem. He marshals extensive, diverse evidence to show that interlocked domestic-international strategic interactions in civil war systematically produce quagmire.
- The first treatment of quagmire in civil war as an object of study in its own right, conceptualizing quagmire, establishing its empirical prevalence, and analyzing its causes
- Employs multiple methodologies and is written in a non-technical manner, but offers interested readers technical depth in appendices
- Incorporates field research-based study of the conflict-based civil war (1975–1990), including interviews with former commanders on all sides of the war
- Uses micro-level research to shed light on a macro-level question, appealing both to those interested in big picture questions and those who seek to understand civil war through the eyes of the participants

The Steppe Tradition in International Relations
Russians, Turks and European State Building
4000 BCE–2017 CE
Iver B. Neumann

This book traces the tradition of empire that emerged in the Eurasian steppe from the fourth millennium BCE onwards, and its influence in the modern era. It will be of interest to scholars and advanced students of international politics, global history and social anthropology, especially those working on state building in Eurasia.

- Documents an international system in the Eurasian steppe over the course of millennia, naming it the steppe tradition
- Demonstrates how the steppe tradition underlies the systematic differences between Russia, Turkey, and the rest of Europe
- Defies the Euro-centrism at the heart of the study of international relations
- Appealing to scholars and advanced students of international politics, global history and social anthropology, especially those working on state building in Eurasia

Collective Beliefs and Political Order in the Sino-centric, Islamic and Southeast Asian International Societies
Herzl. Spur and Nepal University, Indonesia
Spur explains how collective belief systems influenced the political order in three non-European societies c. 1500–1900, and the way in which these beliefs engaged the Western colonial empires. The inter-disciplinary approach of this book will appeal to students and scholars of international relations, historical sociology and global history.

- Applies an interdisciplinary approach using insights from political science, sociology, and cultural studies
- Develops a methodology for the study of collective beliefs on political organization and international societies
- Links historical study to contemporary politics and international relations

Defiant Local Partners in Counterinsurgency Wars
Barbara Elias [Bowdoin College, Maine]

Analysing policy documents from nine counterinsurgency wars, Elias asks why powerful militaries have difficulty managing local partners. Revealing a critical political dynamic in military interventions, this book will appeal to academics and policymakers addressing counterinsurgency issues in foreign policy, security studies and political science.

- Examines nine large-scale post-colonial wars
- Uses thousands of primary source documents to examine alliances between local and intervening forces in counterinsurgencies
- Offers a new model explaining allied behaviour in complying with, or defying, the requests of foreign allies, and explaining uncooperative behaviour

Wrestling with God
Ethical Precarity in Christianity and International Relations
Cecilia Lynch [University of California, Irvine]

Exploring tensions in Christian practice in the modern world, Lynch demonstrates the ethical precarity that characterizes both religious and secular actions in international politics from early missions to contemporary humanitarianism. It will be of particular interest to students and scholars of international relations, religion and politics, and religious studies.

- The first book to explicitly connect religion and international ethics
- Develops the "neo-Weberian" approach to religion in international relations, in reference to concrete historical periods and actors
- Connects with readers' own experiences, questions and struggles regarding ethical questions regarding the use of violence and treatment of others
- Fundamental for addressing pressing international relations and interdisciplinary ethical debates and laying a critical foundation for work on religious/secular ethics in the international relations discipline

Authoritarian Police in Democracy
Contested Security in Latin America
Yamila Maria Gonzalez | Harvard University, Massachusetts
This book explains the persistence of violent, unaccountable policing in Latin American democracies. It is for scholars, students, educators, policy makers, journalists, advocates, and ordinary citizens who are concerned with the relationship between police and communities, human rights, democracy, and police reform.
• Develops a theoretical framework to understand the structural power of police as political actors and to elucidate the tensions between police and democracy
• Provides comparative analysis of police reform and continuity over time and across three countries
• Brings together theoretically and substantively important debates across scholarly literatures that do not typically engage with each other

Buying Audiences
Clientelism and Electoral Campaigns When Parties Are Weak
Paula Muñoz
Buying Audiences develops a new theory of how politicians campaign and deploy electoral clientelism in the absence of institutionalized parties and stable party-broker relationships. It will interest scholars who study Latin American politics, electoral campaigns, clientelism, political parties, and business influence in the developing world.
• Develops a new theory of how clientelism works in the absence of stable party-broker relationships
• Shows how politicians campaign without institutionalized parties
• Offers new insight into business influence in the developing world and challenges to party building
• Uses a mixed-methods approach and examines an understudied case

Decadent Developmentalism
The Political Economy of Democratic Brazil
Matthew M. Taylor | American University, Washington DC
This book describes the institutional context that has thwarted the emergence of either a capable developmental or a neoliberal alternative in Brazil since the return to democracy in 1985. The work is a key resource for scholars and students of comparative political economy, political science, economics, sociology, and development studies.
• Offers a comprehensive overview of the five interlocking institutional domains that have defined Brazil’s political economy since 1985
• Provides a theoretical argument for why incremental reforms may not sum up to a significant shift in the overall performance of a national economy
• Opens a dialogue between disparate literatures on economics, business, executive-legislative relations, judicial oversight and bureaucratic politics

Dependency in the Twenty-First Century?
The Political Economy of China-Latin America Relations
Barbara Stallings | Brown University, Rhode Island
This Element argues that it may be useful to revamp dependency to interpret China’s new relationships with developing countries, including Latin America. It does so by discussing the dependency debates, reviewing the way dependency operated in the US-Latin American case, and analysing the growing Chinese presence within a dependency framework.

Partisans, Antipartisans, and Nonpartisans
Voting Behavior in Brazil
David J. Samuels | University of Minnesota
Observers believe few Brazilian voters identify with a political party and, instead, base their choices only on candidates’ personal qualities. The authors show that this conventional wisdom is wrong. Many Brazilians have developed a strong affinity for or against a party – which plays an underappreciated role in explaining voter behavior.
• Offers a new explanation for origins of mass partisan identification that highlights the importance of civil society, complementing existing arguments that focus on either party elites’ efforts or social cleavages
• Demonstrates the importance of negative partisanship, particularly of separating purely negative partisans from non-partisans, clarifying predicting voting behavior, and understanding patterns of party competition
• Explains the recent decline of Brazil’s Workers’ Party (PT) and how that contributes to the ongoing debate about the importance of economic crisis versus corruption (Brazil’s current political malaise)

Party Institutionalization and Women’s Representation in Democratic Brazil
Kristin N. Wylie | James Madison University, Virginia
Explains how weak, male-dominant parties interact to marginalize women and Afro-descendants in Brazilian politics. This book demonstrates that party organizational strength (institutionalization) and the inclusion of women in party leadership can improve the electoral prospects of female legislative candidates and enhance democratic accountability and representativeness.
• Exposes reader to important subnational, interparty, and intraparty variation within Brazil
• Analyzes candidate-level data on candidate background, quality, and electoral outcomes
• Improves understanding of how parties mediate electoral rules and more broadly of institutional and party change in the context of weak but robustly gendered institutions

Property Threats and the Politics of Anti-Statism
The Historical Roots of Contemporary Tax Systems in Latin America
Gabriel Ondetti | Missouri State University

This book is for scholars and students of political economy, Latin American politics, and Latin American history. It examines the roots of contemporary differences in taxation and public sector size in Latin America, revealing the impact of historical episodes of redistributive reform and related anti-statist backlash.
- Applies comparative historical analysis to explain the sources of cross-national tax burden variance
- Provides an in-depth analysis of the politics of Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Mexico
- Introduces readers to a new approach to understanding variance in the size and characteristics of Latin American states

Regime Support Beyond the Balance Sheet
Participation and Policy Performance in Latin America
Matthew Rhodes-Pardy | Washington University, St Louis

This book resolves one of Latin America's most difficult public opinion puzzles: the discrepancy between policy performance and regime support in Chile and Venezuela. Using insights drawn from democratic theory and social psychology, it shows that participation inflated support in Venezuela, while inhibiting it in Chile.
- Provides a generally applicable framework for analyzing regime support, explaining why extensive opportunities for direct participation in the political process increase support both directly and by softening the impact of performance failures
- Resolves a particularly difficult paradox in Latin American public opinion
- Uses a mixed-methods approach and presents statistical analyses in an accessible way

Politics of Institutional Weakness in Latin America
Danilo M. Brinks | University of Texas, Austin

Political scientists agree that 'institutions matter', but we still know little about when and why or how we would know. Drawing on experiences from Latin America, this volume offers a new conceptual and theoretical framework for understanding when institutions are strong or weak and how different types of weakness matter.
- Offers a conceptual and theoretical framework for understanding the nature, causes, and consequences of weak institutions
- Derives insights from grounded analysis of institutional strength and weakness across countries and across different political and legal domains
- Shows that institutions are often weak by design and explores how this reality affects outcomes and the strategic behavior of political actors
- Provides practical guidance to future researchers by exploring different measurement strategies and their potential pitfalls

Politics of Transitional Justice in Latin America
Power, Norms, and Capacity Building
Ezequiel A. Gonzalez-Ocantos | University of Oxford

This essay describes Latin American innovations in trials and truth commissions, evaluating both the Huntingtonian and Justice Cascade approaches, influential in showing variation in TJ outcomes. It argues that scholars should complement these approaches with one that recognizes the importance of state capacity building and institutional change.

The Inclusionary Turn in Latin American Democracies
Diana Kuguizki | Georgetown University, Washington DC

Latin America has a long history of political, socioeconomic, and ethnic exclusion. This book examines how enduring democracy, amid this inequality, engendered a movement toward greater inclusion across the region. Explaining unprecedented reforms and limits to further change, it will appeal to scholars of Latin American and comparative politics.
- Provides a clear conceptual and theoretical framework that unifies diverse chapters
- Includes a range of leading scholars, and offers readers a rich set of studies covering the theme of inclusion
- Presents original arguments in a language accessible to undergraduates and other readers without specialized training in political science

The Volatility Curse
Exogenous Shocks and Representation in Resource-Rich Democracies
Daniele Campello

Economic performance is a strong predictor of political outcomes, but in much of the developing world it is highly dependent on exogenous international factors. Examining implications for democracy, this book is for scholars and students of international and comparative political economy, democratic theory, behavior, and Latin American politics.
- Challenges assumptions about economic voting as a mechanism of democratic accountability, showing the limits of this for developing countries where economic performance is volatile and highly contingent on exogenous international factors
- Derives insights from cross-national analysis, drawing on macro- and micro-level evidence from Latin America and other regions
- Examines how (exogenously induced) economic volatility shapes both voter instability and the incentives for politicians
- Highlights how economic volatility contributes to explain political instability and weak institutions

Uneven Social Policies
The Politics of Subnational Variation in Latin America
Sara Niebrolewski | University of California, Santa Cruz

Uneven Social Policies explains why some policies are implemented more effectively than others, why this variation is particularly relevant within countries, and why some policies deliver votes to incumbent governments while others do not. This book will appeal to readers interested in comparative politics, multilevel governance, the welfare state, and Latin American politics.

- Focuses on social policy implementation as a vital aspect of poverty alleviation
- Shifts the focus from national to subnational variation of welfare states
- Includes variables at multiple territorial levels in a mixed methods research design

The Political Logic of Criminal Wars in Mexico
Guillermo Tejeiro | University of Notre Dame, Indiana

This book is for scholars, students, journalists, and policy makers who study criminal violence, narco wars, transitions to democracy, corruption, and Mexican and Latin American politics. It analyzes the outbreak and intensification of Mexicos crime wars, revealing the political foundations of large-scale criminal violence in new democracies.

- Develops a political theory of peace and violence in the criminal underworld to explain the outbreak of criminal wars in new democracies
- Provides the first complete scholarly account of the outbreak and intensification of Mexico's narco wars over the previous decades
- Uses a multi-method approach, combining extensive statistical analyses and case studies, to assess the causal impact of political variables on the dynamics of criminal violence while also testing rival economic and social explanations

Anticolonial Afterlives in Egypt
The Politics of Hegemony
Sara Salem | London School of Economics and Political Science

Using the work of Antonio Gramsci and Franz Fanon, two foundational theorists of anti-colonialism and anticolonialism, this book is an interdisciplinary exploration of the afterlives of Egypt’s moment of decolonization and how they reverberate into the present.

- Takes a novel approach, using imagined conversations between Antonio Gramsci and Franz Fanon, two foundational theorists of anti-colonialism
- Moves away from the lens of authoritarianism and the narrow conceptual approach that has marked recent scholarship in Egypt to explore the relationships between elites and subaltern groups
- Offers an interdisciplinary approach which will be of interest to scholars of Egypt, postcolonial theory, Middle East history, Marxist theory and comparative politics more widely

Armenian Christians in Iran
Ethnicity, Religion, and Identity in the Islamic Republic
James Barry | Drexel University, Philadelphia

Since the 1979 revolution, Iran has promoted a Shi’a Islamic identity, aimed at transcending ethnic and national boundaries. In this book, James Barry highlights the situation of the Armenian community within this Islamic Republic, and asks whether Iran has failed or succeeded in fostering a cohesive identity which includes non-Muslims.

- Shows how social relations are created through public performances designed either to demonstrate loyalty to the Islamic state or express feelings of distance from mainstream Iranian society
- Grapples with the generational gap in identity
- Utilises non-Western sources

Ethics as a Weapon of War
Militarism and Morality in Israel
James Eastwood | Queen Mary University of London
This book examines theories of morality and ethics in war through a comprehensive study of the Israeli Defence Forces. It will appeal to researchers and students exploring military ethics and Israeli politics, international relations, as well as those studying war and politics in the wider Middle East.
- Develops a new theory on the relationship between ethics, war and militarism, for researchers interested in contemporary critical approaches to the ethics of war
- Uses rich empirical material from original fieldwork to engage critically with debates of morality within Israeli military engagement, for those interested in topical issues surrounding Israel/Palestine
- Challenges commonly-held ideas about the usefulness of political strategies based on the moral critique of war and occupation, provoking a response from readers through counter-intuitive argument.

Contested Politics in Tunisia
Civil Society in a Post-Authoritarian State
Eva K. Forster
After Tunisia's 2010–11 uprising and the downfall of its dictator, a period of transformation occurred as new actors and groups rushed to actively participate in the socio-political transformations of their nation. Forster examines the effects of opening up this public space, and the deep sociocultural and socioreligious divisions that emerged.
- Explores the dynamics of collective activism and mobilization in North Africa following the Arab Uprisings in 2010–11
- Examines marginalized populations and smaller civil society organizations to determine the impact of socio-political turmoil on these groups
- Proposes a new approach to how we understand conflict and contestation within civil society

Foreign Policy as Nation Making

Turkey and Egypt in the Cold War
Reem Abu-El-Fadl | School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London

Turkey's and Egypt's foreign policies in the 1950s present a puzzle, with the Turkish Democratic Party pursuing NATO membership and sponsoring the pro-Western Baghdad Pact, while Egypt's Free Officers promoted neutralism and pan-Arab alliances. Abu-El-Fadl argues that the answer to this lies in the two leaderships' contrasting nation making projects.

- Tackles the conventional wisdom on Turkey's and Egypt's alliances during the Cold War, while rethinking foreign policy as a site for nation making
- Draws on previously unused Turkish and Arabic primary sources from state, media, and personal archives
- Compares different nationalistic responses to the legacies of European empire in the Middle East

Labor Politics in North Africa
After the Uprisings in Egypt and Tunisia
Ian M. Kantorow | University of Nevada, Reno
Prior to the Arab Uprisings of 2010–11, formerly quiescent trade unions became key sites of contention. Union politics across both Tunisia and Egypt were transformed. While Tunisia witnessed the apparent success of worker power, Egypt experienced economic crisis and repression. Drawing on extensive interviews, Kantorow explains this phenomenon.
- Proposes a new theory of ‘corporatist collapse’ to explain how labor gets drawn into revolutionary movements
- Extends existing theories of how unions compete following elections, thereby explaining how the trade movement as a whole can succeed or fail
- Explores the relationship between Islamists and trade unions

Surviving the War in Syria
Survival Strategies in a Time of Conflict
Justin Shoot | University of Florida
Based on extensive fieldwork in Turkey, Jordan, Kenya, and the United States, with over two hundred interviews with Syrian refugees, this study examines how the experience of survival strategies, including fighting, protesting, collaborating, hiding, and migration, is a critical framework for understanding the decisive behaviour of conflict zones.
- Examines the experience of survival strategies, not just migration, in a unique framework for understanding civilian behaviour in conflict zones.
- Based on extensive fieldwork in Turkey, Jordan, Kenya, and the United States, with over two hundred interviews with Syrian refugees.
- Will guide new research on civil wars, affecting how we think about other survival strategies, from political, violent, to environmental threats.

The Arab Winter
Democratic Consolidation, Civil War, and Radical Islamists
Stephen J. King | Georgetown University, Washington DC
Comparing the experiences of different countries before, during, and after the Arab Spring, this is a broad but focused account of how societies, including those of Egypt, Libya, Yemen, Iraq, and Tunisia, handled the challenge of democratic consolidation.
- Provides a unique analysis of the experience of countries before, during, and after the Arab Spring.
- A comparative history of different nations considering why Tunisia was able to consolidate democracy and why other countries like Egypt were not.
- Creates a history of challenges to democratic regimes prior to the Arab Spring.

The Israeli Settler Movement
Assessing and Explaining Social Movement Success
Sivan Heid-Hueler
The first systematic analysis and explanation of the political success of the Israeli settler movement. Based on a comprehensive original theoretical framework and rich empirical analysis, this book provides key new insights for the study of both Israeli politics and social movements in general.
- Systematically assesses and explains the political success of the Israeli settler movement, which plays a key role in Israeli politics and the Arab-Israeli conflict.
- Fully integrates the settler movement into the international literature on social movements.
- Broadens the study of social movements by focusing on a longstanding, radical right-wing, non-Western case.

The Origins of the Syrian Conflict
Climate Change and Human Security
Marcos Davoud | Georgetown University, Washington DC
Policymakers, academics, and the media have claimed that climate change causes conflict. This study presents an innovative framework to evaluate this theory, asking whether climate change caused the conflict in Syria. Its argument and findings are essential for practitioners and scholars of climate change, security, and Middle Eastern politics.
- Outlines an innovative multidisciplinary framework that rigorously evaluates media, policy, and scientific claims about climate change, migration, and conflict.
- Draws on unpublished primary sources and original interviews with government officials, leading experts on and from Syria, and refugees.
- Avoids top-down narratives by prioritizing local voices and perspectives in understanding Syria’s place in international debates.

Trust and the Islamic Advantage
Religious-Based Movements in Turkey and the Muslim World
Avital Livny | University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign

This book will interest scholars and students of comparative politics, Middle East politics, religion, and collective action. Examining the rise of Islamic-based politics and economics, Livny argues that those movements have a comparative advantage because they inspire feelings of trust among individuals with a shared, religious group-identity.

- Combines qualitative and quantitative research
- Defines the key conditions that make interpersonal trust necessary for cooperation and coordination
- Combines existing theories of social (group) identity with theories of religion, identifying previously unexplored similarities between the two

Women and Social Change in North Africa
What Counts as Revolutionary?
Doris H. Gray

This volume offers an analysis of how intentional and unintentional actions of men and women contribute to social change. Most chapters are based on extensive field work on migration, domestic violence shelters, mosques, at funerals and in the legal sphere to shed light on diverse forces leading to social transformations.

- A novel approach to assessing women’s rights and social change
- Provides grass-roots perspectives on a wide range of issues not normally considered in the context of social change
- Based on extensive field work that sheds light on the real-life experiences of women in the region

Women and the Holy City
The Struggle over Jerusalem’s Sacred Space
Lila Ben-Shahar | University of Georgia
Jerusalem’s Temple Mount/Al-Haram al-Sharif is one of the holiest places in the world for Jews and Muslims and a constant feature in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. This study addresses the gendered dimensions of inter-communal disputes over sacred space in Jerusalem and the role of women in these conflicts.
- The first comprehensive and comparative account of women’s involvement in the contestation over Jerusalem’s sacred space
- Explores both Jewish-Israeli and Muslim-Palestinian cases, as well as both progressive and conservative movements in one sacred space
- Sheds light on the complex and problematic usage of the discourse of religious freedom in contested holy sites

Women, Religion, and the State in Contemporary Turkey
Chiara Mantirio | Università degli Studi di Torino, Italy
Using the feminization of the Deyânnet to understand the significance of a renewed presence of Islam in the Turkish public realm, this fascinating ethnography explores how the role of a female professional religious officer has penetrated and reshaped even secular spaces in Turkey.
- Uses the feminization of the Presidency of Religious Affairs (the Deyânnet) as a prism through which to analyze the reemergence of Islam in the Turkish public realm
- Explores the significance placed on the role of female professional religious officers, as epitomizing the pious, modern and highly educated Turkish woman
- Draws on a rich ethnography to illuminate the renewed presence of Islamic morality in the public realm of modern Turkey

Youth Activism and Contentious Politics in Egypt
Dynamics of Continuity and Change
Radina Silva | American University in Cairo
This book studies the role of youth movements in the Arab uprisings of late 2010 and early 2011. It is intended for scholars and students studying Middle East and North African studies, the Arab Spring, social movements, and authoritarian resilience, and all those interested in the wider study of regime change and uprisings.
- Proposes a new perspective on social movements in authoritarian regimes, for those studying social movements and how regimes react to change
- Provides an in-depth analysis of youth activists in Egypt through two years of field study, for those seeking examples of the dynamics of regime change and durability
- Develops new approaches to analyzing social movement and change, for those studying the popular protest across North Africa and the Middle East

Contested Capital
Rural Middle Classes in India
Maryam Asalay
It explores the formation of India’s rural middle class, which rests on a complex, and often contradictory, set of processes that began unfolding with growing industrialization and urbanization. It examines its composition, characteristics and social identification from the perspectives of three major class theorists: Marx, Weber and Bourdieu.
- Studies perspectives from Marx, Weber and Bourdieu
- Develops transferable methodological approach that interrogates theories, and bridges social theories and practice
- Offers theoretical pluralism

Banks on the Brink
Global Capital, Securities Markets, and the Political Roots of Financial Crises
Mark Copeland | University of Wisconsin-Madison
This book analyzes the structural and political roots of financial crises across countries and over time, honing in on two specific variables, foreign capital inflows and financial market structure. It explains how these factors interact to make some countries more vulnerable to banking crises than others.
- Examines the under-explored relationship between banking systems, securities markets, and financial crises, illuminating the profound impact of factors on subsequent crises
- Highlights the impact politics has on the development of a nation’s financial markets, across space and time, in order to point out when and why banking systems become more prone to crisis
- Uses comprehensive data analysis, in tandem with two historical case studies, Canada and Germany, in order to explore the expected development of financial crises beyond singular events and focus on enduring, institutional factors

Clash of Powers
US-China Rivalry in Global Trade Governance
Kristen Hopewell | University of British Columbia, Vancouver
Trade has become a flashpoint of conflict between the US and China. This book analyzes a critical aspect of their growing rivalry: their battle over the international rules and institutions governing trade. China’s rise has significantly weakened American control over global trade institutions and its power to write the rules of global trade.
- Will significantly impact debates about China’s impact on the global trade system & the liberal international economic order
- Introduces a new concept, the ‘China paradox’: the fact that China is simultaneously both a developing country and an economic powerhouse
- Draws on interview and documentary materials from a diverse range of cases of US-China trade conflict over global trade governance

DEMOCRACY, DICTATORSHIP, AND DEFAULT
Urban-Rural Bias and Economic Crises across Regimes
Cameron Balland-Rosa | University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill
When should a country honor its international debts? This book unravels this crucial political decision with specific focus on how protesters threaten dictators, whereas voters threaten democratic incumbents. This distinction reveals the importance of costly food pricing policies to please constituencies who are targeted for reform during crisis.
- Despite potentially catastrophic consequences of debt crises (as evidenced by recent events), there is relatively little work done to understand the political process behind sovereign default - this book fills a gap in the literature
- Combining formal theory, statistical analysis and deep historical case studies, the book will be accessible to a wide range of readers
- Careful attention to differing survival incentives across regimes makes the implications of the theory applicable to a wide set of reader interests

LAND ACQUISITION AND RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT IN CONTEMPORARY INDIA
Kabir Ramakrishna Singh | University of Cambridge
It highlights the reasons for large scale land conflicts in India, scale of stalled investments, social movements, evolution of land acquisition and mining laws, and what led to the amendments of Right to Fair Compensation and Transparency in Land Acquisition, Resettlement and Rehabilitation Act 2013 and Mining and Minerals Act 2015.
- Selectively merges theoretical perspectives on land and natural resource governance
- Explains the compensation arguments at two levels: between the project developers and the local project-affected community and between the central and provincial governments over the issue of ‘fair’ resource revenue sharing
- Advances the argument that the land acquisition drive in India is mired in the politics of two contradictory developmental claims

Monopsony Capitalism
Power and Production in the Twilight of the Sweatshop Age
Ashok Kamar | King's College, University of London
This book explores the combination of capital's changing composition and labour's subjective agency to examine whether the waning days of the 'sweatshop' have indeed begun. Focused on the garment and footwear sectors, it introduces a universal logic that governs competition and reshapes the chain.
- Analyses workers' collective action at various sites of production
- China, India, Honduras, United States primarily, and Vietnam, Cambodia, Bangladesh, Indonesia secondarily
- Contributes to ongoing strategies to bolster workers' bargaining power in sectors plagued by poverty and powerlessness

Political Economies of Energy Transition
Wind and Solar Power in Brazil and South Africa
Kathryn Hochstetler | London School of Economics and Political Science
Most of what we know about energy transition is based on industrialized countries and China - but most future low-carbon transitions will take place in developing countries. Climate change cannot be addressed without them. This book shows how environment and development concerns drive electricity choices in Brazil and South Africa.
- Shows how energy transition is happening (and how it is blocked) in two key middle income and developing countries
- In-depth analysis of four different policy areas related to wind and solar power
- An up-to-date take on the global environment and development debate

Power Grab
Political Survival through Extractive Resource Nationalization
PNASMAH | University of California, Santa Barbara
Power Grab shows that controlling the means of production of oil and minerals determines the rise and fall of political leaders. Nationalization - seizing operations for the state - is a gamble. Its immediate windfalls can fortify the foundations of enduring rule, or its operational costs can risk future prosperity and political survival.
- Proposes a new theory on the rise and fall of political leaders in extractive-resource economies, providing insights into modern political paradoxes, such as Iran, Saudi Arabia, and Venezuela
- Combines statistical analysis with interviews and archival records on national oil companies, offering evidence from multiple perspectives for readers versed in either quantitative, qualitative, or mixed-method approaches
- Unpacks the opaque politics surrounding state-owned enterprises and will appeal to readers interested in learning deep insights about the world's largest companies

Qi Zhang | Fudan University, Shanghai
This book proposes a theory of localized property-rights protection under authoritarianism. It is a must-read to those who are interested in how politics would impact the legal and institutional environment of doing business in developing countries in general, and in China in particular.
- Proposes a theory of localized property rights protection under authoritarianism, appealing to those who are interested in general policy theory
- Provides a framework to judge the government-business relationship in different localities of a country even within a province
- Combines in-depth fieldwork with archival work, quantitative data analysis, and analytical sophistication, while complex mathematical treatment is avoided

Risk and the Rupee in Pakistan's New Economy
Financial Inclusion and Monetary Change in a Frontier Market
Antonia Settle | University of Melbourne
The book challenges the development sector's embrace of financial inclusion as social and economic policy solution to new instabilities associated with the deregulation of money and prices in developing economies. Economic globalisation generates new risks for ordinary people that undermine the development agenda by unwinding financial inclusion.
- Engages cutting edge questions of political economy - about the evolution of money and monetary management under global markets - with development thinking
- Further develops the critique of financial inclusion, which has certainly posed an important critique but has often been quite simplistic
- Contributes to academic debates within post-Keynesian theory

Spending to Win
Political Institutions, Economic Geography, and Government Subsidies
Stephanie J. Richard | London School of Economics and Political Science

Why do some democracies redistribute more than others? Election practices cause some governments to deliver policies, such as industrial subsidies, that assist small groups of citizens at the expense of many. Spending to Win will find interest amongst scholars of international political economy, public policy, public administration, and comparative politics.

- Presents evidence from interviews with government ministers and bureaucrats
- Provides one of the first book-length studies of government subsidies
- Explores how political institutions and economic geography interact to shape public policy

Taxes and Trust
From Coercion to Compliance in Poland, Russia, and Ukraine
Marc P. Brunson | King's College London

Focusing on two post-Communist states with competing development models - Russia and Poland, and on a third caught in between, the Ukraine - this book uniquely depicts for tax specialists and social scientists alike the building of trust from a coercive tax state to a modern, legal, and legitimate one. This title is also available as Open Access.

- The first book on taxation to focus on trust, allowing readers to see how trust can be put at the centre of policy implementation
- Qualitative and quantitative research provides readers with innovative and recent information on key components of post-Communist governance
- Compares state bureaucracies in three different countries and shows readers what the precise ingredients are for building a capable state

The Cycle of Coalition

David Fortunato | Texas A & M University

The first book on the interaction of parties and voters throughout the legislative period in multiparty democracies. Combining behavioral and institutional analysis of parliamentary systems, Fortunato explains how coalition governance shapes voters’ perceptions of the policymaking process and how this, in turn, shapes parties’ incentives.

- Presents an interdisciplinary analysis of party and voter behaviors in multiparty parliamentary systems
- Combines case study of recent events with cross-national quantitative analyses
- Details cases in Denmark, Germany, the Netherlands, with a special focus on the United Kingdom
- Uses simple language to explain analyses of election results, experiments, legislative procedure, media reports, speeches, and surveys
- Outlines a detailed framework for future research

The Sweatshop Regime
Labouring Bodies, Exploitation, and Garments Made in India
Alessandra Mezzadri | School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London

This book theorises the garment sweatshop in India as a complex ‘regime’ of exploitation and oppression, jointly created by global, regional and local actors, composed of factory and non-factory settings, and working across productive and reproductive realms. It engages with key debates on industrial modernity, modern slavery, and ethical consumerism.

- Analyses the different circuits of exploitation consumers ‘wear’ on a daily basis
- Engages critically with contemporary debates on industrial modernity, modern slavery, and ethical consumerism

Melissa S. Williams | University of Toronto

Leading political theorists offer diverse interpretations of how to de-center Western thought in the field of political theory. This intergenerational, multi-methodological book demonstrates transformative qualities of comparative political theory. 'Deparochializing' political theory is a necessary response to global modernity in the twenty-first century.

- Works to de-center Western/Euro-American thought traditions in the way we define the field of political theory
- Builds political theory for the modern, globalized world, transforming the field of political theory
- Demonstrates that comparative political theory is suited to scholars across generations and across a wide array of methodological approaches in the discipline

Deliberation, Democracy, and the Problem of Expertise
Alfred Moore | University of Cambridge

How are we to handle the tension between expertise and democracy? Developing a democratic model of expert authority, this book describes the ways in which civil society, expert institutions, and democratic innovations can contribute to its production. It addresses deliberative democracy, but will also interest scholars working in environment, health policy, and science communication.

- Recognizes the value of epistemic divisions of labour but does not treat them as demands for deference to claims that stand outside politics altogether
- Takes an interdisciplinary approach, drawing on deliberative democracy and philosophy and sociology of expertise
- Brings work from science studies into conversation with democratic theory

In the Name of Liberty
The Argument for Universal Unionization
Mark R. Reiff | University of California, Davis
This book illuminates how the argument for liberty, once properly understood, leads to the same place as the argument from equality, rather than conflicts with it as those on the right often argue. Reiff shows how this argument can be used to justify not only universal unionization, but also a wide variety of other progressive policies.
- Reclaims the argument from liberty from the political right
- Paves the way for political philosophers to give unionization the same detailed attention they have long devoted to inequality, but have not applied to unionization before
- Provides the first and only moral argument for universal unionization - the mandatory unionization of every firm - that is consistent with the principles of liberal capitalism

Reason and Cause
Social Science and the Social World
Richard Ned Lebow | King’s College London
Philosophy and social science assume that reason and cause are objective and universally applicable concepts. Through close readings of ancient and modern philosophy, history and literature, Lebow demonstrates that these concepts are specific to time and place. He also shows why and how they evolve.
- Focuses on three eras of Western history: classical Athens, the Enlightenment and Victorian England, and the early twentieth century
- Builds bridges between philosophy, social science and literature
- Undercuts foundational assumptions of philosophy and social science as currently conceived

We typically think of resentment as an unjustifiable and volatile emotion. Recognizing Resentment argues instead that sympathy with the resentment of victims of injustice is vital for upholding justice in liberal societies, because it entails recognition of the equal moral and political status of those with whom we sympathize.
- Introduces an overlooked but important theory in liberalism that addresses its contemporary central criticisms
- Provides a dense, historical theory in comprehensive, contemporary terms
- Includes examples of historical and interdisciplinary research on emotions and empathy

The Work of Politics
Making a Democratic Welfare State
Steven Klein | University of Florida

The book is necessary reading for political theorists and scholars interested in democracy and the welfare state, providing a new analysis of the relationship between social movements, welfare institutions, and theories of democracy and domination. It is also of interest to scholars working on 19th and 20th century European political philosophy.
• Develops a new model of the relationship between the welfare state and democracy in an accessible fashion
• Provides original interpretations of central theorists in 20th century political theory
• Demonstrates how to use historical evidence and interpretation to enrich arguments in political theory

Transnational Cosmopolitanism
Kant, Du Bois, and Justice as a Political Craft
Inés Valdez

This volume is an original contribution to cosmopolitanism scholarship that questions the contemporary currency of Kant’s canonical approach and enlists a neglected period of Du Bois’s writing and political practice to radicalize, democratize, and transnationalize cosmopolitanism.
• Provides a novel account of the significance of the context of writing to Kant’s Perpetual Peace
• Analyzes an untapped dimension of W. E. B. Du Bois’s work and its relevance to cosmopolitanism
• Shows the payoff of thinking about cosmopolitanism transnationally

Research Methods in Politics

A Practical Introduction to Regression Discontinuity Designs
Foundations
Matias D. Cattaneo | Princeton University, New Jersey

An accessible and practical guide for the analysis and interpretation of regression discontinuity (RD) designs. The focus is on the canonical sharp RD setup that has the following features: (i) the score is continuously distributed and has only one dimension, (ii) there is only one cutoff, and (iii) compliance with the treatment assignment is perfect.

Elements in Quantitative and Computational Methods for the Social Sciences

Unsupervised Machine Learning for Clustering in Political and Social Research
Philip D. Waggoner | University of Chicago

Offers researchers and teachers an introduction to clustering, which is a prominent class of unsupervised machine learning for exploring and understanding latent, non-random structure in data. A suite of widely used clustering techniques is covered, in addition to R code and real data to facilitate interaction with the concepts.

Inferential Network Analysis
Skyler J. Cromer | The Ohio State University

Introduces foundational statistical models for network data, augmenting theoretical discussion with applications across the social sciences implemented in the R language. An introductory text or reference for researchers, graduate students, and advanced undergraduate students across the social, mathematical, computational and physical sciences.
• For the first time provides wide-ranging and descriptive treatment of inferential network analysis that transcends fields
• Applies detailed theoretical discussions in non-specialist language
• Implements real-world and customizable examples in each chapter, complete with data and R code

Analytical Methods for Social Research

Politics (General)

Migration
Johannes Kohnle | Imperial College London

Eight leading scholars from across the arts, humanities, and sciences contribute to this volume discussing migration and its influence on the modern world. This interdisciplinary approach provides an original perspective on one of the most important topics of our time and will appeal to anyone interested in current affairs.
• Provides unparalleled expertise on the topic of migration, with contributions including Nobel laureate Venk Ramakrishnan and the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, Filippo Grandi
• Features a multidisciplinary approach, with contributors from the arts, humanities, and sciences
• Gives a global perspective, including examples from Latin America, the Middle East, and South Asia

Kashmir in the Aftermath of Partition
Shahia Hussain
It is intended for audience interested in decolonization, identity, sovereignty. It shifts focus from the statist perceptions that construe Kashmir as a disputed region between India and Pakistan. It takes a people-centered approach to delve into Kashmiri experiences to capture the complexity of popular discourses and nationalist rhetoric.
• Contributes to understanding of themes of identity, sovereignty, and self-determination
• Provides a historically grounded study of post-colonial Kashmir
• Addresses the political trajectory that led to India’s recent unilateral decision to ultimately abrogate Article 370 and Article 35 A of the Indian constitution, the basis of Kashmir’s constitutional relationship with India

Women, Power, and Property
The Paradox of Gender Equality Laws in India
Rachel P. Brukl | Brown University
Can political representation help women uplift entrenched systems of power? Property and Power finds evidence that quotas improve women’s ability to claim fundamental economic rights. Yet greater voice is costly. Whether women experience benefits or backlash depends on individual bargaining power at the time a woman is elected.
• Develops a theory explaining the connection between women’s political representation and economic power
• Provides new evidence on the benefits and costs of electoral quotas for women, a globally used remedy for political inequality
• Offers policy-relevant strategies to anticipate and address backlash against reforms that economically empower women

Stateness and Democracy in East Asia
Aurel Croissant | Universität Heidelberg
Through theoretically-grounded case studies and comparative analysis of consolidating, low quality, and failed democracies in East Asia, this volume challenges the dominant ‘state first, democracy later’ argument in the existing political science literature. It will interest scholars and students of comparative democratization, state building, and East Asian politics.
• Provides rich comparative empirical analysis, drawing on in-depth qualitative case studies of countries across the region
• Allows readers to compare processes of institutional development in East Asia with other regions, such as Latin America and Africa
• Helps readers understand how different properties of stateness interact with elements of democracy within and across cases studies
